same, or any gold or silver, whether in dust, solution, or otherwise obtained by diminishing the King's current gold or silver coin, it is lawful for him, and he is required, to seize it and take it before a justice of the peace, a justice of the peace may also issue a search warrant for the discovery of false and counterfeit coin and instruments of coining (ibid, s 27, see also s 31, which provides for the apprehension by any person of offenders found committing any indictable offence against the Act) Where any coin is tendered as the King's current gold or silver coin to any person who suspects it to be diminished otherwise than by reasonable wearing, or to be counterfeit, he may cut, break, bond, or deface such coin. If it appears to be diminished or counterfeit, the person tendering it must bear the loss. If it is of due weight and appears to be lawful coin, the person defacing it must receive it as such. In case of dispute as to whether the coin is diminished or counterfeit this question is to be determined in a summary way by a justice of the peace. Tellers at the Exchequer and the Receivers general of every branch of the Revenue are required to break or deface every piece of counterfeit or unlawfully diminished gold or silver coin tendered to them in payment (ibid, s. 26). As to apprehension of offenders, see p 300, note (d), ante, and as to accessories, see p 253, ante.

(o) Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 99), s 30. See further, as to venue, ibid, s 28, and pp 256, 258, 284, 286, ante, as to offences committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, ibid, s 36; proof of previous convictions, ibid, s 37, fining offenders and binding them to keep the peace, ibid, s 38.

(p) 3 Co. Inst. 132, Termes de la Ley, 565, Chitty, Prerogative of the Crown, 152, and title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VII, p. 212.

(q) A.-G v Moore, [1893] 1 Ch. 676, 683.

(r) 3 Co. Inst. 132.

(s) The offence is, it seems, an offence against the prerogative of the King and therefore not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38), s. 1).

(t) Coroners Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 71), s 36, repealing stat. de Coronatoribus, 4 Edw. 1, stat. 2, s. 1; see title CORONERS, Vol. VIII, p. 247.

(u) R. v. Toole (1867), 11 Cox, C. O. 76, C. C. R. (Ir).

SECT 6
Offences
affecting
Property
etc of the Crown.

Smuggling

Making
signals to smuggling
vessels.

Shooting at ship etc
engaged in the pre vention of smuggling.

Procuring
persons to assemble for smuggling

necessary to allege in the indictment that the defendant acted fraudulently, although the word "fraudulent" is commonly used in some old authorities (v)

SUB-SECT 4 —Smuggling

1051 Smuggling consists in bringing on shore, or in carrying from the shore, dutiable goods, wares, or merchandise for which duty has not been paid, or goods the importation of which is prohibited (x)

1052 Every person is by statute (a) guilty of a misdemeanour who after sunset and before sunrise between the 21st September and the 1st April, or after 8 p m and before 6 a m at any other time of the year, makes or assists in making any signal from ship, boat, or shore for the purpose of giving notice to any person on board any smuggling ship or boat

The punishment is the forfeiture of £100 or imprisonment for one year with or without hard labour (b)

1053 Every person is by statute (c) guilty of a felony who maliciously shoots at any vessel or boat belonging to His Majesty's navy or in the service of the revenue, or maliciously shoots at, maims, or wounds any officer of the army or navy, or any mariner or coast-guard employed in the prevention of smuggling and on full pay, or any officer of customs or excise, or any person acting in his aid, in the execution of his duty

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (d)

1054 A person is by statute (e) guilty of a misdemeanour who procures any person or persons to assemble for landing, carrying or

(v) R v Thomas (1863), L & Ca 313

(a) 1 Hawk P O, c 30, s 1 The penalty for smuggling is that the goods smuggled (Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 177), and the ship, boat, carriage, or horse used for their conveyance (ibid, s 202), are forfeited to the Crown, and the offender is also liable to forfeit either treble the value of the goods, including the duty thereon, or £100, at the election of the Commissioners of Customs (ibid, s 186) The forfeitures are recoverable by action, ibid, s 218

(a) Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 190, see also ss 191, 192

(b) Ibid

(c) Ibid, s 193, see also Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881 (44 Vict c 12), s 12, which imposes a penalty of £100 for rescuing any person apprehended for any offence against the Customs Act, 1876, which is punishable by fine or imprisonment, or for preventing the apprehension of such a person, or for assaulting or obstructing any officer of customs while acting in the execution of his duty The penalty is, it seems, recoverable by action

(d) Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 193; Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 Under the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, a sentence of imprisonment for three years without hard labour could be given Quære whether a sentence of three years' imprisonment could now be inflicted for this offence (Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s. 1) Quære also whether this or the last-mentioned offence is triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s. 1).

(e) Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 189, see ibid, s. 188, which is repealed by the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1879 (42 & 43

concealing any goods which are prohibited from being imported, or the duties for which have not been paid or secured

The punishment is imprisonment with or without hard labour for twelve months, if any person engaged in landing etc. such goods is armed with firearms or other offensive weapons, or whether so armed or not is disguised in any way, or, being so armed or disguised, is found with any goods liable to forfeiture under the Customs Acts within five miles of the sea coast or of a tidal river, he is liable to imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than three years (f)

Large clubs or sticks are "offensive weapons." The expression includes anything that is not in common use for any other purpose but a weapon, but a common whip is not such a weapon, nor, probably, is a hatchet which is caught up accidentally during the heat of an affray (g).

1055 All indictments and informations for any offence against the Customs Acts in any court or before any justice must be brought or exhibited within three years next after the date of the offence committed (h)

SECT 6.
Offences affecting
Property
etc of the Crown.

Limitation of time for prosecution.

SECT 7—Offences relating to Elections

1056 There are various criminal offences in relation to bribery at elections, undue influence, evasion of the Ballot Act, personation, and neglect or delay in the issue of writs for elections, these offences are treated of in another part of this work (i)

Elections.

SECT 8—Offences on the High Seas.

SUB-SICT 1—Piracy

1057 Piracy jure gentium (j) consists in destroying, attacking, or taking a ship, or taking any part of its tackle or cargo, from the owners on the high seas, or within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, by acts of violence or by putting in fear, and by a body of men acting without the authorisation of any State or politically organised society (k)

Piracy *jure
gentium.*

Vict c 21), s 14, and schedule but is replaced by s 10 of the last-mentioned Act, which is to the same effect (see Stephen, Digest of the Criminal Law, 6th ed., 58, n)

(f) Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 189

(g) R v Fletcher (1742), 1 Leach, 23, R v Hutchinson (1784), 1 Leach, 339, 342, n, R v Noakes (1832), 5 C & P 326

(h) Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 257 But probably an indictment for a conspiracy to infringe any of the provisions of the Acts could be preferred after the expiration of three years (see R v Thompson (1851), 16 Q B 832)

(i) See title ELECTIONS

(j) Piracy was not, properly speaking, felony at common law, and a pardon of all felonies did not include piracy (1 Hawk P O, c 20, s 12, 3 Co Inst 111, R v Morpheus (1696), 1 Salk 85). It was, however, known as felony by civil law, and was tried according to that law by the admiral or his deputy prior to the Offences at Sea Act, 1536 (28 Hen 8, c 15), see the preamble to that statute, Molloy, De Jure Maritimo, bk 1, c 4, s 24, Co Litt 391 a

(k) In A-G for Hong Kong v Kuok-a-Sing (1873), L R 5 P C 179, 199, the Privy Council approved as a correct exposition of the law as to what constitutes piracy jure gentium the following passage from the charge to the

SECT 8
Offences
on the
High Seas.

Jurisdiction
in piracy.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (l)

1058 The King's courts have jurisdiction to try all cases of piracy jure gentium in whatever part of the seas and upon whose-soever property it may be committed, and whether the accused are British subjects or the subjects of any foreign State with whom the King is at amity (m)

If the act of depredation was committed, even without the King's commission, upon a subject of a State at enmity with the King, it does not amount to piracy.

It is piracy for a man who holds the King's commission to despoil those with whom his commission does not authorise him to fight, if they are in amity with the King (n)

The place where the alleged piracy was committed must be within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty (o)

grand jury in R v Dawson (1696), 13 State Tr 454 — "piracy is only a sea term for robbery, piracy being a robbery within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty. If the mariner of any ship shall violently dispossess the master, and afterwards carry away the ship itself or any of the goods with a felonious intention in any place where the Lord Admiral hath jurisdiction, this is robbery and piracy." But see Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, Vol. II, 28. Several definitions of this offence by jurists of various nationalities are collected in Hall on International Law, 5th ed., p. 260 n. The words "or politically organised society" have been added to the definition in the text to meet the case of a body of persons acting in what they suppose to be the public interest of their country, for public ends, and not with a view to satisfy (at any rate directly) their own greed or desire for revenge. It is submitted that persons so acting, and committing only such acts as would be regular acts of war if done under the authority of a recognised State, would not at the present day be held guilty of piracy. There would in such a case be, properly speaking, no animus furandi, which has been said to be a necessary ingredient of the offence when ship or cargo is taken, and the acts of hostility would be directed against the subjects of one particular State, and not by the indiscriminating desire of plunder which characterises the hostis humani generis. See Hall on International Law, pp. 257 et seq., where the matter is fully discussed, also Re Tinnan (1864), 5 B & S 640 (also reported as Re Tinnan (1864), 9 Cox, C O 522); The Magellan Pirates (1853), 1 Ecc & Ad 81, 83, Bolivia Republic v Indemnity Mutual Marine Assurance Co., [1909] 1 K B 785. Cases of this kind arose in the United States during the Civil War, but were dealt with under special Acts of Congress (see Bishop, Criminal Law, Vol. II, p. 618 n).

(l) Piracy Act, 1837 (7 Will 4 & 1 Vict c 88), s 3, Penal Servitude Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict c 3), s 2, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s. 1, but see p. 526, post. No kind of piracy is triable at quarter sessions.

(m) 1 Hawk P C, c 20, s 1, R v Dawson (1696), 13 State Tr 451, 455. But an act which is declared piracy by statute and does not amount to piracy jure gentium will only be punishable in an English court, if committed by a British subject, unless it was committed within the King's dominions or within the Admiralty jurisdiction.

(n) 4 Co Inst 154, charge of Sir L. Jenkins, Life of Sir L. Jenkins, Vol. I, p. xciv; Re Tinnan, supra. As to depredations by a British subject acting under a commission from a foreign State, see p. 525, post.

(o) 3 Co Inst 113, 1 Hawk P C, c 20, s 15, R v Allen (1837), 1 Mood C 494, R v Anderson (1868), L. R. 1 C O R. 161, 169, R v Carr (1882), 10 Q B D. 76, C O R., and see p. 273, ante, and title ADMIRALTY, Vol. I, p. 69. The ordinary rule that an indictment will not lie in an English court for an offence committed at sea beyond the limits of the territorial waters (Territorial

All offences committed on the high seas and other places within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty may now be tried by justices of assize or commissioners of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery in any county where a person committed for such an offence is imprisoned (p), or by the Central Criminal Court (q)

SECT 8
Offences
on the
High Seas

1059 If a natural-born subject of the King or a denizen of this kingdom commits any piracy or robbery or any act of hostility against the King's subjects upon the sea under colour of any commission from any foreign prince or State, or pretence of authority from any person whatever, either during peace or war, he is by statute (r) deemed to be a pirate, felon, and robber.

Piracy under colour of commission from a foreign State.

1060 A master or seaman is by statute (s) deemed to be a pirate, felon, and robber, punishable as a pirate, (1) who within Admiralty jurisdiction betrays his trust and turns pirate, enemy, or rebel and piratically runs away with his ship or any boat, ordnance, ammunition or goods, or yields them up voluntarily to a pirate, or (2) who brings seducing messages from any pirate, enemy, or rebel, or (3) who consults or combines with or attempts to corrupt any master, officer or mariner to yield up or run away with any ship or goods or turn pirate, or (4) who lays violent hands on his commander to hinder him from fighting in defence of his ship, or confines him, or endeavours to make a revolt in the ship.

Master or seaman turning pirate etc.

1061 A master of a ship, or any other person who trades with any pirate, or furnishes him with ammunition, provisions or stores, or who fits out a ship for so trading, or who consults, combines, or corresponds with a pirate knowing him to be such, is by statute deemed to be guilty of piracy, felon, and robbery (t)

Trading with pirates etc

1062 Any person belonging to any ship is by statute (u) deemed

Forcibly boarding
ship

Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict c 73), s 2) on board a foreign vessel by a foreigner (R v Kinn (1876), 2 Fx D 63, C C R, R v Anderson (1868), L R 1 C C R 161, 169) does not apply to piracy

(p) Admiralty Offences Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict c 2), ss 1, 3, 4, and see Offences at Sea Act, 1836 (28 Hen 8, c 15), ss 1, 2

(q) Central Criminal Court Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Will 4, c 36), s 22 As to the trial in the colonies of pirates and others who have committed crimes on the high seas, see 11 Will 3, c 7, Offences at Sea Act, 1806 (46 Geo 3, c 54), Admiralty Offences (Colonial) Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict c 96), Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict c 37), and the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 687

(r) 11 Will 3, c 7, s 7 (made perpetual by 6 Geo 1, c 19)

(s) Stat (1698) 11 Will 3, c 7, s 8 As to who are accessories, see ss 9, 10 Upon a charge of confining the master it is not necessary to show that force was actually used. A constructive confinement, as by so threatening the master as to render him not a free agent to go where he liked on board the ship, is a confinement within the meaning of the section (R v Jones (1870), 11 Cox, C C 393, per BOVLLE, C J, at p 397)

(t) Piracy Act, 1721 (8 Geo 1, c 24), s 1

(u) Ibid

SMOT. 8
Offences
on the
High Seas.

to be and is punishable as a pirate who, upon meeting a merchant ship on the high seas or in any port, haven, or creek, forcibly boards or enters her, and who, though he does not seize or carry off such vessel, throws overboard or destroys any part of the goods or merchandise belonging to her

Punishment

1063 The punishment for a statutory piracy is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (a) But whoever with intent to commit, or at the time of or immediately before or after committing, the crime of piracy in respect of any ship, assaults with intent to murder any person on board the ship, or who stabs, cuts, or wounds any such person, or unlawfully does any act whereby the life of such person may be endangered, must be sentenced to death (b)

SUB SECT 2—Slave Trade

Carrying off
persons as slaves etc

1064 Any British subject or anyone residing within the King's dominions is by statute (c) to be deemed guilty of piracy who upon the high seas or in any haven, river, creek, or place within Admiralty jurisdiction knowingly and wilfully (1) carries away any person as a slave, or for the purpose of such person being imported as a slave, into any place whatsoever, or for the purpose of such person being sold, used, or dealt with as a slave, or (2) on the high seas or within the King's dominions ships, receives, detains, or confines on board ship any person for any such purpose

The punishment for such offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (d)

Slave dealing
etc.

1065 Every person is by statute (e) guilty of a felony (1) who deals or trades in slaves or persons intended to be dealt with as slaves, (2) imports or contracts for importing into any place slaves or other persons in order that they may be dealt with as slaves, (3) ships, receives, detains, or confines on board any such persons for the purpose of their being dealt with as slaves; (4) fits out or navigates ships for any of the above purposes, (5) lends or

(a) Piracy Act, 1837 (7 Will 4 & 1 Vict c 88), s 3, Penal Servitude Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict c 3), s 2, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(b) Piracy Act, 1837 (7 Will 4 & 1 Vict c 88), s 2 As to the condemnation of property captured from pirates and the restitution to owners, see Piracy Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict c 26), s 5, and title ADMIRALTY, Vol I, p 76

(c) Slave Trade Act, 1824 (5 Geo 4, c 113), s 9 As to the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Division of the High Court in regard to the condemnation of vessels etc seized under the Slave Trade Acts, see title ADMIRALTY, Vol I, p 78

(d) Ibid, Punishment of Offences Act, 1837 (7 Will 4 & 1 Vict c 91), s 1, Penal Servitude Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict c 3), s 2, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(e) Slave Trade Act, 1824 (5 Geo 4, c 113) s 10 Offences under this section are not, it seems, excluded from the jurisdiction of quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1)

SECT. 2.
Offences
on the High Seas.

becomes security for money or goods to be employed for such purposes, or (6) knowingly and wilfully becomes guarantee for agents employed with the same object, or engages in any such adventure as partner, agent, or otherwise, (7) ships money or goods to be employed for such purposes, (8) acts as master, mate, surgeon or supercargo of any ship so employed, (9) insures any slaves or any property so employed, or (10) forges or utters any certificate, sentence, or receipt required by the Slave Trade Act, 1824 (f)

The punishment for any such offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (g)

1066 A British subject is equally guilty of any of the above offences, whether the acts alleged were committed within or without the King's dominions (h) But there is nothing in the Slave Trade Acts to prohibit a contract by a British subject for the sale of slaves lawfully held by him in a foreign country where the possession and sale of slaves is lawful (i)

Acts
committed outside the King's dominions

SUB SECT. 3.—Inquiry Pacific Islanders

1067 Any British subject is by statute (j) guilty of felony (1) who decoys a native of an island in the Pacific Ocean (not being in His Majesty's dominions nor within the jurisdiction of any civilised power) for the purpose of importing or removing him into any other island or place, or carries such native away or confines or detains him for such purpose without his consent, or (2) who for that purpose ships or detains such native without his consent; or (3) who contracts for such shipping etc., or (4) who fits out, navigates, lets, employs, commands, or serves in or is on board of any vessel with intent to commit any such offence, or (5) who puts money or goods on board any vessel with the knowledge that such money and goods will be so employed

Kidnapping
Act, 1872.

(f) 9 Geo 4, c 113, s 10

(g) Ibid s 10, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 There are also pecuniary forfeitures provided for the above offences by the Slave Trade Act, 1824 (5 Geo 4, c 113), ss 2—8, as to the recovery of which see s 12, and the Slave Trade Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict c 88), s 23 The last-mentioned Act contains provisions for the seizure by officers of the Royal Navy of vessels equipped for trading in slaves and for their condemnation by courts having jurisdiction in Admiralty As to the place of trial of all offences against either of the above Acts, see the Slave Trade Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict c 88), ss 24, 26, p 285, ante, as to the form of the indictment, see R v Jennings (1844), 1 Cox, (C) C 115

(h) R v Zukela (1843), 1 Car & Kir 215

(i) Santos v Illidge (1860), 8 C B (N S) 861, Ex Ch See further as to such contracts, Mittelholzer v Fullarton (1842), 6 Q B 989, and as to the circumstances under which ships supposed to be engaged in the slave trade may be seized, see Madrazo v Wiles (1820), 3 B & Ald 363, Buron v Dennan (1848), 2 Exch 167, Osanova v R, The Ricardo Schmidt (1866), L R 1 P (C) 208, The Laura (1865), 13 L T 133, P C Hocquard v R, The Newport (1859), 6 W R 310, R v Casaca (1880), 3 App Cas 548, P C

(j) Kidnapping Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict c 19), s 2.

SECT 8
Offences
on the
High Seas

Anyone charged with such an offence may be tried in any supreme court of justice in any of the Australian colonies and, sentenced to the highest punishment, other than capital punishment, awarded for any felony by the law of the colony in which he is tried, and any person who aids and abets such an offender may be tried and punished in the same way (k)

SECT 9 — Offences relating to Foreign Nations.

SUB SECT 1 — Offences with respect to Diplomats.

Suing
ambassador.

1068 Any person suing forth or prosecuting any writ or process interfering with the freedom from legal process enjoyed by ambassadors and other public ministers of foreign States, and, in certain circumstances, their households (l), and any solicitor acting in such a case, and any officer executing such writ or process, upon conviction thereof before the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice, is by statute to be deemed a violator of the law of nations and a disturber of the public repose, and is liable to such pains, penalties, and corporal punishment as they may judge fit to be imposed (m)

Libel on
ambassador.

A libel on a foreign ambassador is a common law misdemeanour punishable as tending to interrupt the pacific relations between this country and the nation which he represents (n).

SUB-SECT 2 — Foreign Enlistment

Foreign
Enlistment
Act, 1870

1069 It is by statute (o) a misdemeanour (1) for any British subject, within or without the King's dominions, to accept, or agree

(k) Kidnapping Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict c 19), s 10

(l) See title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol VI, p 428

(m) Diplomatic Privileges Act 1708 (7 Ann c 12), ss 3, 4 The Act will not protect members of a public minister's suite or household who are occupied in trading (s 5), and no person is to be proceeded against for having arrested the servant of an ambassador, unless the servant's name has been registered in the office of a Secretary of State and by him transmitted to the sheriffs or under sheriffs of London and Middlesex (s 6) The privilege of a person who has been appointed an ambassador from being sued and from arrest extends for such a reasonable period after he is recalled as is necessary to enable him to wind up his official business and prepare for his return to his country, even though his successor has been appointed (Marshall v Crutcher (1808), 9 East, 447, Musurus Bey v Gadhani, [1894] 1 Q B 533, 2 Q B 352, C A) See title ACTION, Vol I, p 19

There is no known instance of any proceeding against any person under s. 4 of the Diplomatic Privileges Act, 1708 (7 Ann c 12) The Act seems to contemplate a summary proceeding without the intervention of a jury, and has, probably, no application to arrest on criminal process, see p 245, ante.

(n) R v d'Eon (1764), 1 Wm Bl 510, 517, 2 Chitty, Criminal Law, 54, see R v Pelletier (1803), 28 State Tr 529, 617 As to obtaining a passport by fraud, see R v Brasfield, [1905] 2 K B 730

(o) Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c 90), ss 4—11 It has been said that it was a misdemeanour at common law to enter the service of any foreign State without the leave of the King (1 East, P. C 81) Mercenary service abroad was very common before the passing of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 It is stated by Coke that it is unlawful for a British subject to receive a pension from a foreign King or State without the King's licence (3 Co Inst.

SECT. 8.
Offences
relating to Foreign Nations.

to accept, without the King's licence, any commission or engagement in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with any friendly State (i.e., a foreign State which is at peace with His Majesty), or (2) for anyone, whether a British subject or not, within the King's dominions to induce any other person to accept any such commission or engagement (p), (3) for any British subject without the King's licence to quit, or go on board any ship with a view of quitting, the King's dominions with intent to accept any such commission or engagement (q), (4) for anyone, whether a British subject or not, within the King's dominions to induce any other person to quit, or to go on board any ship with a view of quitting, the King's dominions with the like intent, (5) for anyone to induce any other person to quit the King's dominions under a misrepresentation or false representation of the service in which such person is to be engaged with the intent or in order that such person may accept or agree to accept any such commission (r), (6) for the master or owner of any ship without such licence knowingly to take or engage to take or to have on board such ship within the King's dominions any British subject who without the King's licence has accepted such a commission or engagement, or is about to quit the dominions with intent to accept any such commission etc., or any person who has been induced to embark under a false representation of the service in which he is to be engaged with the intent that he may accept any such commission or engagement (s), (7) for any person within the King's dominions and without such licence either to build or agree to build or cause to be built any ship with intent or knowledge or having reasonable cause to believe that it will be employed in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with a friendly State, or to issue any commission for, or equip or despatch, or allow to be despatched, any ship with the like intent or knowledge (t), (8) for any person within the King's dominions, by adding to the number of guns or any equipment of war, to increase without the King's licence the warlike force of any ship which, at the time of her being within the dominions, was in the naval service of any

Foreign
Enlistment
Act, 1870.

144) As to taking military service under a prince or State in India, see Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90)

(p) Ibid., s. 4 See R v Rumble (1864), 4 F. & F. 170 As to definition of a foreign State, see ibid., s. 30

(q) Ibid., s. 5

(r) Ibid., s. 6

(s) Ibid., s. 7

(t) Ibid., s. 8, see R v Sandoval (1887), 3 T. L. R. 411, A-G v Saltem (1863), 2 H. & C. 431, R v Rumble, supra. But a person building or equipping a ship in pursuance of a contract made before the commencement of the war is not liable to the penalties imposed for building or equipping, if forthwith upon the King's proclamation of neutrality such person gives notice to a Secretary of State that he is building or equipping the ship, and gives him such particulars of the contract as he may require, and gives such security and permits such other measures to be taken as the Secretary of State may prescribe for ensuring that the ship shall not be removed without the King's licence until the termination of the war (ibid., s. 8). See s. 9 as to the presumption that a vessel built for and used by the foreign State was built with a view to its being so employed. To let a tug to one of the

SECT 8
Offences
relating to
Foreign
Nations.

foreign State at war with a friendly State (u); (9) for any person within the King's dominions and without the King's licence to prepare or fit out any naval or military expedition against the dominions of any friendly State, or to be engaged or employed in such preparation or fitting out or assisting therein or to be employed in any capacity in such expedition (a)

If the illegal expedition be prepared within the King's dominions, the participation in it by a British subject outside such dominions is an offence against the Act (b)

Punishment

The punishment for any such offence is fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years (c). In addition to such punishment, in the case of illegal shipbuilding (d) the ship, with her equipment, is forfeited to the King, and in the case of illegally fitting out an expedition all ships and their equipments and all arms and munitions of war used in the expedition are forfeited to the King (e).

Part XI.—Offences against Public Order.

SECT 1 —Offences against Religion (f).

SUB-SECT 1 —Blasphemy

Blasphemy

1070 Blasphemy is a misdemeanour at common law punishable by fine and imprisonment without hard labour. It consists in combatants for the purpose of towing a prize with a prize crew on board to the home waters of the captor is the despatching of a ship for the purpose of taking part in the naval service of such combatant (Dyke v Elliott, The Gauntlet (1872), L. R. 4 P. C. 181). But a telegraph ship employed to lay a cable to be used for civil and postal purposes is not such a ship, even though there is a possibility that the cable may also be used for military purposes (The International (1871), L. R. 3 A. & E. 321).

(u) Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90), s. 10

(a) Ibid., s. 11. See R v Sandoval (1887), 3 T. L. R. 411, 436, 498, R v Jameson (1896), Shortland Notes, I, 348

(b) R v Jameson, [1896] 2 Q. B. 425. As to powers of search, seizure, and detention of suspected vessels by the Secretary of State and certain public officers, see Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90) ss. 21–29

(c) Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90), ss. 4–8, 10, 11, 13

(d) Id., when a person commits an offence under s. 8 of the Act

(e) Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90), s. 11. Any overt act of preparation for such an expedition, as by the purchase of guns in this country which are sent to a foreign port to be shipped there on the vessel in which the expedition is to be made, is an offence against the Act (R v Sandoval (1887), 16 Cox. C. C. 206). Accessories are punished as principal offenders (Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90) s. 13). Offences against the Act are not expressly excluded from the jurisdiction of quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38), s. 1), but manifestly ought not to be tried there (f) The offences mentioned in this section are not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38), s. 1).

SECT 1
Offences
against Religion.

(1) scoffingly or irreverently ridiculing or impugning the doctrines of the Christian faith, or (2) in uttering or publishing contumelious reproaches of Jesus Christ, or (3) in profane scoffing at the Holy Scriptures or exposing any part thereof to contempt or ridicule

It is not blasphemy with due gravity and propriety to contend that the Christian religion or any part of its doctrine, or the whole or any part of the Holy Scriptures, is untrue (g)

It is immaterial whether the blasphemous words were spoken or written, in the latter case they constitute a blasphemous libel.

No criminal prosecution can be commenced against the proprietor, publisher, editor, or any person responsible for the publication of a newspaper for any libel published therein without the order of a judge at chambers being first obtained (h)

SUB-SECT 2—Offences against the Church of England

1071 Anyone who utters or publishes seditious words in derogation of the established religion is at common law guilty

Seditious
attacks on the established
religion

(g) 1 Hawk P C, c 26, ss 1, 2 (8th ed, Vol I, 358), 4 Bl Com 50, Starkie on Libel, 2nd ed, 145—147, approved by Lord COLERIDGE, C J, in R v Ramsay and Foote (1883), 15 Cox, C C 231, R v Woolston (1729), 2 Stra 834, Shore v Wilson (1842), 9 Cl & Fin 355, 524, 039, 11 L L, R v Waddington (1822), 1 B & C 26, R v Hetherington (1840), 4 State Tr (N S) 563, 590, and see the summing up of ABBOTT, C J, in R v Carlisle (1819) at col 1424 of the same volume, R v Bradlaugh (1883) 15 Cox, C C 217, R v Ramsay and Foote, supra, R v Boulter (1908), 72 J P 186

Some authorities, both old and modern, lay down the proposition that any denial of the truth of Christianity in general or of the existence of God, however decent may be the terms of such denial, is by the common law punishable as blasphemy (see STEPHEN, J Digest of the Criminal Law, 5th ed, p 121, see also 1 Hawk P C, c 26, s 1, R v Woolston, supra, R v Eaton (1812), 31 State Tr 927, 950, R v Gathercole (1838), 2 Lew U C 237, 251 Cowan v Milbourn (1867), L R 2 Exch 230, 234, Pankhurst v Thompson (1868), 3 T L R 199) In R v Boulter, supra, PHILIMORE, J, approved of the summing up of Lord COLERIDGE, C J, in R v Ramsay and Foote, supra, and disapproved of the view expressed by STEPHEN, J The stat. (1698) 9 Will 3, c 35, enacts that if any person, having been educated in, or at any time made profession of, the Christian religion, should by writing, printing, teaching, or advised speaking deny any one of the Persons in the Holy Trinity to be God, or assert or maintain that there are more gods than one, or deny the Christian religion to be true or the Holy Scriptures to be of divine authority, he should upon conviction upon indictment or information be adjudged incapable of holding any office, and upon a second conviction should suffer other incapacities and be imprisoned for three years, but in the case of words spoken information of the words complained of must be given upon oath to a justice of the peace within four days, and the prosecution be within three months thereafter, if, in the case of a first offence, the person convicted acknowledged and renounced in court his offence or erroneous opinions within four months after conviction, he was to be discharged from further disabilities The provisions of this Act were, "so far as the same relate to persons denying as therein mentioned respecting the Holy Trinity," repealed by stat (1813) 53 Geo 3, c 160, s 2, see as to this statute, per BEST, J, in R v Carlisle (1819), 3 B & Ald 161, 167, and Cowan v Milbourn, supra, at p 231 It is believed that there has never been a prosecution for an offence against stat (1698) 9 Will 3, c 35, the provisions of which do not alter the common law (R v Carlisle, supra)

It has been held in Ireland to be an offence at common law to burn a Bible contemptuously (R v Petherick (1856), 7 Cox, C C 79)

(h) Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 64), s 8, see title LIBEL AND SLANDER

SECT 1
Offences
against
Religion

Depraving
the Sacrament

Depraving
the Book
of Common
Prayer

of a misdemeanour and is punishable by fine and imprisonment (i)

1072 Anyone is by statute (k) guilty of a misdemeanour who depraves, despises, or contemns the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper by any contemptuous words or otherwise. The punishment for this offence is imprisonment and fine at the King's pleasure.

1073 Anyone is by statute (l) guilty of a misdemeanour who in any plays, songs, rhymes, or by other open words, speaks anything in derogation, depraving, or despising of the Book of Common Prayer or of anything therein contained, or causes the minister in any parish church etc. to use any other form of prayer, or interrupts a clergyman saying prayer in the manner set out in the Book of Common Prayer.

Punishment

The punishment is a fine of 100 marks for the first and 400 marks for the second offence, and for the third offence the forfeiture of all goods and chattels and imprisonment for life (m).

Priest of the Church of England
refusing to conform to
the Book
of Common
Prayer

Punishment

1074 Any priest or other minister of the Church who ought to say common prayer or minister the sacraments is by statute (n) guilty of a misdemeanour, if he refuses to do so in the order set forth in the Book of Common Prayer, or if he uses any other rite, ceremony, or form than is therein contained, or preaches or speaks anything in derogation or depraving of the Book of Common Prayer or of anything therein contained.

The punishment is for the first offence the forfeiture to the King of the profit of the offender's spiritual benefices for one year and imprisonment for six months, for the second offence deprivation of all his spiritual promotions and imprisonment for a year (or for life if he has no such promotions), and for the third offence a similar deprivation and imprisonment for life (o).

SECT 2 —Offences relating to Marriage

SUB SECT 1 —Bigamy

Bigamy.

1075 Subject to the qualifications hereafter mentioned, everyone is guilty of felony (p) who, being married, marries any other person

(i) 1 Hawk P. C. c. 26, s. 5 (8th ed., Vol. I, 308), R. v. Gathercole (1838), 2 Low C. C. 237, 254. But see the observations of Lord COLERIDGE, C. J., in R. v. Ramsay and Poole (1883), 46 L. T. 733, 735. The statement in the text must now be taken with the qualification that the words, to be indictable, must be ribald, irreverent, and contumelious, and even with that qualification the offence is practically obsolete. Profane swearing is punishable on summary conviction (Profane Oaths Act, 1745 (19 Geo. 2, c. 21), s. 1). As to disturbing public worship, see p. 477, ante.

(k) (1547) 1 Edw. 6, c. 1, s. 1, revived by (1558) 1 Eliz. c. 1, s. 15, see also (1553) 1 Mar. sess. 2, c. 3.

(l) Stat. (1558) 1 Eliz. c. 2, ss. 9, 10, 11, stat. (1662) 14 Car. 2, c. 4, s. 20. The expression "mark" is a "money of account" to express 13s. 4d., and has long passed out of use.

(m) Ibid.

(n) Stat. (1558) 1 Eliz. c. 2, s. 4.

(o) Ibid. As to limitation of time for the commencement of a prosecution, see ibid., s. 20.

(p) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 57; Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1.

during the life of the former wife or husband, whether the second marriage is in England or elsewhere (q)

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (r) The offence is not triable at quarter sessions (rr)

SECT. 2.
Offences
relating to Marriage.

1076 A person marrying a second time, whose wife or husband has been continually absent from such person for seven years then last past, and has not been known by such person to be living at any time within that period, cannot be convicted of bigamy (s)

Absence for seven years.

In the case of such an absence the presumption is in favour of innocence, and it is incumbent upon the prosecution to show that the prisoner knew that the wife or husband was alive (t) It is not sufficient to prove that the prisoner had the means of such knowledge (u).

Even if the statutory period of seven years has not elapsed, the bona-fide belief of the prisoner at the time of the second marriage that the husband or wife was dead, provided such belief was based on reasonable grounds, affords a good defence to an indictment for bigamy (v)

1077 A person already married who, having the intention of appearing to contract a second marriage, goes through a form known to and recognised by the law as capable of producing a valid marriage, is guilty of bigamy, although the second marriage, even if it were not bigamous, would be otherwise invalid (w)

Invalid
second
marriage

1078 If the first marriage is void by reason of consanguinity, affinity, lunacy, or any other defect, the second marriage is not

Void and voidable
marriages.

(q) This includes not only the King's dominions, but any foreign country (R v Russell (Earl), [1901] A C 446) It is also immaterial where the first marriage has been celebrated (2 Hale, P O 692) But where such second marriage is contracted elsewhere than in England or Ireland and the person who contracts it is not a British subject, he is not punishable by English law (Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 45)

(r) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 57

(rr) Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1

(s) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 57, R v Gullen (1840), 9 C & P 681, R v Jones (1842), Car & M 614 The prisoner is entitled to the protection of the section, although he may have wilfully deserted his wife (R v Faulkes (1903), 19 T L R 250)

(t) R v Heaton (1863), 3 F & F 819, R v Curganwen (1865), L R 1 C C R 4, compare R v Jones (1883), 11 Q B D 118, C C R, where, there being no evidence of the date of the separation between the prisoner and his wife, to whom he had been married seventeen years before the second marriage, or as to when he had last seen her, the court upheld the conviction

(u) R v Briggs (1856), Dears & B 98

(v) R v Tolson (1889), 23 Q B D 168, C C R

(w) R v Allen (1872), L R 1 C C R 367, 376 (marriage within the prohibited degrees), disapproving of the Irish case R v Fanning (1866) 10 Cox, C O 411, see also R v Allison (1806), Russ & Ry 109, R v Brown (1843), 1 Car & Kir 144, R v Rea, supra The rule laid down in R v Allen will not be applicable in the case of a second marriage by a form not known to and recognised by the law, as in Burt v Burt (1860), 2 Sw. & Tr 88

SECT. 2.
Offences
relating to
Marriage.

Divorced
person.

bigamous (x) But if the first marriage is only voidable, as by reason of impotence, and has not been avoided at the date of the second marriage, the second marriage is bigamous (y)

1079 If the first marriage has been dissolved by a divorce à vinculo matrimonii before the date of the second marriage, or has been declared void by any court of competent jurisdiction, the second marriage is not bigamous (z), but it is otherwise, if there has only been a judicial separation, or if a decree nisi for divorce has not been made absolute (a)

An English court will only recognise the validity of a divorce obtained abroad, where at the date of the institution of proceedings for divorce the parties were domiciled within the jurisdiction of the court pronouncing the decree, or where the State of the domicile recognises such divorce and where the court which pronounced the decree was competent by the laws of the country which gave it jurisdiction (b) Where the parties had only a "matrimonial residence," and not a domicile in the ordinary sense within the foreign jurisdiction, the validity of the divorce will not be recognised (c), and any British subject who remarries subsequently in the lifetime of his wife may be convicted of bigamy (d)

The other party to the bigamous marriage is punishable as a principal in the second degree, if he or she knew at the time of such marriage that the previous marriage was still subsisting (e)

Evidence

1080 It is for the prosecution to prove the celebration of the first marriage and the identity of the parties If the marriage is alleged by the accused to be invalid on the ground of consanguinity, informality etc., he must adduce evidence of such invalidity If the celebration of the first marriage is proved, the presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is in favour of the validity of the marriage (f)

An actual marriage must be proved Evidence of reputation and cohabitation are not sufficient to support the indictment (g)

The prisoner's admission of the first marriage is, it seems,

(r) R v Chadwick (1847) 11 Q B 203 230, R v Willshire (1881), 6 Q B D 366, R v Mills (1841), 10 Cl & Fin 534, 11 J.

(y) 3 Co Inst 88, R v Jacobs (1826) 1 Mood C C 140, B v B (1891), 27 L R Ir 587, 608

(z) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100) s 57

(a) See Norman v Villars (1877), 2 Ex D 359, C A Stanhope v Stanhope (1886), 11 P D 103 109, C A

(b) See title CONFLICT OF LAWS, Vol VI, pp 266 et seq, and Bater v Bater, [1906] P 209

(c) Le Mesurier v Le Mesurier, [1895] A C 517, P O

(d) R v Russell (Earl), [1901] A C 446

(e) R v Brown (1843) 1 Car & Kir 144, 1 Russell on Crimes, 664, n

(f) R v Allison (1805) Russ & Ry 109, R v Mainwaring (1856), 26 L J (v c) 10, C C R., R v Bea (1872), L R 1 C C R 365, R v Creswell (1876), 1 Q B D 446, C C R. As to the requirements for the validity of a marriage, see title HUSBAND AND WIFE post

(g) Morris v Miller (1767), 4 Burr 2057, Catherwood v Osston (1844), 13 M & W 261, 265 See R v Wilson (1862), 3 F & F 119

not sufficient evidence of the fact without proving the actual celebration (h)

A certified copy of an entry purporting to be sealed with the seal of the register office is receivable as evidence of the birth, death, or marriage to which it relates without further proof of such entry (i).

To prove the identity of the prisoner with the person named in the certificate it is not necessary to call as a witness one of the subscribing witnesses to the register, any evidence which satisfies the jury as to the identity of the parties is sufficient (j)

The first husband or wife is not (k), but, when the first marriage has been proved, the second wife is, a competent witness for the prosecution (l)

It must be proved to the satisfaction of the jury that the first husband or wife was alive at the date of the second marriage. The law makes no presumption on the subject (m)

SECT. 2.
Offences
relating to Marriage.

SUB-SECT. 2 - Irregular Solemnisation of Marriage

1081 Everyone is by statute (n) guilty of a felony who (1), except by a special licence from the Archbishop of Canterbury, solemnises a marriage in any place other than a church or chapel in which marriages may be solemnised according to the rites of the Church of England, or a building which is duly registered under the Marriage Act, 1836 (o), or the office of a registrar of marriages, or (2) solemnises a marriage at any other time than between 8 a.m. and 3 p.m., except by such special licence, or (3) solemnises a marriage without due publication of banns except where such publication is not needed by law, or (4), falsely pretending to be in holy orders, solemnises matrimony according to the rites of the Church of England, or (5) being a registrar of marriages, knowingly issues a certificate for marriage after the expiration of three months from the date of the notice to be given by one of the parties intending to be married, or issues any certificate for marriage by licence

Irregular
solemnisation
of marriage

(h) R v Juman (1795), 1 East, P. O. 470, R v Savage (1876), 13 Cox, C. C. 175, H v Flaherty (1847), 2 Car. & K. 782. H v Lindsay (1902), 66 J. P. 505, and Catherwood v Caston (1844), 13 M. & W. 261, 267. But see R v Newton (1843), 2 Mood & R. 303.

(i) Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86), s. 58.

(j) 1 East, P. O. 472, e.g. evidence of the handwriting of the parties to the register or that the bell-ringers at the wedding were paid by them are given as examples. A photograph has been admitted as evidence (R v Tolson (1864), 4 F. & F. 103, WILLES, J.).

(k) Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), s. 1 (c). See p. 405, note (l), ante.

(l) 1 Hale, P. C. 693, 1 East, P. O. 469.

(m) R v Lumley (1869), L. R. 1 O. C. R. 196, R v Wallshere (1881), 6 Q. B. D. 366, C. C. R. If, however, the husband and wife have been separated for less than seven years, the prosecution need not prove affirmatively that the prisoner knew that his wife was alive. It is for him to disprove this (R v Ellis (1858), 1 F. & F. 309, R v Jones (1869), 11 Cox, C. C. 353, C. C. R.).

(n) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), s. 21, Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85) ss. 39, 40, 41, Marriage Act, 1886 (49 Vict. c. 14), s. 1, Marriage Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 58). There are special provisions in these Acts with reference to Jews and Quakers.

(o) 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85.

SECT 2
Offences
relating to
Marriage

before the expiration of seven days after the entry of the notice, or issues any certificate for marriage without licence before the expiration of twenty-one days after the entry of the notice, or issues any certificate the issue of which shall have been forbidden by any person authorised to forbid it, or knowingly and wilfully registers or solemnises in his office any marriage declared by the Marriage Act, 1836 (p), to be null and void

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (a)

A prosecution for any of these offences must be commenced within three years after the commission of the offence (b)

Non-compliance
in chapels etc

1082 Every person is by statute (c) guilty of a misdemeanour who, being a person authorised by the trustees or other governing body of a building registered for the solemnising of marriages to solemnise marriage therein, refuses or fails to comply with the Marriage Act, 1898 (d), or the enactments or regulations for the time being in force with respect to the solemnisation and registration of marriages

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years or a fine not exceeding £50, such a person on conviction for such an offence ceases to be an authorised person (e)

Sub SECT 3 — False Declarations and Notices

False
declaration.

1083 A person who knowingly and wilfully makes a false declaration or signs a false notice or certificate required by the Marriage Act, 1836 (f), or the Foreign Marriage Act, 1892 (g), for the purpose of procuring a marriage, or who forbids the issue of the registrar's certificate, or forbids a marriage under the last-named Act by falsely representing himself to be a person whose consent to the marriage is required by law knowing such representation to be false, incurs the penalties of perjury

The prosecution must be commenced within three years (h)

False
statement

1084 Everyone is subject to the same penalties as if he were guilty of perjury (i) who wilfully makes or causes to be made for the

(p) 6 & 7 Will 4, c 85, see also title HUSBAND AND WIFE

(a) Marriage Act, 1823 (4 Geo 4 c 76), s 21, Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will 4, c 85) s 39, Criminal Law Act 1827 (7 & 8 Geo 4, c 28), s 8 If the prosecution is under the Marriage Act, 1823 the maximum sentence of penal servitude is fourteen years, see ibid, s 21 The offence, it seems, is triable at quarter sessions.

(b) Marriage Act, 1823 supra s 21 Marriage Act, 1836, supra, s 41

(c) Marriage Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 58), s 12

(d) 61 & 62 Vict c 58

(e) Ibid, s 12, s e a person who is certified as such under the Marriage Act, 1898, supra, s 6 (3)

(f) 6 & 7 Will 4, c 85

(g) 55 & 56 Vict c 23 Offences under this sub-section are not triable at quarter sessions

(h) Marriage Act, 1836, supra, ss. 38, 41, Foreign Marriage Act, 1892, supra, s. 15 See also Marriage Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 58), s 12

(i) Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will 4, c 86), s 41.

purpose of being inserted in any register of marriage and false statement as to the particulars which are required by the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (j), to be registered

The false statement, to be within the Act, must be wilfully and intentionally untrue and not a mere mistake (h)

SECT 3
Offences
against
Decency
and Morality.

SECT 3—Offences against Decency and Morality (l).

SUB-SECT 1—Indecent Exposure

1085 The public exhibition of the naked person or any other act of open and notorious lewdness is an indictable misdemeanour at common law (m) Similar exposure, even though in a place of public resort, is not indictable at common law, if it is only visible by one person (n) The exposure is indictable, although the place be not one of public resort, if the place be such that a number of persons can and do see the act (o)

Bathing in a state of nudity in a place near to which persons frequently pass is indictable (p)

The punishment for this offence is a fine and imprisonment with or without hard labour (q)

1086 It is a common law misdemeanour (r) to keep a booth for the purpose of holding an indecent exhibition which persons are invited to come in and see, or to show on the highway a picture or exhibition which, although not indecent in the ordinary sense, is nevertheless disgusting and offensive (s)

(j) Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will 4, c 86), s 41 and see p 742, post

(k) R v Dunboyne (Lord) (1850), 3 Oni & Kir 1 As to forging marriage certificates and forging or destroying marriage registers see p 741, post

(l) As to rape, see p 611, post, indecent assault, p 614, post

(m) R v Sedley (1663), 1 Sid 168, from which it appears that this offence had formerly been punishable in the Star Chamber See R v Harris (1871), L R 1 C C R 282, and the cases cited infra By statute every person who wilfully, openly, and obscenely exposes his person in any street, road, or public highway, or in the view thereof, or in any place of public resort with intent to insult any female, is to be deemed a rogue and vagabond and liable on summary conviction to three months' imprisonment (Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo 4, c 83), s 4, as to a repetition of the offence which makes the offender an incorrigible rogue, see s 5, 10)

(n) R v Watson (1847), 2 Cox C C 376, R v Webb (1845), 3 Cox, C C 181 C C R, R v Farrell (1862), 9 Cox, C C 446, C C R (Ir), but see Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo 4, c 83), s 1

(o) As on the roof of a house (R v Thallman (1863), 9 Cox, C C 348, C C R), or in a field off the footway where people frequently pass, though without the legal right to do so (R v Willard (1884), 14 Q B D 6, C C R)

(p) R v Grunden (1809), 2 Camp 89, R v Reed (1871), 12 Cox, C C 1

(q) Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 29 The offence and the offence next mentioned are triable at quarter sessions

(r) R v Saunders (1875), 1 Q B D 15, C C R, and a person who wilfully exposes to public view in any highway or public place any indecent exhibition may also be dealt with as a rogue and vagabond (Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo 4, c 83), s 4, Vagrancy Act 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c 38), s 2)

(s) R v Grey (1864), 4 F & F 73

SECT 3
Offences
against
Decency
and
Morality

SUB-SECT 2 --Indecent Publications

1087 Anyone is guilty of a common law misdemeanour who publishes any indecent matter tending to the destruction of the morals of society and to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to immoral influences (a)

Indecent
prints.

1088 It is a misdemeanour to procure indecent prints with intent to publish them, but it is not an offence to simply have possession of obscene prints or literature even with intent to publish them (b)

Motive.

1089 If the necessary or natural effect of a publication is prejudicial to public morality or decency, the motive of the defendant in publishing the obscene matter is immaterial. If the work is manifestly obscene, the defendant will be taken to have published it with an unlawful intent, he cannot be heard to say that, though he broke the law, he did so from a wholesome and salutary purpose, and not for gain (c). But in many cases it is material to consider to whom and under what circumstances the publication is made. Some matters may be properly published to practitioners or students of medicine or surgery, the publication of which to boys or girls or even to the public indiscriminately would necessarily tend to the corruption of morals and therefore be illegal (d). The privilege which the law gives to reports of judicial proceedings does not extend to reports containing matters of an obscene and demoralising character (e).

Obscene libel
in newspaper

A prosecution cannot be commenced against the proprietor, publisher, editor, or any person responsible for the publication of

(a) R v Curl (1727), 2 Stra 788, which seems to have been the first successful prosecution for this offence in a temporal court. In R v Rad (1707), 11 Mod Rep 142, the court had held that the publication of an obscene book was not indictable, but was punishable only in a spiritual court. See now R v Hicklin (1868), L R 3 Q B 360, 371, R v Bradlaugh, [1906] 1 K B 201, C C R.

(b) Dugdale v R (1853), 1 E & B 435, R v Rosenstein (1826), 2 C & P 414. But possession of such prints etc may be evidence of procuring (p 260, ante).

(c) R v Hicklin (1868), L R 3 Q B 360, Steele v Brannan (1872), L R 7 C P 261.

(d) R v Hicklin, supra.

(e) Steele v Brannan, supra, R v Carlile (1819) 3 B & Ald 167, R v Creevey (1813), 1 M & S 273, 281, and see Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888 (31 & 32 Vict c 64), ss 3, 4. Provision has been made for the search for and seizure of obscene books or pictures. A stipendiary police magistrate or any two justices, upon complaint being made on oath, may issue a warrant to search any premises where the complainant alleges he has reason to believe that any obscene books, writings, or pictures are kept for sale or distribution, or exhibition for purposes of gain, or lending on hire, or otherwise published for gain, if such articles are seized upon the execution of the warrant, the occupier of the premises may be summoned to show cause why such articles should not be destroyed, and upon the hearing of the summons the justices, if satisfied that they are of the character stated in the warrant and have been kept for the purposes aforesaid, and that their publication would amount to a misdemeanour, may order them to be destroyed (Obscene Publications Act, 1957 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 84), s 1, and see R v Hicklin, supra, Ex parte Bradlaugh (1878), 3 Q B L 509).

a newspaper for any obscene or other libel published therein without an order of a judge at chambers being first obtained (f)

Upon a prosecution for an obscene libel it is not necessary to set out the obscene passages in the indictment, but the alleged libel, with the obscene passages identified, may be deposited with the indictment (g)

The punishment for the above-mentioned offences is fine and imprisonment with or without hard labour (h).

SECT. 2.
Offences
against
Decency
and
Morality.

1090 Everyone is guilty of a misdemeanour (i) who sends or attempts to send a postal packet which encloses any indecent or obscene print, painting, photograph, lithograph, engraving, book, or card, or any indecent or obscene article, or has on such packet or its cover any words, marks, or designs of an indecent, obscene, or grossly offensive character

Sending
indecent
prints etc.
by post.

The punishment for this offence on conviction on indictment is imprisonment with or without hard labour for twelve months (j).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Unnatural Offences

1091 It is a felony by statute (k) to commit the abominable crime of buggery either with mankind or with any animal

Unnatural
offences.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (l)

(f) Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 61), s. 8

(g) Ibid., s. 7, see R. v. Barracough, [1906] 1 K. B. 201, C. C. R.

(h) Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), s. 29. These offences are triable at quarter sessions

(i) Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 48), s. 63 (1) (b). See R. v. De Marny, [1907] 1 K. B. 388, C. C. R., for a prosecution under the corresponding section of the Post Office Protection Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 6), s. 4, now repealed. Post Office regulations may be made for preventing the sending or delivery by post of any obscene prints (ibid., s. 16)

(j) Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 48), s. 63 (2). The offence is triable at quarter sessions. Upon summary conviction the punishment is a fine of £10 (ibid.)

Affixing to or inscribing on any house, wall, hoarding etc. so as to be visible to a person passing along any street or footpath, or to or on any urn, or delivering or exhibiting to passers-by, any picture or printed or written matter which is of an indecent or obscene nature is on summary conviction punishable by a fine of £2 or imprisonment for a month (Indecent Advertisements Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 15), s. 3). As to certain forms of advertisement which the Act declares to be indecent within the meaning of this section, see s. 5. A person who gives to any other person any such pictures or printed or written matter with intent that the same should be so affixed, inscribed or delivered is liable to a penalty of £5 or imprisonment for three months (ibid., s. 4).

(k) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 61

(l) This offence was probably first made punishable by the common law courts by stat. (1533-1) 25 Hen. 8, c. 6 (2 Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, 429). See, however, 1 Hawk. P. C., c. 4. The punishment by 25 Hen. 8, c. 6, was death, and it so remained until the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 61 of which fixed the minimum punishment at ten years' penal servitude the minimum punishment was abolished by the Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38), s. 1).

SECT 3
Offences
against
Decency
and
Morality

Everyone is by statute(m) guilty of a misdemeanour who attempts to commit this crime, or is guilty of any assault with intent to commit it or of any indecent assault upon any male person

The punishment for such offence is penal servitude for not more than ten nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (n)

Sodomy

1092 The offence of sodomy can only be committed in ano (o). It may be committed by a man upon a woman (p), even upon his own wife (q) It is sufficient to prove any degree of penetration, though without emission (r) Consent is no defence, and a person who consents to the commission or the attempted commission of the offence upon him is guilty as a principal, unless he be under the age of fourteen (s) A man who induces a boy under fourteen years of age to commit such an act upon him is guilty of this offence (t), but, it seems, a boy under fourteen cannot be convicted of sodomy (u)

Upon an indictment for an unnatural offence, if the evidence does not show that the offence was completed, the accused may be convicted of an attempt to commit it (v) Evidence cannot be given of a previous admission by the prisoner that he had habitually committed and had a natural inclination to commit such practices, unless such a statement is made at or about the time of the commission of the offence or on the prisoner's arrest (y)

When the person upon whom the offence is committed is a consenting party, and therefore an accomplice, the accused should

(m) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 62

(n) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is triable at quarter sessions As to the power to inflict a fine upon a person convicted of this and of any other indictable misdemeanour against the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, see s 71 of that Act and p 412, ante As to requiring a person convicted of any felony punishable under the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, otherwise than with death to enter into recognisances and find sureties for good behaviour and to keep the peace, see s 71 of that Act

(o) R v Jacobs (1817), Russ & Ry 331

(p) R v Wiseman (1718), Fortes Rep 91, though some of the judges doubted, see also Swinburn on Wills, 7th ed, Vol I, 179

(q) R v Jellyman (1838), 8 C & P 604

(r) R v Reekpear (1832), 1 Mood C C 342, Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 63

(s) 3 Co Inst 59, 1 Hale, P C 670, but upon a charge of assault with intent to commit sodomy consent will afford a defence, unless the person alleged to be assaulted is under the age of thirteen years (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict c 45), s 2), or is of such an age or in such a physical condition as to be ignorant of the nature of the act intended to be done, as mere submission without acquiescence does not amount to consent (R v Wellaston (1872), 12 Cox, C C 180, O C R, R v Jack (1872), L R 2 C C R 10).

(t) R v Allen (1848), 1 Den 364

(u) See p 239, ante

(v) Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 9

(y) R v Cole (1810), 3 Russell on Crimes, 251, O C R.

not be convicted on the evidence of the accomplice alone without corroborating evidence (z).

SECT. 3.
Offences
against
Decency
and
Morality.

1093 Every person who solicits or attempts to solicit a person to the commission of sodomy is guilty of a misdemeanour at common law (a)

The punishment for this offence is fine, and imprisonment with or without hard labour (b)

Soliciting

1094 Bestiality can be committed by either man or woman (c) and with any animal (d) As in sodomy, any degree of penetration is sufficient without proof of emission (e) If the prosecution is delayed for an unreasonable time, the case should not be allowed to go to the jury (f)

Bestiality.

1095 Any male person is by statute guilty of a misdemeanour (g) who in public or private commits, or is a party to the commission of, or procures or attempts to procure the commission by any male person of any act of gross indecency with another male person (h)

Gross
indecent with a male person.

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment for two years with or without hard labour (i)

SUB SECT. 4.—Disorderly Houses

1096 Anyone is guilty of a misdemeanour at common law, punishable by fine or imprisonment with or without hard labour (j), who keeps a common ill-governed and disorderly house (k) Bawdy

Disorderly
houses.

(z) R v Jellyman, supra, R v Tate, [1908] 2 K B 680, O C R, and see pp 388, 408 ante

(a) R v Banaford (1874), 13 Cox, O C 9, C C R, 2 Chitty, Criminal Law, 50 See also Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 11, infra The common law offence is triable at quarter sessions

(b) This offence is triable at quarter sessions

(c) 3 Co Inst 59, 1 Hale, P C 669

(d) R v Brown (1889), 24 Q B D 357, C C R

(e) R v Cozens (1834), 6 C & P 351

(f) R v Robins (1844), 1 Cox, C C 114

(g) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 11 Where attempted sodomy or an assault with intent to commit that offence or an indecent assault is alleged to have been committed upon a child, the provisions in the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), ss 28—31, with reference to taking the depositions of the child (as to which, see p 408, ante) will apply

(h) This will include the defendant himself (R v Jones, [1896] 1 Q. B 4, O C R)

(i) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69) This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (ibid, s 17)

(j) Hard Labour Act, 1822 (3 Geo 4, c 114), R v Hygginson (1762), 2 Burr 1232

(k) 3 Co Inst 205, Hard Labour Act, 1822 (3 Geo 4, c. 114) By statute (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 14), any person who (1) keeps or manages or assists in the management of a brothel; or (2) being the tenant, lessee, or occupier of any premises knowingly permits them to be used as a brothel or for the purposes of habitual prostitution, or (3) being the lessor or landlord of any premises, or his agent, lets them or any part thereof with the knowledge that they are to be used as a brothel, or is wilfully a party to the continued use of such premises as

SECT 3
Offences
against
Decency
and
Morality.
 —

Brothels.

houses or brothels (l), unlicensed places of entertainment in the metropolis, gaming houses and betting houses are disorderly houses (m).

(1) Brothels

1097 A "brothel" means a place resorted to by persons of both sexes for the purpose of prostitution. A prostitute receiving men only into her own rooms cannot be convicted of keeping a brothel (n).

It is not necessary to constitute the offence that there should be any indecency or disorderly conduct perceptible from the exterior, or that the premises should have caused a nuisance to the neighbours (o), nor is it necessary, upon a prosecution for the common law offence, to show that the defendant was the real owner or keeper of the brothel. It is sufficient that he appeared, acted, or behaved himself as such or as the person having the management of the house (p).

The offence of permitting a house to be used as a brothel is a continuing one, and the permitting may therefore be charged in the indictment as extending over several days (q).

Procuration

1098 Everyone is by statute (a) guilty of a misdemeanour (1) who procures or attempts to procure any woman to leave the United Kingdom with intent that she may become an inmate of a a brothel, is liable on summary conviction to a fine of £20 or imprisonment for three months, and on a subsequent conviction to a fine of £40 or imprisonment for four months. A licensed victualler who is convicted of permitting his premises to be a brothel is liable to a fine of £20, forfeits his license, and is disqualified for ever from holding any licence for the sale of intoxicating liquors (Licensing Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict c 91) s 15). See R v Holland (Justices) (1882), 46 J P 312. See also s 14 as to harbouring prostitutes.

(l) The offence is triable at quarter sessions, see Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (25 Geo 2, c 36), s 5, see R v Charles (1861), L & Ca 90.

(m) See also titles GAMING AND WAGERING, THEATRES. As to disorderly inns, see p 555, post, and titles INNS AND INNKEEPERS, INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

(n) Singleton v Ellison, [1895] 1 Q B 607. In this case the charge against the defendant, a prostitute, was that of "keeping a brothel" within the meaning of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 13. If the charge had been under the same section that she, as tenant or occupier of the premises, permitted them to be used for the purposes of habitual prostitution, it is submitted that she might have been convicted of that offence. If several flats in a block of buildings under one roof are used for the purpose of prostitution, the whole block may be a brothel (Dunose v Wilson (1907), 71 J P 263).

(o) R v Holland (Justices) (1882), 46 J P 312, per GROVE, J., at p 312, R v Rice (1886), L R 1 C C R 21.

(p) Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (25 Geo 2, c 36), s 8, see ss 5, 6, 7, as to complaint by two inhabitants of the parish with a view to compel a prosecution. Upon such a complaint being made and the security required by that Act being given, a warrant must be issued for the arrest of the person alleged to be keeping a brothel, who is then bound over to appear at next quarter sessions or assizes to answer any indictment which may be found against him (ibid, s 6, see Disorderly Houses Act, 1818 (58 Geo 3, c 70), s 7). These provisions are applied by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 13, with the necessary modifications, to prosecutions for the offences mentioned in that section (see R v Newton, [1892] 1 Q B 648).

(q) Ex parte Burnaby, [1901] 2 K B 458.

(a) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s. 2 (3) (4).

brothel elsewhere (b), or (2) procures or attempts to procure a woman to leave her usual place of abode in the United Kingdom (such place not being a brothel) with intent that she may, for the purposes of prostitution, become an inmate of a brothel within or without the King's dominions (c)

SECT. 3.
Offences
against
Decency
and Morality.

The punishment for such offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (d)

No one can be convicted of any such offence upon the evidence of one witness, unless such witness is corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused (e)

1099 Any person is by statute (f) guilty of a misdemeanour who detains a woman against her will (1) in any premises with intent that she may be unlawfully and carnally known by any man, or (2) in any brothel

Detaining woman in a brothel

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour for two years (g)

1100 Where a woman is upon any premises for the purpose of having any unlawful carnal connection or is in any brothel, a person is deemed to detain her there, if with intent to induce her to remain in such premises or in the brothel he withholds from her any wearing apparel or other property belonging to her, or threatens her with legal proceedings, if she takes away with her any wearing apparel lent to her (h)

Meaning of
"detain"

1101 Anyone is guilty of a misdemeanour at common law who conspires together with one person or more to procure a woman for the purpose of prostitution, or to seduce her or cause her to be seduced (i)

Conspiring to seduce a woman

It is unnecessary to allege or prove that such woman had been previously chaste (i)

(11) Unlicensed Places of Entertainment

1102 Any house, room, garden or other place kept for public dancing, music, or other public entertainment of the like kind in the

Unlicensed house etc
for public
dancing

(b) Criminal Law Amendment Act 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 2 (3)

(c) Ibid., s. 2 (4)

(d) Ibid., s. 2. No indictment under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), is triable at quarter sessions (ibid., s. 17)

(e) Ibid., s. 2. As to offences against women and girls, see p. 611, post

(f) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1855 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 8

(g) Ibid.

(h) Ibid. A justice of the peace may, upon a sworn information being laid, issue a search warrant for any woman or girl alleged to be unlawfully detained for immoral purposes (ibid., s. 10). The search warrant, being a judicial act, will protect the person who laid the information from an action, if he has acted in good faith and has stated the facts fairly to the justice (Hope v. Loved (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 338, Ica v. Charrington (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 45, affirmed, ibid., 272, C. A.)

(i) R v. Grey (Lord) (1682), 9 State Tr. 127, R v. Meurs (1651), 2 Jon. 79, R v. Delaval (1763), 3 Burr 1434, R v. Howell (1861), 4 L. & T. 160. In all these cases the woman was under the age of twenty-one. In R v. Delaval (supra, at p. 1438) Lord Mansfield, C.J. stated that he remembered a case in the Court of Chancery wherein it appeared that a man had formally assigned his

SMO 3
Offences
against
Decency
and
Morality

cities of London and Westminster, or within twenty miles thereof (k), without a licence from the county council (l) is to be deemed a disorderly house or place, and every person keeping it without such licence may be indicted as the law directs in the case of disorderly houses (m)

Theatres and other places licensed by the Crown or by the Lord Chamberlain are excepted from these provisions (n)

It is immaterial that the entertainment is respectable and the company attending it is well behaved and that no actual nuisance is occasioned (o)

To render the occupier of the house liable the entertainment must be of a public nature, open to any person who chooses to go there, whether upon payment or gratuitously (p) The incidental or isolated use for music or dancing of a room which is not licensed is not a keeping of the room or house for that purpose within the meaning of the Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (a) If dancing or music is an essential or integral part of the entertainment and forms an independent attraction, the house falls within the Act, but it is otherwise, if dancing or music is merely subsidiary to a general performance not within the Act (b)

Houses used
for public
entertain- ment on Sunday

1103 Every house, room, or other place which is used for public entertainment or amusement, or for publicly debating on any subject whatever, upon any part of Sunday, and to which persons wife over to another man and that Lord Hardwicke directed a prosecution for that transaction as being notoriously and grossly against public decency and good manners See now Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69)

(k) This, however, does not include any place within the administrative county of Middlesex, which county has a special Act, the Music and Dancing Licences (Middlesex) Act, 1891 (57 & 58 Vict c 10) By s 2 (5) of this Act any place used for public dancing, singing, music or other public entertainment of the like kind and unlicensed by the county council is to be deemed a disorderly house, and the occupier is liable to a fine of £5 for every day during which it is so used S 2 (12) repeals the Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (25 Geo 2, c 36), ss 2, 3, so far as relates to the administrative county of Middlesex

(l) Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 41), s 3 (1)

(m) Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (25 Geo 2, c 36), s 2 Such person also forfeits £100 to anyone who may sue for it (ibid) A penalty of £100 can only be recovered once, although the house may be kept open for several days, but the offender, although he pays the penalty is still liable to be indicted for keeping a disorderly house (Tarrell v Messenger (1867), L R 2 C P 583, 585), and the recovery of a judgment for the penalty by a nominal plaintiff in collusion with the defendant is no bar to a subsequent action (stat (1489) 4 Hen 7, c 20, Jurdlestone v Brighton Aquarium Co (1878), 3 Ex D 137, (1879) 4 Ex D. 107, C A)

(n) Ibid s 4

(o) Green v Botheroyd (1828), 3 C & P 471

(p) Clark v Fearle (1793), 1 Esp 25, Bellis v Burghall (1799), 2 Esp 722, Archer v. Willingrice (1802), 4 Esp 186, Marks v Benjamin (1839), 5 M & W 565, 569 are admitted by the payment of money, or by tickets sold for money, is to be deemed a disorderly house, and its keeper may be indicted as the law directs in the case of a disorderly house (c).

(a) 25 Geo 2, c 36, Shutt v. Lewis (1804), 5 Esp 128, Marks v Benjamin, supra, at pp 567, 569, Ducres v. Conquest (1873), 28 L T, 402

(b) Gregory v Tavernor (1833), 6 C & L 286, Quaghen v Matthews (1865), 6 B & S. 474, 483, B. v Tucker (1877), 2 Q. B D 417, 421, C C R, and see Hall v. Green (1853), 9 Exch 247.

SECT. 2.
Offences
against
Decency
and Morality.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Gaming Houses

1104 Everyone who keeps a common gaming house is guilty of a misdemeanour as a nuisance at common law (d). Offences, however, with regard to the keeping of such houses are more usually dealt with under the statutes passed for their suppression.

Gaming
houses.

A common gaming house is a house or place kept or used for playing therein at any game of chance, or at any mixed game of chance and skill in which (1) a bank is kept by one or more of the players exclusively of the others, or (2) in which any game is played the chances of which are not alike favourable to all the players, including among the players the banker or other person by whom the game is managed or against whom the other players stake, play, or bet (e).

Any person who appears or acts as the master or as the person having the care, government, or management of any gaming house, is deemed to be the keeper thereof, and is liable to prosecution as such, although he is not in fact the real owner or keeper (f).

(c) Sunday Observance Act 1780 (21 Geo. 3, c. 49), s. 1. The keeper also forfeits £200 for every day that the place is used as above mentioned to anyone who may sue for it (ibid.). As to the effect of a judgment in a collusive action under this statute, see Gudstone v Brighton Aquarium Co (1878), 3 Ex. D 157, 4 Ex. D 107, C. A. By the Remission of Penalties Act, 1871 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 40), the Crown is empowered to mitigate in whole or in part any penalty, fine or forfeiture imposed or recovered under the Sunday Observance Act, 1780, whether on indictment, summary conviction, or by action. The Sunday Observance Act, 1780, does not apply to a place duly registered for public worship in which no music but sacred music is performed, and where instructive discourses are delivered, even though payment is required for admission to reserved seats (Barter v Langley (1861), 38 L. J. (M.C.) 1). The Brighton Aquarium was held to be a place of entertainment and amusement within the meaning of this statute (Terry v Brighton Aquarium Co (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 306), even after music was discontinued and the reading room closed on Sundays (Warner v Brighton Aquarium Co (1875), L. R. 10 Exch. 291). As to who is a "keeper" of the house within the meaning of the Act, see Reid v Wilson, [1895] 1 Q. B. 315, C. A., Martin v Benjamin, [1907] 1 K. B. 64.

(d) 1 Hawk. P. C., c. 32, s. 6. See title GAMING AND WAGLING.

(e) Jenks v Turpin (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 505, per A. L. SMITH, J., at p. 530. Another definition given by HAWKINS, J., in the same case at p. 516 is a house in which a large number of persons are invited habitually to congregate for the purpose of gaming, see also Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), s. 2.

(f) Disorderly Houses Act, 1751 (25 Geo. 2, c. 36), s. 8. The statutory provisions are much more extensive than the common law remedy (Gaming Houses Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 38), s. 4, see also Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), s. 4). Any person being the owner or occupier or having the use of any house, room, or place who opens, keeps, or uses it for the purpose of unlawful gaming, or wilfully permits it so to be opened or used by any other person, and any person having the care or management of or in any manner assisting in conducting the business of such a house, and any person advancing money for the purpose of gaming with persons frequenting the same, may on summary conviction be fined £500 and be committed to prison for twelve months. The defendant may elect to be tried on indictment (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 17), and he must be informed of his right to be so tried, see R v Beesby (1909), 25 T. L. R. 337.

SECT 3
Offences
against
Decency
and
Morality.

It is not necessary to prove that any person found playing was then playing for any money. The fact that cards or other instruments of gaming are on the suspected premises is prima facie evidence that the house was being used as a common gaming house, and that the persons found in the room or place where the instruments of gaming were found were playing there (g)

Gaming is not in itself unlawful at common law (h), but the fact that it is habitually carried on in a house kept for the purpose of gaming is strong evidence that the house is a common gaming house (i)

Unlawful
games

Unlawful gaming is either playing at any unlawful game or playing at any game in a common gaming house (j)

Unlawful games are ace of hearts, pharaoh (or faro), basset and hazard (k), passage, and every other game played with dice (except backgammon) (l), roulette (m), baccarat, and every game of cards which is not a game of mere skill, and probably every other game of mere chance (n)

All gaming, even at lawful games, if carried on at a common gaming house, is unlawful, and the keeper of the house is indictable (o)

Clubs etc
used for
gaming

1105 The occupier of the house and, in the case of a club, the members of the committee, if any, are liable to the penalties imposed by the Gaming Houses Act, 1854 (p), as having the care or management or assisting in conducting the business of the house. Ordinary players are not so liable, even if they take turns at keeping a bank (q), but a player who has bought the bank for the evening is a person assisting in the management (r)

A club which is kept for purposes of gaming, but at which only members are allowed to play, is none the less a common gaming house (s), but the occupier of a house in which gaming between friends is occasionally carried on cannot be said to use the house for gaming, and is not therefore indictable (a)

(g) Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict c 109), ss 5, 8. As to the power of the police to search suspected places in the metropolis, see ss 6, 7. The instruments of gaming may be ordered to be destroyed (ibid, s 8)

(h) Whether it becomes so if the stakes are excessive appears to be somewhat doubtful, see R v Roquer (1823), 2 Dow & Ry (K B) 431, 434, 436, and the observations of HAWKINS and SMITH, JJ, on that case in Jenks v. Turpin (1884), 13 Q B D 505, at pp 525, 532

(i) Jenks v Turpin, supra, at p 525

(j) Jenks v Turpin, supra

(k) Gaming Act, 1736 (12 Geo 2, c 28)

(l) Gaming Act, 1739 (13 Geo 2, c 19)

(m) Gaming Act, 1744 (18 Geo 2 c 34)

(n) Jenks v Turpin, supra, at p 521. The question whether a particular game is lawful or unlawful, or whether a house is used for unlawful gaming, is for the judge, not for the jury (R v Davies, [1897] 2 Q B 199, O C R)

(o) Jenks v Turpin, supra, at p 531

(p) 17 & 18 Vict c 38, s 4, and see title CLUBS, Vol IV, p 435

(q) Jenks v Turpin, supra. The players may be indicted for unlawful gaming, see stat 33 Hen 8, c 9, s 14, and Jenks v Turpin, supra, at p 526

(r) Derby v Bloomfield (1904), 68 J P 391

(s) Jenks v Turpin, supra

(a) R v Davies, [1897] 2 Q B 199, C C R., see also Luckwood v Cooper (1903), 72 L J (K B) 690

To constitute the offence of keeping a common gaming house it is not necessary that the place should be principally used for the purpose of gaming. It is sufficient that gaming is shown to be habitually carried on there (b).

SECT 8
Offences
against
Decency
and Morality.

SUB-SECT 6—Lotteries

1106 A lottery is a distribution of prizes by lot or chance (c). To constitute a lottery the matter must depend entirely upon chance. If there is an element of skill, then the scheme is not a lottery, although the result may depend largely on chance (d).

Lotteries.

All lotteries are declared by statute to be common and public nuisances (e), and the persons engaged in keeping them are guilty of misdemeanour, and are punishable on indictment with fine and imprisonment without hard labour (f).

(b) In Fielding v Turner, [1903] 1 K B 867, a confectioner had in his shop an automatic machine, a person who put a penny into a slot in the machine might, on pulling a knob, by chance obtain either a ticket entitling him to sweets or nothing at all, it was held that the shop-keeper used his shop for the purpose of unlawful gaming within s 4 of the Gaming Houses Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict c 38), see also Thompson v Mason (1904), 68 J P 270, and Jenks v Turpin (1884), 13 Q B D 505.

(c) Taylor v Smetten (1883), 11 Q B D 207, 210.

(d) Hall v Cox, [1899] 1 Q B 198, C A., see also Caminada v Hulton (1891), 60 L J (M C) 116, Stoddart v Sugar, [1895] 2 Q B 474. The following have been held to be lotteries—Sales of goods with tickets for prizes of varying values (R v Harris (1866), 10 Cox, C C 352, Taylor v Smetten, supra), free distribution by newspaper proprietors of medals bearing prize-winning numbers (Willis v Young and Stenbridge, [1907] 1 K B 448), "spot" competition in a newspaper (Hall v McWilliam (1901), 20 Cox, C C 31), "guessing word" competition (Bardley v Pearson, [1893] 2 Ch 154), distribution of prizes at an entertainment to occupiers of particular seats (Morris v Blackman (1864), 2 H & C 912), a sweepstake, whether the organiser derives profit from it or not (Allport v Nutt (1845), 1 C B 974, 984, Gatty v Furze (1818), 9 Q B 431, Meuring v Hellings (1845), 14 M & W 711, R v Crawshaw (1860), 8 Cox, C C 375, Hardwick v Lane, [1904] 1 K B 201, and see R v Hobbs, [1894] 2 Q B 647, C C R). The following have been held not to be lotteries—Issue of prize coupons for the selection of winners of horse races (Caminada v Hulton (1891), 60 L J (M C) 116, Stoddart v Sugar, [1895] 2 Q B 474), offer of prize for correct prediction of numbers of births and deaths in London in a given week (Hall v Cox, [1899] 1 Q B 198, C A). See also p 550, post.

(e) Stat (1698) 10 Will 3, c 23, s 1.

(f) R v Crawshaw (1860), 8 Cox, C C 375. By the Act of William III, supra, the keeper of a lottery and the players are also liable to penalties of £500 and £20 respectively, to be recovered by action, see also as to such penalties, Lotteries Act, 1721 (8 Geo 1, c 2), ss 36, 37, Gaming Act, 1738 (12 Geo 2, c 28), s 1. It is also provided by statute that every person who publicly or privately keeps any office or place for carrying on any lottery not authorised by Parliament is to be deemed a rogue and vagabond, and is punishable as such. It is in this way that persons who hold lotteries are now usually dealt with (Gaming Act, 1802 (42 Geo 3, c 119), ss 1, 2). The only lotteries now authorised by Parliament are those which may be carried on for the encouragement of the fine arts by art unions which may have been incorporated by royal charter or constituted under a deed and rules approved by the Privy Council (Art Unions Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict c 48)). As for other statutory provisions as to lotteries, see Lotteries Act, 1710 (9 Ann c 6), s 57, Lotteries Act, 1721 (3 Geo 1, c 2), ss 36, 37, Lotteries Act, 1722 (9 Geo 1, c 19), s 4, Lotteries Act, 1732 (6 Geo 2, c 35), s 29, Gaming Act, 1738 (12 Geo 2, c 28), ss 3, 4, Gaming Act, 1802 (42 Geo 3, c 119), ss 1—7, Lotteries Act, 1806 (46 Geo 3, c 146), s 54, Lotteries Act, 1823 (4 Geo 4, c 60). 19, 37—39, 41, 59, 60—67, Lotteries

SECT 8
Offences
against
Decency
and
Morality.

A person cannot be convicted of keeping a place for the purpose of a lottery (g) in which on an isolated occasion tickets are drawn for a lottery (h)

A person who incites another to the keeping of a lottery, and knowingly supplies instruments or goods for that purpose, is punishable as an aider and abettor (i)

SUB-SECT 7 — Betting Houses

Betting

Betting
houses etc

1107 Betting is not in itself illegal (j), nor does it appear that a house established for carrying on a betting business is indictable at common law, unless it is so conducted as to be in fact a nuisance to the public. It is, however, provided by statute (k) that no house, office, room, or other place may be opened, kept, or used (l) for the purpose of the owner, occupier, or keeper thereof, or any person using the same or employed by or acting for or on behalf of such owner, etc., or of any person having the care or management or in any manner conducting the business, betting with persons resorting thereto, or (2) for the purpose of any money or valuable thing being received by such owner or other person as the consideration for any promise, express or implied, to pay money on the event of any horse race, or other race, fight, game, sport, or exercise, or to secure such payment by any other person.

Every house, office, room, or other place so kept or used is declared to be a common nuisance and (l) a common gaming house within the meaning of the Gaming Act, 1845 (m)

Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will 4, c 66), s 1, Lotteries Act, 1845 (5 & 9 Vict c 74), ss 3, 4. Penalties recoverable by summary proceedings are imposed on those who advertise or publish any proposal for a lottery, or who sell tickets in a lottery, whether English or foreign (Gaming Act, 1802 (42 Geo 3, c 119), s 5, Lotteries Act, 1823 (4 Geo 4, c 60), s 41, and see Lotteries Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will 4, c 66), s 1). There are similar provisions in the earlier Acts, as to which see King v Smith (1791) 4 Term Rep 411. A building society established after 25th August, 1891, is forbidden to cause or permit applicants for advances to ballot for precedence or in any way make the granting of an advance depend on any chance or lot (Building Societies Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 47), s 12). The offence of keeping a lottery is triable at quarter sessions.

(g) See, under the Gaming Act, 1802 (42 Geo 3, c 119), s 2.

(h) Martin v Benjamin, [1907] 1 K B 64, but the court suggested that the defendant might possibly have been convicted for selling lottery tickets under the Lotteries Act, 1823 (4 Geo 4, c 60), s 41, or for keeping a lottery under 10 Will 3, c 23 s 2.

(i) Barritt v Burden (1891) 63 L J (M C) 33.

(j) See Sarby v Fulton, [1909] 2 K B 208, 224, 227.

(k) Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict c 119), s 1.

(l) Ibid, s 2.

(m) 8 & 9 Vict c 109. Any person who, being the owner or occupier of any such house or place or a person using the same, opens or uses it for the above-mentioned purposes, and an owner or occupier who knowingly permits such use, and any person who has the care or management of or assists in conducting such a business therein, is liable to a fine of £100 or to six months' imprisonment with or without hard labour on summary conviction (Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict c 119), s 3). As to the right of a person prosecuted summarily to be tried by a jury, see Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 49), s 17. If any such person receives any money or valuable thing as a deposit on any bet upon a horse or any other race, or any fight, game, sport, or exercise, or as the consideration for a promise to pay money on such an event, he is liable on summary conviction to a penalty of £50, or to three

Every person engaged in keeping such a house is guilty of a misdemeanour and punishable by fine and imprisonment with or without hard labour, as well as by the alternative penalties provided by statute (n).

SECT. 2.
Offences
against
Decency
and Morality.

What is a
"place?"

1108. In order that a "place" may come within the above-mentioned provisions, it must be an ascertained place, where a man engaged in betting may, according to ordinary usage, be found by persons wishing to bet with him (o), and although it is not necessary that it should be covered in, nor that it should be actually defined by metes and bounds, there must be something definite and, for the time being, fixed, marking its situation though not necessarily showing the character of the business carried on there (p).

months' imprisonment with or without hard labour (ibid, s 4), and the deposit may be recovered back by the person paying it (s 5). The Act does not extend to a person who receives money or a valuable thing by way of stakes or deposit to be paid to the winner of any race or lawful sport, game or exercise, or to the owner of any horse engaged in a race (ibid, s 6).

(n) R v Crawshaw (1860), 8 Cox, C C 375, Hard Labour Act, 1822 (3 Geo 4, c 114). The offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(o) Powell v Kempton Park Race Course Co, [1899] 1 C 113, 198.

(p) The words "or other place" in the Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict c 119), s 1, have given rise to a large number of cases, of which an abstract is given in this note. The following have been held to be "places" within the meaning of the section when used by persons habitually resorting there for the purpose of betting—A stool at a racecourse covered with an unusually large and marked umbrella (Bows v Fenwick (1874), L R 9 C P 319, Brown v Patch, [1899] 1 Q B 692), a strip of ground separated from a racecourse by railings and containing temporary wooden roofless structures with desks (Shaw v Monley (1865), L R 3 Exch 137), a small wooden box used to stand upon in a railed inclosure on a grand stand at a racecourse (Galloway v Mars (1881), 8 Q B D 275, the movable box affording the only distinction between that case and Powell v Kempton Park Race Course Co, supra), the bar room of a publichouse, if used by a bookmaker for betting, and if he does so with the knowledge and consent of the publican (R v Pready (1848) 17 Cox, C C 433, Hornaby v Raggett, [1892] 1 Q B 20, Bellon v Bush, [1899] 2 Q B 380, Tromans v Hodgkinson, [1903] 1 K B 30, R v Deaville, [1903] 1 K B 466, C C R, R v Simpson, [1903] 1 K B 473 C C R), a piece of ground bounded by a hoarding and its stays, to which the defendant habitually went to bet (Liddell v Lofthouse, [1896] 1 Q B 295), a piece of vacant ground known as the "Pit Heap," to which the public had access (McInaney v Hildrath, [1897] 1 Q B 600, a case of perhaps doubtful authority, being very similar to Harle v Dunn [1897] 1 Q B 579, overruled (see infra), this and similar doubtful cases will, however, now be met by the Street Betting Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 43), s 1 (see p 551, post)), an archway forming a private thoroughfare (R v Humphrey, [1898] 1 Q B 875, C C R), a garden at the back of a house (R v Russell (1906), 69 J P 247, C C R), see also Clark v Dykes (1906) 5 F (Ct of Justiciary) 43, and Flannagan v Hill (1904), 7 F (Ct of Justiciary) 26.

The following have been held not to be "places" within the meaning of the section—A clump of trees in Hyde Park under which the defendant stood daily for betting (Doggett v Catterns (1865), 19 C B (N S) 765, Ex Ch, see now the Street Betting Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 43), s 1), a reserved portion of a field where dog races were being held, defendant having no stand or distinguishing mark (Snow v Hill (1885), 14 Q B D 588), a bar-room of a publichouse to which the defendant went on only three successive days for betting purposes (Whitehurst v Fencher (1890), 62 L T 433, see the observations of MATHEW, J, on this case in Hornaby v Raggett, supra), a railed inclosure at a racecourse to which the defendant and many other bookmakers and others resorted to bet, but used no stand or distinguishing umbrella (Powell v Kempton Park Race Course Co, supra, at p 197, expressly overruling Eastwood v Miller (1874), L R 9 Q B 440, Haigh v Sheffield

SECT. 8.
Offences
against
Decency
and Morality.

Clubs

Newspaper coupons.

A bonâ fide club, even though it may be intended that betting should be carried on in the club house between the members, but not with non-members, is not a house used for betting within the meaning of the above-mentioned provisions (q). But it is otherwise if the club consists partly of bookmakers and partly of members who go there to bet with such bookmakers and not with each other indiscriminately (r).

The office of a newspaper in which coupons are published entitling the purchasers of the newspaper to a prize for guessing the winners of a future horse race or game is a betting house within the meaning of the above-mentioned provisions, inasmuch as the newspaper proprietor undertakes to pay money on the event of such horse race or game (s).

Receiving
money

1109 To constitute a betting house it is not necessary that the money or bet should be received at such house, nor even within the United Kingdom, it is sufficient that the house is used for carrying on an essential part of the operations resulting in the payment of the money either there or elsewhere (t).

What is keeping a house for the purpose
of betting

1110 Keeping a house for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto and keeping a house for the purpose of receiving deposits on bets are two distinct offences (a). To support a charge of the first kind it is necessary to show that persons resorted to the house in person to bet. Evidence that betting was done by letters received there is insufficient, but it is not necessary to show that the persons resorting to the house paid or received bets there (b). Nor is a house or place a betting house, if it is only used for paying bets which have been made elsewhere (c).

But if the charge is that the house was kept for the purpose of receiving deposits on bets as the consideration of a promise to pay on a future event, or in other words for ready-money betting, evidence that such deposits were paid by letter is sufficient without proof of personal resort (d).

A house used for organising a sweepstakes is not a betting house within the meaning of the above-mentioned provisions (e).

---

Town Council (1874), L R 10 Q B 102, (in which, it may be observed, the bookmakers stood on chairs or stools), and Hawke v Dunn [1897] 1 Q B 579, see also Wright v Smith (1903), 6 F (Ct of Justiciary) 18.

(q) Downes v Johnson, [1895] 2 Q R 203.

(r) R v Corrie (1904), 68 J P 294, C O R.

(s) R v Stoddart [1901] 1 K B 177, Mackenzie v Hawke, [1902] 2 K B 216, Lennox v Stoddart, [1902] 2 K B 21, C A, Hauke v Hulton (1905), 22 T L R 169.

(t) Stoddart v Hawke, [1902] 1 K B 353, Lennox v Stoddart, supra, and see R v Stoddart (1909), 25 T L R 612, C O A.

(a) Bond v Plumb, [1894] 1 Q B 169.

(b) Ibid., Davis v Stephenson (1890), 24 Q B D 529, R v Brown, [1895] 1 Q B 119, C O R., R v Worton, [1895] 1 Q B 227, C O R.

(c) Bradford v Dawson, [1897] 1 Q B 307, see now the Street Betting Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 43).

(d) R v Stoddart, [1901] 1 K B 177, see also the other authorities mentioned in notes (s) and (t), supra.

(e) R v Hobbs, [1898] 2 Q B 647, C O R., but the sweepstakes is a lottery (see p. 647, note (d), ante).

SUB-SECT 8.—Betting in Streets.

SECT. 3.
Offences
against
Decency
and Morality.

Street
betting

1111 Everyone is by statute (f) guilty of an indictable misdemeanour who frequents or loiters in streets or public places on behalf either of himself or of any other person for the purpose of bookmaking or betting or wagering, or agreeing to bet or wager, paying or receiving or settling bets, if such person has been twice previously summarily convicted (g)

The punishment for this offence on conviction on indictment is a fine of £50, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for six months without the option of a fine (h)

It is an offence punishable on summary conviction by a fine of £30, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, for two months to exhibit or publish any placard, handbill, card, writing, sign, or advertisement whereby it is made to appear that any house or place is kept or used for the purpose of making bets or wagers, or for exhibiting betting lists, or with intent to induce any person to resort there for the purpose of making bets or wagers, or to invite on behalf of the owner or occupier other persons to resort there to make bets (Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict c 119), s 7, see Hawke v Mackenzie (Nos 1 and 2), [1902] 2 K B 225, Ashley and Smith, Ltd v Hawke (1903), 67 J P 361), it is also an offence punishable in the same way for any person to send, exhibit, or publish any letter, circular, telegram, placard, handbill, card or advertisement whereby it is made to appear that any person, either within or without the kingdom, will give information or advice for the purpose of or with respect to any bet or wager or any such event or contingency as is mentioned in the Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict c 119), or will make on behalf of any other person any such bet or wager as is mentioned in that Act, it is also an offence punishable in the same way to send etc such letter etc with intent to induce any person to apply to any house etc with the view of obtaining information or advice for the purpose of any such bet etc, or to send such letter etc inviting any person to make or take any share in or in connection with such bet etc (Betting Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict c 15), s 3, see Hawke v Mackenzie, supra This Act only applies to advertisements to give information or advice as to bets to be made in a betting house (Cor v Andrews (1883), 12 Q B D 146)) A justice of the peace, upon complaint on oath being made before him may issue a search warrant authorising a constable to search any premises suspected of being used as a betting house, and all persons found therein and all cards or other documents relating to racing or betting may be brought before the justice (Betting Act, 1883 (16 & 17 Vict c 119), s 11) In the metropolis the Commissioner of Police may authorise such a search (ibid, s 12) The persons arrested may be bound over under stat (1541) 33 Hen 8, c 9, not to haunt such places in future (Murphy v Arrow, [1897] 2 Q B 527)

(f) Street Betting Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7 c 43), s 1 The offence is triable at quarter sessions

(g) The defendant is liable on a first conviction to a fine not exceeding £10 and on a second conviction to a fine not exceeding £20 (ibid)

(h) On summary conviction for the third offence the punishment is a fine of £30, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for three months (ibid.) For the purposes of this section "street" includes any highway and any public bridge, road, lane, footway, square, court, alley or passage, whether a thoroughfare or not, and "public place" includes any public park, garden, or sea beach, and any uninclosed ground to which the public for the time being have unrestricted access, and every inclosed place (not being a public park or garden) to which the public have a restricted right of access, whether on payment or otherwise, if at every public entrance there is conspicuously exhibited by the owner or person having control of the place a notice prohibiting betting therein (ibid, s 1 (4)) Nothing contained in the Act applies to any ground used for the purpose of a racecourse or ground adjacent thereto on the days on which races take place (s 2) As to the meaning of loitering, see Dunning v Sweetman (1909), 25 T. L. R. 302

SECT 3

Offences
against
Decency
and Morality

Inviting infants to bet or borrow money.

SUB-SECT 9—Inviting Minors to Bet etc

1112 Everyone is by statute (i) guilty of a misdemeanour who, for the purpose of earning commission, interest, or reward, or other profit, sends to a person whom he knows to be an infant any circular, advertisement, letter, or other document which invites, or may reasonably be implied to invite, the person receiving it to make any bet or wager, or to take any share or interest in a betting or wagering transaction, or to apply to any person or at any place for information or advice for the purpose of any bet or wager, or for information as to any race, fight, game, sport or other contingency upon which betting is generally carried on, or which invites him to borrow money or to apply to any person or at any place for information or advice as to borrowing money

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment for three months with or without hard labour or a fine of £100 or both (k)

If any such document is sent to any infant at any college, school, or other place of education the person sending or causing the document to be sent is to be deemed to have known that the person to whom it was sent was an infant, unless the sender proves that he had reasonable ground for believing the person to whom the document was sent to be of full age (l)

The same penalties are imposed upon a person who without the authority of a court solicits an infant to make an affidavit or statutory declaration for the purpose of or in connection with any loan (m).

SUB-SECT 10—Offences relating to Burial or Cremation

Failure to bury.

1113 The person upon whom the duty of disposing of a dead body falls (a) is guilty of a common law misdemeanour, which is punishable by fine or imprisonment, if, having the means, he fails to discharge such duty (b)

Preventing
burial etc.

1114 It is a misdemeanour at common law either to prevent a body from being buried (c), or to disinter it without lawful authority (d), whether for dissection or otherwise (e), or for an

(i) Betting and Loans (Infants) Act, 1892 (55 Vict c 4), ss 1, 2

(k) Ibid Upon summary conviction the punishment is imprisonment with or without hard labour for one month or to a fine of £20 or both

(l) Ibid, s 3

(m) Ibid, s. 4 (these offences are triable at quarter sessions), see also title MONEY AND MONEY LENDERS

(a) See title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol III, p 405

(b) R v Vann (1851), 2 Den 325, R v Stewart (1840), 12 Ad & El 773, 778 See also Jenkins v Tucker (1788), 1 Hy Bl 90, Ambrose v Kerrison (1851), 20 L.J (Q.P.) 135

(c) It is a common law misdemeanour to detain a dead body, as, e.g., upon a supposed claim for fees or a debt, and to refuse to deliver it to the executor or to bury it against his directions (R v Scott (1842), 2 Q. B 248, n.) See Williams v Williams (1882), 20 Oh D 659

(d) R v Gilles (1818), Russ & Ry 366, n., R v Lynn (1788), 2 Term Rep 733, R v Frost (1858), Dears & B 590, 598 As to the right of the personal representatives of the deceased to permit an anatomical examination of the body, see Anatomy Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will 4, c 75), ss 7, 14, see also title MEDICINE AND PHARMACY

(e) R. v. Cundick (1822), 1 Dow & Ry (M.C.) 356.

undertaker to whom a body is intrusted for burial to sell it for dissection (f)

SECT. 3.
Offences
against
Decency
and Morality.

Where disinterment has taken place without authority, it is no defence that it was done from a pious and laudable motive (g), or that the human remains were not disturbed or removed in an indecent and improper manner (h)

1115 It is a misdemeanour to expose a dead body near the public highway where it may be seen by passers-by and in such a way as to shock public decency (i)

Exposing dead body.

The punishment for the three last-mentioned misdemeanours is fine and imprisonment without hard labour (k)

1116 It is not in itself an offence against the law to burn a dead body provided that this is done decently and in such a way as not to cause a nuisance to persons passing along public roads or other places where they have a right to go (l).

Burning dead body

Everyone is by statute (m) guilty of a misdemeanour who wilfully makes a false declaration or representation or signs or utters any false certificate with a view to procuring the burning of any human remains.

Cremation
Act, 1902.

The punishment for this offence, in addition to any penalty which the offender may otherwise incur, is imprisonment with or without hard labour for two years (n)

Everyone is by statute (o) guilty of a misdemeanour who, with intent to conceal the commission or impede the prosecution of any offence, procures or attempts to procure the cremation of any body or makes any declaration or certificate under the Cremation Act, 1902 (p)

The punishment for this offence on conviction on indictment is penal servitude for not more than five or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (q).

SUP-SECT. 11.—Drunkenness

1117 Drunkenness in some circumstances is punishable by fine on summary conviction (r) There are, however, certain statutory

Punishment of habitual drunkard.

(f) R v Sharpe (1857), Dears & B 160

(g) R v Jacobson (1880), 14 Cox, C C 522

(h) As to authorising disinterment, see title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol III, p 553

(i) R v Clark (1833), 15 Cox, C C 171

(k) These offences are triable at quarter sessions

(l) R v Price (1883), 12 Q B D 247, 256 Or unless it is done in such a way as to infringe the provisions of the Cremation Act, 1902 (2 Edw 7, c 8), for which see title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol III, p 576

(m) Cremation Act, 1902 (2 Edw 7, c 8), s 6 (2)

(n) Ibid

(o) Ibid, s 8 (3).

(p) Ibid, s 8 (3)

(q) Ibid These offences under the Cremation Act, 1902 (2 Edw 7, c 8), are, it seems, triable at quarter sessions

(r) Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict c 94), s 12, Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Edw 7, c 28), s 1, see title INTOXICATING LIQUORS

SECT. 3
Offences
against
Decency
and
Morality.

Indictment.

provisions which enable a criminal habitual drunkard to be dealt with on indictment (f)

The indictment, after charging the offence, must state that the accused is a habitual drunkard. He is in the first instance arraigned for the offence, and if he pleads or is found guilty of the offence, the jury are to be charged to inquire whether he is a habitual drunkard. Unless evidence that the defendant is a habitual drunkard has been given before he is committed for trial, not less than seven days' notice must be given to the proper officer of the court by which he is to be tried that it is intended to charge habitual drunkenness in the indictment (g).

Sentence of detention.

1118 A person who commits any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to the Inebriates Act, 1898 (h), and who within the twelve months previous to such commission has been convicted summarily at least three times of any offences so mentioned, and who is a habitual drunkard, is liable on conviction on indictment (or, if he consents to be so dealt with, on summary conviction) to be detained in any certified inebriate reformatory for three years, but he cannot be sentenced to imprisonment in addition to detention (i). The offender must be informed that he has a right to be tried on indictment (k).

If a person convicted is over sixty years of age, and is liable to have a detention order under the Inebriates Act, 1898 (l), made against him, the court may, if they think fit, order him to be disqualified for a statutory old age pension for such period not exceeding ten years, as the court may direct (m).

SECT. 4 — Offences affecting Public Health, Safety, and Convenience.

SUB-SECT. 1 — Unwholesome Provisions

ng etc
unwholesome
provisions.

1119 Everyone is guilty of a misdemeanour at common law (n) who knowingly exposes or sells in the way of his trade, or sends or brings to market or has in his possession with intent to sell for human food, articles of food or drink which are corrupt and unfit and dangerous for human food (o). Proceedings for

(f) See p. 417, ante

(g) Inebriates Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 60) s. 1. See R v Prince (1908), 1 Cr. App. Rep. 252.

(h) 61 & 62 Vict. c. 60. Namely being found drunk in a highway or public place or on licensed premises, being guilty while drunk of riotous or disorderly behaviour in a highway or public place, being drunk while in charge of a carriage, horse, cattle or steam engine, or when in possession of loaded fire-arms refusing to quit licensed premises when drunk, when drunk persisting in entering or in refusing to leave a passenger steamer.

(i) Inebriates Act 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 60) s. 2 (1), Commissioner of Police v Donovan [1903] 1 K. B. 895, R v Briggs, [1909] 1 K. B. 381, C. C. A.

(k) Inebriates Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 60), s. 2, Summary Jurisdiction Act 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 17. As to escape from inebriate reformatories, see Inebriates Act, 1898, ss. 11, 18, and the Regulations made under the Act.

(l) 61 & 62 Vict. c. 60.

(m) Old Age Pensions Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 40), s. 3 (3).

(n) Or perhaps certain early statutes, see 4 Co. Inst. 261, 4 Bl. Com. 162.

(o) 4 Co. Inst. 261, R v. Dixon (1814), 3 M. & S. 11, R v. Stevenson (1862), offences of this nature are, however, more commonly taken under the Public Health Act, 1875 (p), or the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, 1875 and 1899 (a)

The punishment for this offence is fine and imprisonment with or without hard labour (b)

1120 Everyone is by statute (c) guilty of a misdemeanour who, after a previous summary conviction for the like offence, knowingly mixes, colours, stains, or powders any article of food with any ingredient or material so as to render it injurious to health, with intent that it may be sold in that state, or to sell it so mixed or coloured

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour for six months (d)

1121 Many nuisances which affect the public generally are indictable. Offences of this character are dealt with in other parts of this work (e)

SUB-SECT 2—Offences by Innkeepers

1122 The keeper of an inn may by the common law be indicted and fined for a misdemeanour, as being guilty of a public nuisance, if he usually harbours thieves or persons of scandalous reputation, or suffers frequent disorders in his house (f)

SECT 4.
Offences affecting Public Health
etc.

Injurious foods.

Nuisances.

Offences by innkeepers.

3 F & F 106, R v Jarvis (1862) 3 F & F 108, R v Crawley (1862), 3 F & F 109, Purnby v Bollett (1817), 16 M & W 644, 651, Shillito v. Thompson (1875) 1 Q B D 12

(p) 38 & 39 Vict c 55. See title PUBLIC HEALTH ETC

(a) 38 & 39 Vict c 61 and 62 & 63 Vict c 51. By the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 55), ss 116, 117, if any animal carcass, meat, poultry, game, flesh, fish, fruit, vegetables, corn, bread, flour, or milk, is exposed for sale or deposited in any place for the purpose of sale or of preparation for sale and intended for the use of man, and appears to a medical officer of health or an inspector of nuisances to be diseased, unsound, unwholesome, or unfit for the food of man, such medical officer etc may seize and carry away the same in order to have it dealt with by a justice, a justice may order the same to be destroyed, and the person to whom it belonged or in whose possession or on whose premises it was found is liable to a penalty of £20, or without the infliction of a fine to imprisonment for three months. See title FOOD AND DRUGS

(b) See Criminal Procedure Act 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100) s 29, 2 Russell on Crimes, 15, 2 1st P C 822

(c) Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 63), ss 3, 5, 8

(d) Ibid. The punishment for a first offence, upon summary conviction, is a fine of £50. By s 4 similar penalties are imposed for knowingly mixing ingredients with drugs so as to affect injuriously their quality or potency. "Food" in the Food and Drugs Acts includes every article used for food or drink by man other than drugs or water, and also includes flavouring matters and condiments (Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict c 51), s 26). The accused is not liable to be convicted, if he shows to the satisfaction of the court that he did not know of the adulteration of the article of food or drug, and that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained that knowledge (Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 63), s 5). Nothing contained in the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 63) affects the power of proceeding by indictment (ibid, s 28). The forging or knowingly uttering for the purposes of the Act of any certificate or warrant, is a misdemeanour punishable by imprisonment for two years with hard labour (ibid, s 27 (1)), and see p 760, post. See also title FOOD AND DRUGS

(e) See titles HIGHWAYS, NUISANCE, PUBLIC HEALTH

(f) 1 Hawk. P. C., c. 32, s. 1 (L. 714), where it is also said to be indictable for

SECT. 4

Offences affecting Public Health etc.

Refusing to receive travellers.

If a person who keeps a common inn (g) refuses either to receive a traveller as a guest into his house, or to find him reasonably suitable victuals or lodging, he is not only liable in an action for damages, but is also guilty of a misdemeanour, and may be indicted and fined (h).

An innkeeper is not liable for such refusal if his inn is full (i), or if the person applying is not a traveller (a), or if he is drunken, violent, quarrelsome or disorderly, or a person whose presence on the premises would subject the innkeeper to a penalty under the Licensing Act, 1872, or if the innkeeper has some other reasonable ground for his refusal (h).

A person who sells intoxicating liquor or other refreshments, but who is not an innkeeper, is entitled to refuse to serve persons wishing to be customers, whether they are travellers or not (c).

Endangering railway passengers.

1123 There are various acts which are criminal when done with intent to, or which are likely to, endanger the safety of any person travelling or being upon a railway (d).

SECT 5—Offences relating to Merchant Shipping

SUB-SECT 1—Leaving Seamen behind

Leaving British seaman on shore

1124 Any person belonging to a British ship is by statute (e) guilty of a misdemeanour who (1) wrongfully forces a seaman on shore and leaves him behind, or (2) otherwise causes him to be wrongfully left behind in any place, either on shore or at sea, in or out of the King's dominions.

The punishment for this offence is a fine, or imprisonment for two years with or without hard labour (f).

an innkeeper to 'take exorbitant prices.' See further as to various offences by licensed victuallers, title INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

(g) I.e., a house where a traveller is furnished with everything which he has occasion for whilst upon his way, but not necessarily stabling accommodation (Thompson v Lacy (1820), 3 B & Ald 283, 286). See title INNS AND INN KEEPERS.

(h) 1 Hawk P C, c 32 s 2 (I 714), R v Irens (1835) 7 C & P 213. See R v Spague (1899), 63 J P 233, R v Smith (1901), 65 J P 321.

(i) Browne v Brandt [1902] 1 K B 696.

(a) R v Rymer (1877), 2 Q B D 136, C C R, Lamond v Richard [1897] 1 Q B 541, C A, where a person who was originally a traveller had ceased to be so when notice to quit was given to him.

(h) Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict c 91), s 18, and title INTOXICATING LIQUORS, Pidgeon v Legge (1857) 21 J P 743, R v Lucas, supra, R v Rymer, supra, where the innkeeper was held to be justified in refusing because the person applying for entertainment insisted on bringing a large dog into the house. The innkeeper is probably entitled to require security for his charges or prepayment, but if he does not do so, but refuses to entertain the traveller for some other reason than that he has no such security, he will probably be held to have waived his right to require it (see 1 Hawk P C, c 32, s 2 (I, 714), R v Irens, supra, Pell v Knight (1841), 8 M & W 269).

(c) R v Rymer, supra. But if any holder of a licence to sell intoxicating liquors persistently and unreasonably refuses to supply suitable refreshment (other than intoxicating liquor) at a reasonable price this is a good ground for depriving him of his licence (Licensing Act, 1904 (4 Edw 7 c 23) s 9).

(d) See further as to the obstruction of and malicious injury to railways, trains, and telegraphs pp 786, 787, post.

(e) Merchant Shipping Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 48), s 43.

(f) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 680 (1), (a) (the Act of

1125 A master of a British ship is by statute (q) guilty of a misdemeanour (1) who, without having obtained the sanction of the proper authority (h), discharges a seaman (i), or leaves him behind (k), except at a port in the country in which he was shipped, or (2) who delivers a false account (l) or makes a false statement (m) to the proper officer (n) as to the wages and effects of any seaman who is left behind out of the British Isles

The punishment for this offence is a fine, or imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour (o)

SECT 5

relating to Merchant
Shipping.

Discharging seamen etc

SUB-SECT 2—Fraud in Relation to Shipping Documents

1126 The master or owner of a ship is by statute (p) guilty of a misdemeanour if he uses or attempts to use for her navigation a certificate of registry not legally granted in respect of the ship

Improper
use of certificate
of registry.

1906 is an amending Act, and is to be construed as one with the Act of 1894 (s 86 (1)). Any offence declared by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 to be a misdemeanour, and in respect of which no specific punishment is assigned, is punishable as above stated (ibid, s 680). Such offences (except the offence of sending an unseaworthy ship to sea) may however, be prosecuted summarily under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, and if so prosecuted are punishable only by imprisonment for six months (ibid). Offences against the Act punishable by imprisonment for not exceeding six months, or by a fine not exceeding £100, must be prosecuted summarily (ibid, s 680 (1) (b)). There can be no summary conviction in any proceeding instituted in the United Kingdom unless the proceeding is commenced within six months after the offence, or, if both or either of the parties happen during that time to be out of the United Kingdom, unless it is commenced within two months after they both first arrive or are at one time within the kingdom (ibid, s 683, and see Austin v Olsen (1868), 1 R 3 Q B 208). But the defendant has, under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 49), s 17, a right to claim to be tried by a jury in all cases where he may on summary conviction be sentenced to more than three months' imprisonment, and he should be so informed (R v O'Liberg, [1901] 2 K B 866). See R v Beechey [1909] 1 K B 849. As to venue and jurisdiction, see p 283, ante, as to costs, see p 445, ante. There are several sections in the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, providing for fines of £500 under the Act. Such fines may be recovered by action, and the offences are not criminal, see ss 71, 447, 452, and title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION. As to the conveyance of the offender to the United Kingdom or a British possession, see s 699, as to evidence taken abroad, see s 691. The offences under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, supra referred to in these sub-sections, are triable at quarter sessions.

(q) Merchant Shipping Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 45), ss 28 (10), 30, 36

(h) The proper authority is defined ibid, s 49

(i) The sanction of the proper authority is to be indorsed on the agreement with the crew. This sanction is not to be refused where the seaman is discharged on the termination of his service (ibid, s 30)

(k) The sanction in this case takes the form of a certificate, which must state the cause for which the seaman is left behind, whether the cause be unknown, or inability to proceed to sea, desertion, disappearance, or otherwise. No such sanction or certificate is required where the seaman is discharged in accordance with the Merchant Shipping Acts (i.e., the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1894 to 1906) (ibid, s 36)

(l) Merchant Shipping Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 45), s 28 (1) (b)

(m) Ibid, s 28 (3)

(n) Ibid, s 28 (11)

(o) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 680, and supra p 553, note (f) ante

(p) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 16

SECT 5
Offences
relating to
Merchant
Shipping

Misconduct
endangering
ship.

The punishment is fine or imprisonment for two years with or without hard labour (q)

SUB-SECT 3 — Misconduct of Mariners.

1127 Any master, seaman, or apprentice belonging to a British ship is by statute (a) guilty of a misdemeanour who by wilful breach of duty, or by neglect of duty, or by reason of drunkenness, (1) does any act tending to the immediate loss or serious damage of the ship, or tending immediately to endanger the life or limb of a person belonging to or on board of her, or (2) refuses or omits to do any lawful act proper and requisite to be done by him for preserving the ship from immediate loss or serious damage, or for preserving any person belonging to or on board of her from immediate danger to life or limb

The punishment is by statute fine or imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour (b)

The same misconduct by a pilot when in charge of a ship is also a misdemeanour (c) punishable in the same way (d)

Taking
money for apprentice- ship in the sea fishing
service

1128 Any person is guilty of a misdemeanour (e) who receives any money or valuable consideration from the person to whom an apprentice in the sea-fishing service is bound, or to whom a sea fishing boy is bound by any agreement, or from the apprentice or boy or anyone on his behalf in consideration of his being so bound, or who makes any such payment

The punishment for this offence is a fine or imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour (f)

Failure of master to help in collision

1129 In every case of collision between two vessels it is the duty of the master or person in charge of each vessel, so far as he can do so without danger to his own vessel, crew and passengers, to render to the other vessel, her crew and passengers, such assistance as may be practicable and may be necessary to save them from danger caused by the collision and to stay by the other vessel until he has ascertained that she has no need of further assistance, and also to give to the master or person in charge of the other vessel

(q) Merchant Shipping Act 1894 (37 & 38 Vict c 60), s 680. Also the ship is subject to forfeiture (s 16), and see p 556 note (f), ante. As to forgery of documents under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, see p 752, post

(a) Ibid, s 220. It is not necessary to prove that the wrongful act or omission was followed by loss, destruction, or damage (R v Gardner (1859), 1 F & F 609)

(b) Ibid s 680, and see p 556, note (f), ante. Desertion by seamen and absence without leave are punishable summarily, the former by twelve and the latter by ten weeks' imprisonment and the forfeiture of wages (ibid, s 221). For a number of other offences against discipline punishable on summary conviction, see s 225, and as to misconduct by seamen serving on fishing boats, see s 376

(c) Ibid, s 607

(d) Ibid, s 680, and see p 556, note (f), ante

(e) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (37 & 38 Vict c 60), s 398. This section applies only to service in fishing boats of a tonnage of twenty-five tons and upwards, see the words prefixed to s 392 of the Act

(f) Ibid, s 660, and see p 556, note (f), ante

the name of his own vessel and of the port to which she belongs, and the names of the ports from which she comes, and to which she is bound (g)

If the master or person in charge fails to do any of the things prescribed above without reasonable cause, he is by statute (g) guilty of a misdemeanour.

The punishment is fine, or imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour (h)

1130 Any person is by statute (i) guilty of felony who unlawfully and maliciously prevents or impedes any person, being on board of or having quitted any ship or vessel in distress or wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, in his endeavour to save his life or the life of any other person endeavouring to escape

The punishment is penal servitude for life, or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (k)

1131 Every person is by statute (l) guilty of a misdemeanour who assaults and strikes or wounds any magistrate, officer, or other person whatsoever lawfully authorised, in the exercise of his duty in the preservation of any vessel in distress or of any vessel, goods, or effects stranded or cast on shore or lying under water.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (m)

1132 If any person sends or attempts to send or is party to sending or attempting to send a British ship to sea in such an unseaworthy state that the life of any person is likely to be thereby endangered, he is by statute (n) guilty of a misdemeanour, unless he

SECT. 8.
Offences
relating to Merchant
Shipping.

Preventing escape from wreck.

Assaulting person engaged in preserving wrecked vessel

Sending
unseaworthy
ship to sea.

(g) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 422. As to the application of this section to collisions with foreign vessels, see s 424. A person is "in charge" who has the control of the ship at any time when assistance could have been rendered, and not merely at the time of the collision (Ex parte Ferguson (1871), L R 6 Q B 280, 287). If a pilot is on board, the master is none the less the "person in charge" (The Queen (1869), L R 2 A & E 144, 355). Whether the principle that a tug and its tow are to be considered as one vessel will render the person in charge of the tug criminally responsible if he does not stand by his tow and a vessel with whom she has come into collision appears doubtful (see The Hannibal, 1867), L R 2 A & E 53).

(h) Ibid, s 680, and see p 556, note (f), ante.

(i) Offences against the Person Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 17.

(k) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(l) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 37. A person who without leave of the master boards any vessel wrecked, stranded, or in distress, unless he is, or acts by command of, a receiver of wreck, is liable to a fine of £50. A person who impedes or hinders the saving of any such vessel or her cargo, or secretes any wreck or obliterates any mark thereon, or wrongfully carries away any part of the vessel or cargo, is also liable to a fine of £50 in addition to any other punishment to which he may be liable (Merchant Shipping Act (supra), s 536). The offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(m) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 37.

(n) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 45. This section does not apply to a ship exclusively employed in trading or going from place to place in any river or inland water which is wholly or partly in a British possession (ibid, s 457 (5)). This offence cannot be prosecuted summarily.

SMOY. 5.
Offences
relating to
Merchant
Shipping.

proves that he used all reasonable means to ensure her being sent to sea in a seaworthy state, or that her going in an unseaworthy state was under the circumstances reasonable and justifiable

If a master of a British ship knowingly takes the same to sea in such an unseaworthy state, he is by statute guilty of a misdemeanour (o), unless he proves that her going to sea in such a state was in the circumstances justifiable

The punishment for this offence is fine, or imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour (p)

Preventing
service of documents.

The owner or master of a ship is by statute (q) guilty of a misdemeanour, if he is party or privy to obstructing the service on the master of a ship of any document under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (a), relating to detention of unseaworthy ships. The punishment for this offence is fine, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (b)

A prosecution for this offence cannot (except in Scotland) be instituted without the consent of the Board of Trade or of the governor of the British possession in which the prosecution takes place (c)

Forging
salvage
document
etc.

1133 A person is by statute (d) guilty of a misdemeanour who in any proceeding under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, relating to salvage by His Majesty's ships forges any document or utters it knowing it to be forged, or who gives, makes, or procures any false evidence or representation knowing it to be false

The punishment is imprisonment for two years (e)

Disobedience
to order of lighthouse,
authority to extinguish misleading lights.

1134 Whenever any fire or light is burnt or exhibited at such places and in such manner as to be liable to be mistaken for a light proceeding from a lighthouse the general lighthouse authority within whose area the place is situate may serve a notice upon the owner of the place where the fire or light is burnt or exhibited, or on the person having charge of the fire or light, directing that owner or person within a reasonable time, to be specified in the notice, to take effectual means for extinguishing or screening the fire or light and for preventing in the future any similar fire or light

Failure to comply with notice.

1135 Any person upon whom such a notice is served, who fails without reasonable cause to comply with such directions, is by statute guilty of a misdemeanour and may be indicted for a common nuisance (f)

(ibid., s 547 (c)) The indictment need not allege that the defendant knew the ship to be unseaworthy (R v Freeman (1875), 91 R C L 527, C C R). As to what amounts to seaworthiness, see Hedley v Pinkney & Sons Steamship Co., [1894] A C 222, The Diamond, [1906] P 282

(o) See previous note

(p) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 680, and see p 556, note (f), ante

(q) Ibid., s 696 (2)

(a) 57 & 58 Vict c 60

(b) Ibid., s 680

(c) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 457 (3)

(d) Ibid., s. 564, and see p 754, post

(e) Ibid., or on summary conviction to imprisonment for six months

(f) Ibid., s 667 (3). The general lighthouse authority in England and Wales, the Channel Islands and the adjacent seas and islands, and at Gibraltar,

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment without hard labour, and a fine of £100 in addition (g).

SECT. 4.
Offences
relating to Merchant
Shipping.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Seal Fisheries.

1136 Any person is by statute (h) guilty of a misdemeanour who commits, procures, aids, or abets any contravention of the Behring Sea Award Act, 1891, which statute incorporates certain provisions of the Behring Sea Arbitration Award dated the 15th August, 1893.

Offences
against Behring Sea
Award Act.

The punishment for this offence is a fine, or imprisonment with or without hard labour (i).

1137 It is by statute (h) a misdemeanour to forge or fraudulently alter a licence or other document issued for the purpose of articles 4 or 7 of that award, or to procure any such licence or document to be forged or fraudulently altered or, knowing it to be forged or fraudulently altered, to use the same

Forging
Licence.

The punishment is a fine, or imprisonment with or without hard labour (l).

1138 The King may by Order in Council prohibit during the period specified by the order the catching of seals by British ships in such parts of the North Pacific Ocean as are mentioned in the order. Any person belonging to a British ship is guilty of a

Offence
against Seal Fisheries
(North Pacific) Act.

is the Trinity House, throughout Scotland and the adjacent seas and islands and the Isle of Man, the Commissioners of Northern Lighthouses, throughout Ireland and the adjacent seas and islands the Commissioners of Irish Lights (Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 634)

(g) Ibid s 667 (3)

(h) Behring Sea Award Act, 1891 (57 Vict c 2), s 1 (2), and see Sched II. The offence is a misdemeanour "within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854" (17 & 18 Vict c 104), see s 51 of the last named Act and Merchant Shipping Act, 1891 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 745 (1) (f). The provisions of the award which are incorporated by this Act are set out verbatim in Sched I. The killing at any time of fur-seals within a zone of sixty miles round the Pribiloff Islands or elsewhere in the Pacific Ocean within certain prescribed limits, between 1st May and 31st July, is forbidden. There are other provisions as to licences for seal fishing and the method in which the fishing is to be conducted. As to the personal liability of the master of a vessel employed in the fishery for acts done by persons on board the vessel, see s 4 of the Act. S 3 enables the Sovereign to make Orders in Council for carrying into effect the provisions of the Act and award, and imposes a penalty of £100 for every breach of such an order. Orders in Council were made under this Act on 30th April, 1891, and 2nd February, 1895.

(i) Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict c 104), s 51 (1). If prosecuted summarily the offence is punishable with six months' imprisonment or a fine of not more than £100 (ibid, s 518 (2)). The ship employed in such contravention, and her equipment and everything on board, is liable to be forfeited to the Crown, but the court may release her on payment of a fine not exceeding £500 (Behring Sea Award Act, 1891 (57 Vict c 2), s 1 (2), and see Sched II).

(l) Behring Sea Award Act, 1891 (57 Vict c 2), s 1 (4). The articles above mentioned are set out in Sched I to the Act.

(d) Ibid, Sched II, Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict c 104), s. 518. The offence may also be punished summarily by imprisonment for not exceeding six months or a penalty of £100.

SECT. 5
Offences
relating to
Merchant
Shipping.

misdemeanour (m) who (1) kills, takes or hunts, or attempts to kill or take, any seal during the period and within the seas specified in such order, or (2) uses a British ship or her equipment or crew for such a purpose.

The punishment is a fine, or imprisonment for two years with or without hard labour (n)

The ship and her equipment and everything on board are subject to forfeiture to the Crown (o)

SECT. 6 —Offences relating to Trade.

SUB-SECT. 1 —Unlawful Combination

Spreading
false rumour.

1139 The offences of engrossing, forestalling, and regrating have been abolished by statute (p), but everyone is still guilty of a misdemeanour (q) (1) who knowingly spreads or conspires to spread any false rumour with intent to enhance or decry the price of any goods or merchandise (a) or the price of stocks (b), (2) who prevents or endeavours to prevent by force or threats any goods, wares, or merchandise being brought to any fair or market

The punishment for this offence is fine and imprisonment with or without hard labour (c)

Stock
Exchange

1140 A combination for the making of purchases or sales upon the Stock Exchange, where the sole object of the transaction is to cheat and mislead the public by what is called "making a market," is an illegal conspiracy and constitutes an indictable misdemeanour (d)

(m) Seal Fisheries (North Pacific) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict c 21), s 1 The offence is declared to be a misdemeanour "within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894" (57 & 58 Vict c 60) The punishment is therefore that which is imposed by that statute, see next note An Order in Council was made under this Act on the 21st November, 1895, prohibiting the catching of seals within ten marine miles of all the Russian coasts of Behring Sea and the North Pacific Ocean and within thirty miles of the Korman dorsky Islands and Robben Island As to the establishment of a close season for seals in the seas adjacent to the east coast of Greenland, see Seal Fishery Act, 1875 (38 Vict c 18), and Order in Council dated 28th November, 1876

(n) Seal Fisheries (North Pacific) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict c 21), s 1, Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 680

(o) Seal Fisheries (North Pacific) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict c 21), s 1 (j)

(p) Stat (1844) 7 & 8 Vict c 24, s 1

(q) Ibid, s 4 This Act was repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict c 19), but the repeal will not revive the offences which it abolished, or affect those which were preserved by the proviso in s 4 (Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 63), s 38)

(a) R v Hulbers (1816), 2 Chit 163 Before the stat (1844) 7 & 8 Vict c 24 it appears to have been immaterial whether the rumours spread were true or false if they were put about with the view of enhancing the market price of goods (R v Waddington (1800), 1 East, 143) Having regard to the terms of s 4, it is clear that it is only the spreading of false rumours which is now punishable.

(b) R v De Borenger (1814), 3 M & S 67, see R v Gurney (1869), 11 Cox, C C 414, 440

(c) Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 29

(d) Scott v Brown, Doering, McNab & Co, [1892] 2 Q B 724, 727, 730,

SECT. 6.
Offences
relating to Trade.

Trade combinations.

1141 Subject to what is hereafter stated as to acts or combinations which occur during the course of a trade dispute between an employer and his workmen, it is an indictable misdemeanour, punishable by fine or imprisonment, for persons to combine together to prevent a man from carrying on his trade and so to impoverish him (e) But if the combination and the acts done in pursuance of it are mere acts of trade competition and intended to further the rival trade of the persons combining, and the acts are not in themselves unlawful, they do not afford ground for or an indictment (f)

An act done by one person which is not unlawful in itself is not indictable merely because it prejudices or interferes with the trade of another person, or prevents him from carrying on such trade, or because the person committing the act is influenced by malicious or bad motives (g) But an act may be criminal if done by two persons in agreement which would not be criminal if done by either of them alone (h)

The principles stated above are not confined to conspiracies in restraint of trade Any conspiracy to do that which is either contrary to law or which is a wrongful and harmful act towards another person, and so an infringement of his civil rights, is a misdemeanour and indictable (a)

SUB-SECT. 2 — Disputes between Employers and Workmen.

1142 In the case of trade disputes the law as above stated has been modified by statute

Trade
disputes

An agreement or combination by two or more persons to do or procure to be done any act in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute is not indictable as a conspiracy, if such act, if committed by one person, would not be punishable as a crime (b)

This provision does not exempt from punishment any persons guilty of a conspiracy for which a punishment is awarded by any Act of Parliament and does not affect the law relating to riot,

O A, see also R v Aspinall (1876), 2 Q B D 48, 59, and see title STOCK EXCHANGE.

(e) R v Eccles (1783), 1 Leach, 274 As to this case, see Wright on Criminal Conspiracies, p 45, and Mogul Steamship Co v McGregor, Gow & Co (1889), 23 Q B D 598, C A, at p 632, and Lord BRAMPTON in Quinn v Leathem, [1901] A C 495, 530, in the last-mentioned case the House of Lords held that a combination, without justification or excuse, to injure a man in his trade by inducing his customers not to deal with him is actionable, if it results in damage to him See title TRADE AND TRADE UNIONS

(f) See Mogul Steamship Co v McGregor, Gow & Co, [1892] A C 25, Boots v Grundy (1900), 82 L T 769 These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

(g) See Bradford Corporation v Pickles, [1895] A C 587, 594, Allen v Flood, [1898] A C 1, 139, 152, 153, where the earlier cases are fully stated, and see Quinn v Leathem, supra.

(h) See R v Warburton (1870), L R 1 C C R at p 276

(a) R v. Rowlands (1851), 17 Q B 671, R v Warburton (1870) L R 1 C C R 274, Quinn v Leathem, supra, at pp 528, 529

(b) Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 86), s 3.

SECT 6
Offences
relating to
Trade.

unlawful assembly, breach of the peace, sedition, or any offence against the State or Sovereign (c)

The word "crime" in this connection means an offence punishable on indictment, or an offence punishable on summary conviction, and for the commission of which the offender is liable under the statute making the offence punishable to be imprisoned either absolutely or at the discretion of the court as an alternative for some other punishment

Trade unions

The purposes of a trade union are not, by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade, deemed to be unlawful so as to render any member of the trade union liable to criminal prosecution for conspiracy or otherwise (d) A trade union means any combination, whether temporary or permanent, for regulating the relations between workmen and masters, or between workmen and workmen, or between masters and masters, or for imposing restrictive conditions on the conduct of any trade or business, whether such combination would or would not, if the Trade Union Act, 1871 (e), had not been passed, have been deemed to have been an unlawful combination as being in restraint of trade (f).

SUB-SECT 3—Criminal Breach of Contract Intimidation.

Statutory
mis-
demeanours.

1143 Although the provisions of the law of conspiracy have been relaxed in favour of those engaged in trade disputes, nevertheless everyone is guilty of a misdemeanour (g), who (h), being a person employed by a municipal authority, or by any company or contractor upon whom an Act of Parliament has imposed or who have themselves assumed the duty of supplying any city, borough, town or place or any part thereof with gas or water, wilfully and maliciously (i) breaks a contract of service with such authority

(c) Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 86). As to the limit of punishment on a conviction for conspiracy to do an act punishable only on summary conviction, see ibid. Acts of this kind which are not indictable under this statute are not now indictable at common law (Conner v Kent, Gibson v Lawson, [1891] 2 Q B 545, 560). In the Trade Union Acts, 1871 to 1906 (31 & 35 Vict c 31, 39 & 40 Vict c 22, 6 Edw 7, c 47), and in the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c 86), "trade dispute" means any dispute between employers and workmen, or between workmen and workmen, which is connected with the employment or non-employment or with the terms of the employment or with the conditions of labour of any person, the term "workmen" means all persons employed in trade or industry, whether or not in the employment of the employer with whom a trade dispute arises (Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 47), s 5) See, generally, title TRADE AND TRADE UNIONS

(d) Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict c 31), s 2

(e) 34 & 35 Vict c 31

(f) Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 22), s 16

(g) Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 86), ss. 4, 5, 7. Nothing in the Act applies to seamen or apprentices to the sea service (ibid, s 16). As to misconduct by and ill-treatment of such persons, see pp 556 558, ante, and p 608, post

(h) Ibid, s 4

(i) An offence is committed maliciously within the meaning of this Act, whether the offence is committed from malice conceived against the person in respect of which it is committal or otherwise (Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c. 86), s 15, Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s 28)

SECT. 6.
Offences
relating to
Trade.

etc knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the probable consequences of his so doing will be to deprive the inhabitants wholly or to a great extent of their supply of gas or water, or (2) who (k) wilfully and maliciously (l) breaks a contract of service or of hiring knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the probable consequences of his so doing, either alone or in combination with others, will be to endanger human life, or cause serious bodily injury, or to expose valuable property, whether real or personal, to destruction or serious injury (m), (3) who (n), with a view to compel any other person to abstain from doing or to do any act which such other person has a legal right to do or abstain from doing (o), wrongfully and without legal authority, uses violence to or intimidates (p) such other person or his wife or children or injures his property (q), or persistently follows such other person about from place to place (r), or hides any clothes, tools, or other property owned or used by such other person, or deprives him of or hinders him in the use thereof, or watches or besets the house or other place where such other person resides or works or carries on business or happens to be or the approach to such house or place (s), or follows such other person with two or more other persons in a disorderly manner in or through any street or road (t)

The punishment for any such offence is a fine not exceeding £20, (k) Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 86),

s 5

(l) See note (i), on p 564, ante

(m) Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 16), s 5

(n) Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 86), s 7.

(o) The particular act must be specified in the summons and conviction (R v McKenzie, [1892], 2 Q B 519)

(p) The word "intimidates" probably means by threats of personal violence only. It, at any rate, does not include a threat to bring about a strike (Curran v Treleaven, [1891] 2 Q B 545, 550, 562). But a threat to pocket has been held to be intimidation within the meaning of the Act (Judge v Bennett (1887), 52 J P 247, per STEPHEN and A L SMITH, JJ. See the observation of MATHEW, J, on this case in Curran v Treleaven, supra, at p 560), see also Peto v Apperley (1891), 35 Sol Jo 792, Haile v Lillingstone (1891), ibid, Tillocks & Sons v London Building Trades Federation (1890), 72 L T 342, C A.

(q) The summons and conviction must specify the property injured (Smith v Mood, [1903] 1 K B 56)

(r) Ex parte Wilkins (1895), 64 L J (M C) 221, Smith v Thomasson (1890), 54 J P 596.

(s) It is, however lawful for one or more persons acting on their own behalf, or on behalf of a trade union or of an individual employer or firm, in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute to attend at or near such a house or place, if they so attend merely for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information or of peacefully persuading any person to work or abstain from working (Trade Disputes Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 47), s 2). The following cases were decided before this Act, and their authority has been affected by it — J Lyons & Sons v Wilkins [1896] 1 Ch 811, C A., J Lyons & Sons v Wilkins [1899] 1 Ch 255, C A., Charnock v Court, [1899] 2 Ch 35, Hallers v Green, [1899] ibid, 696. It is not essential that the persons who happen to be in the place beset should at the time be in the service or employment of any other person, and a depot ship for seamen awaiting engagement has been held to be a place within the meaning of the section (Farmer v Wilson (1900), 69 L J (a. b.) 496).

(t) As to following, see Ex parte Wilkins and Smith v Thomasson, supra.

SECT. 6.
Offences
relating to Trade.
—
Truck Act.

or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than three months (a)

SUB SECT. 4—Truck Act

1144 An employer of any artificer in any of certain trades is by statute (b) guilty of a misdemeanour who directly or indirectly enters into any contract or makes any payment thereby declared illegal after having been twice previously convicted summarily of such offence (c)

The punishment is a fine of £100 (d)

SUB-SECT. 5—Forging etc Trade Marks

Merchandise
Marks Act

1145 Every person is by statute (e) guilty of a misdemeanour (1) who (f) forges (g) a trade mark (h), or (2) falsely applies (i) to

(a) Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 86), ss 4, 5, 7 The punishment is the same whether the offence is prosecuted summarily or on indictment (ibid., s 9) The offence is only punishable on indictment if the accused objects to be tried before a court of summary jurisdiction (ibid.) This offence and the one next mentioned are triable at quarter sessions

(b) Truck Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will 4, c 37)

(c) Ibid., s 9 This Act provides (ss 1, 2) that wages under contracts for the hiring of artificers must be paid in current coin and not in goods, and that such contracts must not contain any stipulations as to the place where or the manner in which the wages shall be expended The Act does not extend to domestic or menial servants (s 20) The term "artificer" includes any person who being a labourer, servant in husbandry, journeyman, artificer, handicrafts man, miner, or otherwise engaged in manual labour, has entered into or works under a contract with an employer (Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 90), s 10, Truck Amendment Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 46), s 2) See, generally, the Truck Amendment Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 46), and the Truck Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict c 44), and title MASTER AND SERVANT

(d) Truck Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will 4, c 37) s 9 The punishment for a first offence on summary conviction is a fine of £10, for a second offence, £20 (ibid.).

(e) Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28), amended by the Merchandise Marks Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 15), and the Merchandise Marks (Prosecutions) Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 19) At common law to copy a trade mark or a wrapper for goods, which wrapper was fraudulently made to resemble that used by another person, was not forgery, although if a person in the course of his trade, openly and publicly carried on, put a false mark or token upon an article so as to pass it off for a genuine one, when in fact it was spurious, and the article was sold and money obtained by means of that false mark or token, this would amount to a common law cheat, as to which see p 689, post (R v Closs (1858), Dears & B 460, R v Smith (1858), Dears & B 566)

(f) Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28) s 2

(g) A person is deemed to forge a trade mark who without the assent of the proprietor makes that trade mark or a mark so nearly resembling it as to be calculated to deceive or who falsifies any genuine trade mark, whether by alteration, addition, effacement, or otherwise The burden of proving the assent of the proprietor is on the defendant (Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28), s 4)

(A) Trade mark means a trade mark registered in the register of trade marks kept under the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw 7, c 15), s 4, and any trade mark which either with or without registration is protected by law in any British possession or foreign State to which the provisions of s 91 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 29), are applicable (ibid., s 3 Trade Marks Act, 1905 (5 Edw 7, c 15), s 4, Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 29), ss 91, 98) See title TRADE MARKS AND DESIGNS

(i) As to the persons who are deemed to apply a trade mark, see Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28), s. 5.

goods any trade mark or any mark so nearly resembling a trade mark as to be calculated to deceive, or (3) makes any die (4), block, machine, or other instrument for the purpose of forging or of being used for forging a trade mark, or (4) applies any false trade description (l) to goods, or (5) disposes of or has in his possession any die, block, machine, or other instrument for the purpose of forging a trade mark, or (6) causes any of the things above mentioned to be done, unless in any such case he proves that he acted without intent to defraud (m)

The punishment for this offence on conviction on indictment is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, or a fine or both (n)

1146 Every person is by statute (o) guilty of a misdemeanour who sells or exposes for or has in his possession for sale, or any purpose of trade or manufacture, any goods or things to which any

SECT. 6.
Offences
relating to
Trade.

Sale of goods
with forged
marks

(4) See p 568, post

(l) "Trade description" means any description, statement, or other indication, direct or indirect, as to the number, quantity, measure, gauge or weight of any goods, or as to the place or country in which they were made or produced, or as to the mode of manufacture or production, or as to the material of which they are composed or as to their being the subject of an existing patent, privilege, or copyright (as to which see also Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 29), s 89 (2), which imposes a penalty of £5 in such cases), a "false trade description" is a trade description which is false in a material respect, and includes the alteration of a trade description where the alteration makes the description false in a material respect (Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28), s 3). For special provisions as to watch cases, see ibid ss 7, 6. A person who makes a false declaration for the purposes of the Act as to the country or place in which a watch case was made is liable, on conviction on indictment to the penalties of perjury (ibid, s 6). A false statement on an invoice is a false description within the Act (Coppen v Moore (No 1), [1898] 2 Q B 300), and a writing unintelligible by itself may be a trade description, if it is orally explained by the vendor at the time of sale (Cameron v Wiggins, [1901] 1 K B 1). There is a dictum of WRIGHT, J., in Coppen v Moore (No 1), supra, that an oral false description is not a trade description within the Act, but see s 3 (1), and Cameron v Wiggins, supra. See also as to what amounts to a false trade description, or to the application of such a description, Kirshenboim v Salmon and Gluckstein, [1898] 2 Q B 19, Langley v Bombay Tea Co, [1900] 2 Q B 460, Williamson v Tierney (1900), 65 J P 70, Davenport v Apollinaris Co (1903), 67 J P 323, North Eastern Breweries, Ltd v Gibson (1904), 68 J P 356, Star Tre Co v Whitworth (1904), 68 J P 443, Imuler v Gripps, [1906] 1 K B 16, Hooper v Riddle & Co (1906), 70 J P 417. In the case of imported goods evidence of the port of shipment will be prima facie evidence of the country in which the goods were made (s 10 (2)), and the customs entry relating to imported goods is, for the purposes of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28), deemed to be a trade description applied to the goods (Merchandise Marks Act 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 15), s 1).

(m) An intention to defraud is an intention to induce the buyer to take something different to that to which he was entitled under the contract, and which he did not know he was taking, whether it be worse than the article contracted for or not (Starey v Chilworth Gunpowder Co (1889), 24 Q B D 90, Kirshenboim v Salmon and Gluckstein, supra). To constitute the offence there must be an intention to mislead (Girdley v Sumner (1885), 52 J P 791).

(n) Merchandise Marks Act 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28), s 2 (3), and see ibid, s 2 (6). This offence is triable at quarter sessions. As to the punishment on summary conviction and the forfeiture of the goods, see note (q) on p 568, post.

(o) Ibid, s. 2 (2).

SECT 6
Offences
relating to
Trade.

forged trade mark or false trade description is applied, or to which any trade mark or mark so nearly resembling a trade mark as to be calculated to deceive is falsely applied, unless he proves (1) that, having taken all reasonable precautions against committing an offence against the Act, he had at the time of the commission of the alleged offence no reason to suspect the genuineness of the trade mark, mark, or trade description, and (2) that on demand made by or on behalf of the prosecutor he gave all the information in his power with respect to the persons from whom he obtained such goods, or (3) that otherwise he had acted innocently (p).

The punishment for this offence on conviction on indictment is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, or a fine or both (q).

Defence.

1147 A defendant who is charged with making any die, block, machine, or other instrument for the purpose of forging or being used for forging a trade mark, or with falsely applying to goods any trade mark or any mark resembling a trade mark or any false trade description, and who proves (1) that in the ordinary course of his business he is employed to make dies etc for making or being used in making trade marks or to apply marks or descriptions to goods, and that in the case which is the subject of the charge he was so employed by some person resident in the United Kingdom and was not interested in the goods by way of profit or commission dependent on their sale, and (2) that he took reasonable precautions against committing the offence charged, and (3) that at the time of the commission of the alleged offence he had no reason to suspect the genuineness of the trade mark, mark, or trade description, and (4) that he gave the prosecutor all the information in his power with respect to the persons on whose behalf the trade mark, mark, or trade description was applied, is entitled to be discharged, but is liable to pay the costs incurred by

(p) A person who has reason to suspect the genuineness of a trade mark on goods which he is selling may act innocently, and therefore be entitled to an acquittal of a charge under this section, if he states in good faith at the time of sale that there was a doubt whether the trade mark was genuine, and that he did not guarantee it, but sold the articles for what they were worth (Christie, Manson and Woods v Cooper, [1900] 2 Q B 522). Under this sub section an intention to defraud is not a necessary ingredient of the offence (Wood v Burgess (1889), 21 Q B D 162).

(q) Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28) s 2 (3). A person charged before a court of summary jurisdiction with an offence against this Act has a right to be tried on indictment if he so desires and he must be informed of such right before the charge is gone into (ibid, s 2 (6), Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 49), s 17). On summary conviction an offender may be sentenced to imprisonment with or without hard labour for four months, or to a fine of £20, and upon a second or subsequent conviction to imprisonment with or without hard labour for six months, or to a fine of £50, and, whether convicted on indictment or before a court of summary jurisdiction, the offender forfeits to the King every chattel, article, instrument or thing by means of or in relation to which the offence was committed (Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28), s 2 (3)). The Veracious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict c 17), applies to indictments for offences against the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28), s 13. Offences against the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, are triable at quarter sessions.

the prosecutor, unless he has given due notice to him that he will rely on this defence (r).

1148 A person within the United Kingdom who procures, aids, or is accessory to the commission without the kingdom of any act which, if committed in the kingdom, would under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (s), be a misdemeanour is guilty of that misdemeanour as a principal, and may be tried in any county or place in the kingdom in which he may be (t).

SECT 6
Offences
relating to
Trade

Accessories.

1149 No prosecution for an offence against the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (a), can be commenced after the expiration of three years next after the commission of the offence, or one year after the first discovery thereof by the prosecutor, whichever expiration first happens (b).

Limitation of time

1150 The servant of a master resident in the United Kingdom who bonâ fide acts in obedience to the instructions of such master, and on demand made by the prosecutor has given full information as to his master, is not liable to prosecution under the Act (c). But a master is liable for any action on the part of his servant or agent which was done within the scope or in the course of his employment, and which may be an offence against the Act unless the master can prove that he acted in good faith and had done all that it was reasonably possible to do to prevent the commission by his agents and servants of offences against the Act (d).

Liability of master and servant

1151 The Board of Trade, and in cases relating to agricultural or horticultural produce the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries, may authorise prosecutions at the public expense for offences against the Act (e).

SECT 7—Labels and Indictable Slanders

1152 The publication of a defamatory label is a misdemeanour at common law. The publication of a defamatory label with knowledge that it is false is a statutory misdemeanour (f). To publish

(r) Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28) s. 6, see also s. 2 (2), ante.

(s) 50 & 51 Vict. c. 28.

(t) Ibid., s. 11. After proceedings for an offence against the Act have been commenced by the issue of a summons or warrant of arrest if the justice who issued the summons etc., or any other justice, is satisfied by information on oath that there is reasonable cause to suspect that any goods or things by means of or in relation to which the offence has been committed are in any premises of the defendant or otherwise in his possession or under his control in any place, such justice may issue a warrant authorising a constable named or referred to in the warrant to enter such house etc. at any reasonable time by day and there search for and seize and take away such goods (ibid., s. 12).

(a) 50 & 51 Vict. c. 28.

(b) Ibid., s. 15.

(c) Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 19 (3).

(d) Coppen v. Moore (No. 2), [1898] 2 Q. B. 306, 314.

(e) Merchandise Marks Act 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 15), s. 2, Merchandise Marks (Prosecution) Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 19), s. 1, see Regulations of the Board of Trade of 21 May, 1892 (Statutory Rules and Order Revised Vol. VII, Merchandise Marks, pp. 13, 14), Regulations of the Board of Agriculture, 27 October 1894 (ibid.).

(f) Label Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 96), s. 4.

SECT. 7
Libels and Indictable
Slanders.
 —

or threaten to publish a libel upon any other person is a statutory misdemeanour (g) To slander a private person by mere spoken words is not indictable, unless they tend immediately to a breach of the peace, or are blasphemous or seditious (h) Prosecutions for libel and slander are dealt with in another part of this work (i)

Part XII.—Offences against the Person.

SECT 1—Acts involving bodily Injury

SUB-SECT 1—Homicide

Homicide

1153 The killing of a human being by a human being is in law known as homicide Homicide may be (1) culpable, i e, criminal, (2) justifiable, (3) excusable (h)

Culpable homicide is either murder or manslaughter, and is a felony at common law (l)

(1) Murder

Murder

1154 It is murder for a person of sound memory and discretion (m) unlawfully to kill any human creature in being and under the King's peace, with malice aforethought, either express or implied by law, provided the person killed dies of the injury inflicted within a year and a day after the same (n)

Manslaughter

Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of such a person without malice either express or implied (o)

Presumption in cases of
murder

When it has been proved that one person's death has been caused by another, there is a prima facie presumption of law that the act of the person causing the death is murder, unless the contrary appears from the evidence either for the prosecution or for the defence The onus is upon such person when accused to show that his act did not amount to murder (p)

Person in being

1155 The person killed must be one who is in being It is neither murder nor manslaughter to kill an unborn child while still in its mother's womb (q), but if the child be born alive

(g) Libel Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict c 96), s 3

(h) As to blasphemous and seditious libels, see pp 460, 530, ante, as to oral words spoken in contempt of a judicial officer, see p 501, ante

(i) See title LIBEL AND SLANDER

(k) Stephen Digest of the Criminal Law, 6th ed., 175

(l) As to suicide, see p 592, post

(m) As to criminal acts committed by lunatics and the extent to which persons of unsound mind are responsible for such acts, see p 241, ante

(n) 3 Co Inst 47, 50, Co Litt 287 b

(o) R v Taylor (1834), 2 Lew C C 215, R v Hughes (1857), Dears & B 248 Both in murder and in manslaughter the criminal act may be one of omission as well as of commission (R v Hughes, supra)

(p) Foot. 255, 290. R v Greenacre (1837), 8 C & P 35, 42, TINDAL, C J Where, however, the deceased is killed in attempting to make an arrest, the onus is upon the prosecution to show that the arrest was lawful, and if this is not shown, the killing is manslaughter only (R v Withers (1784), 1 East, P O 295).

(q) 3 Co Inst. 50, 1 Hale, P O 433, 1 Hawk P C., c 13, s 16 and afterwards die by reason of a felonious act done to it in the mother's womb or in the act of birth, the person who committed that act is guilty of murder (a)

SECT 1
Acts involving
bodily
injury.

A child is not considered in law to be completely born, so as to be the subject of either murder or manslaughter, until the whole body of the child is brought alive into the world having an independent circulation, and breathing, or capable of breathing, from its own lungs, so that it possesses, or is capable of, an existence independent of connection with its mother (b). But the child may be completely born although the umbilical cord be not severed (c)

1156 The person killed must be in the King's peace. The king's peace extends to all persons in England, whether British subjects, outlaws, or aliens, except rebels and alien enemies who are at the time actually engaged in hostile operations against the Crown (d)

Person in the King's peace.

If a person is feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt upon the sea or at any place out of England or Ireland, and dies of such stroke etc in England or Ireland, or being feloniously stricken etc in any place in England or Ireland dies of such stroke etc. upon the sea or at any place out of England or Ireland, the offence, whether it amounts to murder or manslaughter or of being accessory thereto, may be inquired into, tried and punished, in the county or place in England or Ireland where the death, stroke, poisoning, or hurt happens as if the offence had been wholly committed in that place (e)

1157 If death does not ensue until after the expiration of a year and a day from the date when the injury was inflicted, it is an irrebuttable presumption of law that the death is attributable to some other cause, and the person who inflicted the injury is not punishable for either murder or manslaughter (f)

Death after a year and a day

(a) 3 Co Inst 50, 1 Hawk P C, c 13, s 16, R v West (1815) 2 Car & Kir 784, MAUIE, J, where in consequence of an act done by the prisoner with intent to procure abortion the child was born so prematurely that it died shortly after birth (see also R v Senior (1832), 1 Mood C C 16) but according to Hale such a killing is not murder (1 Hale, P C 433). As to procuring abortion, see p 596, post

(b) R v Poulton (1832), 5 C & P 329, LITTLEDALE, J, R v Ince (1833), ibid, 539, PARK, J. In R v Brann (1841), 6 C & P 349, PARK, J, it was held that a child born alive could be the subject of a murder although it had not in fact breathed, R v Crutchley (1837), 7 C & P 914, PARKER, B, R v Sellie (1837), 7 C & P 850, COLTMAN, J, where it was laid down that the fact that a child had breathed was not conclusive proof that it was born alive, as it might have breathed and died before birth, R v Wright (1811), 9 C & P 751, GURNEY, B

(c) R v Crutchley, supra, R v Truller (1842), 2 Mood C C 260, C C R, R v Reeves (1839) 9 C & P 25, VAUGHAN, J

(d) 3 Co Inst 47, 1 Hale, P C 433, 1 East P C 227, 4 Bl Com 198

(e) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 10. This cannot apply to the case of a foreigner committing a murder abroad, even though the person murdered died here, no British statute can make the acts of a foreigner committed abroad punishable here. As to murder committed in England by a prisoner of war, see Post 188, R v Suttler (1858), 7 Cox C C 431, C C R, R v Depardo (1807), 1 Taunt 26. As to murders and other offences committed at sea or abroad, see pp 277, 284, ante

(f) 3 Co Inst 53, 1 Hawk P C, c 13, s 9, 1 East P C 345. The day of the infliction of the injury is reckoned as the first day (ibid), see R v Martin (1832), 5 C & P 128, approved in R v Dyson, [1908] 2 K B 454, C C A.

SECT. 1

Acts
involving
bodily injuryAccelerating
deathDeath from fright.Intervening causesMalice aforethought.

1158 A person may be guilty of murder or manslaughter whether he directly causes or accelerates death (g)

If the death of an infant or of an aged or infirm person directly results from fright caused by an unlawful assault committed by the accused upon another person, the accused is guilty of manslaughter (h).

Where one person attacks or threatens to attack another and compels the person attacked by bodily force, or induces him by a well-grounded apprehension of immediate serious violence, to do some act which directly results in his death, the person attacking or threatening to attack is guilty of murder (i)

If a dangerous wound is inflicted and death results, the person who inflicted the wound is criminally responsible for the death, although the person wounded neglected to use proper remedies (k) or refused to submit to a necessary operation (l), or died after such an operation which was carefully and properly performed (m)

If a wound is given which is not in itself mortal or dangerous, but which from improper treatment becomes the cause of death, the person who gave the wound will not be criminally responsible for the death, if it clearly appears that the death was caused by the improper treatment (n)

A person who gives false evidence which leads to the conviction and execution of an innocent person is not, it seems, guilty of murder (o)

1159 To constitute murder there must be malice aforethought, express or implied by law

Express malice exists where the deliberate purpose of the accused is to deprive another of life or to do some great bodily harm (p)

It is unnecessary to show any intention to kill or injure the deceased person in particular or any special degree of ill will towards him, if there be an intention to kill or seriously injure anyone among a number of persons, as by firing a gun into a crowd, there is evidence of express malice (q)

(g) R v Mutton (1862), 3 F & F 492, BYLES, J

(h) R v Towers (1874), 12 Cox, C C 530, DICKMAN, J, where an infant was said to have died from convulsions brought on or made worse by the act of the defendant in committing an assault on its mother, see, however, 1 Hale, P C 429

(i) R v Towers, supra, at p 533, R v Evans (1812), 3 Russell on Crimes, 12 R v Hickman (1831), 5 C & P 161, PARK, J, R v Pitts (1842), Car & M 284 LASKINE, J, and see R v Halliday (1889), 61 L T 701, C C R See R v Curley (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 109

(k) 1 Hale, P C 428, 1 East, P C 344, R v Rew (1662) Kel 26, R v Flynn (1867), 16 W R 319, C C R (Ir)

(l) R v Holland (1841), 2 Mood & R 351, MAULE, J

(m) R v Pym (1846), 1 Cox C C 339, ERLE and ROLFE, JJ, R v McIntyre (1847), 2 Cox, C C 379, COLERIDGE, J, R v Davis (1883), 15 Cox, C C 174, MATHEW, J

(n) 1 Hale, P C 428, R v Flynn, supra

(o) R v Madaniel (1756), 1 Leach, 44, see, as to this case, Post. 131, 1 East, P C 333.

(p) 1 East, P C 222, 223, see also 3 Co Inst 51, 1 Hale, P C 451

(q) 1 Hawk P C, c. 11, s. 12 In such a case the malice is called general.

1160 Anyone who kills another person upon the desire or command of the latter is guilty of murder (r) Anyone who kills an innocent and unoffending person in order to save his own life is guilty of murder (s)

SECT. 1.
Acts
involving
bodily
Injury.

1161 If anyone shoots at or stabs or lays poison for or does any other act with the malicious intent to kill one person, and by mistake kills another person by means of such act, the person who does the act is guilty of the murder of the person killed (a)

Killing by request, or to save life

Killing by mistake
Inciting to suicide.

1162 If anyone incites another person to commit suicide, and such person does commit suicide, the one who incites is guilty of murder, if two persons agree and attempt to commit suicide together, and one commits suicide and the other does not, the survivor is guilty of murder (b)

1163 Malice aforethought is implied by law (1) where the person killed is an officer of the law legally arresting or imprisoning the accused or executing other process of law in a legal manner, (2) where, although there may have been provocation, such provocation has not been sufficient to reduce the offence to manslaughter; (3) where the killing has been caused by the accused while he was committing some other felony implied.

Malice

1164 The act which causes death is murder, where the death is the result of intentional forcible opposition to an officer of justice in all cases where that officer has either by common law or by statute a right or is under a duty to arrest or keep in custody any other person or to prevent the commission of a felony or breach of the peace and is actually engaged in the performance of that duty (c), provided the accused knows that such person is an officer acting in pursuance of his duty

Opposition to
officers.

The same principle extends to private persons assisting officers, whether specially called upon to do so or not (d), to private persons interposing in case of an affray or endeavouring to apprehend felons (e), or arresting in cases where either by common law or by statute they have power to arrest, to bailiffs and other officers executing civil process (f), to gamekeepers when

Private persons assisting officers.

(r) 1 Hawk P C, c 9, s 6, R v Stanger (1815), 3 Russell on Crimes, 5, n

(s) 1 Hale, P C 451, 455, R v Dudley (1851) 14 Q B D 273

(a) Bract De Cor c 36, Rolls ed II, 51, Post 261, R v Saunders (1576), Plowd 473, R v Hunt (1820), 1 Mood C C 93, R v Bernard (1858), 1 F & F 211, CAMPBELL, CJ In such cases the rule is malitia credidit personam

(b) R v Dyson (1823), Russ & Ry 22 R v Alison (1838), 5 C & P 418 PALLISON, J, R v Joseph (1887), 16 Cox, C C 201, LIND, J, R v Stomouth (1897), 61 J P 729, RIDLEY, J, R v Abbott (1903), 67 J P 101, KENNEDY, J

(c) 1 Hale, P C 457 Post 270 306, 309, R v Howarth (1829), 1 Mood C C 207, R v Woolmer (1852), 1 Mood C C 331, R v Williams (1833), 1 Mood C C 387 (R v Porter (1873), 12 Cox, C C 444, BRETT, J

(d) Post 309, R v Porter, supra

(e) Post 309

(f) Post 310, 311, 1 Hawk P C, c 13, s 61 As to arrest see p 296, ante.

SECT 1
Acts
Involving
bodily
Injury.

The authority must be lawful.

entitled to arrest poachers (g), and to members of a press gang (h)

The officer or other person killed must have been acting at the time under a lawful authority. If he was at the time acting under a writ or warrant which is invalid on the face of it, or if the deceased officer was arresting or attempting to arrest the accused without a warrant for a cause for which he was not entitled so to arrest him, the killing is manslaughter only, and not murder (i), but the fact that the process is merely informal (k), or that a civil judgment upon which the warrant to arrest is based is erroneous (l), does not prevent the killing from being murder.

The same principles apply where a constable or other person present is killed when lawfully interfering to prevent the commission of a crime or a breach of the peace (m). The officer must at the time when he was killed have been acting within the limit of his local authority, or the offence will be only manslaughter (n).

The killing of an officer in the execution of his duty is not murder unless he is both lawfully authorised and exercising his authority in a legal manner. If an officer is killed while attempting to arrest a prisoner for a misdemeanour for which he is not entitled to arrest without a warrant, and the officer has not the (g) R v Ball (1832), 1 Mood C C 330, R v Wauthorne (1828), 3 C & P 391, see also h v Warner (1833), 1 Mood C C 380. If the gamekeeper is the servant of a person who has only the right of shooting and is not the owner or occupier of the land, he has no right to arrest, and may be resisted if he attempts to arrest (R v Wood (1809), 1 F & F 470, MARLIN, B).

(h) R v Broadfoot (1743), Fost 154.

(i) Fost 311, 312 R v Stockley (1753), 1 East, P C 310 (warrant issued in blank which had afterwards been filled in by the officer), R v Hood (1830), 1 Mood C C 281 (warrant leaving a blank for the Christian name of person to be arrested and giving no reason for omitting it, but describing the person insufficiently, but see R v Winwick (Inhabitants) (1800), 8 Term Rep 454, Lord KENYON, CJ), R v Thompson (1825), 1 Mood C C 80, R v Curran (1826), 1 Mood C C 132 (arrest without warrant), R v Walker (1854), Dears C C 308 (arrest for a previous assault without a continued pursuit), R v Lockley (1864), 4 F & F 155, SILFE, J (attempted arrest and handcuffing for bad language), R v Pribble (1838), 1 F & F 325. BRAMWELL, B, compare R v Serra (1845), 1 Den 104. But if after an arrest the person arrested kills the officer, not with a view to obtain his own liberation, but from motives of revenge, the offence is murder, although the arrest may have been illegal (R v Sattler (1855), Dears & B 539).

(k) R v Allen (1867), 17 L T 222. BLACKBURN and MELLOP, JJ. In this case there was a deliberate intention to rescue and to kill the officer having a prisoner in custody and the accused had no knowledge of the alleged informality.

(l) 1 Hale, P C 457, Fost 311, R v Marchalley (1611), 9 Co Rep 63 a, 68 a.

(m) 1 Hawk P C, c 13 ss 48 51, Fost 310, R v Lockley, supra, R v Curran (1828), 3 C & P 397.

(n) R v Tiley (1709), 2 Ld Raym 1296 1302, R v Weir (1823), 1 B & C 288, 293, see also R v Sanders (1867), L R 1 C C R 75, R v Cumpton (1850), 5 Q B D 311, C C R. If the constable named in the warrant hands it over to some other person to execute, the officer named not being present or close at hand, and the person attempting to make the arrest is killed, the offence is only manslaughter (R v Marchalley (1835), 7 C & P 245, WILLIAMS, J, R v Patience (1837), 7 C & P 775, PALKE, B).

warrant in his possession at the time (o), the offence is manslaughter, not murder (p)

If an officer is killed when breaking open the outer door of a house for the purpose of making an arrest, and he has not first demanded admittance and been refused, the killing is manslaughter only (q).

If there is no evidence of express malice, the killing of an officer is only manslaughter, if the prisoner did not know that the deceased was an officer (r). If he had that knowledge either from seeing the warrant or from his previous acquaintance with the deceased, or if, in the absence of such knowledge, there is evidence of express malice, the offence is murder (s).

If a private person lawfully arresting or interfering gives notice of the intention with which he is acting and is killed, the offence is murder, if he does not give such notice, the offence is manslaughter (t).

1165 If a criminal is sentenced to death by a court having authority to pass such a sentence, his execution in the proper manner and by the proper officer is justifiable, but if the execution is by an officer upon whom that duty is not cast, or if it is carried out in a different manner from that which is authorised by the form of the sentence, it is murder (a).

SECT. 1.
Acts
involving
bodily
injury

Execution of criminal

1166 Where an officer is forcibly resisted while in the legal execution of his duty, whether such duty relates to civil or to criminal process, he is entitled to repel force by force, and if in the course of so doing the person resisting him is killed, the killing is justifiable, provided there was a reasonable necessity for the use of such force by the officer, and that the amount of force used was not unreasonable or excessive, otherwise the killing is manslaughter at least. An officer who kills a person who makes no resistance is guilty

Killing by an officer who is resisted

(o) See p 309, ante

(p) R v Chapman (1871), 12 Cox, C C 4, HANLEY, J., R v Carey (1879), 14 Cox, C C 211, LINDLEY, J. But in this and all other cases of irregular arrest it would appear that if the accused acted with premeditation and from a previously existing intention to murder the officer, whether he were duly authorised or not, the offence is murder (see R v Allen, supra, R v Carey, supra).

(q) Fost 136, 320. See p 309, ante

(r) R v Curtis (1706), Fost 130, 137, R v Stockley (1772), 1 East P C 310, R v Gordon (1789), ibid 310, 352.

(s) 1 Hale, P C 438, 458, 461, 470, 1 Hawk P C, c 13, ss 49, 50, Fost 310, R v Woolmer (1832), 1 Mood C C 334. On the trial of an indictment in such a case it is not necessary to prove the officer's appointment, it is sufficient that he was known to act as such (R v Gordon (1789), 1 Leach, 515).

(t) Fost 311. But express notice is not required where the circumstances of the case were such that the prisoner must have known why the private person was seeking to apprehend him, as where he was caught in the act of committing a felony (R v Howarth (1828), 1 Mood C C 207).

(a) 3 Co Inst 52, 1 Hale, P C 501. But, as Hale points out, it was in former times common to modify the form of execution for high treason from that directed by the express terms of the sentence (see Fost 267). As to the mode of execution and the officers whose duty it is to carry out a sentence of death, see Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), ss 1, 2, Capital Punishment Amendment Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict c 24), ss 2, 3, Criminal Court (Prisons) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict c 64), s 2 (5), Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 55), s 13.

SECT. 1.
Acts
Involving
bodily
Injury.

of murder (b) The same rule applies to killing by persons assisting officers or lawfully arresting or interfering to prevent a breach of the peace (c).

An officer is not bound to retreat before the person resisting (d)

Officers attempting to put an end to a riot, and other persons assisting them, are justified in killing persons taking part in it who refuse to disperse or who resist apprehension (e)

If a person whom an officer or a private person is legally attempting to arrest upon a charge of treason, or felony, or inflicting a dangerous wound, flees, and he cannot be otherwise arrested, he may be killed, and the homicide is justifiable (f)

If the charge upon which the arrest is sought to be made is only a misdemeanour or a breach of the peace, or if the attempted arrest is on civil process, the killing by the officer is murder, if it is intentional or is done with a weapon likely to kill, but only manslaughter if the death is unintentionally caused by means not likely to cause death (g)

Every prison officer while acting as such has, by virtue of his appointment, all the powers, authorities, protection, and privileges of a constable (h)

Provocation.

1167 When the accused person has received provocation from the deceased, malice aforethought is nevertheless implied and the killing is murder, unless the provocation be of such a character as to reduce the offence to manslaughter If there is evidence of

(b) 1 Hale, P C 490, 494, 496, 1 East, P C 297, Fost 318, 321, R v Goffe (1672), 1 Vent 216, R v Dutton (1756), 1 East, P C 313, where a person not liable to impressment resisted the press gang and was killed and thus was held to be murder, R v Longden (1812), Russ & Ry 228

(c) 1 Hale, P C 484, Fost 271

(d) 1 Hale, P C 481, Fost 321

(e) 1 Hale, P C 495, 1 Hawk P C, c 10, s 14, Riot Act (1 Geo 1, stat 2, c 5), s 3 As to homicide during an unlawful assembly, see R v McNaughten (1881), 14 Cox, C C 576 (Ir)

(f) 1 Hale, P C 489, 1 Hawk P C, c 10, ss 11 12, Fost 271 As to the killing of a person trying to escape from a press gang who had pressed him without due warrant, see R v Rokeby (1690), 1 East, P C 312, and R v Dutton supra

(g) 1 Hale, P C 489, 2 Hale, P C 77, 117, Fost 271, 1 East P C 302, 306

(h) Prison Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 41) s 40 The provisions of this Act are extended to State inebriate reformatories by the Inebriates Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 60), s 4 If a prisoner confined for treason, felony or inflicting a dangerous wound were killed by a gaoler whilst effecting his escape and where there was no other way of preventing such escape, no question could arise as to the justification of the gaoler, since he would have the same protection as a constable With regard to a prisoner convicted of a misdemeanour and under sentence of penal servitude, he, by escaping during his sentence, commits the felony of being at large during a sentence of penal servitude (see p 512, ante), and the officer in seeking to recapture him has the same protection as in the case of an ordinary felon But a convict detained for misdemeanour and not under a sentence of penal servitude, or a person who is imprisoned for debt and who escapes, may not be killed (R v Forster (1825), 1 Lew C. C 187, HOLROYD, J.), unless he resists the gaoler and gives him reasonable ground for believing himself to be in peril of his life or of bodily harm, in which case the latter is entitled to use a deadly weapon, if no other is at hand (ibid., 1 Hale, P C 496, 1 East, P C 295) express malice, no provocation is sufficient to reduce the crime to manslaughter (i).

Mere words or gestures, however insulting or indecent, will not in themselves so reduce the offence, where the killing is intentional or is caused by a weapon likely to cause death (k). But it may be otherwise where such words are of a threatening nature and are accompanied by blows, although the latter may not of themselves be of sufficiently serious a nature as to reduce the offence from murder to manslaughter (l).

Provocation, however great, is insufficient for this purpose, if it is not recent and if there has been a sufficient time between the provocation and the killing for passion to subside and for reason to interpose (m). Provocation is also insufficient for the purpose of reducing the offence from murder to manslaughter, if the manner of killing be barbarous and such as to show a cruel and deliberate intent to do mischief (n).

SMOT 1.

Acts
involving bodily
injury.

1168 If anyone entitled to inflict lawful correction (o) while inflicting such correction unintentionally kills the person who is being corrected, the law does not imply malice. The death is regarded as having occurred by misadventure, if, having regard to the circumstances, the correction was inflicted moderately and with a proper instrument not likely to cause death or serious injury.

Correction.

If the correction is inflicted with a deadly weapon and death is caused, the person inflicting correction is guilty of murder, if the

(i) R v Mason (1756), Fost 132, 135, 291, R v Kukham (1837), 8 C & P 110, R v Welsh (1869), 11 Cox, C C 336, R v Whiteley (1829), 1 Lew C C 173, 175. See also p 580, post.

(k) Fost 290, 1 Hale, P C 155, 456, 457, 1 Hawk P C, c 13, s 33, 1 East, P C 233, R v Morley (Lord) (1666) Kel 55, R v Sherwood (1844), 1 Car & Kir 556, POILLOCK, C B. See, however, R v Rothwell (1871), 12 Cox, C C 140, in which BLACKBURN, J., appears to have been prepared to admit at least one exception to the rule, as he expressed the opinion that "if a husband suddenly hearing from his wife that she had committed adultery and he, having had no idea of such a thing before, were thereupon to kill his wife, it might be manslaughter." Where, however, there are no blows there must be a provocation equal to blows, it must be at least as great as blows." This case was followed in R v Jones (1905), 72 J P 210.

(l) Fost 290, 291, 1 East, P C 233, where it is suggested that it might be sufficient, if the words were accompanied by some act denoting an immediate intention of following them up by an actual assault, R v Sherwood, supra, R v Smith (1866), 4 F & F 1066, where BYLES, J. expressed an opinion that if two military men met each other in the street, and one of them called the other a coward and a scoundrel and assaulted him by spitting in his face, whereupon the other killed him, this would be only manslaughter, but that if an ordinary quarrel arose between husband and wife, and the wife spat at the husband and he thereupon killed her, this would be murder.

(m) Fost 296, 1 Hawk P C, c 13, s 40, Kel 56, 1 East, P C 232, R v Lynch (1832), 5 C & P 324, LORD TENNYSON, C J, R v Hayward (1833), 6 C & P 157, TINDAL, C J, R v Fisher (1837) 8 C & P 182, where PARK, J., said that whether there had been time for the blood to cool was rather a question of law.

(n) 1 Hale, P C 454, Fost 291, 1 Hawk P C, c 13, s 42, 1 East, P C 235, R v Thorpe (1829), 1 Lew C C 171, BAYLEY, J., R v Sha (1834), 6 C & P 372, R v Thomas (1837), 7 C & P 817, 819, PARKER, J., compare R v Ayes (1810), Buss & Ry 166.

(o) As to the cases in which correction by personal chastisement is lawful, see p 608, post.

SECT 1

Acts
involving bodily
injury.

Duels.

correction is inflicted with an instrument improper for the purpose but not likely to kill, or if the correction exceeds the bounds of moderation, the offence is manslaughter (p).

1169 If two persons deliberately fight a duel and either party is killed, the law implies malice aforethought, and the survivor is guilty of murder, no matter what provocation he may have received or upon whose challenge the duel was fought (a)

Both the seconds who are present aiding and abetting are guilty of murder as principals in the second degree, as are also any other persons who are present and who encourage the combatants by advice or assistance (b)

If a duel is fought upon a sudden quarrel, and one of the parties is killed, the offence is manslaughter, and not murder (c)

Fight on sudden quarrel.

1170 Although if death results from a fight upon a sudden quarrel (d), the person who causes the death is generally guilty of manslaughter only, yet if in such a fight the parties separate, or are separated, and one afterwards lies in wait for the other and renews the fight, in the course of which the latter is killed, the person killing him is guilty of murder (e)

If to all appearance the parties are reconciled and afterwards fight again on a fresh sudden quarrel and one of them is killed, this is only manslaughter, unless the circumstances show that the reconciliation was merely pretended and that the injury done was on account of the former grudge (f)

In the case of a sudden quarrel, if the facts show that there was malicious intention on the part of the person who caused the death (g),

(p) 1 Hale, P C 473, 474, Post 262 1 Hawk P C, c 11, s 3, R v Turner (undated), cited in R v Keate (1698), Comb 407, 408, R v Gray (1666), Comb 408 R v Wiggs (1785), 1 Leach, 378, n (chastisement of a servant), R v Wall (1802) 28 State Tr 51, 145, where the prisoner, a colonial governor, was convicted of murder for ordering an excessive flogging which caused death, R v Corner (1836), 7 C & P 438, R v Cheeseman (1836), 7 C & P 455, R v Bird (1850), 5 Cox, C C 1, R v Hopley (1860), 2 F & F 202, COCKBURN, C J The chastisement of a child of very tender years must be of the very lightest description (R v Griffin (1869), 11 Cox, C C 402, MARTIN, B, where a father who had caused the death of his child aged two and a half years by beating it with a strap was convicted of manslaughter)

(a) 1 Hale, P C 443, 452, 1 Hawk P C, c 31 ss 21, 22, Post 297, R v Mauquridge (1706), 17 State Tr 57, R v Oneby (1726), 17 State Tr 29, R v Rue (1803) 3 East, 581, GROSE, J

(b) 1 Hale, P C 442, 452, R v Cuddy (1843), 1 Car & Kir 210, WILLIAMS, J, and ROSE, B R v Young (1836), 8 C & P 644, VAUGHAN, J Mere presence as a spectator without giving encouragement or assistance will not justify a conviction (R v Young, supra, and see R v Coney (1882), 8 Q. B. D. 534 C C R., and p 562, post)

(c) Post 297, 1 Hawk P C, c 13, s 29 See p 581, post

(d) See p 581, post

(e) 1 Hale P C 451 452, R v Selten (1871), 11 Cox, C C 674, HANNEN, J

(f) Ibid 1 Hawk P C, c 13, s 30

(g) As where he has started the fight under circumstances of unfair advantage (Post 295, R v Mauquridge, supra, R v Whiteley (1829), 1 Lew C C 173, 176, BAYLEY, J, R v Kessal (1824), 1 C & P 437, PARK, J, R v Smith (1837), 8 C & P 160 162, BOWENQUET and COLTMAN, JJ and BOLAND, B), or where he has gone on to kill the deceased after completely overpowering him (R v Shaw (1834), 6 C & P 372, PATTERSON, J)

the person killing is guilty not of manslaughter, but of murder

SECT. 1.
Acts
involving
bodily
injury.

1171 Where a person whilst committing or attempting to commit a felony does an act which is known to be dangerous to life and likely in itself to cause death, and the death of another person results as a consequence of that act though not intended by the person committing it, the law implies malice aforethought, and the person causing the death is guilty of murder (h)

Death caused while felony is committed

1172 A person is guilty of murder who administers to or incites a woman to take drugs for the purpose of procuring abortion, whether she be in fact pregnant or not (i), or who uses instruments for that purpose (j), if the woman dies in consequence of the drugs or operation

Murder of woman by drugs taken to procure abortion

1173 If death is caused during the commission of an act which is unlawful but not felonious, malice aforethought is not implied and the offence is manslaughter only (k)

Death by unlawful act.

1174 Where several persons are engaged in a common design and another person is killed, whether intentionally or unintentionally, by an act of one of them done in prosecution of the common design, the others present are guilty of murder, if the common design was to commit murder, or to inflict felonious violence, or to commit any breach of the peace and violently to resist all opposers. If the common design was merely to commit an unlawful act involving violence, the others are guilty of manslaughter only (l)

Common
design.

(h) R v Honey (1862), 3 F & F 287, LRAMWILL, B., h v Tamplem (1862), 3 F & F 520, 522, POLLOCK, C B., R v Serne (1887), 16 Cox, C C 311, 313, STEPHEN, J., where the death was caused by the prisoner setting fire to a house with intent to defraud, R v Whitmarsh (1898), 62 J 1 711, a case of death from an attempt to procure abortion where BIGHAM J. directed the jury that the killing would be murder, unless the chance of death was so remote that no reasonable man would take it into consideration. There are old dicta to the effect that if death is caused during the commission of any felony it is murder (see 3 Co Inst 56, Fost 238, 1 East, P C 255, R v Acute (1698), Comb 106, where, however, HOLT, C J, at p 409, expressed the opinion that the statement of the law by Coke in 3 Co Inst 56 was too wide, R v Woodburne (1722), 16 State Tr 54, 50). But it is submitted that the modern rule is as stated in the text, which is taken from the summing up of STEPHEN, J., in R v Serne, supra, and it is believed that it juries are now usually directed by judges in that way.

(i) R v Russell (1832) 1 Mood C C 356, R v Gaylor (1857) Deans & B 288. Compare R v Fretwell (1862), Le & Ca 161, where the prisoner procured the drug for the deceased knowing the purpose for which she intended to use it, but the jury found that he did not incite her to take it, and it was held that he could not be found guilty of murder. Such a person might be found guilty of a misdemeanour under s 59 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100). See p 597, post.

(j) R v Whitmarsh, supra.

(k) 1 Hawk P C, c 27 s 6, R v Sawyer (1815), 3 Russell on Crime 1 n

(l) Fost 353, 1 Hawk P C, c 13 ss 31-34, R v Hawkins (1855), 1 Le & L 392, PARK, J., R v Hodgson (1730), 1 Leach, 6, R v Turner (1804) 4 F & F 339, 341, CHANNELL, B., h v White (1806), Russ & L 1, 19, R v Tyler (1838), 8 C & P 616, R v Martin (1838), 2 Lew C C 225, ALFREDSON, B., R v Price (1858), 8 Cox, C C 96, BYLES, J., R v Luck (1862), 3 J & F 483, BYLES, J., R v Skeet (1866), 4 F & F 931, POLLOCK, C B., R v Doddridge

SECT. 1

Acts
involving
bodily injury.Manslaughter(u) Manslaughter

1175 Anyone is guilty of manslaughter (m) who (1) unlawfully kills another upon provocation of such a character (n) as to reduce the offence from murder to manslaughter, or upon a sudden quarrel, or (2) who, while committing an unlawful act or a felony not likely to cause danger to others, unintentionally kills another person, or (3) who unintentionally causes the death of another by the culpable neglect of a legal duty resting upon the person causing the death (o)

Provocation

1176 If a person finds a man in the act of committing adultery with his wife and immediately kills either the adulterer or the adulteress, the act of killing is manslaughter, and not murder (p)

If any person unlawfully inflicts violent blows upon another or assaults him under circumstances of personal indignity (q), or unlawfully arrests or imprisons him (a), and the person so provoked immediately and unjustifiably kills the other, the offence is manslaughter, and not murder

The nature of the weapon which caused the death must be taken into consideration. If a deadly weapon be used, the provocation required to reduce the crime from murder to manslaughter must be of a much more serious nature than if no weapon, or one not likely to cause death, were employed (b)

(1860), 8 Cox C C 335 R v Bernard (1808), 1 F & F 240, R v Rubens (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 163 and see p 252, ante

(m) For a general definition of manslaughter, see p 570, ante, and for various cases of manslaughter, see pp 572-9, ante

(n) As to the degree of provocation which suffices for the purpose, see p 576, ante, and see the next paragraph, infra

(o) Cases of the first class have been distinguished as voluntary and of the second and third as involuntary manslaughter but this distinction is of no practical importance. As to death unintentionally caused during the commission of a dangerous felony, see p 579 ante. With regard to homicide caused during the commission of an act which is unlawful, it is perhaps uncertain whether, if the act is simply malum quia prohibitum, the illegality would be such as to render the doer guilty of manslaughter, as, e.g., death accidentally caused while shooting at game by a person holding no licence authorising him to kill game. The older view was that the killing in such a case would not be manslaughter (see 1 Hale P C 475, Fost 259, 290)

(p) 1 Hale P C 486, Fost 296, R v Manning (1671), T Raym 212 R v Pearson (1835), 2 Lew C C 216, PARKER, B., R v Kelly (1848), 2 Car & Kir 814, ROBERT, B. If a rape is being committed on the wife, the killing of her assailant by the husband is justifiable (1 Hale, P C 486). In R v Fisher (1837), 8 C & P 182, PARK, J., expressed an opinion that the case of a father actually seeing his son and another person committing an unnatural offence would come within the same rule as the case of adulterers, and that killing by the father of such a person would only be manslaughter. As to provocation by an assault committed on a member of the family of a person who kills another, see R v Harrington (1866), 10 Cox, C C 370, COCKBURN, CJ

(q) As by pulling his nose, Kel 135, 1 East, P C 233, R v Manbridge (1700), 17 State Tr 57, 69. See p 577, ante

(a) R v Wilkes (1784), 1 East, P C 233, R v Thompson (1825), 1 Mood C C 80, R v Curran (1826), 1 Mood C C 132, and see cases cited on p 574, note (i), supra

(b) Kel 130, 131, Fost 290-291. 1 East, P C 233, 1 Hawk P C, c. 13, ss 33, 34 R v Stedman (1704), Fost 292, R v Haqan (1837), 8 C & P 167, COLTMAN J., see also R v Tranter (1722), 16 State Tr 1, 52, R v Willoughby (1791), 1 East, P C 238. As to when homicide is justifiable, see p 586, post

SECT 1
Acts
Involving
bodily
Injury.
Drunkenness

1177. Although voluntary drunkenness is no excuse for crime, yet in cases where a certain degree of provocation has existed, the drunkenness of the accused may be taken by the jury into consideration upon the question whether the prisoner was excited by passion, or feared an attack upon himself, or whether he acted from malice (c) If the drunkenness was so great as to have prevented the accused from forming any intention, the offence is manslaughter, and not murder (d)

If the state of intoxication during which the homicide was committed was not voluntary, but was caused by the malice or negligence of another person, and the accused was in such a state as not to know what he was doing, the person who committed the homicide is not guilty of a crime (e)

1178 If a sudden quarrel arises, the parties to which fight upon fair terms either immediately or at a place to which they immediately resort for that purpose, and one of them is killed, the person killing the other, providing he took no unfair advantage, is guilty of manslaughter, and not of murder, whichever of them may have struck the first blow (f)

Sudden
quarrel.

1179 All struggles in anger, either by fighting or wrestling or in any other mode, are unlawful, and if in such a struggle the death of one person is caused by the intentional act of another, although the intention is not to cause death, the person causing the death is guilty of manslaughter (g)

Struggles in anger

(c) R v Grandley (1819) 1 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed 141, n, HOLROYD, J., R v Pearson (1835), 2 Lew C C 144, PARK, J., R v Thomas (1837), 7 C & P 817, PARKE, B., R v Garden (1858), 1 F & F 90, CROWDER, J., see also R v Marshall (1830), 1 Lew C C 76, PARK, J., R v Montague (1819), 4 Cox, C C 55, COLBRIDGE, J., R v Moore (1852) 3 C & K 319, R v Doody (1854), 6 Cox, C C 463, the last two being cases of suicide. But see, contra, R v Carroll (1833), 7 C & P 115, in which PARK, J., expressly disapproved of the dictum of HOLROYD, J., in R v Grandley, supra, that where, as upon a charge of murder, the material question is whether an act was premeditated or done only with sudden heat and impulse, the fact of the party being intoxicated is a proper circumstance to be taken into consideration, see also R v Meakin (1836), 7 C & P 297.

(d) R v Doherty (1887), 16 Cox, C C 306, 308, see also R v Moore, supra, R v Indy, supra, R v Meade, [1909] 1 K. P. 893, at p 899, C C A. See also R v Buske (1908) Times, 11th December, 1908.

(e) 1 Hale, P C 32, Stephen, Digest of the Criminal Law 6th ed 23. A person who while in delirium tremens or in a state of frenzy originally caused by excessive drinking, kills another is regarded by the law as if he were insane (1 Hale, P C 32, R v Davis (1891), 14 Cox, C C 663, STEPHEN, J.)

(f) 1 Hale, P C 453, 456, Foat 295 296, 1 Hawk P C, c 13, ss 27, 28, 29, R v Walters (1688), 12 State Tr 114, 122, R v Byron (Lord) (1765), 19 State Tr 1177. If during a fight without deadly weapons one of the parties snatches up such a weapon and kills the other, this is manslaughter only (R v Snow (1776), 1 Leach, 151, R v Taylor (1771), 5 Burr 2793, Lord Mansfield, C J., and as the prisoner intended from the first to use the deadly weapon (R v Whiteley (1829), 1 Lew C C 173, BAYLEY, J., R v Aresal (1824), 1 C & P 437, PARK, J., and see R v Rankin (1803), Russ & Ry 43). As to what is killing during a sudden quarrel or during fighting amounts to murder, see p 578, ante.

(g) R v Canniff (1840), 9 C & P 359, PATIESON, J.

SMOT 1.

Acts
involving bodily
injury.

Prize fight.

1180 Amicable contests in wrestling or boxing are not unlawful, and a person who unintentionally causes the death of another in the course of such a contest is not guilty of culpable homicide (h), but a prize fight, or any contest either for money or otherwise in which the lives or health of the combatants are endangered, or in which the intention is to continue the contest until one of them is disabled or subdued by violent blows, is illegal, and if death results, the survivor and those who are present and encourage the fight are guilty of manslaughter (i)

Lawful
games

1181 Where a person accidentally kills another while playing at a lawful game which is not attended with apparent danger to life, and he is not actuated by any malicious motive or intention, or acting in a manner which he knows to be likely to produce death or injury, or indifferent whether death is or is not caused, the act causing the death is not criminal (k)

Negligence.

1182 A person upon whom the law imposes any duty (l), or who has taken upon himself any duty, tending to the preservation of

(h) R v Cunningham (1840), 9 C & P. 359, R v Young (1866), 10 Cox, C C. 371, BRAMWELL, J

(i) Ibid, R v Hargrave (1831), 5 C & P 170, R v Murphy (1833), 6 C & P 103, LITTLEDALE, J, R v Orton (1878), 14 Cox, C C 226, C C R, R v Coney (1882), 8 Q B D 534, 549, 551, C C R

(k) Post 299 260, 1 Hawk P C, c 11, ss 6 7, R v Bradshaw (1878) 14 Cox, C C 80, BRAMWELL, J R v Moore (1898), 11 T L R 229, HAWKINS, J The rules of a game will not make lawful that which is in itself unlawful, nor, on the other hand, is a person guilty of manslaughter merely because he may have broken the rules (ibid) Shooting at a mark or otherwise is a lawful recreation, but a person who shoots without taking proper precautions to avoid injury and so kills another is guilty of manslaughter (R v Salmon (1880), 6 Q B D 79, C C R)

(l) The non-contractual duties imposed by law are either statutory duties or those which arise at common law out of the position in which persons stand towards each other or towards the public

With regard to the care necessary in the use of all dangerous things and in the conduct of all operations which, if carelessly conducted, may cause injury or death, such as riding, driving and navigation, the rule is that if one man is near to another, a duty lies upon him not to do that which may cause a personal injury to the other (Haven v Pender (1883), 11 Q B D 503, C A, Le Lievre v Gould, [1893] 1 Q B 491, C A, per Lord Esher, M R, at p 497, and per Bowen L J, at p 502)

The following are cases of manslaughter owing to negligent driving and riding — R v Walker (1824), 1 C & P 320 (where the deceased was drunk), R v Murray (1802), 5 Cox, C C 509 (streets unusually crowded), R v Groat (1834), 6 C & P 629 (where the driver was near-sighted and should therefore have exercised more than usual care), R v Timmens (1836) 7 C & P 499 (omnibuses racing) R v Mastin (1834), 6 C & P 396 (prisoner and deceased were riding and said to be racing), R v Swinfall (1846), 2 Car & Kin 230 (uniting to furious driving), R v Dalloway (1847), 2 Cox, C C 273 (where the accused was driving a cart without holding the reins, a child ran across the road and was killed, ERLE, C J, directed the jury not to convict if they thought prisoner could not have prevented the death, if he had been holding the reins), R v Jones (1870), 11 Cox, C C 544 (contributory negligence, see p 586, post), R v Taylor (1840) 9 C & P 672 (negligent navigation of river or at too great speed) R v Spence (1846), 1 Cox, C C 352 (liability of pilot), R v Allen (1835), 7 C & P 153 R v Green (1835), ibid, 156 (liability of captain), R v Williamson (1844), 1 Cox, C C 47 (overloading and mismanagement of boat)

The following are cases of negligence in the use of a weapon or other dangerous thing likely to cause death in an improper place or without taking

SHOT 1.
Acts
Involving
bodily
Injury

proper precautions to avoid injury —R v Salmon (1880), 6 Q B D 79, C C R (firing a long range rifle in a field near roads and houses held to be manslaughter, secus where a gun was fired in the ordinary course by an artilleryman at a target under the direction of the prisoner, his superior officer, in a place not obviously improper, see R v Hutchinson (1864), 9 Cox, C O 555, BYLES, J.), R v Campbell (1869), 11 Cox, C O 323 (firing a gun at deceased, the jury apparently believing that prisoner did not know it was loaded), R v Jones (1874) 12 Cox C O 628 (where LUSH, J. directed the jury that if the prisoner pointed the gun at deceased without examining whether it was loaded or not, and it happened to be loaded and death resulted, he was guilty of manslaughter but if he had tried the gun with a rammer or otherwise and had reason to believe that it was not loaded, it would probably not have been manslaughter, see Post 263), R v Weston (1879), 14 Cox, C O 346, 352 (gun levelled by a poacher at a gamekeeper, but, as the jury found, without the intention of discharging it) R v Archer (1888), 1 F & F 351 (where during a struggle for a loaded gun, to the possession of which prisoner was entitled, it went off, and Lord CAMPBELL, C J, directed a verdict of guilty on the ground that the prisoner had no right to take the gun by force), R v Skett (1866), 1 F & F 931 (a similar case but deceased, a gamekeeper, was entitled to take the gun), R v Burton (1721), 1 Stra 181 (firing a pistol in a street) R v Carr (1832), 8 C & P 163 (negligent manufacture of a cannon or gun)

The following are cases of negligence with regard to railway trains etc. — R v Frazer (1864), 4 F & F 100, 111 (where death occurred through a railway collision, and WILLES, J. held that an inferior officer, acting honestly, was justified in obeying the directions of a superior which did not appear to him at the time to be improper or contrary to law), R v Gray (1865), 4 F & F 1098 (where a fireman was killed in a collision, but there was no evidence whether he or the accused, who was the driver, was looking out for signals, and WILLES, J. directed an acquittal), R v Targeter (1848), 3 Cox, C O 191, R v Birchall (1866), 4 F & F 1087 (contributory negligence, as to this case, see p 586, note (c) post), R v Elliott (1889), 16 Cox, C O 710 (where prisoner was a guard and there was no sufficient evidence of gross negligence) R v Henge (1865), 4 F & F 504, R v Smith (1869), 11 Cox C O 210 (where LUSH, J. held that the prisoner, who was a servant of the owner of a private mining tramway and was employed by the owner to watch a public crossing which there was no statutory obligation upon the owner to have so watched, owed no duty to the public and was not punishable criminally for negligence in watching which resulted in the death of a person crossing the line, and see R v Pittwood (1902), 19 T L R 37, WRIGHT, J.)

The following are cases of negligence with regard to machinery — R v Gregory (1860), 2 F & F 153 (explosion on ship owing to inefficient valve), R v Stokes (1850), 4 Cox, C O 449 (leaving incompetent person in charge of colliery machinery, compare R v Hilton (1838), 2 Lew C O 214, where the prisoner had, contrary to his duty, left an engine unattended, another person started it and was unable to stop it thus causing the death of deceased, and ALDERSON, B. directed an acquittal on the ground that the death was not the consequence of the prisoner's act but of that of the person who started the engine), R v Haines (1847), 2 Car & Kir 268 (neglecting ventilation of mine) R v Hughes (1857), 7 Cox, C O 301, C C R (omission to place a cage over shaft of mine)

There is a duty upon workmen and others who throw rubbish etc., or all it to fall from a height, not to endanger the lives of persons who may reasonably be expected to be in a place of public resort below. If they throw down such things without giving a sufficient warning which is likely to be heard, they are guilty of manslaughter, see 1 Hale P C 472, 473, Post 262, R v Hill (1664), Kel 40, R v Fenton (1830), 1 Lew C O 179 (throwing stones down a mine), R v Rigmondon (1833), 1 Lew C O 180 (where death was caused by casks which had been insufficiently secured falling into the road)

If a man having a horse or other animal which he knows to be so vicious as to be dangerous turns it out into a place where there are persons on which to his knowledge people are likely to be, and the animal kills such a person, the owner is guilty of manslaughter (R v Dant (1865), 10 & Ca 567,

SECT. 1.

Acts
involving bodily
injury

and see R v Franklin (1883), 15 Cox, C C 163, compare Lowery v Walker (1909), 25 T L R 608

For other cases of manslaughter arising out of a duty imposed by law to do or not to do certain things see also R v Franklin (1883), 15 Cox, C C 163, R v Bruce (1847) 2 Cox C C 262 (causing death by rough play with a third person, which was held by EPLE, J, not to be manslaughter), R v Sullivan (1836), 7 C & P 641 (causing a cart to upset), R v Martin (1827) 3 C & P 211 (giving a very young child a considerable quantity of spirits to drink, see now Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s 119), R v Packard (1841), Car & M 236, R v Kempson (1893), 28 L Jo 477 (where causing death by selling diseased meat was held to be manslaughter), R v Wild (1837), 2 Lew C C 214 (where death was caused by kicking out a trespasser) R v Errington (1838), 2 Lew C C 217 (where the accused set fire to straw intending only to frighten and death ensued)

A person who has the charge or care of a child or young person under the age of sixteen, and who by neglecting to provide it with proper medical aid causes or hastens its death, is guilty of manslaughter (R v Downes (1875), 1 Q B D 25, C C R). It was doubtful whether at common law a parent who caused his child's death by neglecting to supply medical aid upon the ground that it was against his religion to do so was guilty of manslaughter (see R v Wagstaffe (1868), 10 Cox, C C 530, WILLES, J). But in R v Downes, supra, the court held that by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict c 122), s 37, the duty of supplying medical aid was cast upon the father, and that if death resulted from his neglect of that duty he committed manslaughter. That statute is now repealed but the section in question was enacted in a wider form by the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s 12. There must be affirmative proof that the death would not have occurred if such aid had been supplied (R v Morby (1882), 8 Q B D 571, C C R). In R v Senior [1899] 1 Q B 283 291, C C R, it was suggested by the court that the guilt of the parent might depend upon whether he had the necessary means to obtain the medical aid, this is, however met by s 12 (1) of the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), which requires him in such a case to take the necessary steps to procure medical aid under the Poor Law Acts, see also R v Cook (1898) 62 J P 712, BIGHAM, J. As to the duty of a mother to obtain such assistance during her confinement as may preserve the life of her child where she has the means of procuring such assistance, see R v Middleship (1850) 5 Cox, C C 276, R v Handley (1874), 13 Cox, C C 79. R v Izod (1901), 20 Cox C C 690. And see R v Jones (1901), 19 Cox, C C 678.

There is a common law obligation, the neglect of which in such a way as to injure health is in itself a misdemeanour (R v Friend (1802) Russ & Ry 20, and see p 623, post), to provide sufficient food, clothing, and bedding to any infant of tender years unable to provide for and take care of itself, whether it be the child, apprentice, or servant whom a person is obliged by duty or contract to provide for, and by the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s 12, supra (see further as to this Act, p 624 post), the obligation is extended to all persons who have the custody, charge, or care of a child (as to "custody" see R v Connor, [1908] 2 K B 26). If death results from a neglect of this legal obligation the person guilty of the neglect commits manslaughter, see R v Walters (1848), 1 Den 356 (exposure of child), R v Walters (1841), Car & M 161 (exposure), R v Conde (1867), 10 Cox, C C 547 (neglect), R v Bubb (1850), 4 Cox C C 455. As to the duty of the person having charge of the child to apply for Poor Law Relief if he is unable to provide for it, see Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s 12, see also title INFANTS AND CHILDREN. If an adult who has the free control of his actions and is able to take care of himself voluntarily remains in the service of a master or under the charge of a person who does not supply him with sufficient food, the latter is not criminally responsible, if death ensues, but it is otherwise if the adult is reduced to such a state of body and mind as to be helpless and unable to take care of himself (R v Smith (1865), Le & Ca. 607, see also R v Shepherd (1862), Le & Ca 147). As to a husband's responsibility for the death of his wife to whom he makes a separate allowance on account of his refusal to give her shelter, see R v Plummer (1844) 1 Car & Kir 600. A relieving officer who neglects or unjustifiably refuses to relieve a destitute person is life (m), and who grossly neglects to perform that duty or performs it with gross negligence and thereby causes the death of another person, is guilty of manslaughter (n) What amount of negligence is to be regarded as gross is a question of degree for the jury, depending on the circumstances of each particular case (o) The law does not require the utmost caution that can be used, it is sufficient if reasonable precaution, and what is usual and ordinary in such cases, be taken (p)

SECT. 1
Acts
involving bodily
injury.

To render such a person guilty of manslaughter the negligence must have been the direct and immediate cause of the death (q), and

Negligence
must be personal.

guilty of manslaughter, if the latter dies in consequence of such refusal (R v Curtis (1860), 16 Cox, C C 746, HAWKINS, J)

A person who undertakes the charge of one who is helpless, either from infancy, old age, lunacy, or other infirmity, is guilty of manslaughter if the death of the latter is caused by his culpable neglect (R v Marriott (1838), 8 C & P 425, PARTISON, J, R v Nicholls (1875), 13 Cox, C C 75, BRETT, J, R v Instan, [1893] 1 Q B 400, C C R)

(m) A person who, whether he be a medical man or not, deals with dangerous medicines or undertakes a dangerous operation is bound to act with proper and reasonable skill and caution, and if by reason of want of such skill and caution death is occasioned he is guilty of manslaughter, but he is not responsible criminally for a mere error in judgment, see R v Tom Butchell (1829), 3 C & P 629, R v Williamson (1807), 3 C & P 630, R v Spiller (1832), 5 C & P 333, R v Simpson (1829), 1 Lew C C 172, 262, R v Ferguson (1840), 1 Lew C C 181, R v Jessymond (1828), 1 Lew C C 169, R v Long (1831), 4 C & P 398, 423, R v Webb (1834), 2 Lew C C 196, R v Spilling (1838), 2 Mood & R 107, R v Crick (1859), 1 F & F 519, R v Cook (1839), 1 F & F 521, R v Bull (1860), 2 F & F 201, R v Markus (1861), 1 F & F 366, R v Chamberlain (1867), 10 Cox, C C 486, R v Spencer (1867), 10 Cox, C C 525, R v Noakes (1866), 1 F & F 920 (error of chemist in making up medicine)

(n) Stephen, Digest of the Criminal Law, 6th ed, p 169, art 232, see also Stephen, General View of Criminal Law 2nd ed, p 76, R v Jessymond (1828), 1 Lew C C 169, BAYLEY, J

(o) Stephen, Digest of the Criminal Law, 6th ed, p 169, art 232, R v Markus (1861), 1 F & F 366 368 WILKES, J, R v ... (1866), 1 F & F 920, ELLI, C J Many views have been expressed, though mostly in civil cases, as to what constitutes "gross negligence" It has been said to be the same thing as "negligence with the addition of a vituperative epithet" (Wilson v Brett (1843), 11 M & W 113 115, ROSE, B) In Cashill v Wright (1866), 6 D & B 891, 899, ERLE, J, said that the legal meaning of gross negligence is greater negligence than the absence of the ordinary care which under the circumstances a prudent man ought to have taken, such a degree of negligence as excludes the lowest degree of care, and which is said to amount to delus A higher degree of negligence is required to convict a person of manslaughter than to establish civil liability against him (R v Noakes, supra, R v Doherty (1867), 16 Cox, C C 306, 309, STEPHEN, J) The mere fact that the death was caused by a civil wrong committed by the accused is not sufficient to establish a case of manslaughter (R v Franklin (1883), 16 Cox, C C 163, FRED, J, compare R v Ierton (1830), 1 Lew C C 179) In R v Williamson (1807), 3 C & P 630, where a man midwife was indicted for manslaughter of a patient Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C J, directed the jury that to substantiate the charge the prisoner must have been guilty of criminal misconduct arising either from the grossest ignorance or the most criminal inattention, see also R v Long (1831), 4 C & P 398, 423, R v Nicholls (1875), 13 Cox, C C 75, BRETT, J, R v Elliott (1869), 16 Cox, C C 710 (Ir), O'BRIEN, J)

(p) Post, 264, R v Rigmanton (1833), 1 Lew C C 180

(q) R v Pocock (1851), 17 Q B 34, where road trustees liable to repair a road were held by the Court of Queen's Bench not chargeable with manslaughter, a person having been killed in consequence of their neglect to make a contract for the repair of it (R v Ledger (1862), 2 F & F 857).

SECT. 1.
Acts
involving
bodily
injury.

there must have been personal misconduct or personal negligence on the part of the accused (r), he is not responsible criminally if the death was directly caused in his absence by the negligence of his servants or others (s)

It is no defence that the death was caused by the negligence of others as well as of the prisoner, if death be occasioned by the act or default of several they are all guilty of manslaughter (a), but if the particular negligence imputed to the prisoner was not the proximate and efficient cause of the death, he cannot be convicted (b)

Contributory
negligence

1183 If the prisoner's negligent act or omission was the proximate and efficient cause of death, the fact that the deceased was himself negligent and so contributed to the accident or other circumstances by which the death was occasioned does not afford a defence to an indictment for manslaughter (c)

(iii) Justifiable Homicide

Justifiable
homicide

1184 Homicide is justifiable (1) where the proper officer, in conformity with the sentence of the law, executes a person legally condemned to death (d), (2) where an officer of justice or anyone acting in his aid, or a person legally entitled to detain a person as a prisoner, lawfully kills one who resists or is attempting to escape (e), (3) where the homicide is committed in self defence or in prevention of a forcible and atrocious crime

Resistance to force

1185 Where a forcible and violent felony is attempted upon the person of another, the party assaulted, or his servant, or any other person present, is entitled to repel force by force, and, if necessary, to kill the aggressor (f)

(r) R v Allen (1835), 7 C & P 153, 156, AIDERSON, B, and PARKE, J, R v Green (1835), 7 C & P 156

(s) R v Bennett (1858), Bell, C C 1, where the accused had unlawfully kept in his house a quantity of fireworks, which, through the negligence of his servants, were set on fire, and thus caused the death of the deceased, and it was held that the accused could not be convicted of manslaughter

(a) R v Haimes (1847), 2 Car & Kir 368, MAULE, J, R v Benge (1865), 4 F & F 504 509, PIGOTT, B, R v Salmon (1880), 6 Q B D 79, C C R

(b) R v Ledger (1862), 2 F & F 857, ERLE, C J, R v Bennett, supra

(c) R v Longbottom (1849), 1 Cox C C 439, ROLFE, B, R v Walker (1824), 1 C & P 320 GARROW, B (where deceased was intoxicated), R v Swindall (1846), 2 Car & Kir 230, POLLOCK, C B, R v Hutchinson (1864), 9 Cox, C C 555, 557, BYLES, J, R v Jones (1870), 11 Cox, C C 544 LUSH, J R v Kew (1872) 12 Cox, C C 355, BYLES, J, compare R v Waters (1834), 6 C & P 328 The dictum of WILLEMS, J in R v Birchall (1866), 4 F & F 1087, that a man was not criminally responsible for negligence for which he would not be responsible in an action, was expressly disapproved by LUSH, J, in R v Jones supra, and has not been followed But inasmuch as both criminal and civil liability in cases of negligence arises from the fact that the person liable is under a duty to do or not to do a certain thing, it is true, if cases of contributory negligence are excepted, that where there is no civil liability, there can be no criminal responsibility It does not, of course, follow that in every case where there is a civil liability to pay damages the person so liable may also be convicted of manslaughter inasmuch as a higher degree of negligence is necessary to constitute the crime than to fix the negligent person with a civil liability

(d) See p. 575, ante

(e) See p. 575, ante

(f) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c. 100), s. 7, 1 Hale,

SECT. 1.
Acts
involving
bodily
injury.

There must be a reasonable necessity for the killing, or at least an honest belief based upon reasonable grounds that there is such a necessity (g) The act causing death is only justifiable if it is done to protect the person doing it or some other person from serious violence, or from a reasonable apprehension of it (h).

It is not lawful to take the life of a person who is committing a larceny or other felony without violence or threats (i), or a simple assault (k), or only a misdemeanour without violence (l)

A woman is justified in killing a man who is attempting to ravish her (m)

1186 The owner of a dwelling-house, or any of his servants or lodgers, or any other person within the house, is justified in using force towards a person who is manifestly attempting to burn it, or to commit a burglary there, or to invade and enter it by violence, if the owner etc. in the use of such force kills such person he does not commit any crime (n)

Defence of dwelling-house etc

A person lawfully defending himself or his habitation is not bound to retreat or to give way to the aggressor before killing him, he is even entitled to follow him and to endeavour to capture him, but if the aggressor is captured or is retreating without offering resistance and is then killed, the person killing him is guilty of murder (o)

Indictment.

(iv) Excusable Homicide

1187 Killing by misadventure or misfortune without culpable negligence is excusable, and is subject to no punishment or forfeiture (p)

Excusable homicide.

(v) Indictment for Murder or Manslaughter

1188 In an indictment for murder or manslaughter or for being accessory thereto it is not necessary to set forth the manner in which or the means by which the death was caused, it is sufficient

Indictment.

P C 464, Post 274, 1 Hawk P C, c 10, s 21, R v Pull (1839) 9 C & P 22, VAUGHAN J, R v Symondson (1896) 60 J P 645, KINGMAN, J

(g) See R v Rose (1884), 15 Cox, C C 510, LOLLIS, J

(h) R v Smith (1837), 8 C & P 160 R v Weston (1879), 14 Cox, C C 316, 351, COCKBURN, C J, R v Knock (1877) 14 Cox, C C 1, LINDLEY, J, R v Symondson, supra As to self defence, see R v Carman Deane (1909), 2 Cr App. Rep 75

(i) R v Scully (1921), 1 C & P 319 GARIOH, B, 1 East, P C 273

(k) R v Bull (1839), 9 C & P 22, VAUGHAN, J, 1 Hale, P C 488

(l) 1 Hale, P C 486, 1 East, P C 272, see R v Dudson (1850), 2 Den 33

In defence of property against a person who is seeking to take it from him by a trespass the owner is justified in beating the trespasser to make him desist, but if in beating him he kills him, it is manslaughter (1 Hale, P C 485, 486)

(m) 1 Hale, P C 465, Post 274, 1 Hawk P C, c 10, s 21 The same will apply to a forcible attempt to commit sodomy (1 Hawk P C, c 10, s 21, n.)

(n) 1 Hale, P C 487, Post 273, 1 Hawk P C, c 28, s 21, R v Meade (1823), 1 Lew C C 184, HOLROYD, J

(o) Or perhaps of manslaughter, if the blood be still hot (Post 273, 1 East, P C 293), see, however, as to the necessity of retreating before giving a fatal blow, R v Smith (1837), 8 C & P 160, 162, BOSANQUET, J, and p 604, post

(p) Offences against the Person Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 7, 1 Hale, P C 492, Post 264, 282 As to killing by correction, see p 581, ante, in games and sports, p 582, ante, by the use of dangerous weapons, p 582, note (i), ante, in the commission of a crime, p 579, ante

SECT 1

Acts
involving
bodily injury*Name of deceased

in an indictment for murder to charge that the accused did feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought kill and murder the deceased, and in an indictment for manslaughter to charge that he did feloniously kill and slay the deceased (q)

The name of the deceased must, if it is known or can be ascertained with reasonable diligence, be stated in the indictment, if it cannot be so ascertained the deceased must be described as "a person to the jurors aforesaid unknown" (r)

Neither murder nor manslaughter can be tried at quarter sessions (s)

*(vi.) EvidenceEvidence corpus delicti

1189 Where no body or part of a body has been found which is proved to be that of the person alleged to have been killed, an accused person should not be convicted of either murder or manslaughter, unless there is evidence either of the killing or of the death of the person alleged to be killed. In the absence of such evidence there is no onus upon the prisoner to account for the disappearance or non-production of the person alleged to be dead (t)

Circumstantial
evidence

1190 In murder, as in other criminal cases, a jury may convict on purely circumstantial evidence, but to do this they must be satisfied not only that the circumstances were consistent with the prisoner having committed the act, but also that the facts were such as to be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion than that he was the guilty person (u)

Malice

1191 On an indictment for murder evidence of the existence of a bad feeling between the parties, or of former threats of violence by the prisoner against the deceased, or of other attempts made by him on the life of the deceased is admissible to prove malice (v)

Similar murders.

Evidence showing the commission by the accused of other similar murders either before or after the death which is the subject of the indictment, although inadmissible for the purpose of showing that the accused was a person likely from his criminal conduct or character to be guilty of the offence for which he is being tried, may

(q) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 6. These provisions also apply to a coroner's inquisition (R v Ingham (1861), 5 B & S 257)

(r) R v Clark (1818) Russ & Ry 358, R v Campbell (1843), 1 Car & Kir 82, R v Hick (1840), 2 Mood & R 302. A bastard child cannot be described by the name of its mother, until it has obtained it by reputation (R v Clark, supra, see also R v Smith (1833), 6 C & P 151. R v Hogg (1841), 2 Mood & R 380, R v Willis (1843) 1 Den 80). Such a child, if unnamed, should be described as "then lately before born of the body of A B" (R v Hogg, supra), or "a certain infant female child born of the body of A B and of tender age, to wit of the age of two days and not named" (R v Waters (1848), 1 Den 356). And see p 335, ante

(s) Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 35), s 1

(t) 2 Hale P C 290, R v Hindmarsh (1792), 2 Leach, 569. R v Hopkins (1838), 8 C & P 591. Ford ABINGER, C B, R v Chiverton (1862), 2 F & F 833, ERLE, O.J., and see p 378, ante

(u) R v. Hodge (1838), 2 Lew.C C 227, ALDERSON, B, and see R v Gardner (1859), 1 F & F 669

(v) R v Clewes (1830) 4 C & P 221, R v Hagan (1873), 12 Cox, C C 357, ARCHIBALD, J, R v Weston (1879), 14 Cox, C C 346, 350, COCKBURN, C J

nevertheless be admissible to show that the act charged in the indictment was designed and not accidental, or to rebut a defence which would otherwise be open to the prisoner (c)

1192 Upon the trial of an indictment for murder or manslaughter (d) a verbal or written statement made by the deceased person whose death is the subject of the charge (e), although such statement was not upon oath and was not made in the presence of the accused, is admissible in evidence either against or for (f) the accused, provided that at the time when such statement was made the person making it had an unqualified belief, without hope, that he was about to die almost immediately (g)

The question whether the deceased had such a belief in impending

SECT 1
Acts
involving bodily
injury.

Dying
declarations

(c) R v Geering (1849), 18 L J (M C) 215, Portlock, C B, R v Garner (1864), 4 F & F 546, Willes, J, R v Cotton (1873), 12 Cox, C C 400, Archibald, J, R v Roden (1874), 12 Cox, C C 630, Leach, J, R v Heesom (1878), 14 Cox, C C 40, Lush, J (where the death proved was subsequent to the murder alleged in the indictment), Makin v A G for New South Wales, [1894] A C 57, 60, P C The ruling of Martin, B and Widd, B, in R v Winslow (1860), 8 Cox C C 397, to the contrary effect, is inconsistent with R v Geering supra, R v Flannagan (1881), 15 Cox, C C 403, Butt, J, Makin v A G of New South Wales, supra, and R v Bond, [1906] 2 K B 389, 402, and cannot be treated as law In a case of manslaughter from negligence Maule, J, ruled that evidence of other instances of either the prisoner's negligence or of his carelessness, under other similar circumstances was inadmissible (R v Whitehead (1818) 3 Car & Kir 202, see, however, R v Williamson (1807), 3 C & P 635, where Lord Ellenborough, C J, appears to have admitted evidence on behalf of a man midwife of his skill and attention on other occasions) It is submitted that in cases of manslaughter evidence of this kind should be confined to the prisoner's general character for skill and diligence, though such evidence may be given by persons whom he may have attended (see R v Long (1830) 4 C & P 398 404, where twenty-nine witnesses were allowed by Park, J, to give evidence that they had been patients of the prisoner and were satisfied with his skill and diligence) See also p 380, ante

(d) And only in such cases (R v Mead (1824), 2 C & O 605, R v Hutchinson (1822), ibid 608, n, R v Hind (1830), 4 C & P 231, R v Newton (1859), 1 F & F 641, R v Hind (1860), 8 Cox, C C 300, C C R) As to the circumstances under which the evidence of a witness who is dangerously ill may be taken before a magistrate and in the presence of the accused under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict c 35), see pp 327, 366 ante A deposition irregularly taken, and therefore inadmissible under that section, may nevertheless be admissible as a dying declaration (R v Clarke (1859), 2 F & F 2)

(e) See R v Mead and the other cases cited in the last note An exception was, however, made in R v Baker (1847), 2 Mood & R 53, where, two persons having been poisoned by poison administered on one occasion, upon the trial of the prisoner for the murder of one of them, Coltman, J, admitted a dying declaration made by the other

(f) R v Scarfe (1836), 1 Mood & R 551, (OLDRIDGE, J

(g) R v Jenkins (1869), L R 1 C C R 187, 192, 193 In this case Kelly, C B, cited and adopted observations made by judges in the three following cases - R v Woodcock (1789) 1 Leach, 500, Lynch, C B, "every hope of this world gone", R v Peel (1860), 2 F & F 21, Willes, J, "settled hope less expectation of death", R v Hayward (1833), 6 C & P 167, Tindal, C J, "any hope of recovery, however slight, renders the evidence of such declaration inadmissible" The following are authorities prior to R v Jenkins, supra - R v Welbourn (1792), 1 Leach, 503, n, R v Dringler (1791), 2 Leach, 561, R v Tinckler (1781), 1 East, P C 354, R v Qualter (1854), 6 Cox, C C 351, R v Fagant (1835), 7 C & P 238 where the declaration was held to be inadmissible, because at a later period the deceased showed some hope of recovery See

SECT 1
Acts
involving
bodily
injury.

death as to make a declaration admissible as a dying declaration is for the judge, and not for the jury (h)

A statement made in the first instance under such circumstances as to render it inadmissible as a dying declaration may be admitted as evidence, if it is afterwards repeated by the deceased or by some other person at his request and assented to by him under circumstances which would have rendered it admissible, if it had been then made for the first time (i)

It is no objection to the admissibility of a dying declaration that it is made in answer to leading questions, though that fact may affect its weight as evidence (h)

also R v Taylor (1848), 3 Cox, C O 84, and R v Hubbard (1881), 14 Cox, C O 565 in which last case HAWKINS, J, declined to exclude the declaration, because the deceased afterwards thought she would recover, R v Errington (1839) 2 Low, C C 118, R v Meeson (1840), 9 C & P 416, R v Thomas (1843), 1 Cox, C C 52, R v Brooks (1813), 1 Cox, C C 6, R v Christie (1821), Curington, Criminal Law 232, R v Crockett (1831), 4 C & P 544, R v Ashton (1837), 2 Low C C 147, R v Spilsbury (1835), 7 C & P 187, R v Reaney (1857), 7 Cox, C C 209, C O R, R v Whitworth (1858), 1 F & F 382, R v Mawlay (1868), 11 Cox, C C 148, R v Forester (1866), 4 F & F 857. The following are later cases than R v Jenkins supra — R v Osman (1851), 15 Cox, C C 1, LUSH, J (where the statement of the deceased that she was sure she was going to die was held insufficient to render the declaration admissible), compare R v Goddard (1882), 15 Cox, C C 7 (where the deceased said "I am dying, look to my children," and her declaration was admitted by HAWKINS, J), R v Cowle (1907), 71 J P 152 (where the deceased said "I'm dying" and the declaration was admitted by GRAMHAM, J), and R v Abbott (1903), 67 J P 151 (where the deceased when in great pain said several times, "I am dying" but KENNEDY, J refused to admit the declaration), see also R v Smith (1887), 16 Cox, C C 170, R v Mitchell (1892), 17 Cox, C C 503, R v Glover (1888), 16 Cox C C 471, approved in R v Perry (1909), 25 T L R 676. In R v Edmunds (1909), 25 T L R 608, C C A, it was held that the deposition of a woman taken when she was expected to recover, and on a charge of manslaughter, was properly admitted at the trial of the prisoner for the murder of the woman. With regard to the dying declaration of a child in R v Pike (1829), 3 C & P 598, PARK, J, refused to admit that of a child of four years of age upon the ground that it was impossible that it could have had that idea of a future state which is necessary to make such a declaration admissible. But a dying declaration of a child of ten years of age was held to have been rightly admitted in R v Perkins (1840), 2 Mood C C 135.

The fact that the deceased believed that his death was impending may be shown by statements made by him at the time, or by evidence that his physical condition or the nature of the wounds inflicted upon him was such that he must have so believed (R v Woodcock (1789), 1 Leach, 500, R v Johns (1790), 1 Leach, 504, n, R v Donner (1834), 6 C & P 386, R v Chury (1862), 2 F & F 850, R v Morgan (1875), 14 Cox, C C 337). In the last-mentioned case, however, DENMAN, J, appears to have been not without doubt as to the admissibility of a declaration which depended only upon evidence of the latter class. See also R v Redingfield (1879), 14 Cox, C C 341, 343, 344, where COCKBURN, CJ, declined to presume a woman's knowledge of impending death, although her throat was cut and she died in a few minutes after making the declaration, and see R v Curtis (1905), 21 T L R 87.

(A) R v Hucks (1816), 1 Stark 521, 523, R v Goddard (1882), 15 Cox, C O 7, HAWKINS, J, R v Whitmarsh (1898), 62 J P 711, BIGHAM, J.

(B) R v Steele (1872), 12 Cox, C C 166, LUSH, J.

(C) R v Paget (1835), 7 C & P 238, R v Smith (1866), Le & Ca 607, 612, C O R. But in R v Mitchell (1892), 17 Cox, C C 503, CAVE, J, refused to admit a written declaration in narrative form, signed by the deceased and taken down at the time from her answers to questions, on the ground that both questions and answers ought to have been written down verbatim, and this ruling was followed by BRUCE, J., in R v Smith (1901), 65 J P 426. The

SECT 1
Acts
involving bodily
injury.

The lapse of a considerable interval between the making of the declaration and the death of the deceased does not render it inadmissible, if at the time when it was made he had the conviction of immediately impending death (l)

A dying declaration by a person who is by law incompetent as a witness is inadmissible (m)

Nothing is evidence in a dying declaration which would not be evidence if the party were a witness, what the declarant says as to facts is receivable, but not what he says as to matters of opinion (n)

1193 Statements by the deceased made immediately upon the occurrence which caused the death, but not under such circumstances as would render them admissible as dying declarations, may be admitted in evidence as part of the res gestæ, but the extent to which they are so admissible is doubtful (o)

Statements
by deceased

ulings of CAVE, J, and BRUCE, J in the two last-mentioned cases appear to conflict with R v Smith, supra, as the declaration in that case was obtained by questions but was reduced into writing in narrative form (see pp 612 613 of the report). In R v Bottomley (1903), 115 L T Jo 88, LAWRENCE J, dissented from R v Mitchell (1892) 17 Cox, C C 503. It is submitted that where a written declaration is for any reason of this kind inadmissible, the writer of it, in giving evidence, may use it to refresh his own recollection of the questions which were asked and of the answers given by the deceased, although, if the declaration itself would be evidence it must be put in and secondary evidence of its contents cannot be given (R v Troutner (1722), 12 Vin Abr 119, R v Gay (1850), 7 C & P 230, (CILLINGF, J). The fact that the deceased knew of the near approach of death need not appear from the written declaration but may be proved aliunde (R v Hunt (1847) 2 Cox, C C 259, POITLOCK, C J).

(l) R v Bernadot (1869), 11 Cox, C C 316. But 11, J (where there was an interval of three weeks), and see R v Mosley (1823) 1 Lew C C 79.

(m) R v Drummond (1784), 1 Leach, 337. As to what witnesses are incompetent, see p 400 ante.

(n) R v Sellers (1796), Carrington, Criminal Law, 23.

(o) In R v Foster (1834), 6 C & P 325 upon an indictment for manslaughter by furious driving, GURVEY, B, and PARKER, J, admitted evidence a statement made by the deceased in the absence of the prisoner to a person immediately after the accident upon the authority of Arson v Annand (Lord) (1805), 6 East, 185, 191. See also Thompson v Trevanion (1693) Skin 402. In R v Lunny (1871), 6 Cox, C C 477 (1r) (a case of murder), MONAHAN, C J, admitted evidence of a statement made by the deceased to the first person who saw him after, though apparently not immediately after the blows which caused death. In R v Hindsgird (1879), 11 Cox, C C 341 (murder), it was sought to put in evidence a statement made by the deceased who came suddenly into a room with her throat cut from a room in which she had just left the prisoner, who also had his throat cut, CORKHURN, C J, refused to admit the statement as it was not part of anything done, or anything said while something was being done, but something said after the act was done, but as to this decision see 1 Taylor on Evidence, 10th ed, 412, n. In R v Goddard (1882), 10 Cox, C C 7 (murder), HAWKINS, J, refused to admit as part of the res gestæ a statement of the deceased as to who inflicted the mortal injuries upon her, although made ten minutes after they were inflicted, but he afterwards admitted the statement as a dying declaration, as the deceased had also at the same time said she was dying.

A statement made by the deceased before the injury causing the death may be admitted to prove his condition of health at the time of the statement (R v Johnson (1847), ALDERSON, B, R v Gloster (1889), 16 Cox, C C 471, 473, CHARLES, J), or where it is made in the course of the office or business of the deceased (R v Buckley (1873), 13 Cox, C C 293, LUSH, J, in which case the deceased was a police officer, and the statement admitted was a verbal report to

SECT. 1

Acts
involving bodily
injury.

Verdict.

(vii.) Verdict and Punishment

1194 Upon an indictment for murder the jury may convict of manslaughter (p), if there is anything in the evidence to rebut the prima facie presumption of murder (q)

A person tried for the murder of any child may, if acquitted of that offence, and if the facts so warrant, be convicted by the same jury of concealment of the birth of the child (r)

If two or more persons are jointly indicted for murder, the court may order separate trials, if the justice of the case so requires (s)

Punishment

1195 The punishment for murder is death, and the offender must be executed and buried within the walls of the prison where he is confined at the time of execution (t)

1196 The punishment for manslaughter is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years or a fine with or without such penal servitude or imprisonment, the offender may be required to find sureties for good behaviour (a)

Woman
pleading
pregnancy

1197 If a woman is convicted of murder, she may, when called upon after judgment to say why execution should not follow on the judgment, plead that she is quick with child (b)

SUB-SECT. 2—Suicide

Suicide.

1198 Suicide is self murder by a person of sound understanding and of an age sufficient to be convicted of murder. It is a felony at common law. If a coroner's jury finds a verdict of suicide in respect of any person, the coroner is to give directions for the his superior as to where he was about to go), but not where it is a statement of intention, not made by the deceased in the course of duty (h v Hamuright (1875), 13 Cox, C C 171, COCKBURN, C J, and see R v Pook (1871), ibid 172 n, BOVILL (C J) nor where it is a statement as to the person by whom, or the manner in which, certain symptoms were caused (R v Gloster, supra) see also R v Nicholas (1816), 2 Car & Kir 216, 218, and R v Horsford, mentioned by HAWKINS, J in R v Rouland (1898), 62 J P 459. In R v Edwards (1872), 12 Cox, C C 230 (murder), QUAIN, J, admitted evidence of a statement made by the deceased eight days before the murder as to threats which she said the prisoner had used towards her—sed quare

(p) R v Mackalley (1612), 9 Co Rep 61 b, 67 b. R v Greenwood (1857), 7 Cox C C 404, and of the common law misdoings of an attempt to commit murder (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 9, and see p 593, post)

(q) R v Maloney (1861), 9 Cox, C C 6, BYLES, J, R v French (1879), 14 Cox, C C 325

(r) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 60, see p 598, post

(s) R v Jackson (1857) 7 Cox C C 357, BRAMWELL, B, where the prisoners had made statements implicating each other

(t) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), ss 1, 3, Capital Punishment Amendment Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict c 24) ss 2, 6, and see s 5 as to the holding of an inquest upon the body. As to punishment of persons under sixteen, see Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s 103, and p 420, ante

(a) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s 5, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(b) This must apparently be alleged by her, and not by her counsel (R v Hunt (1847), 2 Cox C C 261 ERLE, J). As to "quick with child," see Taylor, Medical Jurisprudence, 5th ed, II, 39, and as to the pl.a, see p 375, ante.

interment of such person in a churchyard or other burial ground (c). The rites of Christian burial are not authorised to be performed on the interment of the remains of a person who has committed suicide, unless the deceased is shown to have been non compos mentis at the time

SECT 1
Acts
involving bodily
injury.

An attempt to commit suicide is a common law misdemeanour (d), punishable by fine or imprisonment without hard labour

SUB-SECT 3 — Attempts to Murder

1199 It is by statute (c) a felony to administer or cause to be administered to or to be taken by any person any poison or other destructive thing (f), or by any means whatsoever to wound or to cause grievous bodily harm to any person (g), with intent in any of such cases to commit murder. The indictment must allege what substance was administered and that it was a poison or a destructive thing (h)

Administer ing poison

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for

(c) Interments (fole do so) Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 19) s. 4. See titles CORONERS, Vol. VIII p. 273, BURIAL AND CRIMINATION, Vol. III, p. 561

(d) R v Doodly (1854) 6 Cox, C. C. 463. If the defendant was drunk at the time, his drunkenness, though no excuse in itself, is a material fact to be considered by the jury in deciding whether he really intended to destroy himself (ibid). Suicide is not murder within the meaning of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100) and the attempt to commit it is the forfeitable at quarter sessions (R v Burgess (1852) 32 L. J. (M. C.) 5, C. C. R.). As to an agreement or intention to commit suicide, see p. 673, ante.

(e) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 11, and see p. 610, note (a), post.

(f) To constitute the administering there need not be a manual delivery to the person intended to be poisoned, it is sufficient that poison is prepared and intentionally left in a place where he would be likely to take it (R v Harley (1850), 4 C. & P. 369 PARK, J., R v Dale (1852) 6 Cox (C. C.) 14, WIGHTMAN, J.). If the poison is taken by some person for whom it was not intended, this is an administration to the person who has actually taken it (R v Lewis (1833), 6 C. & P. 161, GUINER, B., R v Michael (1840), 9 C. & P. 356, ARDISON, B.), see, however, R v Ryan (1839), 2 Mood & R. 213, in which PARKE, B. doubted the correctness of the ruling in R v Lewis, supra.

(g) As to wounding, see p. 600 post, as to grievous bodily harm, p. 601, post. It is not necessary that the wound should be near a vital part or of a dangerous nature likely to cause death (R v Griffith (1824), 1 C. & P. 298, PARK, J.). But there must be a positive intention to murder, and it is not sufficient that if death had resulted, the prisoner would have been guilty of murder, unless he actually intended to commit that crime (R v Truse (1835), 8 C. & P. 541, PATTERSON, J., R v Jones (1840), 9 C. & P. 258).

(h) R v Poules (1831) 4 C. & P. 571. If a substance poisonous in itself is administered with intent to murder, the offence is committed, although owing to a mistake of the prisoner the quantity administered, or the form in which it is administered, is such as to render the substance innocuous (R v Chudray (1850) 4 Cox, C. C. 84, C. C. R.). In R v Cadman (1825), 1 Mood (C. C.) 114, it appears to have been held by the judges that there was no administration, unless some of the poison was swallowed, and that taking it into the mouth only is not enough to constitute an administration, but the reports of this case and the statement of PARK, J., in R v Harley, supra, as to his recollection of it do not altogether agree, and in R v Wulford (1899), 34 L. J. 116, WILLS, J., declined to follow it. In any such case also the prisoner could now be convicted of attempting to administer under s. 14, see p. 694, post.

SECT 1

Acts
involving
bodily injury.Infliction of injury with intent to
murder

not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than ten years (i)

1200 Anyone is by statute (k) guilty of a felony —

(1) Who by the explosion of gunpowder or other explosive substance destroys or damages any building with intent to commit murder (l),

(2) Who sets fire to any ship or vessel, or any part thereof or any part of the tackle, apparel, or furniture thereof, or any goods therein, or casts away or destroys any ship or vessel, with intent in any such case to commit murder (m),

(3) Who attempts to administer to or attempts to cause to be administered to or to be taken by any person any poison or other destructive thing, or to shoot at any person, or by drawing a trigger or in any other manner to attempt to discharge any kind of loaded arms (n) at any person (o), or to attempt to drown, suffocate, or strangle any person, with intent in any of such cases to commit murder, whether any bodily injury be inflicted or not (p),

(4) Who by any means other than those specified above attempts to commit murder (q)

(i) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 11 (see also as to attempting to administer poison, s 14), Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (51 & 54 Vict c 69), s 1. These offences are not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 35), s 1). As to other attempts see infra

(k) Ibid, ss 12—13

(l) Ibid, s 12

(m) Ibid, s 13

(n) Guns, pistols or other arms loaded in the barrel with gunpowder or any other explosive substance, and ball, shot slug, or other destructive material, are deemed to be loaded arms within the meaning of the Act, although the attempt to discharge the same may fail from want of proper priming or from any other cause (ibid, s 19). A revolver loaded in some of its chambers is a loaded arm within the meaning of s 14, although when the prisoner pulled the trigger the hammer fell on an unloaded chamber (R v Jackson (1890), 17 Cox, C C 104, CHARLES, J). A box or can containing explosives and detonators is not a "loaded arm" within the meaning of the section (R v Mountford (1835), 7 C & P 242, WILLIAMS, J), but the offender will be punishable upon an indictment under s 15 (see infra), see as to explosions caused by such means, p 603, post

(o) As to attempts to shoot see p 600, post

(p) Offences against the Person Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 14. Where the prisoner shot at a person mistaking him for another whom he intended to kill the indictment alleging the intent to be to murder the former, and the jury found that the prisoner had no intention to murder the person killed, a verdict of acquittal was entered (R v Holt (1836), 7 C & P 518), see also R v Jarvis (1837), 2 Mood & R 40, R v Smith (1856), 7 Cox, C C 51, C C R). The indictment may, therefore, allege only a general intent to murder

(q) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 15. The other means specified in this section only include methods of attempting to commit murder which are not eiusdem generis with the means mentioned in ss 11, 12, 13 and 14 (R v Brown (1843), 10 Q B D 381, 384 C C R). An attempt to commit suicide is not an attempt to commit murder under this section, and it remains a common law misdemeanour (R v Burgess (1862), L. & C. 258, C C R). In R v Donovan (1850), 4 Cox, C C 399, where a woman had been injured by jumping from a window to avoid the prisoner's violence, ALDERSON, B, held that the prisoner could not be convicted of attempting to

The punishment for any such offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (a)

SECT. 1.
Acts
involving bodily
injury.

Sub-SECT 4 — Conspiracy to Murder

1201 Anyone is by statute (b) guilty of a misdemeanour (1) who conspires to murder any person, whether a British subject or not, and whether within the King's dominions or not, or (2) who solicits, encourages, persuades or endeavours to persuade, or proposes to any person to murder any other person, whether a British subject or not, and whether within the King's dominions or not to murder.

Conspiracy

The punishment is penal servitude for ten years or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (c)

Where an agreement to murder is proved, it is not necessary to show that the conspirators were agreed as to the exact means of accomplishing their end (d)

Persons jointly indicted for this offence may be tried separately, if the court so directs, and if in such a case one is convicted the fact that the others have not yet been tried is no ground for postponing judgment upon the one convicted (e)

1202 An article or letter in a newspaper may be an incitement to murder within the meaning of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (f), though no particular person be named, if the incitation is directed against the members of a particular class (g)

Incitement
to murder

The communication containing the incitement or endeavour to persuade must be proved to have reached the person intended to be incited, but it is not necessary to show that his mind was affected by it (h) If the communication cannot be proved to have reached him, the accused may be convicted of the common law misdemeanour of an attempt to commit the crime (i)

murder her, unless the jury were satisfied that he intended at the time to make her jump out, see as to such cases p 572, ante, and the authorities there cited

(a) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100) ss 12—15, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69) s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1)

(b) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 4

(c) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1)

(d) R v Banks (1873), 12 Cox, C C 393, 398, QUAIN, J

(e) R v Ahearne (1872), 6 Cox, C C 6 C C R (11), and see pp 264, 592, ante

(f) 24 & 25 Vict c 100, s 4

(g) R v Most (1881), 7 Q B D 244, C C R, R v Antonelli (1901), 70 P 4, PHILLIMORE, J

(h) R v Fox (1870), 19 W R 109, C C R (1r), R v Krause (1902), 68 J P 121, Lord ALVERSTONE, CJ

(i) R v Krause, supra, and see R v Ransford (1874), 13 Cox, C C R 9, C C R In the case of a newspaper the production of a copy published by the accused and purchased from him or his agents is some evidence that the incitement reached persons intended to be incited (R v McCarthy, [1903] 2 L R 146).

SECT. 1.

Acts
involving
bodily injury.Threatening to murder.SUB-SECT 5—Threatening to Murder

1203 Everyone is by statute (h) guilty of a felony who maliciously sends, delivers, or utters, or directly or indirectly causes to be received knowing the contents thereof, any letter or writing threatening to kill or murder any person

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for ten years or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not less than two years (l)

SUB-SECT 6.—*Procuring Abortion*Procuring
abortion

1204 It is a felony by statute (m) (1) for any woman with child unlawfully to administer to herself any poison or other noxious thing or to use any instrument or other means whatsoever with intent to procure her own miscarriage, or (2) for any person to administer to or cause to be taken by any woman, whether she be with child or not, any poison or noxious thing with intent to procure her miscarriage, or to use any instrument or other means with that intent

Taking
drugs etc

1205 If a woman takes a substance which is in fact harmless, believing it to be a noxious thing and with intent to procure her miscarriage, she is guilty of the common law misdemeanour of an attempt to procure abortion (n) In order to constitute the statutory offence the thing supplied or administered must be proved to be noxious (o)

The quantity of an otherwise noxious drug may be so small as to take the case out of the statute (p), and a large dose of a drug which is harmless when taken in small quantities may be a noxious thing within the meaning of the statute (q)

If a person procures poison for a woman with intent to procure her miscarriage, to which intent she is a party, and she does in fact take it, though in his absence, he may be convicted of the felony of causing it to be taken by the woman, and not merely of the misdemeanour of procuring it with that intent (a)

A woman cannot be convicted of administering poison to herself with intent to procure her own miscarriage, or of procuring poison

(h) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 16 To put a letter containing threats to murder in a place where it is likely to be seen and read by the person to whom it is directed is a sending or uttering of the letter within the statute (R v Jones (1851), 5 Cox, O C 226, per PATTERSON, J), so also is the delivery of the letter to another to be posted (R v Girdwood (1776), 1 Leach, 142)

(l) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 16, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is not excluded from the jurisdiction of quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1)

(m) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 58.

(n) R v Brown (1899), 63 J P 790, DARLING, J

(o) R v Isaacs (1862), Le & Ca 220

(p) R v Perry (1847) 2 Cox, O C 223

(q) R v Cramp (1880), 5 Q B D 307, O C B, see, however, R v Hennah (1877), 13 Cox, C C 547, decided under Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 24

(a) R v Wilson (1856), Dears. & B 127, R v Farrow (1857), Dears & B. 164.

with such intent, unless she be in fact with child. But though she be not pregnant, she may be convicted of conspiracy to procure abortion (b), or of aiding and abetting others in committing the felony of administering poison or some noxious thing to her with intent to procure her miscarriage (c).

SECT. 1.
Acts
involving bodily
injury.

To prove the intent with which the noxious thing was administered or the instrument used, evidence showing that the prisoner had on previous occasions used similar means with the avowed intention of procuring abortion, or that he or she had previously admitted having often done the same thing, is admissible (d).

The punishment for such offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (e).

1206 Everyone is by statute (f) guilty of a misdemeanour who supplies or procures any noxious thing, or any instrument or thing whatsoever, knowing that it is intended to be unlawfully used with intent to procure the miscarriage of a woman, whether she be with child or not.

Procuring
noxious thing.

A person who supplies something which he believes to be noxious for the purpose of procuring miscarriage cannot be convicted of this misdemeanour, unless it is shown as a fact that the substance in question is noxious for that purpose (g). If he knows the article supplied to be harmless, he cannot be convicted of inciting the woman to commit an offence against the statute, although he knows that she will take it in the belief that it is noxious and with intent to procure abortion (h).

The fact that medicine supplied by the accused is followed by illness and a miscarriage is evidence that the thing supplied is noxious (i).

The offence of supplying a noxious drug is complete even if the intention to use it for the purpose of procuring abortion exists only in the mind of the person supplying it (a).

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more

(b) R v Whitchurch (1890), 24 Q B D 420, C C R.

(c) R v Suckett (1908), 72 J P 428, C C A.

(d) R v Bond, [1906] 2 K B 389, 405, 417. But such evidence should be admitted with great caution. It should only be admitted where the prisoner has suggested that the administration of the drug or the use of the instrument was legitimate or accidental on his part, and not where the defence is a denial of the act itself. And proof of only one other similar case, without any special connection with the case charged in the indictment, ought not to be admitted, the object of evidence of this kind being to prove a systematic course of conduct by the prisoner in such cases and so to negative the defence that his action on the particular occasion was legitimate or accidental (ibid). See also pp 340, 589, ante.

(e) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 58, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1).

(f) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 100), s. 53.

(g) R v Isaacs (1862), Le & Ca 220.

(h) R v Brown (1899), 63 J P 790, DARLING, J.

(i) R v Hollis (1873), 12 Cox, C C 463, 467.

(a) R v Hullman (1863), Le & Ca. 342.

SECT 1
Acts
involving bodily
injury.
—
Concealment of birth

than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (b)

SUB-SECT 7.—Concealment of Birth.

1207 Where a woman has been delivered of a child, it is by statute a misdemeanour (c) for any person by any secret disposition of the dead body of the child to endeavour to conceal the birth thereof, and it is immaterial whether the child died before, at, or after its birth

The maximum punishment for this offence is imprisonment for two years with or without hard labour (d)

In order to constitute this offence a woman must have been delivered of something which may properly be called a child, and not the unformed subject of a premature miscarriage (e) The child must be so far developed that in the ordinary course of events it would have had a fair chance of life when born (f)

There must be a concealment of the fact of birth, carried out by a secret disposition of the body (g), and this implies some act of concealment (h) Proof that a woman still had the body of her child in her possession, though about to dispose of it (i), or that she allowed others to take away the body, unless it was at her request or with her privity (h), or that she merely denied that she had given birth to a child (l), is not sufficient to support a conviction for concealment

There is a concealment when the child is placed where it is not likely to be found, and the most complete exposure of the body in

(b) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100) s 59, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is triable at quarter sessions

(c) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 60

(d) Ibid The defendant may be fined and ordered to find sureties for good behaviour (ibid, s 71) This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1)

(e) R v Hewitt (1866), 4 F & F 1101

(f) It has been said that although no specific limit can be assigned to the period when the chance of life begins, it may perhaps be safely assumed that, in the case of a child which has been less than seven months in the womb, the great probability is that it would not be born alive (R v Berriman (1854), 6 Cox, C C 388, but see R v Colmer (1864), 9 Cox, C C 506, where MARTIN, B., held that a foetus not bigger than a man's finger, but having the shape of a child, might be a child within the meaning of the statute) In this case the woman had been confined in the fourth or fifth month after pregnancy, and MARTIN, B., expressed the opinion (at p 507) that as soon as a foetus which had the outward appearance of a child was born, the offence of concealment of birth could be committed, and see Stephen, Digest of Criminal Law, art 256 It is submitted that the question of whether that which was concealed was "the dead body of a child" is in each case a question of fact for the jury

(g) R v Rosenberg (1906), 70 J P 264, where the child's body was on the bed on which defendant lay, it being covered with a petticoat, an acquittal being directed. Compare R v Perry (1855) Dears C C 471, where the defendant put the body under a bolster on which she put her head, the conviction being upheld

(h) R v Dirham (1843), 1 Cox, C C 56, where it was held that the fact that the defendant had left the body in a privy where she said she had been confined was no evidence of concealment

(i) R v Snell (1837), 2 Mood & R 44

(k) R v Bate (1871), 11 Cox, C C 686, R v Douglas (1836), 7 C & P 644, R v Bird (1849), 2 Car & Kir 817, R v Skelton (1850), 3 Car & Kir 119.

(l) R. v. Turner (1839), 8 C & P 755.

a secluded place where it would not be likely to be found may be a concealment (m) But leaving it in a street, though it may amount to a public nuisance, is not a concealment of birth (n)

The secret disposition need not be in a place where it is intended finally to leave the body, a temporary place of concealment is sufficient (o)

The dead body must be found and identified as that of the child the attempted concealment of whose birth is alleged (p)

A person does not commit the offence of endeavouring to conceal the birth of a child, if such person puts it while it is still alive in a place of concealment, even though it may subsequently die (q), but if such person later on visits the place, and, finding the child dead, replaces the clothes or other things with which it was concealed, she commits this offence (r)

The offence does not consist in the concealment of the birth of a child from any particular individual, but in such a concealment as would keep the world at large in ignorance of the birth (s)

1208 An indictment for concealment of birth must specify the particular act of concealment charged (t), and must allege that the child the concealment of whose birth is charged was dead at the time of the concealment (a), but need not specify whether the child died at or after birth (b)

Indictment.

It is a question of law for the judge whether there is evidence that the place where the body was put was such that the body might have been disposed of there so as to conceal it It is for the jury to say whether the body had in fact been so disposed of by the defendant, and with intent to conceal the birth (c)

1209 If any person tried for the murder of a child is acquitted, the same jury which tried the prisoner may find, if it shall so appear in evidence, that the child had recently been born, and that the prisoner did, by some secret disposition of its dead body, endeavour to conceal its birth, the prisoner may then be sentenced, as if he or she had been convicted upon an indictment for concealing the birth (d)

Verdict of concealment on trial for murder.

(m) R v Brown (1870) L R 1 C C R 211, see also R v Sleep (1861), 9 Cox, C C 509, R v Cook (1870), 11 Cox, C C 512, R v Rosenberg (1906), 70 J P 264, R v George (1868), 11 Cox, C C 41, R v Waterage (1846), 1 Cox, C C 338

(n) R v Clark (1853), 13 Cox C C 171

(o) R v Perry (1855), Dears C O 471

(p) R v Williams (1871), 11 Cox, C C 684, MONTAGUE SMITH, J

(q) R v May (1867), 10 Cox, C C 448, C C R, but, according to the circumstances, the woman would be guilty of murder or manslaughter, or of cruelty to the child

(r) R v Hughes (1850), 4 Cox, C C 449, LORD CAMPBELL CJ

(s) R v Morris (1848), 2 Cox, C C 439, COLIMAN, J, R v Hingley (1830), 4 C & P 366

(t) R v Housell (1840) 2 Mood & R 292

(a) R v Davis (1829) 3 Russell on Crimes, 167

(b) R v Cowhead (1845), 1 Car & Kir 623, R v Turner (1839), 8 C & P 755,

(c) R v Clarke (1866), 4 F & F 1040, MARTIN, B

(d) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 100), s 60 This applies although the prisoner has only been tried on a coroner's inquisition, and not upon indictment (R v Maynard (1812), Russ & Ry 240, where the grand jury had ignored the bill of indictment)

SECT. 1.

Acts
involving
bodily injury.Wounding
with intent to maim.SUB-SECT 8—Wounding etc with intent to Maim etc

1210 Everyone is by statute (e) guilty of felony who by any means whatever unlawfully and maliciously wounds or causes grievous bodily harm to any person, or shoots or attempts to discharge loaded arms at any person, with intent in any of these cases to maim, disfigure or disable, or to do some other grievous bodily harm to any person, or with intent to resist or prevent the lawful apprehension or detainer of any person

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (f)

What constitutes wounding

1211 In order to constitute a wounding there must be an injury to the person by which the skin is broken (g), the continuity of the whole skin must be severed, not merely that of the cuticle or upper skin (h). The skin severed need not, however, be external (i), but it is not sufficient to prove merely that a flow of blood was caused (k), unless there is evidence to show where the blood originally came from (l)

It is not necessary that any instrument should have been used, as injury caused for instance by a kick may be a wounding (m)

Grievous
bodily harm

An injury may amount to grievous bodily harm without being either permanent or dangerous, if it is such as seriously to interfere with comfort or health (n), but some grievous injury must have been caused to the body itself, either with a weapon or without a weapon, as by a blow with the fist or by pushing a person down (o)

By loaded arms is meant any gun, pistol, or other arms loaded in the barrel with some explosive and ball, shot, or other destructive material, although the attempt to discharge such gun etc may fail from want of proper priming or any other cause (p). The trigger need not actually be pulled in order to constitute an attempt to discharge (q).

Malice.

If the act charged is unlawful and done wilfully and intentionally, and without any circumstances to justify it and take away its prima facie character of unlawfulness, it is malicious (r). Malice against the individual actually injured is not essential, general malice, i e, an intention to do an unlawful act, is sufficient (s)

(e) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 18

(f) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1)

(g) Moriarty v Brooks (1834), 6 O & P 684, R v Beckett (1836), 1 Mood & R 526

(h) R v M'Laughlin (1838) 8 C & P 635

(i) R v Smith (1837), 6 C & P 173

(k) R v Jones (1848), 3 Cox, O C 441

(l) R v Waltham (1849), 3 Cox, C C 442

(m) R v Drifill (1843), 1 Cox, O C 49

(n) R v Ashman (1858), 1 F & F 88, WILLES, J

(o) R v Clarence (1888), 22 Q B D 23, 41, C O R, STEPHEN, J; decided on similar words in Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 20

(p) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 19.

(q) R v Duckworth, [1892] 2 Q B 83 O O R (overruling R v St. George (1840), 9 O & P 483), R v Linneker, [1906] 2 K B 99, C C R.

(r) R v Clarence, supra, at p 36

(s) R v Hunt (1822), 1 Mood C O 93.

On an indictment for wounding with intent the actual intent must be proved (t). In considering what will amount to evidence of an intent to do grievous bodily harm regard must be had to the weapon, if any, used, and the conditions under which it was used. The mere striking of the blow with a fist, even though grievous bodily harm be done, is not of itself sufficient evidence to show an intent to do grievous bodily harm (a).

SECT 1
Acts
involving bodily
injury.

Intent must be proved

Where the distance at which a gun is fired is so great that serious injury does not and was not likely to result, the shooting, though the gun be aimed at the prosecutor, will not of itself be evidence of a shooting with intent to maim or to do grievous bodily harm (b).

The intent need not be an intent to do grievous bodily harm to the person actually injured, the offence being complete if there be an intent to maim, disfigure etc any person (c).

SUB-SECT 9—Unlawful Wounding etc

1212 Everyone is by statute (d) guilty of a misdemeanour who unlawfully and maliciously wounds or causes grievous bodily harm to any person either with or without any weapon or instrument.

Unlawful
wounding.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (e).

Though there be no intent to wound, yet a person may be guilty of unlawful wounding if he uses a weapon which is known to be calculated to wound (f).

Upon the trial of an indictment for any felony, except murder or manslaughter, where the indictment alleges that the defendant cut, stabbed, or wounded any person, if the jury are satisfied that the defendant is guilty of the cutting, stabbing, or wounding, but are not satisfied that he is guilty of the felony charged in the indictment, they may acquit him of the felony and convict him of unlawfully wounding, and he may then be punished for that offence (g).

(t) R v Cox (1859), 1 F & F 664.

(a) R v Wheeler (1844), 1 Cox, C C 106.

(b) R v Abraham (1845), 1 Cox, C C 208, where the prisoner was only forty or fifty yards distant, and fired at the prosecutor intentionally, and the jury were directed to acquit of the felony and convict of a common assault only, a direction which upon the facts seems difficult to understand, and see R v Ward (1872), L R 1 C C R 356, decided upon s 20.

(c) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 18, compare R v Stopford (1870), 11 Cox, C C 643, R v Lynch (1846), 1 Cox, C C 361, where the prisoner mistook the prosecutor for another person, and R v Fretwell (1864), Le & Ca 443, where the prisoner fired at a group of persons intending generally to do grievous bodily harm.

(d) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 20. As to what constitutes wounding and grievous bodily harm, see p 600, ante.

(e) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(f) R v Cox, supra, see also R v Ward, supra, where the defendant had maliciously shot in the direction of the prosecutor with a view to frighten him, and the latter was seriously injured, and the court upheld a conviction under this section.

(g) Prevention of Offences Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 19), s 5. This section appears to apply only to the felonies of wounding with intent to murder under s. 11 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100),

SECT. 1.*Acts
involving
bodily
Injury.

1213 Where a man unlawfully and maliciously does an act calculated to cause a panic in a public assembly (e.g., places a bar across the door in such a way as to cause a crush in which persons are injured), he may be convicted of the offence of causing grievous bodily harm (h)

Causing
panic.

Where one person produces in the mind of another such a sense of immediate danger as causes the other to endeavour to escape, the person responsible for the creation of that state of mind is also responsible for any injuries which may result to the person who endeavours to escape (i)

As in the case of felonious wounding (j), it is immaterial whether the person actually struck is the person whom the prisoner intended to strike (k)

SUB-SECT 10—Attempt to Choke etc with intent to commit an Indictable Offence.*Attempt to choke etc.

1214 Everyone is by statute (l) guilty of a felony who by any means whatever attempts to choke, suffocate or strangle, or by means calculated to produce that effect attempts to render any person unconscious or incapable of resistance, with intent to enable the assailant himself or another person to commit, or with intent to assist in committing, any indictable offence

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years and imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, and the court may order the offender, if a male, to be whipped (m)

SUB-SECT 11—Administering Drug with intent to commit an Indictable Offence*Administer ing drugs

1215 Everyone is by statute (n) guilty of a felony who administers to or causes to be taken by any person any chloroform, laudanum, or other stupefying or overpowering drug or thing, or attempts to do so with intent to enable himself or any other person to commit, or with intent to assist in committing, any indictable offence

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for wounding with intent to maim, disfigure, or disable or to do grievous bodily harm or to resist lawful apprehension under s 18 of that statute, and wounding an officer employed in the prevention of smuggling under the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 193. It does not apply to any case where the indictment does not allege a felonious cutting, stabbing, or wounding, and a prisoner indicted under s 18 for a felonious shooting, and for doing grievous bodily harm with intent to do grievous bodily harm, cannot, on that indictment, be convicted of unlawful wounding (R v Miller (1879), 14 Cox, C C 356)

(h) R v Martin (1881), 8 Q B D 54, C C R

(i) R v Halliday (1884), 61 L T 701, C C R, R v Ward (1872), L T 1st C C R 306 and see p 572, ante

(j) See p 601, ante

(k) R v Latimer (1886), 17 Q B D 359, C C R

(l) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 21

(m) Ibid Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1); Garrothers Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict c 44). As to whipping see p 664, post

(n) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 22. And see p 614, post, as to administering stupefying drugs etc to a woman with a view to have carnal connection with her. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1) not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (o).

SUB SECT 12—Administering Poison etc. so as to Endanger Life.

1216 Everyone is by statute (p) guilty of a felony who unlawfully and maliciously administers or causes to be administered to or taken by any person any poison or other destructive or noxious thing so as thereby either to endanger the life of such person or to inflict upon him grievous bodily harm

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than ten nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (q)

If the poison or noxious thing be administered with intent to injure, aggrieve, or annoy any person, the offence is a misdemeanour (r), and the punishment is penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (s)

But if, in fact, grievous bodily harm is caused by the noxious thing, the prisoner is guilty of the felony above referred to, although the intent was merely to injure or annoy (t).

On an indictment charging the felony of administering poison so as to cause grievous bodily harm the jury may convict of the misdemeanour of administering it with intent to injure or annoy (a)

The drug or thing administered must in this case be noxious in itself, and not merely so when taken in excess, or the prisoner cannot be convicted, although there may have been an intent to injure or annoy (b) It is sufficient that the actual amount administered is enough to cause injury, even though when taken in smaller quantities the particular thing given would be harmless (c) And probably if the thing administered were a recognised poison, the quantity used would be immaterial (d) The administering does not necessarily consist in the actual giving of the poison to the prisoner by the accused It is sufficient if poison be placed by the accused where it will be taken (e), or if it be handed to a third person in order that it may be given to another, although it may ultimately reach and be taken by someone for whom it was not intended (f)

The administration of cantharides to a woman with the intention

SECT. 1.
Acts
involving bodily
injury.

Administering poison.

(o) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 22, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1)

(p) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 23

(q) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is triable at quarter sessions

(r) Ibid, s 24

(s) Ibid, The offender may be fined (ibid, s 71), Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(t) Tulley v Corrie (1867), 10 Cox, C C 594, 640

(a) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 100), s 25

(b) R v Hennah (1877), 13 Cox, C O 547

(c) R v Oramp (1880), 5 Q. B. D 307, C. C R., decided under s. 58

(d) Ibid.

(e) R v Harley (1830), 4 O & P 369

(f) R v Michael (1840), 9 C. & P. 356, R. v. Lewis (1833), 6 C. & P. 161; and see note (g) on p 593, ante.

SECT 1
Acts
involving bodily
injury.
Causing
explosion

of exciting her sexual passion is an administration of a noxious thing with intent to injure or annoy (g)

SUB-SECT 13—Injury by Explosion or Corrosives.

1217 Everyone is by statute (h) guilty of a felony who unlawfully and maliciously burns, maims, disfigures or disables, or does grievous bodily harm to any person by the explosion of any explosive substance

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years. If the offender is a male under sixteen years of age, in addition to any other punishment he may be whipped (i)

1218 Everyone is by statute (h) guilty of a felony who unlawfully and maliciously (1) causes any explosive substance to explode, or (2) sends to or causes to be taken or received by any person any explosive substance or other dangerous or noxious thing, or (3) places anywhere or throws at or upon or otherwise applies to any person any corrosive fluid, or any destructive or explosive substance, with intent, in any such case, to burn, maim, disfigure or disable any person, or to do grievous bodily harm to any person, whether any bodily injury be effected or not

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years. If the offender is a male under sixteen years of age, in addition to any other punishment he may be whipped (l)

1219 Everyone is by statute (m) guilty of a felony who unlawfully and maliciously places or throws in, into, against or near any building, ship or vessel any explosive substance with intent to do any bodily injury to any person, whether or not an explosion takes place or any bodily injury is effected

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for fourteen or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years. If the offender is a male under sixteen years of age, in addition to any other punishment he may be whipped (n)

---

(g) R v Wilkins (1861), 11 C & Cr 89. As to the administration of stupefying drugs see p 602, ante, and pp 612, 614, post

(h) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 28

(i) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1)

(k) Ibid, s 29. Boiling water may be a destructive substance within the meaning of the section (R v Crawford (1845), 2 Car & Kir 129). As to explosives, see also p 775, post

(l) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 29, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1)

(m) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 30

(n) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is not, it seems, excluded from the jurisdiction of quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1). As to damaging buildings by explosion with intent to murder, see p. 594, ante

SECT 1.
Acts
involving bodily
injury.

1220 Everyone is by statute (p) guilty of a misdemeanour who knowingly has in his possession, or makes any gunpowder, explosive substance, or any dangerous or noxious thing, or any machine, instrument, or thing, with intent by means thereof to commit any felony mentioned in the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (q)

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour and, in the case of a male under sixteen years of age, a whipping (r)

SUB-SECT 14—Setting Man-traps etc

1221 Everyone is by statute (a) guilty of a misdemeanour who sets or places, or causes to be set or placed, any man-trap, spring-gun, or other engine calculated to destroy human life or inflict grievous bodily harm, with the intent that it shall, or whereby it may, destroy or inflict grievous bodily harm on a trespasser or other person coming in contact with it

Setting
man-traps

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (b)

A person who knowingly and wilfully permits any such engine, which may have been set or placed in any place in his possession or occupation by some other person, to continue so set or placed is deemed to have set or placed it with the above-mentioned intent (c)

It is not forbidden to set such traps as are usually set with the intent of destroying vermin, or to set, between sunset and sunrise, a mantrap, spring gun, or other engine in a dwelling-house for its protection (d) The statute creating the misdemeanour only applies to instruments set with the intention to do grievous bodily harm, or whereby grievous bodily harm is actually caused (e)

SUB-SECT 15—Furious Driving

1222 Everyone is guilty of a misdemeanour (f) who, having the charge of any carriage or vehicle, by wanton or furious driving or driving.

Furious

(p) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 64

(q) 24 & 25 Vict c 100

(r) Ibid, s 64 This offence, it seems, is triable at quarter sessions As to offences under the Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 Vict c 3), see p 775, post, and title EXPLOSIVES

• (a) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 31

(b) Ibid The defendant may also be fined and ordered to find sureties (ibid, s 71, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1) This offence is triable at quarter sessions

Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 31

(d) Ibid

(e) Jorden v Crump (1841) 8 M & W 782, 787, a dogspear is therefore not within the section

(f) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 35 A bicycle is a vehicle within the meaning of this section (R v Parker (1895), 59 J P 793) Furious driving is punishable summarily by a fine of £5 (Highways Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will 4, c 50), s 76), see also as to riding or driving to the common danger and the arrest of the offender, Public Health Acts Amendment

SECT 1
Acts
involving
bodily
injury.

racine, or other wilful misconduct, or by wilful neglect, does or causes to be done to any person any bodily harm

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour for two years (g)

SUB-SECT 16 — Assault

Assault.

1223 An assault is an offer or attempt to apply force or violence to the person of another in an angry or hostile manner, and if force be actually applied, either illegally or without the consent of the person assaulted, and in an angry, rude, revengeful, or violent manner, the assault becomes a battery, however slight the force may be (h) Every battery includes an assault

Mere words can never amount to an assault (i) There must be some act indicating an intention of assaulting, or which an ordinary person might reasonably construe as indicating such an intention, or some act amounting to an attempt

If no actual violence is used, there must, to constitute an assault, be some threatening act sufficient to raise in the mind of the person threatened a fear of immediate violence, therefore, if an offer is made to strike a person with the fist, at such a distance as to make it impossible for a blow to reach, there is no assault, so, too, where a pistol is presented at a range to which the ball cannot by any possibility carry (k)

False
imprison- ment.

1224 It is a common law misdemeanour punishable by fine and imprisonment to imprison any person without lawful cause (l)

Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 53), s 79 A person driving a motor car recklessly or negligently, or at a speed or in a manner dangerous to the public, is liable on summary conviction to a penalty of £20, and on a second conviction to a fine of £30 or imprisonment for three months There are also penalties for driving at a greater speed than twenty miles per hour (Motor Car Act, 1903 (3 Edw 7, c 36), ss 1, 9, 11)

(g) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 35 The defendant may also be fined and ordered to find sureties (ibid, s 71) This offence is triable at quarter sessions

(h) 1 Hawk P C, c 62, s 5

(i) 1 Hawk P C c 15 s 1

(k) See R v St George (1840), 9 C & P 483, 490, R v March (1811), 1 Car & Kir 496, compare R v Renshaw (1847) 2 Cox, C C 280, R v Cotesworth (1703) 6 Mod Rep 172 Putting a noxious thing into liquor in order that a person may drink it is not an assault or any other common law misdemeanour (R v Hanson (1849), 2 Car & Kir 912, R v Walkden (1845), 1 Cox, C C 282, not following R v Button (1838), 8 C & P 660) But see Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 24, (p 603, ante), and (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1865 (15 & 49 Vict c 69), s 3 (3) (p 614, post) Touching a person so as merely to call his attention, if there is no hostile intention, is not a criminal assault (Coward v Baddeley (1859), 4 H & N 478) If two or more meet in a narrow passage, and without any violence or design of harm one touches the other gently, it is no battery, but if either uses violence to the other to force his way in a rude inordinate manner, it will be a battery (Cole v Turner (1704), 6 Mod Rep 149) The intention must be considered, so to clap a man on the back in joke or friendship is not an assault (Williams v Jones (1736), Lee temp Hard 293, 301) To cut or injure clothes which a man is at the time wearing is an assault upon him, though no injury may be done or intended to his person (R v Day (1845), 1 Cox, C C 207)

(l) Com Dig, Imprisonment, L, 1, 1 East, P C 248 R v Lisle (1860), Bell, C C 220, see Hunter v Johnson (1884), 13 Q B D 225

Every restraint of the liberty of one person under the custody of another, either in a gaol, house, or in the street, is in law an imprisonment (m)

SECT. 1.
Acts
involving bodily
injury.

Consent.

1225 Generally speaking, in order to constitute an assault it is necessary that the act should be done against the will of the person assaulted, and, in consequence, consent is usually a good defence to a charge of assault (n). If, however, the act amounts to a breach of the peace or has a direct tendency to cause a breach of the peace, and is therefore injurious to the public, or if the act be a dangerous one, consent will afford no defence (o). For these reasons all persons taking part in or aiding and abetting a prize fight are guilty of assault (p).

The consent must be that of a rational person who knows the nature of the act consented to (q), and fraud as to the nature of the act done, or as to the identity of the person doing it, vitiates consent (r). Therefore if a medical man strips a female patient naked on the pretence that he is thereby diagnosing her case (s), or has connection with a female child of fourteen on pretence that he is treating her medically (t), he is guilty of an assault.

Without the consent of a prisoner, a judge or magistrate has no power to order an examination of his person, and if in pursuance of such an order an examination is made, the person who made the order and the person who makes the examination are guilty of an assault. But if the prisoner consents, even under a misapprehension as to the power to make such an order, such consent is an answer to the charge of assault (u), and a

(m) 1 Buller, Nisi Prius 22a. A wrongful imprisonment amounts to an assault (1 Hawk P C, c 60, s 7), even though no violence or threat of violence is actually used (see R v Lushbery (1905), 69 J P 107), and is usually punished as such, there being few (if any) reported cases of indictments for false imprisonment simply, as an assault is always charged in the same indictment and usually in one count with the false imprisonment as in R v Leney (1860), Bell, C C 220, though a count for false imprisonment alone without alleging an assault is good. For forms of indictment see 3 Chitty, Criminal Law, 834. An imprisonment may include a battery, but does not necessarily do so (Emmett v Lyne (1805), 1 Bos & P (N R) 255). See, generally, as to false imprisonment, title TRESPASS.

(n) R v Meredith (1838), 8 C & P 589.

(o) R v Coney (1882), 8 Q B D 534, 537, C C R.

(p) Ibid, R v Perkins (1831), 4 C & P 537, R v Brown (1841), Car & M 314. The mere presence at a prize fight of a spectator who takes no part in the proceedings, either by word or act, does not, as a matter of law, necessarily make him an aider or abettor, but his presence unexplained may afford some evidence that he was present aiding and abetting (R v Coney, supra, at pp 552, 558).

(q) R v Lock (1872), L R 2 C C R 10.

(r) R v Clarence (1888), 22 Q B D 23, 43, C C R, where the majority of the judges held that a wife's consent to her husband having intercourse with her was not vitiated by the fact that he fraudulently concealed from her the fact that he was suffering from venereal disease. As to a woman permitting a man to have intercourse with her under the belief that he is her husband, whom the man is personating, see Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 4, p 612, post.

(s) R v Rosnaks (1824), 1 Mood. C C 198.

(t) R v Case (1850), 1 Den 580.

(u) R v Boulton (1871), 12 Cox, C C 87, 91. The right of a constable to search a prisoner upon his arrest appears to be impliedly recognised by the

SECT 1

Acts
involving bodily
injury.

Accident.

submission even under protest is, unless induced by force, a sufficient consent

In cases of indecent assault the consent of a child under the age of thirteen affords no defence (a)

1226 It is a sufficient defence to a charge of assault that the act alleged was a mere accident (b), or that it was done while the parties were engaged in a game or sport which was lawful and not seriously dangerous to life or limb (c)

Correction

1227 An act is not an assault, if it is done in the course of lawful correction, as that of a child by its parent, or that of an apprentice or scholar by his master, or in the punishment of a convicted criminal according to law by the proper officer (d) In the two former cases the correction must be reasonable and moderate and administered with a proper instrument, and, in the case of a female, in a decent manner (e)

Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 49), s 44, but, except in the metropolis (as to which see Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict c 47), s 66, Canal (Offences) Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict c 50), s 11), there is no express statutory authority given to make such a search upon an arrest for larceny or similar offences As to the extent of the right of search at common law, see Bessell v Wilson (1853), 20 L T (O S) 233, R v Russ (1819) 2 Car & K 822, Dillon v O'Brien (1887), 16 Cox, C C 245, R v Boulton, supra, at p 95, and p 309, ante, Latter v Brudell (1881), 50 L J (Q B) 166, 418, C A

(a) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict c 45), s 2

(b) Gibbons v Pepper (1695), 2 Salk 637, Stanley v Powell, [1891] 1 Q B 86

(c) R v Coney (1882), 8 Q B D 534, 539, 549, C O R

(d) R v Hopley (1860), 2 F & F 202, at p 206, COCKBURN, C J, R v Griffin (1869), 11 Cox, C C 402, 1 Hawk P C, c 28, s 23, 8th ed, p 483, c 10, s 4, p 50 See also p 577, ante

(e) R v Miles (1812), 6 Jur 213, R v Hopley (1860), 2 F & F 202, 206, Cleary v Booth, [1893] 1 Q B 465 As to the right of a parent or of a person in loco parentis to chastise his child, while under age, in a reasonable manner, see 1 Bl Com 452, 1 Hale, P C 473, 474, R v Conner (1836), 7 C & P 438 The right of the schoolmaster to chastise a pupil is regarded as a delegation of the parental right (Cleary v Booth, supra), and extends to a responsible assistant teacher (Mansell v Griffin (1908), 99 L T 132, C A) The right of a parent, teacher, or other person having the lawful control or charge of a child or young person to administer punishment to such child or young person is recognised and not affected by the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s 37 Notwithstanding early dicta to the contrary, a husband is not entitled to inflict personal chastisement upon his wife, or to imprison her, though probably he may restrain her, if she is about to commit an act which would dishonour him (R v Lister (1721), 1 Stra 478, R v Jackson, [1891] 1 Q B 671, 679, 683, C A) It was formerly held that a master might moderately chastise his servant (Bliche v Grove (1664), 1 Keb 661, R v Keats (1698), Comb 406, 408, Bac Abr, tit Master and Servant, N, 1 Hawk P C, c 29, s 5, ibid, c 60, s 23, Post 262) In 1785 Sir WM JONES, in charging a grand jury at Calcutta laid down that a master had this right of chastisement (Sir Wm Jones's Works, Vol III, pp 8, 12, cited in Macdonell, Law of Master and Servant, 2nd ed., p 30, n) Since that date there has been no judicial opinion expressed on the subject Text-book writers have assumed that the right no longer exists in law, but it might be found difficult, if the question arose, to disregard the above-mentioned authorities In the case of an apprentice there is no such doubt, as a master is clearly entitled to chastise his apprentice for misconduct, reasonably and in moderation (Penn v Ward (1835), 2 Cr M & R 336, Walter v Everard, [1891] 2 Q B 369, 376, C A), though this probably is a mere personal right which he cannot depute to

1228. If the act alleged be done in self defence, it is justified provided that no more force is used than is necessary for mere defence. If an assault is threatened, as by raising a hand against another within a distance capable of the latter being struck, the latter may strike in his own defence to prevent it (f), and, although unnecessary violence must not be used, if a person strikes at another, the person struck at is justified in using such a degree of force as will prevent a repetition of the assault (g).

SECT. 1.
Acts
involving bodily
injury.
Self defence.

1229 A husband may justify a battery in defence of his wife, a master in defence of his servant, a child in defence of his parent, and vice versa in each case (h). If the violence used is excessive, or if it is used after the danger is passed or by way of revenge, the assault cannot be justified (i).

Defence of others.

1230 A man is not entitled to use a deadly weapon to repel a common assault, to justify the use of such a weapon he must be in fear of serious bodily danger or robbery, or some similar crime of violence (k), and must first have retreated as far as possible and must not use more violence than is appropriate to the occasion (l).

Use of deadly weapon

1231 A person is justified in using reasonable force in defence of his possessions, as for instance in removing a trespasser or preventing his entry, or to restrain another from taking or destroying his goods. But no more violence must be used than is necessary for the purpose (m).

Defence of
property

1232 It is an answer to a charge of assault that the defendant was lawfully arresting the prosecutor, either on criminal or civil process, and used no more force than was necessary (n).

Lawful arrest.

another (see Combes's Case (1613), 9 Co Rep 75 a, 76 a). The master of a ship has power to inflict moderate and reasonable punishment upon one of his crew for riotous and mutinous misconduct (Lamb v Burnett (1831), 1 Cr & J 291, Watson v Christie (1800), 2 B & P 224), but the right of flogging a disobedient or mutinous seaman has perhaps now fallen into desuetude.

(f) A person so threatened is not limited to warding off a blow, but is justified in striking if reasonably necessary for self defence (R v Carman Deane (1909), 73 J P 255, O U A).

(g) Anon (1836), 2 Lew C C 48, PARKE, B, and compare 1 Sid 246, and p 586, ante.

(h) 1 Hawk P O, c 60, ss 23, 24, 3 Salk. 46.

(i) R v Driscoll (1841), Car & M 214.

(k) Cockcroft v Smith (1705), 2 Salk 642, R v Hewlett (1858), 1 F & F 91.

(l) R v Odgers (1813), 2 Mood & B 479, see p 587, ante.

(m) 1 Hawk P. O., c. 60, s 23, Weaver v Bush (1798), 8 Term Rep 78, Scott v Brown (1884), 51 L T 746, Harrison v Rutland (Duke), [1893] 1 Q B. 142, C A., compare Dean v Hogg (1834), 10 Bing 345, Holmes v Bagge (1813), 1 E & B 782, where the defendants had the full enjoyment of the premises, but not the full and exclusive right of possession, and on this ground they were unable to justify the forcible removal of the plaintiffs. See also title TRESPASS, and as to forcible entry and detainer, p 474, ante.

(n) 2 Roll Abr 546, A., and perhaps even under certain circumstances, if the object was merely to serve civil process (Harrison v Hodgson (1830), 10 B & C 446).

SECT 1

Acts
involving
bodily injury.Punishment for different kinds of assault

1233 A common assault is a misdemeanour punishable with imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than one year (o)

An assault with intent to commit a felony is a misdemeanour for which two years' imprisonment with or without hard labour may be awarded (p).

An assault occasioning actual bodily harm is a misdemeanour, the punishment for which is penal servitude for not more than five nor for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (a).

Verdict of common assault on indictment for a more serious
assault

1234 Upon the general principle that whenever a defendant is indicted for a misdemeanour which includes in it an offence of minor extent and gravity he may be convicted of the minor offence so included, a person may be found guilty of a common assault upon an indictment charging him with inflicting grievous bodily harm, or with unlawful wounding, or with assaulting and causing actual bodily harm (b), or upon any indictment charging a misdemeanour which includes the lesser misdemeanour of an assault (c). But there cannot be a conviction for a common assault upon an indictment for feloniously assaulting with intent to rob (d).

(o) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 47. Instead of or in addition to imprisonment the offender may be fined and ordered to enter into his own recognisances, with or without sureties, to keep the peace and be of good behaviour (ibid, s 71). This offence is triable at quarter sessions. In all cases of assault, except (1) where the assault was committed in the course of an attempt to commit felony, (2) where the justices are of opinion that the assault is from any other circumstances a fit subject for prosecution by indictment, and (3) where any question arises as to the title to any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein or accruing therefrom, or as to any bankruptcy or insolvency, or any execution under the process of any court of justice, a court of summary jurisdiction may upon complaint of the party aggrieved hear the charge, and upon conviction sentence the offender to imprisonment for two months, or a fine of £5, or in the case of an aggravated assault upon a woman or child, to imprisonment for six months, or a fine of £20 (Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), ss 42, 43, 46, see title MAGISTRATES). If the complaint is dismissed they are required to deliver to the defendant a certificate to that effect and the obtaining of such a certificate or, if he has been convicted, the payment of the fine or the suffering of the imprisonment awarded, releases him from all further or other proceedings for the same cause (ibid ss 44, 45). Although the charge may have only been of a simple assault, the certificate will be a bar to an indictment for an aggravated assault arising out of the same transaction (R v Ellington (or Ebrington) (1861), 1 B & S 688), but not to an indictment for manslaughter if the person assaulted subsequently dies (R v Morris (1867), L R 1 C C R 90). The certificate or the suffering of the punishment should be specially pleaded (R v Stanton (1851), 5 Cox, C C 324), as was done in R v Ellington, supra.

(p) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 38. This offence is triable at quarter sessions. The punishment is the same for an assault on a clergyman in the performance of his duty (see ibid, s 36).

(a) Ibid, s 47, and Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(b) R v Yeudon (1861), 9 Cox, C C 91, C C R, R v Oliver (1860), 8 Cox, C C 384, C C R.

(c) R v Canwell (1869), 11 Cox, C C 261, C C R, R v Taylor (1869), L R 1 C C R 194.

(d) R. v. Woodhall (1872), 12 Cox, C. O. 240, DENMAN, J.

SECT 2—*Offences against Women and Girls.*SUB-SECT. 1—*Rape*SECT 2.
Offences
against
Women
and Girls.

1235. Anyone is guilty of the felony of rape who has unlawful and carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her will (e)

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (f)

Rape

1236 A man cannot be guilty as a principal in the first degree of a rape upon his wife, for the wife is unable to retract the consent to cohabitation which is a part of the contract of matrimony (g). But a husband, who is present and assisting another person to commit a rape upon his wife, may upon an indictment for rape be convicted as a principal in the second degree (h), as also may a woman under similar circumstances (i)

Husband and wife

1237 There must be evidence of penetration of the private parts of the woman by the private parts of the prisoner, but the slightest penetration is sufficient (k), and it is not necessary that the hymen should be ruptured (l). It is not necessary to prove actual emission, the carnal knowledge being deemed to be complete upon proof of penetration only (m). If penetration cannot be satisfactorily proved, the prisoner may be convicted of an attempt to commit a rape (n) or of an indecent assault (o)

Penetration.

(e) 1 Hawk P C, c 16, s 2 (8th ed, I, 122) As to the consent of a girl under the age of thirteen to the unlawful connection being no defence, see p 612, post As to boys under fourteen, see p 240, ante As to a woman being guilty of rape as a principal in the second degree, see p 250, note (r), ante

(f) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 48, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1)

(g) 1 Hale, P C, p 629, where Sir Matthew Hale also discusses the question whether connection after a voidable marriage, brought about by compulsion and violence, amounts to rape The proposition stated in the text, and others arising from it, were discussed at great length by the Court for Crown Cases Reserved in R v Clarence (1868), 22 Q B D 23 Two of the judges who dissented from the decision of the majority declined to admit that the matrimonial consent of the wife to connection could not under any circumstances be retracted, and an opinion was expressed (per HAWKINS, J, at p 52) that a husband might be convicted of a rape upon his wife, if he had connection with her maliciously intending to communicate disease to her In Popkin v Popkin (1791), 1 Hag Ecc 765, n (a divorce case where cruelty was charged), it was said by Lord STOWELL, at p 767, n, "the husband has a right to the person of his wife, but not if her health is endangered", but whether he referred to a legal or a moral right is not clear

(h) 1 Hale, P C 629, R v Audley (Lord) (1631), 3 State Tr 402

(i) R v Ram (1893), 17 Cox, C C 609

(k) R v Lines (1844), 1 Car & Kir 393, R v Stanton (1614), 1 Car & Kir. 415

(l) R v Hughes (1841), 2 Mood C C 190

(m) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 63, see R v Marsden, [1891] 2 Q B 149, C C R.

(n) Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c. 100), s 9 So a person charged with aiding and abetting a person in committing a rape may be convicted of aiding and abetting him in attempting to commit it (R v Huggood (1870), L R. 1 C C R 221)

(o) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 9

SECT. 2.
Offences
against
Women
and Girls.

Consent.

1238 The connection must have been against the will of the woman, except in the case of a girl under the age of thirteen (a) A consent obtained by menaces of death or duress is in law no consent (b) If a person by giving a woman liquor makes her intoxicated to such a degree as to be insensible, and then has connection with her, he may be convicted of rape, whether he gave her the liquor to cause insensibility or only to excite her (c) If the woman is asleep when the connection takes place, she is incapable of consent, and although no violence is used, the prisoner may be convicted of rape, if he knew that she was asleep (d)

Submission owing to ignorance of, or to mistake as to the nature of, the act done or the person doing it, and induced by the fraud of the prisoner, does not constitute consent (e) A person who induces a married woman to permit him to have connection with her by personating her husband is guilty of rape (f)

If a woman of unsound mind is in such a state of idiocy as to be incapable of expressing either consent or dissent, and the prisoner has connection with her without her consent, he is guilty of rape, but otherwise the consent of such a woman, induced by mere animal instinct, is sufficient to prevent the act from constituting a rape (g)

(a) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 4, R v Ratcliffe (1882), 10 Q. B. D. 74, C. C. R. This also applies to an attempt to commit the offence (R v Beale (1865), L. R. 1 C. C. R. 10)

(b) 1 Hale, P. C. 631, 1 Hawk. P. C., c. 16, s. 7, R v Jones (1861), 4 L. T. 151

(c) R v Camplin (1845), 1 Cox, C. C. 220, C. C. R., where the girl, who was thirteen years of age, had refused the prisoner's advances so long as she remained conscious. If anyone else had made her drunk, the prisoner might equally have been convicted. PATIFSON J. repudiated the idea that the person of a drunken woman by the roadside might be violated with impunity by every passer-by, as to which see also R v Fletcher (1859), Bell, C. C. 63, 71. As to procuring debauchery of women by threats, or by fraud, or by the use of intoxicating drugs, see also p. 614, post.

(d) R v Mayers (1872), 12 Cox, C. C. 311, R v Young (1878), 14 Cox, C. C. 114, C. C. R.

(e) R v Flattery (1877), 2 Q. B. D. 410, C. C. R., R v Case (1850), 4 Cox, C. C. 220, R v Stanton (1851), 1 Car. & Ku. 415, R v Clarence (1848), 22 Q. B. D. 23, 43, C. C. R. The fraud must be as to the nature of the act, or as to the identity of the person committing it (R v Clarence, supra, at p. 44, SIEPHEN, J.)

(f) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 4. The section only refers to the case of a married woman and the personator of her husband. It is not altogether certain whether a singular personation by another man of the paramour of a concubine would amount to rape. Before the Act it would probably have been held that it did not (R v Barrow (1868), L. R. 1 C. C. R. 156. The Irish Court for Crown Cases Reserved refused, however, to follow that case in R v Dee (1884), 15 Cox, C. C. 579, and the authority of R v Barrow must be considered as to some extent shaken by the observations of the judges in R v Flattery (1877), 2 Q. B. D. 410, C. C. R.) In the case supposed the woman would not be protected by s. 3 (2) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69) (see p. 614, post), unless she was commonly supposed to be the wife of her paramour.

(g) The statement in the text is taken from a dictum of WILLES, J., in R v Fletcher (1859), Bell, C. C. 63, 70, which was adopted by KEATING, J., in R v Fletcher (1866), L. R. 1 C. C. R. 39, and approved by the Court for Crown Cases Reserved in R v Barratt (1873), L. R. 2 Q. B. 81. See p. 613, post.

SECT. 2.
Offences
against
Women
and Girls.

Character of prosecutrix.

1239. A condonation or consent after the fact affords no defence (h), nor does the fact that the woman was the prisoner's concubine (i) or a common strumpet (l).

1240 The prosecutrix may be asked in cross-examination whether she has previously had connection with the prisoner with her own consent, and if she denies it, evidence of the fact may be given on behalf of the prisoner (l). Evidence may also be given with a view to show her character for general indecency (m), or that she is a common prostitute (n), she may also be asked if she has had connection with particular men other than the prisoner, but if she denies that she has, evidence cannot be given to contradict her denial (o)

1241 Any person is by statute (p) guilty of a misdemeanour who unlawfully and carnally knows, or attempts to have unlawful carnal knowledge of, any female idiot or imbecile woman or girl under circumstances which do not amount to rape, but which prove that he knew at the time of the commission of the offence that she was an idiot or imbecile. The consent of the woman or girl is immaterial.

Carnal
 knowledge of an idiot.

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (q)

(h) 1 Hale, P O 631. Formerly a consent subsequent barred an appeal for rape, but not an indictment at the suit of the King (Statute of Westminster the Second (1285) (13 Edw 1, c 34))

(i) 1 Hale, P O 628

(l) 1 Hawk P C, c 10, s 7. These facts, however, will of course have a bearing upon the question whether the prosecutrix consented. Sir Matthew Hale (1 P O 633) states the following circumstances by which the truth of the prosecutrix's evidence may be tested "If the witness be of good fame, if she presently discovered (i.e., complained of) the offence, made suit after the offender, showed circumstances and signs of the injury whereof many are of that nature that only women are the most proper examiners and inspectors, if the place wherein the act was done was remote from people, inhabitants or passengers, if the offender fled for it, these and the like are concurring evidences to give greater probability to her testimony, which is proved by others as well as herself. But on the other side if she concealed the injury for any considerable time after she had opportunity to complain, if the place where the act was supposed to be committed were near to inhabitants or common recourse or passage of passengers, and she made no outcry when and where it is probable she might be heard by others, these and the like circumstances carry a strong presumption that her testimony is false or feigned", see also 4 Bl Com 213. The fact that the woman made a speedy complaint has always been admissible, as to when the details of her complaint may be given in evidence, see pp 388, 394, ante. In practice some corroboration of the woman's statement is always required, though the jury may act upon her uncorroborated evidence, if they think fit.

(l) R v Martin (1834), 6 C & P 562, R v Riley (1887), 18 Q B D 481, C C R

(m) R v Tinsington (1843), 1 Cox, C C 48

(n) R v Barker (1829), 3 C & P 589

(o) R v Holmes (1871), L R 1 C C R 334. As to evidence to show the general reputation of a witness for untruthfulness, see p 383, ante, as to the cross-examination of a prisoner with regard to his character or previous offences if the defence attacks the character of the prosecutrix or alleges the good character of the prisoner, see pp 382, 404, ante.

(p) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 5 (2), it is by statute a misdemeanour punishable in the same way for any person employed in an institution for lunatics, or having the care or charge of a single patient, unlawfully to have or attempt to have carnal knowledge of a lunatic in such institution or under such charge, the consent of the lunatic is immaterial (Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c 5), ss 324, 325).

(q) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c 69), s 5 (2), see

SECT 2
Offences
against
Women
and Girls.

Evidence of wife of prisoner Conviction
 of other offences on an indictment for rape.

1242 Upon a charge of rape or of unlawful carnal knowledge of a female idiot etc, the wife of the prisoner may be called as a witness for the prosecution without the consent of the prisoner (r).

1243 Upon the trial of an indictment for rape the jury may convict the prisoner (s) of —By threats procuring or attempting to procure the woman to have any unlawful carnal connection (t); or by false pretences procuring her to have any unlawful carnal connection (u), or administering to her any drug, matter, or thing with intent to stupefy so as thereby to enable any person to have unlawful carnal connection with her (a), or unlawfully and carnally knowing or attempting to have unlawful carnal knowledge of a girl under the age of thirteen years (b), or unlawfully and carnally knowing or attempting to have unlawful carnal knowledge of a girl above the age of thirteen years and under the age of sixteen years (c), or unlawfully and carnally knowing or attempting to have unlawful carnal knowledge of an idiot or imbecile woman under circumstances which do not amount to rape (d), or of an indecent assault

Upon such conviction the defendant is liable to be punished in the same manner as if he had been convicted upon an indictment for such offence.

SUB SECT 2 —Offences under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885

Procuring

1244 Any person is by statute (e) guilty of a misdemeanour who (1) by threats or intimidation procures or attempts to procure any woman or girl to have any unlawful carnal connection (f) either within or without the King's dominions, or (2) by false pretences or false representations (g) procures any woman or girl, not being a common prostitute or of known immoral character, to have any unlawful connection either within or without the King's dominions, or (3) administers to or causes to be taken by any woman or girl any drug, matter, or thing with intent to stupefy or overpower her so as

also Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict c 5), ss 324, 325, and title LUNATICS AND PERSONS OF UNSOUND MIND The offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 17)

(r) Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), s 4 It is not clear, however, that she can be compelled to give evidence against her will (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 20), she certainly cannot be compelled to disclose any communication made to her by the prisoner during their marriage (Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, supra, s 1 (d)), and see p 406, ante

Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 9.

Ibid., s 3 (1)

(i) Ibid., s 3 (2)

(a) Ibid., s 3 (3).

(b) Ibid., s 4

(c) Ibid., s 5 (1)

(d) Ibid., s 5 (2)

(e) Ibid., s 3

(f) This may be either with the defendant himself or with another man (R v Williams (1898), 62 J P 310).

(g) If these are set out (and in R v Field, Central Criminal Court Sessions Papers, 1891, it was held that it was necessary to do so), they need not be negatived in the indictment (R v Clarke and Lyons (1895), 59 J. P. 248).

thereby to enable any person to have unlawful carnal connection with her.

The punishment for any such offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (h)

No person may be convicted of any such offence upon the evidence of one witness, unless such witness be corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused (i)

1245 Any person is by statute (k) guilty of felony who unlawfully and carnally knows any girl under the age of thirteen years

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (l)

The legal presumption that a boy under the age of fourteen years cannot be guilty of rape extends to this offence (m)

Any person is by statute (n) guilty of a misdemeanour who attempts to commit this offence

The punishment is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, and both in this and the last-mentioned offence, if the offender's age does not exceed sixteen years, the court may, instead of sentencing him to imprisonment, order him to be sent to a reformatory for not more than five nor for less than two years (o)

In a prosecution either for the completed felony or for the attempt the consent of the girl is immaterial (p)

1246 If upon an indictment for the felony of carnally knowing a girl under the age of thirteen years the jury are satisfied that the prisoner is guilty (1) of procuring or attempting to procure the girl by threats or intimidation to have any unlawful carnal connection, (2) of procuring her to have unlawful connection by false pretences, if she is not a common prostitute or of known immoral character, (3) of causing to be taken by the girl any drug or thing with intent to stupefy her so as to enable any person to have such connection with her, (4) of an attempt to have such connection, (5) of carnally knowing or attempting to have carnal knowledge of a girl under the age of sixteen years, or of an imbecile, or (6) of an indecent assault, but are not satisfied that he is guilty of the felony charged in the indictment, the jury may acquit him of the felony

SECT. 2.
Offences
against
Women
and Girls.

Unlawful
carnal
knowledge of girl under thirteen.

Attempt.

Conviction
of other offences on an indictment for carnal knowledge of girl under thirteen.

(h) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 3 No offence under this Act is triable at quarter sessions (ibid, s 17)

(i) Ibid, s 3, R v Stans (1909), 2 Cr App Rep 6

(k) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 4 As to the unsworn evidence of a child of tender years upon a charge of this kind, see p 408, ante

(l) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 17)

(m) R v Wylie, [1892] 2 Q B 600, C C R The judges expressed different opinions as to whether he could be convicted of the attempt

(n) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 4

(o) Ibid., Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), ss 57 and 134 (3), and Third Schedule

(p) R v Beale (1865), L R 10 C R 10.

SMUT 2
Offences
against
Women
and Girls

and find him guilty of any one of the above offences. Thereupon the prisoner may be punished as if he had been convicted on an indictment for that offence (g).

A boy under fourteen who is indicted for the felony of carnally knowing a girl under thirteen may on that indictment be convicted of an indecent assault (r)

The prisoner may be convicted of an indecent assault, although the girl consented to the act (s)

Unlawful
carnal
knowledge of girl over thirteen and under sixteen.

1247 Any person is by statute (a) guilty of a misdemeanour who unlawfully and carnally knows or attempts to have unlawful carnal knowledge of a girl of or above the age of thirteen years and under the age of sixteen years The consent of the girl is immaterial

The punishment is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (b)

It is a sufficient defence to such a charge that the defendant had reasonable cause to believe that the girl was of or above the age of sixteen years (c)

No prosecution for the last-named offence can be commenced more than six months after the commission of the offence (d)

In these cases of carnal knowledge of girls under the age of thirteen or sixteen it is sufficient for the prosecution to prove penetration, the crime being complete without emission (e).

A girl under the age of sixteen years cannot be convicted of inciting a man to the commission of the offence of unlawful carnal knowledge of her, or of aiding and abetting him in committing it (f)

Evidence of age.

1248 An extract from a register of births, which is proved to be an examined copy or extract, or which purports to be signed and certified as a true copy or extract by the officer intrusted with custody of the original, is sufficient evidence of the age of the prosecutrix, if she is identified as the person named in the

(g) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 9 But he cannot, it appears, be convicted of a common assault (R v Catherall (1875), 13 Cox, C C 109 It was held that upon a charge of felony under s 4 of the above Act the prisoner might be convicted of an indecent assault although the unsworn evidence of a child was received against him (as to which see p 408, ante), and although there was no other sufficient evidence against him (R v Wealand (1888), 20 Q B D 827, C C R, and see Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Edw 7, c 15), s 15, and Children Act, 1906 (8 Edw 7 c 67), s 30)

(r) R v Williams, [1893] 1 Q B 320 C C R.

(s) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict c 45), s 2

(a) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 5 (1).

(b) Ibid

(c) Ibid.

(d) Ibid Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Edw 7, c 15), s 27. If the original prosecution upon which the prisoner was committed for trial was one of rape, and was commenced within the six months, the prosecution will be in time, even though the prisoner is tried only on an indictment for the statutory misdemeanour at a date when the six months have expired (R v West, [1898] 1 Q B 171 C C R)

(e) R v Marsden, [1891] 2 Q B 149, C C R.

(f) R v Tyrrell, [1891] 1 Q B 710, C C R.

extract (g). But her age may also be proved by any lawful evidence (h)

SECT 2.
Offences
against
Women
and Girls.
—

1249. Upon an indictment for carnally knowing a girl between the ages of thirteen and sixteen and for assaulting her the defendant may, if there was no consent on the part of the girl, be convicted of a common assault (i).

1250 Any person is by statute (k) guilty of felony who, being the owner or occupier of any premises or assisting in the management or control thereof, induces or knowingly suffers any girl under the age of thirteen years to resort to or be upon such premises for the purpose of being unlawfully and carnally known

Owner etc.
of premises suffering defilement of girl on the premises.

The punishment is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (l)

Any such person is by statute (m) guilty of a misdemeanour if the girl is above the age of thirteen and under the age of sixteen years.

The punishment is imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour (n)

In either case it is a sufficient defence that the accused had reasonable cause to believe that the girl was of or above the age of sixteen years (o)

The father or mother of the girl may be convicted of either offence, although she was living at home with them (p).

SUB-SECT 3 —Incest

1251. Any male person is by statute (q) guilty of a misdemeanour who has carnal knowledge of a female who is to his knowledge his granddaughter, daughter, sister, or mother Incest.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, if it is alleged in the indictment and proved that the female is under the age of thirteen years, the accused may be sentenced to penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, if the age of the accused does not exceed sixteen years, he may be sentenced to be whipped and in

(g) Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 99), s 14, R v Weaver (1872), L R 2 O O R 85

(h) Even by the evidence of persons who have seen her and speak as to their belief with regard to her age (R v Cox, [1898] 1 Q B 179, O C R.)

(i) R v Boslock (1893), 17 Cox, C O 700 See also R v Guthrie (1870), L R 1 O O R 241

(k) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), s 6(1)

(l) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s. 1.

(m) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, supra, s 6(2)

(n) Ibid

(o) Ibid

(p) R v Webster (1885), 16 Q B D 134, C C R, but not where the parent has permitted intercourse on one occasion for the purpose of obtaining evidence against a man who has previously seduced the girl (R v Merthyr Tydfil Justices (1894), 10 T L R 375) See also p 642, ante

(q) Punishment of Incest Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 45), s 1. Offences under this Act are not triable at quarter sessions (ibid, s 4)

SMCT. 2
Offences
against
Women
and Girls.

Attempt

addition to be sent to a reformatory for not less than two years or more than five years (r). It is immaterial whether the carnal knowledge was had with the consent of the female (?)

1252 Any male person is by statute (s) guilty of a misdemeanour who attempts to commit any such offence. The punishment is imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour (t).

Guardianship.

1253. Upon the conviction of the full offence or of an attempt to commit it against a female under twenty-one years of age, the court may divest the offender of all authority over her, and if he is her guardian, remove him from such guardianship, and in any such case may appoint any person or persons to be her guardian or guardians during her minority or any less period, provided that the High Court may at any time vary or rescind the order by the appointment of any other person as such guardian, or in any other respect (u)

Female permitting
incest

1254 A female of or above the age of sixteen is by statute (b) guilty of a misdemeanour who permits a person who is to her knowledge her grandfather, father, brother, or son to have carnal knowledge of her

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (c)

In the above-mentioned provisions the terms "brother" and "sister" include half-brother and half-sister, and such provisions apply whether the relationship between the accused and the person with whom the offence is committed is traced through lawful wedlock or not (d)

The Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (e), applies to these offences

Conviction
on indictment for rape

1255 If on the trial of an indictment for rape the jury are satisfied that the defendant is guilty of an offence under the Punishment of Incest Act, 1908, but are not satisfied that he is guilty of rape, they may acquit him of rape and find him guilty of an offence against that Act, and on a trial for an offence against that Act a defendant may be acquitted of that offence and convicted of an offence (f) under ss 4 or 5 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (g)

Witnesses

1256 Upon prosecutions for incest under the Punishment of Incest Act, 1908 (h), the wife or husband of the accused may be

(r) Punishment of Incest Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 45), Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c 69), s 1

(s) Ibid, s 1

(t) Ibid

(u) Ibid

(b) Ibid, s 2

(c) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891, supra, s. 1

(d) Punishment of Incest Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 45), s. 3.

(e) 22 & 23 Vict c 17

(f) Punishment of Incest Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 45), s. 4 (1), (2), (3).

(g) 48 & 49 Vict c 69, as to these offences, see p 614, ante

(h) 8 Edw 7, c 45

called as a witness either for the prosecution or the defence, and without the consent of the person charged (i).

Sec. 2.
Offences
against
Women
and Girls.

1257. All proceedings under the Punishment of Incest Act, 1908 (k), are to be held in camera (l). No prosecution for any offence under the Act can be commenced without the sanction of the Attorney-General, except in the case of a prosecution commenced by or on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions (m).

Proceedings
in camera.
Sanction necessary.

SUB-SECT 4—Indecent Assault

1258. Any person is by statute (n) guilty of a misdemeanour who commits an indecent assault upon a female assault.

Indecent

The punishment is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (o)

It is no defence to a charge of indecent assault upon a young person under the age of thirteen to prove that she consented to the act of indecency (p), but where she is above the age of thirteen, consent is a sufficient defence (q)

SUB-SECT 5—Abduction (r)

1259 Where any woman of any age has any interest, legal or equitable, present or future, absolute, conditional, or contingent in

Abduction
of heiresses
etc.

(i) Punishment of Incest Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 45), s 4 (4), but see p 614, note (r)

(k) 8 Edw 7, c 45

(l) Ibid, s 5

(m) Ibid, s 6

(n) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 52

(o) Ibid. Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The offender may also be fined and required to find sureties for his good behaviour (Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 100), s 71) The offence is triable at quarter sessions

(p) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict c 45), s 2. As to acts of gross indecency committed by a male person with another male person, see p 539, ante

(q) As to consent, see p 612, ante As to the cross-examination of the prosecutrix with respect to other acts of indecency committed with her consent, the principles stated on p 613 with respect to rape will apply to charges of indecent assault. As to admitting the unsworn evidence of children of tender years, see p 408, ante As to a court of summary jurisdiction dealing with an indecent assault on a person under sixteen, see Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c 67), s. 128, and p 269, note, ante

(r) There are certain provisions as to the offence of abduction which although still remaining unrepealed may be said to have fallen into desuetude. The Statute of Westminster the Second (1285) (13 Edw 1, c 34) provides that of women carried away with the goods of their husbands, the King shall have suit for the goods so taken away (ibid, s 3), that if a wife willingly leave her husband and go away and continue with her adventurer, she shall lose her dower, unless her husband takes her back (ibid, s. 4). A punishment of three years' imprisonment is imposed upon a person who carries away a nun from her house, although with her own consent (ibid, s. 5). The rest of that part of the chapter of this statute which relates to rape is repealed by stat (1828) 9 Geo 4, c 31, s 1 By c 35 of the stat Westminster the Second (supra) it is provided that concerning children, males or females (whose marriage belongeth to another), taken and carried away, if the ravisher have no right in the marriage, though after he restores the child unmarried, he shall nevertheless be punished for his default by two years imprisonment; and if he do not restore, or do marry the child after the years of consent, and be not able to "satisfy for" the marriage, he shall abjure the

Secr 2
Offences
against
Women
and Girls.

any real or personal estate or is a presumptive heiress, coheiress, or one of the next of kin to anyone having such an interest, anyone is by statute (a) guilty of felony (1) who from motives of lucre takes away or detains such woman against her will with intent to marry or carnally know her, or to cause her to be married or carnally known by any other person, or (2) who fraudulently allures (b), takes away, or detains such woman, being under the age of twenty-one years, out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother or of any other person having the lawful care or charge of her with the like intent

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (c)

Property of abducted
woman.

A person convicted of this offence is incapable of taking any interest or estate in any real or personal property of the woman or in any property which may come to her as heiress or next of kin (d)

If the offender has married the woman abducted, such property is, upon the conviction, to be settled in such manner as the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice shall upon an information by the Attorney-General appoint (d)

Consent

As the offence consists in the abduction or detainer, it is no defence that the woman was at first taken away with her own consent, if she afterwards refuses to continue with the offender nor is it material that she was ultimately married or defiled with her own consent (e).

If the jury are not satisfied that the prisoner acted from motives of lucre, he cannot be convicted of the former of the offences above described (f)

Abduction
of woman
with intent
to marry,
&c.

1260 Anyone is by statute (g) guilty of felony who by force takes away or detains against her will any woman, of any age, with intent to marry or carnally know her, or to cause her to be married or carnally known by any other person

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (h).

Taking or enticing away
children
under
fourteen.

1261 Everyone is by statute (i) guilty of felony (1) who unlawfully, either by force or fraud, leads or takes away, or decoys or entices away, or detains any child under the age of fourteen years with intent to deprive any parent, guardian, or other person having realm or have perpetual imprisonment The remainder of this Act is repealed by the Civil Procedure Acts Repeal Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 59), s. 2

(a) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 53

(b) R v Burrell (1863), L & Ca 354

(c) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100) s. 53, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1 The offence of abducting a woman or a girl is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38), s. 1)

(d) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 53.

(e) 1 Hawk P.C., c. 16, Part II., ss. 7, 8 (8th ed., I., 124)

(f) R v Barratt (1840), 9 C & P, 387

(g) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 54.

(h) Ibid; Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1

(i) Offences against the Person Act, 1861, (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 56.

SECT. 2.
Offences
against
Women
and Girls.

the lawful care or charge of such child, of the possession of such child, or with intent to steal any article upon or about its person, or (2) who, with any such intent, receives or harbours any such child knowing it to have been by force or fraud so taken or decoyed away or detained.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven or less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, and if the offender is a male under sixteen years of age, he may be whipped (k)

No one is liable to prosecution for this offence who has claimed any right to the possession of the child so taken or decoyed away or detained, or who is the mother of the child or in the case of an illegitimate child claims to be the father of such child (l)

Fraud practised upon either the parent or the child is sufficient to establish the offence (m) A person who has been in possession of a child with the consent of its parents, but who unlawfully and against the will of the parents delivers it over to another person, detains the child In such a case falsehoods told to conceal how the child has been disposed of are evidence of the detainer being fraudulent (n)

1262 Anyone is by statute (o) guilty of a misdemeanour who unlawfully takes or causes to be taken any unmarried girl under the age of sixteen years out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother, or of any other person having the lawful care or charge of her

Abduction of
girl under
sixteen.

The punishment is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (p).

1263 A manual possession by the father or guardian need not be shown If the girl was a member of his family and under his control, it is sufficient If she leaves her father's house for a particular purpose with his sanction, she cannot legally be said to be out of his possession (q) The taking need not be by force either actual or constructive (r), and the consent of the girl, if it has been obtained by the defendant's persuasions, is immaterial (s)

What con- stitutes
abduction.

(k) Offences Against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 56, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(l) Ibid Although the mother may not be convicted of this offence, she may it seems, be convicted of the offence of conspiring with someone else to take a child out of the possession of the person who has the lawful care of it, see R v Duguid (1906), 21 Cox, C C 200, C C R, R v Crossman (1908), 98 L T 760

(m) R v Bellis (1893), 17 Cox, C C 660, C C R

(n) R v Johnson (1884), 15 Cox, C C 481, C C R

(o) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 55

(p) Ibid., the defendant may also be fined and required to find sureties for good behaviour (ibid)

(q) R v Mankletow (1853), Dears C C 159, Jervis, C J

(r) R v Mankletow, supra, R v Fraser (1861), 8 Cox, C C 446, R v. Bailie (1859), ibid, 238 (where the girl voluntarily left her home for an hour to be married and then returned, the marriage never having been consummated), R v. Mycock (1871), 12 Cox, C C 28

(s) R v Twistleton (1668), 1 Lev 257, R v Robins (1844), 1 Car & Kir 456, R v Mankletow, supra, compare R v Meadows (1844), 1 Car & Kir 399, a case which it would appear difficult, to reconcile with these and other authorities

SECT 2
Offences
against
Women
and Girls.

The defendant may be convicted, although he took no part in the actual removal of the girl, if he previously solicited her to leave her father, and afterwards received and harboured her when she did so (t). But if a girl leaves her father of her own accord, the defendant taking no active part in the matter and not persuading or advising her to leave, he cannot be convicted of this offence, even though he failed to advise her not to come, or to return, and afterwards harboured her (a).

The fact that the defendant believed upon reasonable grounds that the girl was sixteen years of age, affords no defence upon a charge of abduction (b).

Girl found wandering

A person who finds a girl wandering in the street and takes her away with him cannot be convicted of abducting her, in the absence of evidence that he knew that she was under the lawful care or charge of her father, mother, or any other person (c), nor can a person who takes possession of a child be convicted of this offence, if he honestly believes that he is entitled to the legal custody of the child (d).

Temporary
taking

If the taking is intended to be temporary only, and for a purpose not inconsistent with the possession of the father, it does not necessarily amount to a taking out of his possession, but if a girl is taken away for the purpose of being detained for a time in order that she may cohabit with the defendant, the fact that he sent her back after a temporary cohabitation affords no defence (e).

Taking from religious motive

If a girl is taken out of the possession of a person having the lawful custody of her, the person so taking her may be convicted of abducting her, although he was influenced by religious or philanthropic motives (f).

Illegitimate
child.

The offence is committed by anyone who takes a female illegitimate child from the custody of its mother or its putative father (g).

but for the fact that the defendant was herself a girl, and the two girls wandered away together. See the observations of MAULE, J., on this case in R v Kym (1850), 4 Cox, C O 167, at p 168. The marginal note to R v Meadows is misleading, see the observations of the judges in R v Mankletow (1853), Dears C O 159, see also on this subject R v Miller (1876), 13 Cox, C O 179, LUSH, J.

(t) R v Robb (1864), 4 F & F 59, POLLOCK, C B, R v Handley (1859) 1 F & F 648, WIGHTMAN, J.

(a) R v Olfier (1868), 10 Cox, C O 402, BRAMWELL, B, R v Jarvis (1903), 20 Cox, C O 249, see, however the observations of ALDERSON, B, in R v Lisuelli (1847), 2 Cox, C C 279 which, it is submitted, are not in accordance with the views expressed by judges in the later cases.

(b) R v France (1875), L R 2 C O R 154.

(c) R v Green and Bates (1862), 3 F & F 274, R v Hibbert (1869), L R 1 C O R 184.

(d) R v Tinkler (1859), 1 F & F 513, see also R v Prince, supra, at p. 176; and as to children under fourteen years of age, see Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 56, and p 620, ante.

(e) R v Timmens (1860), Bell, C O 276, R v Basilie (1859), 8 Cox, C O 238.

(f) R v Booth (1872), 12 Cox, C C 231, QUAIN, J. "Though the statute probably principally aims at seduction for carnal purposes, the taking may be by a female with a good motive; though there may be such cases which are not immoral in one sense, I say that the act forbidden is wrong" (R v Prince, supra, per BRAMWELL, B, at p 174).

(g) 1 Hawk. P. C., c. 16, s. 14 (8th ed., 1, 129); 1 East, P. C. 457; R v.

PART XII.—OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON.

503

The taking out of possession must be against the will of the father, mother, or other person having the lawful care or charge of the girl. A taking with the consent of the parent or guardian, if such consent is obtained by fraudulent misrepresentations, is a taking against his will (h).

SECT. 2.
Offences:
against
Women
and Girls.

The fact that a parent has countenanced a lax, though not necessarily an immoral, course of life by the girl may in some cases be evidence that the taking out of his possession, though unknown to him, was not against his will (i).

1264. Everyone is by statute (k) guilty of a misdemeanour who, with intent that any unmarried girl under the age of eighteen years should be unlawfully and carnally known by any man or men, takes or causes to be taken such girl out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother or any other person having the lawful care or charge of her.

Abduction of girl under eighteen.

The punishment is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (a).

It is a sufficient defence to such a charge, if it is made to appear to the court that the defendant had reasonable cause to believe that the girl was of or above the age of eighteen years (b).

SECT. 3—Cruelty to Children (c).

1265 Any person is at common law guilty of a misdemeanour who, being obliged by duty or contract to provide for an infant of tender years unable to provide for and take care of itself, whether such infant is the child, apprentice or servant of such person, refuses or neglects to provide sufficient food or bedding for such infant so as thereby to injure its health (d).

Neglect to provide food etc for infants

The punishment for this offence is fine and imprisonment without hard labour (e).

1266. Any master or mistress is by statute (f) guilty of a misdemeanour who, being legally liable to provide for his or her apprentice or servant necessary food, clothing, or lodging, wilfully and without lawful excuse refuses or neglects to provide the same, or unlawfully

Neglect to provide food etc for servants.

Cornfort (or Cornforth) (1742), 1 Bott and Const, Poor Laws, 6th ed, p 458, 2 Stra. 1162. As to the possession of the mother, see R v Hopkins (1806), 7 East, 579.

(h) R v Hopkins (1842), Car & M. 254.

(i) R v Primelt (1858), 1 F. & F 50.

(k) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s 7. The cases already cited (pp 621, 622, ante) as to when a girl is to be considered in the possession of her parents, and as to what amounts to taking her out of such possession, apply to prosecutions under this section (see R v Henkers (1886), 16 Cox, 0 O 257). To warrant a conviction there must be evidence that she was induced by the defendant to leave her home (R v Kaufman (1904), 68 J. P. 189, BOASQUET, K.C., Common Serjeant).

(a) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, supra, s. 7.

(b) Ibid.

(c) For abduction of children, see p 620, ante.

(d) R v Friend (1802), Russ & Ry. 20; R v Hogan (1851), 2 Den. 277, O. O R.; R v Phillpott (1853), 22 L J (M. C.) 113, O. O R.

(e) The offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(f) Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s 26.

SECT 3
Cruelty to Children.

and maliciously does or causes to be done any bodily harm to such apprentice or servant so that his life is endangered or his health is, or is likely, to be permanently injured.

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years. The defendant may also be fined and required to find sureties for good behaviour (g)

Neglect of
children

1267 Every person over the age of sixteen years is by statute (h) guilty of a misdemeanour who, having the custody, charge, or care (i) of any child or young person (h), wilfully assaults, ill-treats,

(g) Offences Against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 26, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. The neglect to provide necessary food, clothing, medical aid or lodging to a servant or apprentice, if the master or mistress is legally bound to provide it, is also punishable summarily by a fine of £20 or imprisonment for six months (Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 86), s 6). The defendant has by s 9 a right to elect to be tried on indictment.

At common law, apart from any contractual liability to provide food, clothing and other necessities, the master of an apprentice who resides with him, or of a servant who is of tender years, or is so far under the master's restraint or dominion by helplessness of body or mind as to be unable to withdraw himself from his control, is liable to be indicted, if he wilfully neglects to supply such necessities, and if by reason of such neglect the apprentice or servant dies or is seriously injured in health. In such a case the indictment must allege the tender years or helplessness of the servant (R v Gould (1701), 1 Salk 381, R v Self (1776), 1 Leach, 137 (S C 1 East, P C 226), R v Ridley (1811), 2 Camp 650, R v Smith (1865), Le & Ca 607). A master is not, apart from contract, legally bound to provide medical attendance for his servant (Wenham v Adney (1802), 3 Bos & P 247, Sellen v Norman (1829), 4 C & P 80), but it is otherwise in the case of an apprentice living with the master (R v Smith (1837), 8 C & P 153).

(h) Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s 12 (1).

(i) A person who is the parent or legal guardian of a child or young person, or who is legally liable to maintain him, is to be presumed to have the custody of him, and as between father and mother the father is not to be deemed to have ceased to have the custody of the child or young person by reason only that he has deserted or does not reside with the mother, any person to whose charge a child or young person is committed by any person who has the custody of him is to be presumed to have charge of him, and any other person having actual possession or control of a child or young person is to be presumed to have the care of him (ibid, s 38 (2)), see R v Connor, [1908] 2 K B 26. In the case of an illegitimate child the father is not the "parent" of the child or a person "legally liable to maintain him," until he is declared to be so by affiliation proceedings instituted for that purpose (Butler v Gregory (1902), 18 T L R 370).

(k) "Child" for the purposes of the Act means a person under the age of fourteen years (ibid, s 131), "young person" in the Act means a person who is fourteen years of age and under the age of sixteen (ibid). Where in a charge or an indictment for an offence against the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), or against ss 27, 55, or 56 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), or any offence against a child or young person under ss 5, 42, 43, 42, or 62 of that Act, or against the Dangerous Performances Acts, 1879 and 1897 (42 & 43 Vict c 34, 60 & 61 Vict c 52), or for any other offence involving bodily injury to a child or young person (except an offence under the Criminal Law Amendment Act (1885)), it is alleged that the person by or in respect of whom the offence was committed was a child or young person or was under or above any specified age, and he appears to the court to have been so, at the date of the commission of the alleged offence, he is for the purposes of the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), to be presumed at that date to have been a child etc, unless the contrary is proved (ibid, s 123 (2), see also R v Cox, [1898] 1 Q B 179, C C R).

neglects, abandons, or exposes (l) such child or young person, or causes or procures him to be assaulted, ill-treated, neglected, abandoned, or exposed in a manner likely to cause him unnecessary suffering or injury to health (m).

SECT. 3.
Cruelty to Children.

The punishment for this offence upon conviction on indictment is a fine of £100, or alternatively, or in default of payment of such fine, or in addition thereto imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (n). If it is proved that the accused was to his knowledge directly or indirectly interested in any sum of money payable in the event of the death of the child or young person, then in the case of a conviction on indictment the fine may be increased to £200, or in lieu of any other penalty the accused may be sentenced to penal servitude for five years (o).

1268. A parent or other person legally liable to maintain a child or young person is deemed to have neglected (a) him in a manner likely to cause injury to his health, if he fails to provide adequate food, clothing, medical aid, or lodging for him, or if being unable to provide it he fails to take steps to procure it under the Acts relating to the relief of the poor (b).

Meaning of neglect.

A person may be convicted of any of the above offences, notwithstanding that actual suffering or injury to health, or the likelihood thereof, was obviated by the act of another person (c), and notwithstanding the death of the child or young person (d).

The Children Act, 1908, does not take away or affect the right of any parent, teacher, or other person having the lawful control or (l) To abandon or expose any child under the age of two years, whereby its life is endangered or its health permanently injured or likely to be so, is also a misdemeanour punishable by penal servitude for five years or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 27).

(m) Injury to health includes injury to or loss of sight or hearing or limb or organ of the body and any mental derangement (Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), s. 12 (1)).

(n) Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), s. 12 (1). On summary conviction the punishment is a fine of £25, or in default of payment of or in addition to such fine six months' imprisonment with or without hard labour (ibid.).

(o) Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), s. 12 (5). The accused is to be deemed to be interested in such sum of money, if he has any share in or any benefit from the payment of the money, although he is not the person to whom it is legally payable (ibid., s. 12 (6)). A copy of a policy of insurance, certified by an officer or agent of the insurance company granting it to be a true copy, is prima facie evidence that the child or young person therein named has been insured, and that the person in whose favour the policy has been granted is the person to whom the money insured is legally payable (ibid., s. 12 (7)). As to the disposal of the child or young person by order of court when the person having the charge or custody of him is convicted of cruelty, or committed for trial for that offence, see ibid., ss. 21, 22, 23.

(a) Neglect is the want of reasonable care, that is, the omission of such steps as a reasonable parent would take, and such as are usually taken in the ordinary experience of mankind. "Wilfully" means that the act is done deliberately and intentionally, not by accident or inadvertently, but so that the mind of the person who does the act goes with it (R. v. Senior, [1899] 1 Q. B. 283, 291, O. O. R.). As to the common law obligation in these cases, see p. 584, ante.

(b) Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), s. 12 (1). See title POOR LAW.

(c) Ibid., s. 12 (2).

(d) Ibid., s. 12 (3).

Sec 3
Cruelty to Children.

Overlying
child.

charge of a child or young person to administer punishment to him (e).

1269 Where it is proved that the death of an infant under three years of age was caused by suffocation (not being suffocation caused by disease or the presence of any foreign body in the throat or air passages of the infant) whilst it was in bed with some other person over sixteen years of age, who was at the time of going to bed under the influence of drink, that person is deemed to have neglected the infant in a manner likely to cause injury to its health (f).

Procedure.

1270 Upon the trial of any person over the age of sixteen indicted for the manslaughter of a child or young person of whom he had the custody, charge, or care the jury may convict him of one of the above-mentioned offences (g)

The wife or husband of a person charged with any of the above offences may be called as a witness, either for the prosecution or defence, and without the consent of the person charged (h)

Where any of the above-mentioned offences is a continuous offence, it is not necessary to specify in the indictment the date of the acts constituting the offence (i)

The Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (j), applies to misdemeanours under the Children Act, 1908 (k).

Dangerous
performances

1271 Where in the course of a public exhibition or performance which in its nature is dangerous to the life or limb of a male under the age of sixteen years or of a female under the age of eighteen years taking part therein any accident causing actual bodily harm occurs to any such person, the employer of any such male or female is liable to be indicted as having committed an assault, and the court may award compensation not exceeding £20 for the bodily harm so occasioned, to be paid by the employer to such person or to some person named by the court on his or her behalf (l)

(e) Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), s. 37 See as to this right, p 608, ante.

(f) Ibid., s 13.

(g) Ibid., s 12 (4)

(h) Ibid., s 27, Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 36), s 4 (1) The Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), contains provisions as to the use of the deposition of a child or young person, and as to taking the evidence of a child of tender years in proceedings under that Act, or for any offence under ss 27, 55 or 56 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), or for any offence against a child or young person under ss 5, 42, 43, 52 or 62 of that Act, or under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict c 69), or any offence under the Children's Dangerous Performances Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 34), or under the Dangerous Performances Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict c 52), or any other offence involving bodily injury to a child or young person (Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 67), ss. 28—31, and see p 408, ante)

(i) Ibid., s 32 (4) But if dates are given, the court may refuse to allow the prosecution to adduce evidence of occurrences on other dates (R. v. Miller (1901), 65 J. P. 313)

(j) 22 & 23 Vict. c 17, as to which, see p 331, ante

(k) Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c 67), s. 35

(l) Children's Dangerous Performances Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c. 34), s. 3; Dangerous Performances Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict c 52), s. 1 The former Act provides a penalty on summary conviction in cases where the performance is dangerous but no actual injury has been caused.

PART XII.—OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON.

SECT. 4.—Offences relating to Lunatics and Paupers.

1272. The offences of taking charge of a lunatic without authority, of illtreating lunatics, and other offences against the laws of lunacy, and the offence of procuring the marriage of paupers, and other offences against the poor laws, are dealt with in other parts of this work (m).

SECT. 4.
Offences
relating to Lunatics
and Paupers.

Part XIII.—Offences against Property.

SECT. 1.—Taking Property.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Larceny.

(1) Definition and Punishment.

1273 Larceny is the felonious taking of the property of another, without his consent and against his will, with intent to convert it to the use of the taker (n). Definition of larceny.

Larceny is a felony, it is usually distinguished as being simple or compound. Compound larceny is simple larceny with aggravations of time, person, place, manner or subject-matter (o).

1274 The punishment for simple larceny, or for any felony made punishable like simple larceny, except in cases otherwise provided for (p), is penal servitude for not more than five or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, and in the case of a male under the age of sixteen years, a whipping (a). Punishment.

(m) See titles LUNATICS AND PERSONS OF UNSOUND MIND, POOR LAW, respectively

(n) R v Hammon (1812), 2 Leach, 1083, 1089, see Braot, lib 2, cap 32 (1), "furtum esse secundum leges contractatio rei alienae fraudulenta, cum animo furandi, invito illo domino cuius res illa fuerit." The former part of this definition is clearly taken from 4 Just Inst tit 1 (1)

(o) The former distinction of "grand" and "petty larceny" was abolished by stat 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 29, s 2, re-enacted by the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 96), s 2. As to compound larceny, see 4 Bl Com 240

(p) These excepted cases are the following. Larceny after certain previous convictions, which is dealt with at p 628, post, of fixtures etc by tenants, seven years' penal servitude (p 639, post), by clerks or servants, fourteen years' penal servitude (p 644, post), by public officers, fourteen years' penal servitude (p 644, post), by officers of the Post Office, penal servitude for life or for seven years (p 645, post), of post letters by other persons, penal servitude for life or for fourteen years (p 644, post), of wills, penal servitude for life (p 642, post), of certain animals (see Vol I, title ANIMALS, p 368), of certain goods in process of manufacture, fourteen years' penal servitude (p 644, post), from vessels or boats in a haven, port, or navigable river, or canal, or from any dock, wharf, or quay adjacent thereto, fourteen years' penal servitude (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s 63); from wrecks etc, fourteen years' penal servitude (p 640, post). As to robbery and other larcenies from the person, see p 661, post, burglary and other larcenies from houses (p 668, post), sacrilege (p 675, post). As to the punishment of larcenies which are dealt with on summary conviction, see title MAGISTRATES

(a) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), ss 4, 119; Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1. Larceny is triable at quarter sessions, except when the punishment of penal servitude for life may be awarded on a first conviction, and except misdemeanours under ss 77-86 of the

§ 107 1.
Taking
Property.
      

If the offender has been previously convicted of felony he may be sentenced to ten years' penal servitude, and if he be a male under the age of sixteen years, he may be whipped (b)

If the offender has been previously convicted of any indictable misdemeanour punishable under the Larceny Act, 1861 (c), or under any Act to be read with it, he may be sentenced to seven years' penal servitude, and in the case of a male under the age of sixteen years to a whipping (d)

If he has previously been twice summarily convicted under the Larceny Act, 1861 (e), or under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (f), whether such previous convictions were for offences of the same description or not, he is guilty of felony and may be kept in penal servitude for seven years, or imprisoned for two years with or without hard labour, and in the case of a male under the age of sixteen years may be whipped (g)

(11) Constituents of Offence

Intention.

1275 To constitute larceny the taking must be felonious, i.e., with a wicked intention, animus furandi, and not under a claim of right made by the person taking (h)

Claim of right.

To prevent the taking from being felonious, the claim of right must be an honest one, though it may be unfounded in law or in fact. If the claim is not made in good faith, but is a mere colourable pretence to obtain or to keep possession, it will not avail as a defence (i)

Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), and the Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 10)

(b) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), ss. 7, 119. As to the mode of charging previous convictions, see s. 116

(c) 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96

(d) Ibid., s. 8, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1

(e) 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96

(f) 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97

(g) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 9 (The other statutes mentioned in this section have been repealed.)

(h) 2 East, P. O. 659, 1 Hale, P. O. 506, 509, R. v. Hall (1828), 3 C. & P. 404. The mere sale of pirated music is not larceny, notwithstanding s. 23 of the Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45) (R. v. Kidd (1907), 72 J. P. 104). See title COPYRIGHT AND LITERARY PROPERTY, Vol. VIII, p. 167

(i) R. v. Wade (1869), 11 Cox, C. C. 549, BLACKBURN, J. If a man, with intent to steal the goods of another impounded for a distress, obtains the delivery of them to himself by proceedings in replevin, and then carries them away, he may be convicted of larceny, the replevin being in fraudem legis (3 Co. Inst. 108, 1 Hale, P. O. 507, 2 East, P. O. 660), see also R. v. Farr (1865), Kel. 43, where the prisoners, intending to rob the occupant of his goods, had fraudulently and without any right to a house obtained judgment in ejectment and were put into possession by the sheriff, and they were held rightly convicted of breaking into the house and stealing the goods in it. It should, however, be observed that in neither of these cases had there been a real adjudication in a civil court as to the ownership of the property in question, and see R. v. Hemmings (1864), 4 F. & F. 50, where the prosecutor, a creditor of the prisoner, assaulted him violently, and compelled him to give him a cheque on account of the debt, ERLE, C.J., held that the intent was not felonious. As to goods in the custody of the law, see R. v. Knight (1908), 25 T. L. R. 87, Q. C. A.

1276. To constitute larceny there must also be an intention to deprive the owner permanently of the goods taken, and the knowledge that they are not the goods of the person taking

SECT. I.
Taking
Property.

Where goods are taken by mistake or accident (l), or by a mere trespass, and there is at the time an intention to return them, and no subsequent intention to deprive the owner permanently of his property in the goods, there is no larceny (l)

Mistake or accident

When the goods taken have been realised, either by sale or pledging, and the proceeds appropriated by the prisoner, the fact that he intended ultimately, if he had the power to do so, to regain possession, and redeliver the goods to the owner is no defence, unless the accused not only had that intention at the time when he took the goods, but there was also then a strong probability and a belief on his part that he would have the power of regaining possession of and redelivering the goods (m)

Intention to redeliver.

It is not necessary to show that the taking was lucri causâ if it was fraudulent and with an intent wholly to deprive the owner of the property (n)

(k) 1 Hale, P C 507, 2 East, P C 661

(l) 1 Hale, P C 509, 2 East, P C 661 In the following cases the taking was held not to be felonious R v Phillips (1801), 2 East, P C 662, R v Crump (1825), 1 C & P 658 (horse taken from a stable wrongfully, ridden many miles, and left at another stable), R v Webb (1835), 1 Mood C C 431, R v Holloway (1848), 2 Car & Kir 942, R v Poole (1857), Dears & B 340 (workmen taking goods of their masters temporarily for the purpose of fraudulently increasing their rate of wages), compare R v Hall (1849), 2 Car & Kir 947, C C R, where a servant took his master's goods from one part of a warehouse to another and tried to sell them to the master, this was held to be larceny, see also R v Manning (1852), 6 Cox, C C 86, C C R, R v Richards (1844), 1 Car & Kir 532, R v Dickenson (1820), Russ & Ry 420 (taking away a girl's clothes in order that she might come for them, and so give the prisoner an opportunity to solicit her to commit fornication), R v Bailey (1872), L R 1 C C R 347 (taking warrants forcibly from a bailiff in order to defeat an execution, but a conviction on another count in the indictment, under s 30 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), for fraudulently taking the warrants was held to be good), Hewson v Gamble (1892), 56 J P 534 (coffee taken by the vendor from an inspector who had bought it for analysis)

(m) R v Wright (1828), 9 C & P at p 554, n; R v Phetheam (1840), 9 C & P 553, R v Medland (1851), 5 Cox, C C 292, R v Treblecock (1858), Dears & P 453

(n) R v Cabbage (1815), Russ & Ry 292 (where the object of the prisoner was only to destroy a stolen horse), R v Wynn (1848), 2 Car & Kir 859 C C R (letters and money thrown away by a postal official to prevent the discovery of a mistake in sorting), R v Jones (1846), 1 Den 188 (burning a letter supposed to contain an inquiry as to the prisoner's character)

• The case of a servant who improperly abstracted corn etc belonging to his master, for the purpose of improving the condition of the master's animals, formerly gave rise to some differences of opinion, but it is now provided by the Misappropriation by Servants Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict c 103), s 1, that if any servant shall, contrary to the orders of his master, take from his possession any corn or other food for the purpose of giving the same to any horse or other animal belonging to or in the possession of his master, he shall not be deemed guilty of felony, but shall be liable on summary conviction to imprisonment with or without hard labour for three months or a fine of £5 If the justices upon the hearing of the charge are of opinion that it is too trifling, or that it is inexpedient to inflict any punishment, they may dismiss the charge without convicting (ibid) If upon the trial of any servant for feloniously taking from

§ 207. 1

Taking
Property.

Asportation.

1277. There must be what amounts in law to an asportation (i.e., a carrying away) of the goods of the prosecutor; but for this purpose, provided there is some severance, the least removal of the goods from the place where they were is sufficient, although they be not entirely carried off (o). The removal, however short the distance may be, from one position to another upon the owner's premises is a sufficient asportation (p), and so is a removal or partial removal from one part of the owner's person to another (q). But there must be a severance of the goods if fastened, however slight (r).

In cases where the asportation cannot be proved, but where the prisoner intended to steal and did some act in furtherance of that object, he may be convicted of attempting to steal (s).

The offence of larceny is complete when the goods have once been taken with a felonious intention, although the prisoner may have returned them and his possession continued for an instant only (t).

Finding lost articles.

1278. It is a felonious taking, and constitutes larceny, if the prisoner, finding goods which were lost, or supposed to be lost, and reasonably believing at the time that the owner can be found, appropriates them to his own use without making a reasonable attempt to find the owner (a). Although the finder may afterwards have intended to appropriate the goods whether the owner was found or not (b), or his master any corn or other food consumable by horses or other animals the servant alleges that he took the same under such circumstances as would constitute an offence punishable under the last-mentioned Act and satisfies the jury thereof, the jury may return a verdict accordingly, and the court is to award such punishment as might be awarded by justices upon a conviction under the Act (ibid).

(o) 2 East, P C 555

(p) R v Walsh (1824), 1 Mood C O 14 (where the prisoner tried to remove a bag from the boot of a coach but did not succeed in getting it entirely out), R v Coslet (1782), 1 Leach, 236 (parcel moved from one end of a waggon to the other), in both cases it was held that larceny had been committed, compare R v Cherry (1781), 1 Leach, 236, n (where the prisoner stood a bale of goods up on end, but apparently did not otherwise remove it from the spot on which it had been placed, this was held not to be such a removal as to constitute larceny).

(q) R v Thompson (1825), Mood. C O 78 (lifting a pocket-book an inch above the top of a pocket), R v Simpson (1854), Dears C O 421, R v Laper (1784), 1 Leach, 320

(r) 1 Hale, P O 508, 533, 2 East, P O 556 (where a case is mentioned in which goods were in a shop tied to a string and the prisoner, intending to steal them, removed them as far as the string would allow, this being held not to be such a severance as to constitute larceny), see, however, R v Simpson, supra. In R v Farrell (1787), 1 Leach, 322, n, the prosecutor, who was carrying a bed, was compelled by the prisoner's threats to put it on the ground, the prisoner intended to steal it, but before he could touch it, he was apprehended. It was held that this was not larceny. See R v Cheeseman (1862), Le & Ca. 140.

(s) Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 9, see p. 373, ante.

(t) R v Peat (1781), 1 Leach, 228, 2 East, P C 557, and see R v Greenaway (1808), 72 J P 389, O O A.

(a) R v Tharborn (1849), 1 Den 387, R v Kerr (1837), 8 C. & P. 176, Merry v. Green (1841), 7 M. & W 623, R v Rowe (1859), Bell, C O 93, R v Mortimer (1908), 72 J. P 349, C O A.

(b) R v Matthews (1873), 12 Cox, C O 489, C O R., R v Preston (1851), 2 Den 353; R v Shea (1856), 7 Cox, C O 147, C O R. (Ir.). R v Christopher (1858), Bell, C O 27; R v Moore (1861), Le & Ca. 1

may afterwards have believed that the owner could be found (c), he cannot be convicted, unless he had both that intention and belief at the time of the finding.

1279 At common law a taking is not felonious if the legal possession of the goods was originally obtained by the accused lawfully and without fraud or trespass, as upon a finding of the goods or upon a delivery in trust for, or on account of, the owner. In such a case, if the person who obtains the goods afterwards fraudulently converts them to his own use, he is not guilty of larceny at common law, unless by some new and distinct act of taking, as by wrongfully severing part of the goods from the bulk, he determines the bailment, and the special property thereby conferred upon him (d).

Larceny by a
bailee.

As regards goods bailed, it is, however, provided by statute (e) that whoever, being a bailee (f) of any chattel, money, or valuable security, fraudulently takes or converts the same to his own use, or the use of any person other than the owner thereof, although he does not break bulk or otherwise determine the bailment, he is guilty of larceny and may be convicted thereof upon an indictment for larceny. This provision does not extend to any offence punishable on summary conviction (g).

An infant may be convicted as a bailee under the above provision (h), so also may a married woman (i), so also may a person who being intrusted with money to buy goods appropriates

(c) R v Yorke (1818), 2 Car & Kir 841, O O R (goods kept in the hope of obtaining a reward), as to which, see also R v Peters (1843), 1 Car & Kir 245 and R v Gardner (1862), Le & Ca 243, R v Glyde (1868), L R 1 O C R 139, R v Deaves (1869), 11 Cox, C C 227, C O R (Ir), R v Knight (1871), 12 Cox, C O 102, C O R, R v Dixon (1855), 7 Cox, C O 35, C O R. In these cases, as there was no bailment, the common law rule prevailed, that to constitute larceny there must have been a felonious intention at the time of the original taking.

The principles which govern the case of larceny of goods found do not apply to articles which are left by passengers in railway carriages. It is the duty of the servants of the railway company to report the finding of such goods to their superiors, and to deliver them up, and if, instead of doing so, they appropriate them to their own use, they are guilty of larceny (R v Pierce (1852), 6 Cox, C C 117, WILLIAMS, J.). The same principle no doubt applies to cab drivers and omnibus conductors (see R v Lamb (1694), 2 East, P O 664, R v Wynne (1786), 1 Leach, 413, and as to the metropolis, London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict c 33), s 11, Metropolitan Public Carriage Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict c 115), s 9 (5), and the order of the Secretary of State made thereunder). As to the duty of a person who finds a stray dog, see Dogs Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c 32), s 4.

(d) 2 East, P O 554, 693 et seq.

(e) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 96), s 3.

(f) As to the various kinds of bailments, see title BAILMENT, Vol I, p 624.

(g) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 3, R v Daynes (1873), 12 Cox, C O 614, C O R. As to what larcenies are punishable on summary conviction, see Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict c 49), s 12, Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict c 22), s 2.

(h) R v McDonald (1885), 15 Q. B D 323, C O R.

(i) R v Robson (1861), Le & Ca 93; see, however, R v Denmour (1861), 8 Cox, C O 440. Any doubt there may have been on the matter seems now disposed of by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c 75), see title HUSBAND AND WIFE. A bailment by contract is not essential; a bailment by licence is sufficient to bring the case within the statute (R v Robson, supra, R v McDonald, supra).

SECT 1
Taking
Property.

either the money or the goods to his own use (k), or one who having received goods for sale or upon which to raise an advance appropriates the proceeds (l)

The deposit of money under such circumstances as to constitute a mere debt, or where the money is to be mixed with other moneys and the same coins are not to be returned, is not a bailment within the meaning of the above provision (m).

Evidence of conversion which would be sufficient to support an action of trover will not necessarily justify a conviction for larceny by a bailee, even, though a fraudulent intention be proved, it must be shown that an act was done by the prisoner inconsistent with the purposes of the bailment and analogous to larceny, and there must be a definite time when the act of conversion can be said to have taken place (n).

Larceny by
a bailee.

A servant having the manual custody of his master's goods is not a bailee of them. His possession is in law the possession of the master, and if he misappropriates the goods, he is guilty of larceny at common law (o).

If a person has the bare use (p) or custody (q) of a thing, or receives goods or money from another who intends to remain present all the time they are in the manual possession of the prisoner, and the owner has no intention to part with the property, such a person is not a bailee (r).

In each of these cases the legal possession of the goods or money remains in the owner, and the person appropriating them is guilty of a common law larceny.

If goods are obtained by fraud from a carrier or a mere

(k) R v Bunkall (1864), Le & Ca 371, R v Aden (1873), 12 Cox, C C 512, O O R

(l) R v De Ban's (1884), 13 Q B D 29, C C R R v Holloway Prison (Governor), Ex parte George (1897), 18 Cox, C C 631, and see R v Richmond (1873), 12 Cox C C 495, O O R, R v Henderson (1870), 11 Cox, C C 593, O O R, R v Tonkinson (1881), 14 Cox, O C 603, C C R, R v Orenham (1876), 13 Cox, C C 349 C O R

(m) R v Haasall (1861), Le & Ca 58, R v Hoare (1859), 1 F & F 647, WIGHTMAN, J, R v Garrett (1860) 2 F & F 14

(n) R v Jackson (1864), 9 Cox, C C 505, where MARTIN, B, held that a prisoner to whom a coat had been lent for a day, and who was found wearing the coat some days afterwards on a ship bound for Australia, had not converted it within the meaning of the statute, see also R v Hecker (1866), 10 Cox, C C 221, R v Cosser (1876), 13 Cox, C C 187, R v Orenham (1876) 13 Cox, C C 349, C O R.

(o) R v Murray (1830), 1 Mood C C 276, R v Jones (1842), Car & M. 611, R v Watt (1850), 2 Den 14, R v Cooke (1871), L R 1 C C R 295. If a servant receives the property for his master and appropriates it before it comes to the possession of his master, the offence is embezzlement. As to larceny and embezzlement by servants, see pp 644, 649, post

(p) 1 Hale, P C 506, 2 East, P C 682

(q) R v Jones (1842), Car & M. 611, CRESSWELL, J, R v Harvey (1840), 9 C & P. 353, ALDERSON, B, R v McNames (1832), 1 Mood C C. 368. But a doubt was expressed in R v Hey (1849), 1 Den 602, 604, as to whether R v McNames was rightly decided on the ground that the prisoner in that case was a general drover and not the servant of a particular employer, and was therefore a bailee. The law with reference to larceny by a bailee had not been altered at this date.

(r) 2 East, R. O. 683; R v Thompson (1862), 9 Cox, C. C. 244, O C. R.

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

custodian, or from the owner's servant who has no general or special authority from his master to sell or to pass the property in the goods, the person so obtaining them is guilty of larceny even though the carrier, custodian, or servant intended or purported to pass the property, for he had no power to do so, both the property and the legal possession remaining in the owner (s)

1280 A taking amounts to larceny if possession is obtained from the owner by trick or by fraud (t), the prisoner at the time when he obtains such possession intending to steal the goods, provided that the owner did not intend to part with his entire property in the goods but only with the temporary possession (a)

Larceny by a
trick.

(s) R v Jackson (1826), 1 Mood. C O 119, R v Longstreeth (1826), 1 Mood. C O 137, R v Prince (1868), L R 1 C O R. 150, R v Robins (1854), Doara. C O 418, R v Sheppard (1839), 9 O & P 121, R v Small (1837), 8 C & P 46, compare R v Stewart (1845), 1 Cox, C O 174, 176 The fraudulent conversion of property or the proceeds thereof by a person intrusted with such property, or who has received it for or on account of any other person, is also a statutory misdemeanour (Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10), s 1) As this offence does not amount to larceny, it is dealt with at p 660, post. As to a fraudulent conversion by a person intrusted with property under a power of attorney, see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 77, p 659, post As to factors or agents fraudulently dealing with property of their principals, see ibid, s 78, and p 658, post

(t) As to obtaining possession by force or by putting the owner in fear, see p 661, post

(a) 1 Hawk P C, c 33, ss 14 et seq, R v Semple (1786), 1 Leach, 420, 424, R v Campbell (1827), 1 Mood C O 179, R v Gilbert (1828), 1 Mood C O 185, R v Stewart (1845), 1 Cox, C O 174, R v Small (1837), 8 O & P. 46, R v Boz (1839), 9 O & P 126, R v Cohen (1851), 2 Den 240, R v Pratt (1830), 1 Mood C O 250, R v Slowly (1873), 12 Cox, C O 269, C O R, R v Russell, [1892] 2 Q B 312, C O R, R v Buckmaster (1887), 20 Q B D 182, C O R, R v Hollis (1883), 12 Q B D 25, C O R The cases illustrating the principle enunciated in the text may be classified as follows —

Possession of goods obtained by a pretended intention to purchase (R v Campbell, supra, R v Boz, supra, R v Cohen, supra, R v Pratt, supra, R v Gilbert, supra; R v Slowly, supra, R v Savage (1831), 5 J & P 143, R v Russell, supra, R v Webb (1850), 5 Cox, C O 154, R v Small, supra, R v Sharpless (1772), 1 Leach, 92)

Possession obtained by a temporary hiring (R v Pear (1779), 1 Leach, 212, R v Cole (1847), 2 Cox, C O 340, R v Semple, supra, R v Janson (1840), 4 Cox, C O 82, R v Brooks (1838), 8 O & P 295)

Possession intrusted for the purposes of sale (R v Waller (1865), 10 Cox, C O 360, and see Oppenheimer v Attenborough, [1907] 1 K B 510, [1908] 1 K B 221, C A., and Oppenheimer v Fraser and Wyatt, [1907] 1 K B 519, [1907] 2 K B 50, C A.)

Possession intrusted for inspection (R v Rodway (1841), 9 O & P 784), of a bull for the pretended purpose of getting it discounted (R v Arkles (1784), 1 Leach, 294), of bank notes for the purpose of getting or giving change (R v Oliver (1811), cited at 2 Leach, 1072, R v Williams (1834), 6 C & P 390, R v Johnson (1851), 2 Den. 310), of money to pay to another person (R v Brown (1856), Dears. C O 616)

Possession obtained by personating another person (R v Kay (1857), 7 Cox, C O 289, C O R, R v Gillings (1858), 1 F & F 36, R v Longstreeth (1826), 1 Mood. C O 137)

Possession obtained by "ringing the changes" (R v McKale (1868), L R. 1 O. C. R. 125, R v Hollis (1883), 12 Q B D 25, C O R., and see R v Greenaway (1908), 72 J. P 369, C O A.).

Cases of "welshing" (R v Robson (1820), Russ. & Ry. 413, R v Buckmaster (1887), 20 Q B D 182, C O R.)

"Ring-dropping" (R v Patch (1782), 1 Leach, 238, R v Marsh (1784),

Spec. 1.
Taking
Property.

If money or goods are obtained by a fraudulent trick or pretence, but the owner, being deceived by the pretence, intends to part with his property in the money or goods, the offence is that of obtaining by false pretences, and not larceny (b)

Husband and
wife.

1281. Every married woman has by statute in her own name against all persons whomsoever, including her husband (subject as regards her husband to the proviso stated below), the same remedies and redress by way of criminal proceedings for the protection and security of her own separate property as if it belonged to her as a feme sole, and it is sufficient to allege in the indictment that the property is her property (c)

A husband may be indicted for stealing the goods of his wife, provided that no criminal proceeding can be taken by any wife against her husband while they are living together in respect of any property claimed by her, nor, while they are living apart, with regard to any act done by the husband, while they were living together, concerning property claimed by her, unless such property has been wrongfully taken by the husband when leaving or deserting or about to leave or desert his wife (d)

Similarly a wife is punishable criminally for stealing the goods of her husband. A wife doing any act with respect to any property of her husband which, if done by the husband with respect to property of the wife, would make the husband liable to criminal proceedings by the wife under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (e), is in like manner liable to criminal proceedings by her husband (f)

---

1 Leach, 345, R v Moore (1784), 1 Leach, 314, R v Watson (1794), 2 Leach, 640

Possession obtained from a servant having no general authority, or no power to pass the property (R v Robins (1854), 6 Cox, C C 420, C O R., R v Wilkins (1789), 1 Leach, 520, R v Stear (1848), 1 Den 349, R v Sheppard (1839), 9 C & P 121, R v Little (1867), 10 Cox, C C 559, in which case, a carman having delivered goods by mistake to the prisoner, it was held that the latter might be convicted of larceny by fraudulently appropriating them, R v Longstreth (1826), 1 Mood C C 137, R v Webb (1850), 5 Cox, C C 154, R v Small (1837), 8 C & P 46)

(b) R v Solomons (1890), 17 Cox, C C 93, C O R., R v Wilson (1837), 8 C & P. 111, R v Carter (1683), 47 J P 759, C O R., R v Colman (1785), 1 Leach, 303, n., R v Harvey (1787) 1 Leach, 467, R v Barnes (1850), 2 Den 59, White v Garden (1851), 10 O B 919 927. This rule applies, where goods are obtained by the forged or pretended order of a customer (R v Adams (1844), 1 Den 38, R v Atkinson (1799), 2 East, P O 673), or where any credit is given to the prisoner or payment made on account by him, though by a cheque which is dishonoured (R v Parkes (1791), 2 Leach, 614, R v North (1861), 8 Cox, C C 433, R v Harvey, supra). If there is either an agreement, or a custom of the particular trade, that goods sold shall be paid for on delivery, and the prisoner fraudulently obtains possession without making the payment, it is larceny (R v Gilbert (1828), 1 Mood C C 185, R v Harvey, supra; and see the cases cited in note (a), p. 633, ante

(c) Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 12. As to the effect of ss. 12 and 16 of this Act in the case of receiving goods stolen by the husband from the wife, or vice versa, see p. 683, and title HUSBAND AND WIFE. As to laying the property in the wife, see R v Murray, [1906] 2 K B 385, C O R.

(d) Ibid., s. 12

(e) 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75.

(f) Ibid., s. 16. The above-mentioned proviso in s. 12 applies equally to

1282. If any person, being a member of a partnership or one of two or more beneficial owners (g) of any money, goods, or other property, steals or embezzles such property, he is by statute (h) liable to be tried, convicted, and punished for the same as if he had not been a member of the partnership or one of such beneficial owners.

Secr. 1.
Taking
Property.

Larceny
by partner or joint owner.

Persons are joint beneficial owners within the meaning of the statute constituting this offence, if they form an association for an object which is not criminal, although by reason of non-compliance with statutory regulations the association does not constitute a legal entity (i).

Any person is a joint beneficial owner for this purpose who has an interest of any kind in the proper disposition or distribution of the property other than that of a mere trustee or agent (k).

1283 A man may be convicted of stealing his own goods, if such goods are in the possession of his bailee and the intention of the accused is either fraudulently to charge the bailee with the loss of the goods or, in cases where the bailee has a right to possession as against the accused, to deprive the bailee of his special property in the goods (l).

Larceny of goods not in the possession of owner

the case of the taking by a wife of the goods of her husband (R v James, [1902] 1 K B 540, 543, C O R), the indictment need not in either case allege that the conditions in the proviso exist, nor need the prosecution prove affirmatively that they do exist in the absence of any evidence offered by the defendant of facts which would establish a defence under the proviso (ibid). At common law the wife could not steal the husband's goods, whether she had committed adultery or not, a person acting in concert with her, if she had not committed adultery, could not at common law be convicted of larceny of her husband's goods, but where an adulterer, acting in concert with the wife, knowingly took the husband's goods, he was held guilty of larceny, the effect of the adultery being to revoke the wife's authority to dispose of her husband's goods (R v Kenny (1877), 2 Q B D 307, R v Featherston (1854), 23 L J (M C) 127, C O R, R v Berry (1859), Bell, C C 95, R v Deer (1862), 32 L J (M C) 33, C O R).

(g) As to trustees, see p 658, post

(h) Larceny Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict c 116), s 1 As to frauds and other crimes committed by members of certain banking co-partnerships within the meaning of the Joint Stock Banks Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict c 96), or formed under the Bank of England Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will 4, c 96), see the Joint Stock Companies Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict c 111), s 2 At common law it was not a criminal offence for one co-owner of goods fraudulently to deprive the other co-owners of them, such co-owner being lawfully in possession (1 Hale, P C 513), but if he took them from a person who was a bailee for all the co-owners, he could be convicted of larceny (R v Bramley (1822), Russ & Ry 478), even though the bailee were himself one of the co-owners (R v Webster (1861), Le & Ca 77, and this is still the law in any case which cannot be brought within the Larceny Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict c 116)).

(i) R v Tankard, [1894] 1 Q. B 548, C O R A society which is not formed for the acquisition of gain is not a co-partnership within the meaning of the section (R v Robson (1885), 16 Q. B D 137, C O R); but if, in that case, the prisoner had been indicted in a second count as one of several joint beneficial owners, the conviction could have been upheld; see R v Tankard, supra, R v Neat (1899), 19 Cox, O. C. 424, C O R.

(k) R. v. Neat, supra.

(l) 4 Just. Inst. tit. 1, s. 10; 1 Hale, P. C. 513, 1 Hawk. P. C., c 33, s. 47; Stafford v. Pooler (1694), Cro. Eliz. 536, R. v. Wilkinson (1821), Russ & Ry. 470; R. v. Bramley (1822), Russ. & Ry. 478; R. v. Wadsworth (1867), 10

SECT. 1

Taking Property.Goods delivered by mistake.

1284 If, by a mistake of the owner, property is delivered to a person to a greater amount than he is entitled to receive, and such person, at the time when he receives it, is aware of the mistake and fraudulently appropriates such property, he is guilty of larceny although he did nothing to cause the mistake (m)

If the person accepting the delivery is ignorant of the mistake at the time of delivery, but upon afterwards discovering it fraudulently appropriates the property, it is uncertain whether or not he is guilty of larceny (n)

The taking.

1285 The taking must be against the will of the owner of the property. But where, with the view of arresting a suspected thief, facilities are intentionally afforded to him for obtaining access to property and he avails himself of such facilities and takes such property, the taking amounts to larceny (o).

(iii) Subjects of Larceny

Value.

1286 An article, to be the subject of larceny, must be of some appreciable value (p), but it need not be of the value of any known coin (q), and it is sufficient, if it is of value only to the prosecutor (r).

At common law, money and all personal chattels in possession, which are by law the subject of property and which are of any definite value, can be the subjects of larceny.

Statutory
larceny

1287 There are many things which could not have been the subject of larceny at common law but have by statute been made the subject of larceny

Land.

1288 Land could not at common law, and cannot now, be the subject of larceny (s)

(cox, O C 557. According to some of the judges in R v Wilkinson (1821), Russ & Ry 470, it is larceny in such a case, even though the intent is to demand not the bailee but some third person. As to stealing goods in the custody of a sheriff, see R v Knight (1906), 73 J P 15, O C A

(m) R v Middleton (1873), L R 2 O C R, 38, R v Flowers (1886), 16 Q B D 643, O C R

(n) R v Ashwell (1885), 16 Q B D 190, O C R, where fourteen judges were equally divided, but in R v Flowers, supra, Lord COLERIDGE, C J, MANISTY, J, and HAWKINS, J, stated that in R v Ashwell none of the judges intended to question the ancient doctrine that an innocent receipt of a chattel and its subsequent fraudulent appropriation do not constitute larceny, see also R v Muchlow (1827), 1 Mood O O 160, R v Davies (1856), Dears O C 640, Cartwright v Green (1803), 8 Ves 405, Merry v Green (1841), 7 M & W 623, R v Eiley (1853), Dears O C 149 (where, however, possession was obtained by a trespass, though an innocent one), Stephen, Digest of the Criminal Law, 5th ed., 261

(o) R v Norden (undated), Fost 129, R v Eggrinton (1801), 2 Leach, 913, R v Williams (1843), 1 Cal & Kir 195, but as to such attempts to entrap a receiver, see p 679, note (z), post

(p) Formerly it appears to have been held that this value must be intrinsic, and not from the relation which the chattel bore to some other thing as in the case of deeds, covenants, and other securities for debts (1 Hawk P O, c 33, s. 35, R v Westbech (1740), 2 Stra 1133), but see now the cases mentioned in the following note in which the articles stolen were pieces of paper of no real intrinsic value

(q) R v Bingley (1833), 5 O & P. 602, GURNEY, B, R v Morris (1840), 9 O & P 249, PARKE, B

(r) R v Clarke (1810), 2 Leach, 1036, 1039

(s) 1 Hale, P C 510. As to the definition of "property" in the Larceny Act, 1861, see ibid., s. 1, and note (a), p 684, post

PART XIII.—OFFENCES AGAINST PROPERTY.

At common law neither deeds relating to land (t) nor the chest in which they are kept (a) can be the subject of larceny, as they savour of the realty and descend to the heir-at-law. But now anyone is by statute (b) guilty of a felony who steals or for any fraudulent purpose destroys, cancels, obliterates or conceals the whole or any part of any document of title to lands (c).

SECT. 1.
Taking Property.
Deeds.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than five or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (d).

1289 Trees, growing crops, fruit, and similar vegetable produce are not, while they are still annexed to the land, the subjects of larceny, but it is larceny at common law to take them after they have been severed from the land either by the owner or by any other person, even the thief himself, provided, in the case of the thief, that the severance and the taking are not one continuous act (e).

Larceny of trees etc

By statute (f) everyone is guilty of felony who steals, or cuts, breaks, roots up, or otherwise destroys or damages with intent to steal, the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, or shrub, or any underwood respectively growing in any park, pleasure ground, garden, orchard, or avenue, or in any ground adjoining or belonging to any dwelling-house, in case the value of the article stolen or the amount of injury done exceeds £1.

(t) 1 Hale, P. C. 510, R v Westheer (1740), 2 Stra. 1133.

(a) 3 Co. Inst. 109.

(b) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 28, see also s. 27, and the definition of "valuable security" in s. 1, p. 642, post. It is sufficient for the indictment to allege that the document is or contains evidence of the title of a person having an interest vested or contingent, legal or equitable, in the real estate to which it relates, and to mention such real estate or some part thereof (ibid.). The words "document of title to lands" include any deed, map, paper, or parchment, written or printed, being or containing evidence of the title or any part of the title to any interest in or out of any real estate (ibid., s. 1). The accused cannot be convicted if he has at any time previously to his being charged with such offence first disclosed such act or offence on oath in consequence of any compulsory powers of any court in any action instituted by a party aggrieved, or if he has first disclosed such act in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court upon the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy (ibid., s. 24). See p. 643, post, where the terms of this protection are more fully stated. The taking of title deeds must be such a taking as would in the case of an ordinary chattel amount to larceny (R v John (1830), 7 C. & P. 324).

(c) The fraudulent purpose should be stated in the indictment (R v Morris (1839), 9 C. & P. 89, ALDERSON, B.).

(d) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 28, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1.

(e) 1 Hale, P. C. 510, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33, s. 21, Lee v Radson (1816), 7 Taunt. 188, 191. It is for the jury to say whether or not the severance and the subsequent taking constituted one continuous act, and if they find that the prisoner severed the tree or other growth with intent afterwards to steal it, but that, being interrupted, he went away and then returned and took it away without ever intending to abandon his possession of it, he cannot be convicted of larceny at common law (see R v Townley (1871), L. R. 1 Q. B. 315, 320). That case had reference to the larceny of dead wild rabbits, but as regards vegetable produce the subject-matter is so fully covered by statute that the question is not now likely to arise.

(f) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96) s. 32.

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

The punishment for this offence is the same as in the case of simple larceny (g)

Anyone who steals etc a tree etc growing elsewhere than in the before-mentioned situations, if the value of the tree etc. or the amount of injury exceeds £5, is guilty of felony and is liable to the same punishment as in the case of simple larceny (h).

If either the value of the tree etc wherever it may have been growing, or the injury done, exceeds one shilling but does not amount to £5, the offender is punishable for a first and second offence upon summary conviction (i) Everyone is by statute (k) guilty of a felony who, having been twice summarily convicted of this offence, commits such offence a third or subsequent time. The punishment is the same as in the case of simple larceny (l).

Larceny of
plants etc.

1290 Everyone who steals, or destroys or damages with intent to steal, any plant, root, fruit, or vegetable production growing in any garden, orchard, pleasure-ground, nursery-ground, or greenhouse, is liable on summary conviction to imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than six months, or to pay over and above the value of the article stolen or the amount of the damage done a sum not exceeding £20 (m) A person who commits a second offence of this kind is guilty of felony and punishable in the same manner as in the case of simple larceny (n)

Larceny of ore or coal
from mines.

1291 To take ore or coal from mines is not larceny at common law, but everyone is by statute (o) guilty of felony who steals, or seizes with intent to steal, the ore of any metal, or any lapis calaminarius (p), manganese or mundick, or any wad, black cawke (a), or black lead, or any coal or cannel coal from any mine, bed or vein thereof

This offence is punishable by imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (b)

(g) As to which, see p 627, ante

(h) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 32 As to the punishment for simple larceny see p 627, ante In cases of this kind where several trees etc. have been stolen or injured with that intent at one and the same time so that the taking was a continuous act, the value of or the damage done to the different trees may be added together to make up the amounts mentioned in the section (R v Shepherd (1868), L R 1 O C R 118)

(i) See title MAGISTRATES

(k) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 33

(l) Ibid

(m) Ibid, s 36. Stealing any part of a live or dead fence, rail, stile, or gate is punishable on summary conviction only (ibid, ss 34, 35) Fruit trees are not plants or vegetable productions within the meaning of s 36 (R v Hodges (1829), Mood. & M. 341) Stealing cultivated roots or plants used for the food of man or beast, or for medicinal, distilling, dyeing, or manufacturing purposes, and growing in land which is not a garden etc., is punishable on summary conviction (s. 37).

(n) Ibid, s 36 As to the punishment of simple larceny, see p 627, ante.

(o) Ibid, s 38

(p) I.e., calamine or ore of zinc

(a) "Cawke" is sulphate of barytes; "wad" is a local name for plumbago.

(b) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c. 96), s. 38. Where mining has been carried on by a lessee from one shaft, and ore or coal has been taken by him illicitly from a number of different adjacent owners, the taking extending over

PART XIII.—OFFENCES AGAINST PROPERTY.

Any person employed in or about any mine is by statute (c) guilty of felony who takes, removes, or conceals any ore of any metal, or any mineral, found or being in such mine, with intent to defraud any proprietor of, or adventurer in such mine, or any workman or miner employed therein

Stat. 1.
Taking
Property.

The punishment is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (d).

1292 Fixtures were not the subject of larceny at common law (e). Anyone is by statute (f) guilty of a felony who steals, rips, cuts, severs, or breaks, with intent to steal, (1) any glass or woodwork belonging to any building whatsoever, or any lead, iron, copper, brass, or other metal, or any utensil or fixture, whether made of metal or of other material or of both, fixed in or to any building whatsoever, or (2) any thing made of metal fixed in any land being private property, or for a fence to any dwelling-house, garden or area, or in any square or street, or in any place dedicated to public use or ornament, or in any burial ground. The punishment is the same as in the case of simple larceny (g).

Larceny of
fixtures.

Upon the trial of an indictment for the statutory offence it must be shown that the prisoner was a party to the actual severance of the fixture. If he stole it after the severance, he cannot be convicted either of the statutory offence or of simple larceny upon an indictment for the statutory offence (h).

1293 Everyone is by statute (i) guilty of felony who steals any chattel or fixture let to be used by him in or with any house or lodging, whether the contract has been made by him or by any person on his behalf.

Larceny by tenants

a considerable period of time, evidence as to the taking from all the adjoining owners is admissible to prove the prisoner's knowledge that he has gone out of his boundary in the particular case which is the subject of investigation (R v Bleasdale (1848), 2 Car & Kir 765), and it would appear that in such a case the indictment may allege a stealing from all the different owners, and that the prosecution will not be called upon to allege upon which taking they will proceed (ibid).

(c) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 39

(d) Ibid

(e) But articles, such as window sashes, not permanently fixed but secured temporarily in their places by laths nailed across them, were not regarded as fixtures within this rule (R v Hedges (1779), 1 Leach, 201)

(f) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 31. In the case of a fixture in a square, street, or place for public use or ornament the indictment need not allege that it is the property of any person (ibid). A cartshed is a "building" within the meaning of the section (R v Worrall (1838), 7 C & P 516, LITTLEDALE, J), the indictment need not allege that the erector to which the fixture was fastened was a "building" if the evidence shows it to have been such (R v Rice (1859), Bell, O O 87). As to what is a dwelling house within the meaning of the section, and evidence of the ownership of it, see R v Brummitt (1861), Le. & Ca. 9, R v Finch (1834), 1 Mood. O O 418. Metal fixed on a post let into the ground is "metal fixed in land" (R v Jones (1858), Dears & B 555). See also R v Cooper (1908), 24 T L R 867, C. C. A.

(g) As to the punishment of simple larceny, see p 627, ante.

(h) R v Gooch (1838), 8 C & P 293

(i) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 74. The tenant being in lawful possession was not guilty of larceny at common law, if he appropriated either a

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, and if the offender is a male under the age of sixteen years, he may be sentenced to a whipping. In case the value of the chattel or fixture exceeds £5, the offender may be sentenced to penal servitude for seven years (k).

If the article alleged to have been stolen is a chattel, the indictment may be in the common form as for larceny, if it is a fixture, the indictment may be in the same form as if the accused were not a tenant or lodger, and in either case the property may be laid in the owner or person letting to hire (k).

Larceny of articles in which no person has any deter-
minate
property.

1294 Articles in which by law no person has any determinate property are not the subject of larceny, either at common law or by statute. A corpse cannot be stolen (l), but a larceny may be committed in respect of the shroud (m) or of the coffin (n). The taking of treasure trove does not amount to larceny (o). A wreck, waif or stray, before it has been seized by the person entitled to it, is not the subject of larceny at common law (p). But by statute (q) anyone is guilty of a felony who plunders or steals any part of such a ship or wreck or any goods or articles belonging thereto.

fixture or a chattel belonging to the landlord and let to be used with the premises (R v Mears (1689), 1 Show 51), unless he had procured his tenancy with a fraudulent intention to steal (R v Munday (1799), 2 Leach, 850, 2 East, P O 594).

(l) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 74.

(l) As to offences in connection with dead bodies, see p 552, ante, and title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III, p 401.

(m) Haynes's Case (1614), 12 Co Rep 113.

(n) 2 East, P O 652. The property in these articles must be laid in the legal personal representatives of the deceased, or, if their names cannot be ascertained, they may be alleged to be the property of a person unknown (ibid, see, however, R v Garlick (1813), 1 Cox, C O 52), if there are no legal personal representatives of the deceased, the property may, it seems, be laid in the President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice (see Court of Probate Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict c 95), s 19, Judicature Act 1873 (36 & 37 Vict c 66) ss 16, 34).

(o) As to concealment of treasure trove, see p 521, ante.

(p) 1 Hawk P O, c 33, s 24.

(q) Larceny Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 64. A person who finds or takes possession of wreck within the limits of the United Kingdom, or brought within those limits if found outside them (Merchant Shipping Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 48), s 72), or of any cargo or other articles from the wreck which are found on shore, is bound to give notice to the receiver of wrecks of the district, and if he is not the owner to deliver up the same to him. If he does not do so, he is liable to a fine of £100, and he also forfeits all claim to salvage and is liable to pay to the owner double the value of the wreck (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), ss 518, 519), see The Zeta (1875), L. R. 4 A & E 460, The Liffey (1867), 6 Asp M L O 255. A person who refuses without reasonable cause to assist a receiver of wreck in the preservation of shipwrecked persons, or of the vessel, cargo, or apparel, when required by him so to assist, or refuses the use of any cart or horses near at hand, is liable to a fine of £100, and the same fine is imposed upon the owner or occupier of any land who impedes persons attempting to save persons or cargo from a wreck in passing over his adjoining land (unless there is a public road equally convenient) or in depositing the cargo on such land for a reasonable time (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), ss 512, 513). A receiver of wreck is entitled to use force for the prevention of plundering, disorder, or obstruction, and may cause any offender to be apprehended (ibid, s. 514).

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen years or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (r).

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

1295 Any person is by statute (s) guilty of felony who takes into any foreign port any vessel stranded, derelict, or otherwise in distress found on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom, or on any tidal water within the limits of the United Kingdom, or any part of the cargo or apparel thereof, or any wreck found within those limits, and then sells the same

Taking
wreck into foreign port.

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (t).

1296 If goods are definitely and intentionally abandoned by the owner, they become the property of the first person who appropriates them, and until they have been so appropriated they cannot be stolen (u)

Animals feræ naturæ, so long as they are alive and have not been reclaimed, are not at common law the subject of larceny, but when they become the property of any person, they are capable of being stolen (x)

Animals *feræ
naturæ*

Choses in action are not the subject of larceny (y) Documents which are the evidence of such rights and the means of reducing them into possession are not the subject of larceny at common law (z) But such documents, if they constitute valuable securities, are by statute the subject of larceny

Choses in action

Everyone who steals, or for any fraudulent purpose destroys, cancels, or obliterates the whole or any part of any valuable security other than a document of title to lands (a) is by statute guilty of felony of the same nature and in the same degree and punishable

Larceny of valuable security

(r) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 64, Penal Servitude Act, 1891, (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(s) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 505.

(t) Ibid

(u) See R v Edwards (1877), 13 Cox, C C 384, C O R, where, diseased pigs having been buried by the owner's orders, and the prisoners having dug up and taken the carcases away, the jury convicted them of larceny, and the court affirmed the conviction

(x) As to how property may be acquired in animals feræ naturæ, see title ANIMALS, Vol I, pp 365 et seq See also the provisions of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 21, with reference to stealing domestic animals and birds, ibid, p 368, and as to the larceny of wild animals which have been killed or reclaimed, ibid, p 370 Fish in a tank or net or any inclosed place where the owner could take them at his will were the subject of larceny at common law (2 East, P C 610), the taking of fish in water running through or being in any land adjoining or belonging to the dwelling-house of any person being the owner of such water or having a right of fishery therein is a statutory misdemeanour punishable on summary conviction (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 24) As to stealing pheasants' eggs, see R v Stride, [1908] 2 K B 617, C O R

(y) By a chose in action is meant a mere abstract or incorporeal right to a thing; see title CHOSE IN ACTION, Vol IV, p 360

(z) This was said to be on the ground that such documents are of no intrinsic value and do not import any property in possession of the person from whom they are taken (1 Hawk P O, c 33, s 22, 2 East, P O. 697)

(a) As to which see p 637, ante

Secr 1
Taking
Property.

in the same manner as if he had stolen any chattel of like value with the share, interest, or deposit to which the security so stolen may relate, or with the money due on the security so stolen or secured thereby and remaining unsatisfied, or with the value of the goods or other valuable thing represented by, mentioned in, or referred to in the security (b)

Definition of
"valuable
security."

The term "valuable security" includes any order, Exchange receipt, acquittance, or other security entitling to or evidencing the title of any person to any share or interest in any public stock or fund of the United Kingdom or of any foreign State, or in any fund of any body corporate, company or society within the kingdom or abroad, or to any deposit in any bank, and also includes any debenture deed, bond, bill, note, warrant, order or other security whatsoever for money or for payment of money, either English or foreign, and any document of title to lands or goods (c).

Definition of
"document
of title to goods."

The term "document of title to goods" includes any bill of lading, India warrant, dock warrant, warehouse keeper's certificate, warrant or order for the delivery or transfer of any goods or valuable thing, bought and sold note, or any other document used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, or authorising or purporting to authorise, either by indorsement or delivery, the possessor of such document to transfer or receive any goods therein mentioned or referred to (d)

Larceny of
will etc.

1297. Everyone is by statute (e) guilty of felony who, either during the life of a testator or after his death, steals, or for any fraudulent purpose destroys, cancels, obliterates (f) or conceals the whole or any part of any will or codicil or other testamentary instrument

(b) Larceny Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96) s 27

(c) Ibid, s 1 The following have been held to be documents of the kind mentioned in the above definition of a "valuable security" —Transfer of shares (R v Smith (1898) 62 J P 231), bills accepted but not signed by the drawer, the prisoner himself being intended to be the drawer (R v Bowerman, [1891] 1 Q B 112, C C R, compare R v Hart (1833), 6 C & P 106), scrip certificates of a foreign railway company (R v Smith (1855), Deans C O 561), post office orders (R v Gilchrist (1841), 2 Mood C C 233, C C R), postal notes or orders (see Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 48), s 59 (1)), a pawnbroker's ticket, as being a warrant for the delivery of goods (R v Morrison (1839), Boll, C O 158), any agreement to pay money, if founded on a valuable consideration appearing on the face of it (R v John (1875), 13 Cox, C C 100) The following have been held not to be such documents.—Re-issuable notes, after they have been paid and before they have been re-issued (R v Clark (1810), Russ & Ry 181, see, however, R v Ranson (1812), Russ. & Ry 232, an unstamped cheque (R v Yates (1827), 1 Mood C. C. 170, R v Pooley (1800), Russ & Ry 12), but in such cases as these the document may be described in the indictment as a piece of paper, see R v Perry (1845), 1 Den. 69; R v Vye (1829), 1 Mood C C 218), see further, as to what amounts to a warrant or order for the payment of money under the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 98), p 719, post As to larceny of documents of title to lands, see p 637, ante

(d) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 1.

(e) Ibid, s 29 In an indictment for this offence it is not necessary to allege that the will etc. is the property of any person (ibid) As to deeds etc. relating to real property, see p 637, ante

(f) As to the forging of wills, see Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), s. 21, p. 734, post

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

The punishment is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (g).

No person may be convicted either of this offence, or of stealing or for any fraudulent purpose destroying, cancelling, obliterating or concealing any document of title to lands, by any evidence whatever, in respect of any act done by him, if he shall at any time previously to his being charged with such offence have first disclosed such act on oath in consequence of the compulsory process of a court in any action or proceeding bonâ fide instituted by any party aggrieved, or in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court upon the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy (h)

1298. Everyone is by statute (i) guilty of felony who steals, or for any fraudulent purpose takes (k) from its place of deposit for the time being, or from any person having its lawful custody, or unlawfully and maliciously cancels, obliterates, injures, or destroys the whole or any part of any record, writ, return, panel, process, affidavit, rule, order, warrant of attorney, or any original document of or belonging to any court of record, or relating to any matter, civil or criminal, begun, depending, or terminated in any such court, or any original document relating to the business of any office or employment under His Majesty and being in any office appertaining to any court of justice or in any of the King's castles, palaces or houses, or in any Government or public office records.

Larceny of

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (l).

1299 Water in a pond or running in a channel is, it seems, not the subject of larceny. Water supplied by a water company to its consumers by pipes at a fixed price is the subject of larceny (m)

Larceny of water

1300 Gas is the subject of larceny if it is fraudulently taken from the pipes of the undertakers (n). If the taking has been continuous over any period of time the whole quantity abstracted may be alleged in one indictment as having been taken on one day (o).

Larceny
of gas.

(g) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 29. Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1

(h) Ibid. As to the meaning of "first disclosed," see R. v. Gunnell (1886), 16 Cox, C. C. 164, C. O. R., cited in note (b) on p. 657, post, and see note (b) on p. 637, ante

(i) Ibid., s. 30

(k) The fraudulent purpose need not be to defraud any person by using the document, an intention to defeat the execution of process is sufficient (R. v. Bailey (1872), L. R. 1 C. O. R. 347)

(l) Ibid., s. 30; Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1. The indictment need not allege that the document is the property of any person.

(m) Ferens v. O'Brien (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 21, see title WATER SUPPLY

(n) R. v. White (1853), Dears. C. C. 203. This is an indictable larceny, even though pecuniary penalties are provided by the Gas Works Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15), s. 18, see title GAS

(o) R. v. Furth (1869), L. R. 1 C. O. R. 172.

s. 101

Taking Property.Electricity
Larceny of yarn etc.

1301 Everyone is by statute (p) guilty of simple larceny who maliciously or fraudulently abstracts, causes to be wasted or diverted, consumes or uses, any electricity.

1302 Everyone is by statute (q) guilty of felony who steals to the value of 10s any woollen, linen, hempen, or cotton yarn, or any article of silk, woollen, linen, cotton, alpaca, or mohair, which is placed or exposed during any process of manufacture in any building, field, or other place

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (r)

Larceny by clerk or servant.

1303 Any person is by statute (s) guilty of felony who, being a clerk or servant, or being employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant, steals any chattel, money, or valuable security belonging to or in the possession or power of his master or employer

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, and, if the offender is a male under the age of sixteen years, he may be sentenced to be whipped (t)

Larceny by public
servant.

1304 Everyone is by statute (u) guilty of felony who, being employed in the public service of the Crown, or being a constable or other person employed in the police, steals any chattel, money, or valuable security belonging to or in the possession or power of His Majesty, or intrusted to or received or taken into possession by him by virtue of his employment

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for fourteen years (v)

It is not necessary to prove the prisoner's appointment to the office, it is sufficient to show that he has acted in it (w)

Stealing from
Post Office

1305 Everyone is by statute (i) guilty of felony who (1) steals a mail bag, or (2) steals from a mail bag or from a post office or

(p) Electric Lighting Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 56), s 23, see title ELECTRIC LIGHTING

(q) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 62 The state or process of manufacture is not complete until the articles are in a marketable condition (R v Woodhead (1836), 1 Mood & R 544)

(r) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 62, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(s) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 67

(t) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 See as to collusive sale by servant of his master's property, R v Hornby (1844), 1 Car & Kir. 305; R v Tideswell, [1905] 2 K B 273, O C R As to a gift by a servant of his master's property see R v White (1840), 9 O & P 344, ERSKINE, J. As to larcenies and embezzlements by servants, see p 649, post

(u) Ibid, s 69

(v) Ibid.

(w) R v Borrett (1833), 6 C & P 124 An under bailiff appointed by the high bailiff of a county court is not a public servant within the meaning of this section, but must be indicted as the servant of the high bailiff (R v Parsons (1838), 16 Cox, O C 498)

(s) Post Office Act, 1803 (3 Edw 7, c 48), s 50.

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

from an officer of the Post Office, or from a mail, any postal packet in course of transmission by post, or (3) steals any chattel or money or valuable security out of a postal packet in course of transmission by post, or (4) stops a mail with intent to rob or search the mail.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (y)

Everyone is by statute (x) guilty of felony who unlawfully takes away or opens a mail bag sent by any vessel employed by or under the Post Office for the transmission of postal packets by contract or unlawfully takes a postal packet in course of transmission by post out of a mail bag so sent

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (a)

Everyone is by statute (b) guilty of felony who, being an officer of the Post Office, steals or embezzles, secretes or destroys, a postal packet in course of transmission by post

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, if the postal packet stolen contains any chattel, or money, or valuable security, the offender is liable to be sentenced to penal servitude for life (c).

(iv) Indictment and Evidence

1306 An indictment for larceny must allege that the defendant feloniously did "steal, take, and carry away" the particular thing (d) alleged to have been stolen, and that such thing was the property of some named or unnamed person

(y) Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 48), s 50, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(z) Post Office Act, 1908 (9 Edw c 7, c 48), s. 51

(a) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891, supra

(b) Post Office Act, 1908, supra, s 55

(c) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891, supra

(d) R v Jones (1838), 5 O & P 288. But see R v Tidswell, [1906] 2 K B 273, C C R. A mistake in the description of the owner of property may be amended, but, if it is not amended, or if the averment of ownership is omitted altogether, the indictment is bad, see R v Ward (1857), 7 Cox, C C 421, C C R. (Ir.), R v Murray, [1906] 2 K B 365, C C R. If the owner of the property is unknown, the indictment should describe the property as belonging to a person to the jurors unknown. If goods formerly belonging to a deceased person are stolen after his death they must be described as the property of the executor of the deceased, if he left a will, or if he died intestate, and no letters of administration have been granted, as the property of the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice (Court of Probate Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict c 95), s 19, and see Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict c 66), ss 16, 34), or, if letters of administration have been granted, of the administrator (see Tharpe v Stallwood (1843), 5 Man. & G 760, Archbold, Criminal Pleading, 23rd ed., 58). If the goods stolen were bailed at the time of the theft, and a third person steals them, the property may be laid either in the bailor or the bailee (R v Todd (1711), 1 Leach, 357, n.; R v. Parker (1714), 1 Leach, 357, n., R. v. Statham (1773), cited at 1 Leach, 357, R v Taylor (1785), 1 Leach, 356, R. v. Woodward (1796), 2 East, P. C 653, R v. Deakin (1800), 2 East, P. C 653; R. v. Remnant (1807), Russ. & Ry. 138, R. v. Bird (1839), 9 C & P. 44; R. v.

NOTE 1
Taking
Property

Roue (1859), Ball, C C 93) Anyone who has possession, actual or constructive, of the chattels may be alleged as the owner (R v Roue, supra, R v Wymer (1830), 4 C & P 391, R v Cain (1841), Car & M 309; refer also to R v Stride, [1908] 1 K B 617) A bailee who has parted by mistake with the possession of a chattel is still the owner, and may be so described (R v Vincent (1852), 2 Den 464) Goods cannot be laid as in the ownership of a servant who has the bare charge only of them (R v Hutchinson (1820), Russ & Ry 412, R v Green (1856), Dears & B 113); but see R v Rudick (1838), 8 C & P 237) If a servant or other person has the possession of the goods, as when they are intrusted to his custody and disposal, he may be described as the owner (R v Deakin (1800), 2 Leach, 862, R v Burgess (1863), Le & Ca 299) If a bailor is indicted for stealing his own goods from his bailee, the ownership in the goods must then be laid in the bailee (R v Wilkinson (1821), Russ & Ry 470) Goods let with furnished lodgings should be described as the property of the lodger (R v Belstrad (1820), Russ & Ry 411, R v Brunswick (1824), 1 Mood C C 26), except when they are stolen by the lodger, in which case they should be described as the property of the owner or of the person letting them (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 74 R v Healey (1824), 1 Mood C C 1, R v Hurrell (1825), Ry & M 296) Goods seized by the sheriff under a writ of fiat facias may, until they are sold, be described as the property of the execution debtor (R v Eastall (1822), 2 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed, 264, 320), but they may also, it seems, be described as the goods of the sheriff (see R v Knight (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 186) Clothes and other necessaries supplied by a parent to a child under age may be described either as the property of the parent or of the child, but are best described as the property of the child (Anon (1701), 2 East, P C 654, R v Foregate (1787), 1 Leach, 463, R v Hughes (1842), Car & M 593) Clothes and other articles worn by a married woman and other goods in the possession of a married woman, if they are not her separate property, should be described as belonging to her husband (1 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed, 237), the separate property of a married woman should be described as belonging to her and not to her husband (R v Murray, [1906] 2 K B 385, C C R) If the goods of one person are stolen by a thief and are afterwards stolen by another thief, they may be described as the property of the rightful owner, unless they have been sold in market overt (see p 686, post, 2 East, P C 654, R v Wilkins (1789), 1 Leach, 520, at p 522, and Pollock and Wright, Possession in the Common Law, 152) It has been said that such goods may be also described as the property of the first thief (1 Hale P C 307) If a person receives goods on account of someone else and steals them, the goods should be described as the property of the person on whose account they are received (R v Rudick (1838), 8 C & P 237), if the thief receives them on account of himself and some other person, the goods should be described as the property of the other person (R v Barnes (1866), L R 1 C C R 45), and see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), ss 80, 81, Larceny Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict c 116), s 1, Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10), R v Robson (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 137, C C R) In indictments for stealing or embezzling property vested in the trustee of a bankrupt by virtue of his appointment the property may be laid in "the trustee of the property of —, a bankrupt," without inserting the name of the trustee But in indictments against a bankrupt under the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict c 62), Part II., s 11, for concealing etc his property, the property must be described as the property of the bankrupt (see Archbold, Criminal Pleading, 23rd ed, 1140) If property belongs to a corporation aggregate, it must be described as belonging to the corporation by its corporate name (R v Patrick (1783), 1 Leach, 253, see 10 Co Rep 29 b Oro Elis 351, Ben. Abr Corporations, C, 3, R v Frankland (1863), Le & Ca 276) If the property belongs to an incorporated company which is in liquidation, but the liquidator has not taken possession of the property or dealt with it as his, the property should be laid in the company (R v Bell (1877), 13 Cox, C C 623, C C R) If property belongs to, or is in the possession of more than one person, whether partners in trade, joint tenants, parceners or tenants in common, it may be described as belonging to such persons or to one of such persons and another or others, as the case may be (Criminal Law Act, 1828 (7 Geo 4, c. 64), s 14), see R v Boulton (1833), 5 C. & P 537, R v Gaby (1810), Russ. & Ry. 178; R v Scott (1801), Russ. & Ry. 13. If a joint owner,

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

tenant in common, or partner is indicted for an offence in respect of the property of which he is joint owner etc., and it is necessary to aver to whom the property belongs, the property should be described as belonging to one or more of the other joint owners etc. other than the defendant and to another or others (see R. v. Webster (1861), Le. & Ca. 77). The property in bells and other goods belonging to a church may be laid in the parishioners, or, it seems, in the churchwardens (1 Hale, P. O. 512). In R. v. Wortley (1846), 1 Den. 162, it was held that the property in a collecting box was rightly laid in the vicar and churchwardens. The property in the church may be laid in the incumbent (see 2 East, P. O. 651). As to lead stolen from a vault in a churchyard, see R. v. Garlick (1843), 1 Cox, C. O. 52. The property in the goods in a dissenting chapel vested in trustees should be laid in the trustees or in one or more of them (R. v. Boulton (1833), 5 C. & P. 537). In indictments for stealing or embezzling property belonging to banking co-partnerships formed under the Country Bankers Act, 1826 (7 Geo. 4, c. 46), or for any fraud, forgery, or offence committed against or with intent to defraud such co-partnerships, the property may be described as belonging to one of the public officers of such co-partnerships, and the name of any one of such public officers may be used in all indictments instead of the names of the persons forming the co-partnership (Country Bankers Act, 1826 (7 Geo. 4, c. 46), s. 9). The property may also in such a case be laid in one of the members of the co-partnership and others under the Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo. 4, c. 64), s. 14 (R. v. Pritchard (1861), Le. & Ca. 34, see 1 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed. 30). See also, as to joint stock banking companies, Joint Stock Companies Act, 1810 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 111). The property in money, goods, chattels, securities for money, and all other effects belonging to a friendly society, or to any branch of such society, may be laid in the trustees for the time being in their proper names as trustees for the society or branch, without any further description (Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 25), s. 51, R. v. Marks (1866), 10 Cox, C. O. 367). The property in money etc. belonging to a registered trade union may be laid in the person or persons for the time being holding the office of trustee or trustees, in his or their proper name or names, as trustees of such trade union, without any further description (Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 8, Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22), s. 3), so as to the property of trustee savings banks (Trustee Savings Banks Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 87), s. 10, see R. v. Bull (1845), 1 Cox, C. O. 137) and loan societies (Loan Societies Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 110), s. 8).

County property, if vested in the county council of the administrative county in which the property is, should be laid in "the county council of ——" (Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 3 (iv), and see R. v. Hunting (1908), 1 Cr. App. Rep. 177). Other county property not so vested may be laid in the inhabitants of the county (Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo. 4, c. 64), s. 15). Property in prisons and the things therein vested in the Prison Commissioners should be laid in the Prison Commissioners (Prison Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), s. 48). Property of the guardians of the poor of every union formed under the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76), and of every parish placed under the control of a board of guardians by virtue of that Act, should be laid in the "guardians of the poor of the —— union" (or "of the parish of ——, in the county of ——") (Union and Parish Property Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 69), s. 7, Poor Law Amendment Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 57), s. 16). Property procured or provided for the use of the poor of any parish, township, or hamlet, if such property is not vested in the guardians of the poor of a union, may be laid in "the overseers for the time being" of the parish, township, or hamlet, without stating or specifying the names of any of them (Poor Relief Act, 1815 (56 Geo. 3, c. 137), s. 1, R. v. Went (1818), Russ. & Ry. 359, Doe d. Norton v. Webster (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 442). Other parish property in a rural parish, if vested in the parish council, may be laid in "the parish council of ——" or if under the control of the parish meeting, may be laid in "the chairman of the parish meeting and the overseers of the parish of ——" (Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 5, 52 (5)). In an indictment against a collector or overseer of a parish for embezzling money collected by him from the ratepayers the property in the money should be laid in the inhabitants of the parish, and the names of the inhabitants need not be specified (Poor Law Amendment Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 103), s. 15, R. v. Smallman,

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.
Counts.

1307 Several counts may be inserted in the same indictment against the same person for any number of distinct acts of stealing, not exceeding three, which may have been committed by him against the same person within six months from the first to the last of such acts, and the prosecution may proceed at the trial upon all of them (e).

If it appears at the trial that the property, alleged in the indictment to have been stolen at one time, was taken at different times, the prosecution will not be required to elect upon which taking they will proceed, unless it appears that there were more than three takings, or that more than six months elapsed between the first and the last of them, otherwise the prosecution must elect upon which three charges occurring within six months they will proceed (f).

[1897] 1 Q B 4, C O R ) In an indictment for larceny of meat bought for the use of inmates of a county asylum, the property should be laid in the county council, not in the visiting committee (R v Hunting (1908), 73 J. P 12, C O A )

The property in materials, tools or implements, provided for making, altering, or repairing any highway may be laid in the local authority in whom the highway is vested—i.e., as to main roads and county bridges outside London, the county council in whom the highway is vested (Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 41), s 11 (6)), as to main roads and other highways in London outside the City, the metropolitan borough council (London Government Act, 1899) (62 & 63 Vict c 14), s 6), as to highways in the City of London, the City Corporation (City of London Sewers Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict c 44), City of London Sewers Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict c cxxxiii), s 5), as to highways outside London in boroughs, the town council, in urban districts, the urban district council (Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 55), ss 141, 149), in rural districts the rural district council (Highway Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict c 61), s 11, Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict c 73), s 25) As to bridge approaches and embankments vested in the London County Council, see London Government Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict c 14), s 6) The property in any sewer or other matter within or under the view, cognisance, or management of commissioners of sewers may be laid in the commissioners of sewers within or under whose view etc. the property may be, and the names of the commissioners need not be specified (Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo 4, c 64), s 18)

In indictments for stealing etc. clothes, linen, or other goods belonging to the Chelsea Hospital, or the commissioners of the hospital, the property may be laid in "the lords and others, commissioners of the royal hospital for soldiers at Chelsea in the county of Middlesex" (Chelsea and Kilmainham Hospitals Act, 1826 (7 Geo 4, c 16), s 35)

In indictments for stealing post letters etc., and for offences in respect of telegraphic messages sent by or intrusted to the Postmaster-General, the property in such letters and messages may be laid in "His Majesty's Postmaster-General (Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7 c 48), s 73)

The property in moneys, chattels or valuable securities stolen or embezzled by persons in the public service, or by constables or other persons employed in the police of any county, city, or borough, district, or place, may be laid in the King (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), ss 69, 70) and see as to officers in the customs, Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 46), s 29.

(e) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 5 It is usual, and apparently necessary, that the second and third counts of the indictment should state expressly that the offences charged in them were committed within six months, although the dates may be stated, otherwise the prosecution will be confined to one charge (R v Lonsdale (1864), 4 F. & F. 56, 59), see, however, R v Nicholls (1904), 68 J P 452, C O R., in which a large number of different takings were alleged in one count, no date being stated

(f) Ibid., s 6 It is not necessary to allege any date in the indictment (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), s. 24), nor will the

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

Evidence.

1308. On an indictment for larceny the prosecution must prove that the goods mentioned in the indictment were the property of the person who is alleged in the indictment to be the owner, and that defendant took the goods away and that he took them away with a dishonest intent. It must also appear that the goods were such as may be the subject of larceny either at common law or by statute, and that they were taken from the owner against his will.

Evidence that the defendant was seen to take the goods in question is not essential, it is sufficient if he was found in possession of stolen property shortly after the theft, in such a case the jury are generally warranted in concluding that he stole the goods or came by them dishonestly, unless he gives a satisfactory explanation to show how he came by the goods. The weight of such a presumption depends upon the nature of the thing stolen, and the length of time which has elapsed since the stealing (g).

So also if upon the trial of a person for larceny it is proved that he took the property in such manner as to amount in law to embezzlement, the jury may return as their verdict that he is not guilty of larceny but is guilty of embezzlement, and he is thereupon to be punished as if he had been indicted for the latter offence.

No person tried for larceny or embezzlement is liable to be afterwards prosecuted for larceny or embezzlement on the same facts (h).

indictment be quashed, although it appears by the evidence that there were more than three separate takings, but upon such evidence being given the prosecution may be required to elect upon which three they will proceed (R v. Nicholls (1904), 68 J 13 452, C C R). If there has been a continuous taking the court will not compel the prosecution to elect (R v. Bleasdale (1818), 2 Car. & Kir 765, R v. Firth (1869) 11 Cox, C C 234, 238, 240, C C R, R v. Hennood (1870), 11 Cox, C C 526, C C R).

An indictment for larceny may be in the following form—"Worcestershire to wit The jurors [for our lord the King] upon their oath present that John Jones on the first day of February in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and nine, [in the parish of — in the said county] one silver watch of the goods and chattels of James Smith feloniously did steal, take and carry away against the peace, etc."

(g) See Anon (1826), 2 C & P 459, R v. Adams (1829) 3 C & P 800, R v. Cockin (1836), 2 Lewin 235, R v. Hall (1845), 1 Cox, C C 231, R v. Hewlett (1843), 3 Russell on Crimes, 355—6, n, R v. Cooper (1852), 3 Car & Kir 318, R v. Harris (1860), 8 Cox, C C 333, R v. Knight (1864), Le & Ca 378, R v. Evans (1847), 2 Cox, C C 270, R v. Lungmead (1864), Le & Ca 427, R v. Partridge (1836), 7 C & P 551, R v. Smith (1862), 3 F & F 123, R v. Hornby (1844), 1 Car & Kir 305, R v. Tidswell, [1905] 2 K B 273, C C R, and p 681, post. As to a dishonest gift by the servant of his master's property, see R v. White (1840), 9 C & P 344, EPSKINE, J.

(h) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 72. In R v. Gorbett (1857), Dears & B 166, it was held upon a similar section in the repealed Criminal Procedure Act, 1851, supra, s 13, that although a prisoner indicted for stealing may be convicted of embezzlement, yet he cannot be convicted of stealing if there is only evidence of embezzlement, and that in such a case a conviction for larceny or a general verdict of guilty upon an indictment for larceny must be quashed. This decision makes it still desirable to consider the distinguishing features between larceny by a servant and embezzlement, notwithstanding the beneficial provisions of s 72 and the fact that the punishment for the two offences is the same. But having regard to the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw 7, c 23), s 5 (2), R v. Gorbett would probably not now be followed in the Court of Criminal Appeal, as that court would in such a case have the power to substitute a verdict of embezzlement for one of larceny.

SECT. 1.

Taking Property.*Embezzlement.SUB-SECT. 2 — Embezzlement.

1309. A servant who steals moneys or goods after they have come to the possession of his master, although they may be in the servant's custody, is guilty of larceny; but a servant who fraudulently intercepts moneys or goods before they come into his master's legal possession and converts them to his own use, commits the offence of embezzlement (i)

1310. By statute (h) anyone who, being a clerk or servant, or being employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant, fraudulently embezzles any chattel, money, or valuable security (l) delivered to or received or taken into possession by him for or in the name or on the account of his master or employer, or any part thereof, is deemed to have feloniously stolen the same from him, although such property was not received into the possession of the master or employer otherwise than by the actual possession of his clerk, servant, or other person so employed.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, and if the offender is a male under the age of sixteen years, he may be sentenced to a whipping (m)

Verdict.

1311 If upon the trial of a person indicted for embezzlement it is proved that he took the property in such manner as to amount in law to larceny, he is not entitled to be acquitted, but the jury may return as their verdict that he is not guilty of embezzlement, but is guilty of simple larceny, or of larceny as a clerk, or as a person employed in the public service or in the police, as the case may be, and he is then punishable as if he had been convicted on an indictment for such larceny (n)

Charging different embezzle-ments in one indictment

1312 The prosecution may charge in the indictment and proceed against the offender for any number of distinct acts of embezzlement, not exceeding three, which may have been committed against the same master or employer within six months (o)

(i) There was some doubt whether in certain cases a taking by a servant from his master was punishable as larceny at common law (see stat. (1529) 21 Hen. 8, c. 7), embezzlement was not so punishable, the original taking being lawful, and the goods never having come into the actual possession of the master (1 Hale, P. C. 668, R. v. Bazeley (1799), 2 Leach, 835)

(h) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 68.

(l) For the definition of "valuable security," see p. 642, ante

(m) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 68, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1. The offence is triable at quarter sessions

(n) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 72, R. v. Rudge (1874), 13 Cox, C. C. 17, C. C. R.

(o) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 71, and see the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), s. 18. The three offences must be charged in different counts, and the date of each offence is the date of the embezzlement, which may be subsequent to the date of receipt; the indictment must allege in terms that the three sums were embezzled within six months (R. v. Purchase (1842), Car. & M. 617, PATTERSON, J.; R. v. Noake (1848), 3 Car. & Kir. 630, CRESSWELL, J.). Upon an indictment for embezzling money,

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

If more than three acts of embezzlement are charged in one indictment, or if sums are alleged to have been received on one day and the evidence shows that they were received on several days the prosecution will be required to elect on which charge they will proceed (a) But where it is the prisoner's duty to account at fixed times for his aggregate receipts to date, each failure to account constitutes one act of embezzlement, and three of such embezzlements, if within six months, may be charged in the indictment, and the aggregate receipts for which he should have accounted at each of such periods may be proved (b)

If the offence relates to any money or any valuable security, it is sufficient to allege the embezzlement to be of money or a valuable security without specifying any particular coin or valuable security

1313 The accused may be convicted, although the coin or valuable security was delivered to him in order that some part of the value thereof should be returned to the person delivering it or to some other person and such part has been returned accordingly (c). There must be evidence that specific sums have been received and have been embezzled and not accounted for It is not sufficient to show a general deficiency without proving the specific sums, or some of them, constituting such deficiency (d)

To rebut a defence that errors in a clerk's account were accidental or innocent, evidence may be given of other similar errors by the prisoner in his own favour (e)

1314 A clerk or servant is a person under the control and bound to obey the orders of his master He may be a clerk or servant without being bound to devote his whole time to this service, but if he is bound to devote his whole time to it, this is strong evidence of his being under control (f)

What is a clerk or servant.

A person who is employed to get orders and receive money, but who is at liberty to get the orders and receive the money when and where he thinks proper, is not a clerk or a servant (g)

if the evidence shows that the prisoner received a cheque, it must also be proved that he cashed it or attempted to do so (R v Kenna (1868), L R 1 C O R 113), upon an indictment charging the embezzlement of money the prisoner cannot be convicted of embezzling goods (R v Charles (1902), 69 J P 150, C O R )

(a) R v Williams (1834), 6 C & P 626, and see p 648, ante

(b) R v Balls (1871), L R 1 C O R 328 (where thirty one separate sums which the prisoner had received and not accounted for were proved, and the conviction was affirmed)

(c) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 71

(d) R v Jones (1838), 8 C & P 288, ALDERSON, B., R v. Chapman (1813), 1 Car & Kir 119, WILLIAMS, J., R v Wright (1858), Dears & B 431, R v Wulstenholme (1869), 11 Cox, C C 313, BRETT, J., see, however, R v Lambert (1847), 2 Cox, C C 309, HIRLE, J., R v Grove (1835), 7 C & P 635, 1 Mood C C 447 (where a contrary conclusion seems to have been arrived at by eight judges against seven), is not now considered to be law See the observations of ALDERSON, B., on this case in R v. Jones, supra, also R v Meach (1856), 7 Cox, C C 60, 68

(e) R v Richardson (1860), 2 F & F 343, R v Proud (1861), 14 & Os. 97, R v Stephens (1888), 18 Cox, C C 387, C C R.

(f) R v Negus (1873), L R 2 C C R 34, 37

(g) R v Negus, supra, R v Lowers (1866), L R 1 C O R 41, 48, R v Mayle (1868), 11 Cox, C C 159, R v. Marshall (1870), 11 Cox, 490.

SECT 1

Taking
Property

What constitutes embezzlement.

Whether the accused was acting as a clerk or servant is a question of fact for the jury (h)

1315 It is not a criminal offence to embezzle the moneys of an unlawful and criminal society (i) But the members of a society

O C R, R v Hall (1875), 13 Cox, O C 49, O C R, R v Walker (1858), 8 Cox, O C 1, O C R, R v May (1861), 1 Le & Ca 13 In the following cases the accused were held to be clerks or servants or acting as such — R v Stuart, [1894] 1 Q B 310, O C R (director of company employed to collect the company's moneys), R v Mellish (1805), Russ & Ry 80 (an apprentice), R v Squire (1818), Russ & Ry 319 (accountant and treasurer to overseers), R v Hartley (1807), Russ & Ry 139 (captain of barge authorised to sell coal), R v Tite (1861), Le & Ca 29, O C R, R v Bailey (1871), 12 Cox, O C 56, O C R (commercial traveller paid by commission and allowed to obtain orders for others), R v Gibson (1861) 8 Cox, O C 436 (solicitor employed at a salary to collect rents and manage property), R v Thomas (1853), 6 Cox, O C 403 (a collier allowed to sell coal but not obliged to do so), R v Spencer (1815), Russ & Ry 299, R v Winnall (1851), 5 Cox, O C 326, R v Hughes (1832), 1 Mood O C 370 (a person only occasionally employed), R v Batty (1842), 2 Mood O C 257, R v Turner (1870), 11 Cox, O C 551, R v Carr (1811), Russ & Ry 198 (a person employed also by others), but see the observations of PARKER, B, in R v Goodbody (1838), 8 C & P 665, R v Foulkes (1875), L R 2 C O R 150 (son assisting father who was employed by prosecutors), R v Wortley (1851), 5 Cox, O C 382, O C R, R v McDonald (1861), 1 Le & Ca 85 (a person partly paid by a share of profits), R v Proud (1861), Le & Ca 97, R v Hall (1836), 1 Mood O C 474, R v Miller (1842), 2 Mood O C 249 (member of friendly society employed to receive weekly payments the property of the society being vested in trustees), but see R v Loose (1860), 29 L J (M C) 132, O C R, R v Marsh (1862), 3 F & F 527, R v Bren (1863), Le & Ca 346, R v Tyree (1869) L R 1 C C R 177, R v Flanagan (1867), 10 Cox, C C 561 (a broker exclusively employed at a salary to distain), R v Solomons (1909), 25 T L R 747, O C A (the driver of a taxicab) The following were held not to be clerks or servants or employed in that capacity R v Barnes (1859), 8 Cox, O C 129 (a debtor employed by trustee under deed of assignment), R v Hoare (1859), 1 F & F 617 (a person employed or authorised to receive rents gratuitously), R v Goodbody (1838), 8 C & P 665 (cattle drover permitted to sell), R v Burton (1829) 1 Mood O C 237 (a person employed to collect an offertory), R v Freeman (1833), 5 C & P 534, R v Nettleton (1850) 1 Mood O C 259 (a person having an isolated authority to receive money), but see R v Hughes (1832), ibid 370, R v Tyree (1869), L R 1 C C R 177 (the treasurer of a friendly society), R v Gibbs (1855), 6 Cox, O C 455, O C R (a bailee)

An assistant overseer in a rural parish, though appointed by the parish council, is the clerk or servant of the inhabitants of the parish, and should be so described in the indictment (Poor Law Amendment Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c 103) s 15, R v Watts (1837), 7 Ad & El 461, 469, see and compare R v Sampson (1846), 1 Cox, C C 355, R v Carpenter (1866), L R 1 O C R 29, R v Smallman, [1897] 1 Q B 4, O C R.), and it is submitted that where in a municipal borough or urban district the appointment of assistant overseers either has or has not been conferred on the borough or district council under the Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict c 72), s 33 (1), such an officer should still be described as the servant of the inhabitants notwithstanding R v Coley (1887), 16 Cox, O C 226, O C R, which case, however, was not cited in R v Smallman, supra

If the agreement of service is in writing, and is in existence, the writing must be put in evidence (Re Clapton (1848), 3 Cox, O C 126) In most cases, such as those in which it was held that the prisoner could not be convicted of embezzlement on the ground that he was not acting as clerk or servant to the prosecutor, he may now be indicted under the Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10), p 660, post, for the fraudulent conversion of the property received see e.g. R v Lord (1905), 69 J P 467, C C R As to officers of a local marin, heard, see Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c 607), s 248

(h) R v Chater (1861), 9 Cox, O C 1.

(i) R v Hunt (1838), 8 O & P 642

SECT. 1
Taking
Property.

which does not exist for a criminal purpose, but which is irregularly constituted (k), or one of the objects of which is in restraint of trade (l), may be the joint beneficial owners of property, and such property may be the subject of embezzlement.

To constitute embezzlement the property must have been received by the accused for, or in the name or on account of, the employer of the accused (m). If it has already been in the employer's possession (n), or, having been in the possession of any other clerk or servant on behalf of the master, is given by such clerk or servant to the prisoner to be paid or delivered to some person on account of the employer and the prisoner misappropriates it, the offence is not embezzlement (o).

If the property is in the possession of another clerk or servant of the employer, and is delivered by him to the prisoner to deliver to the employer, and the prisoner misappropriates it, he commits embezzlement (p).

The crime of embezzlement is complete when the servant fraudulently misappropriates the property, and he is not necessarily entitled to be acquitted because he has made true and correct entries in his master's accounts (q). But if the money received for the employer is accounted for and not denied, the fact of not paying it over without some evidence of fraudulent intent is not sufficient proof of the felony (r).

(k) R v Tankard, [1894] 1 Q B 548, C C R

(l) R v Stainer (1870), L R 1 C C R 230

(m) Larceny Act, 1861 (21 & 23 Vict c 90), s 68, R v Beaumont (1851), Deans C C 270, R v Harris (1854), Deans C C 344, R v Thorpe (1858), Deans & B 562, R v Gale (1876), 2 Q B D 141, C C R. If the receipt by the prisoner is wholly wrongful, being in his own name and on his own account, as where the prisoner earned money in his own name by a wrongful or dishonest user of his master's property, the offence is not embezzlement (R v Cullum (1873), L R 2 C C R 28, R v Beau 1877), 3 Q B D 131, C C R).

(n) R v Hayward (1841), 1 Car & Kir 518, R v Reed (1854), 6 Cox, C C 284, 289, C C R. In these cases the goods had been put down by the prisoner at his master's door or placed by him in the master's cart, and it was held that although the prisoner still remained in personal possession of the goods, his exclusive possession had been so far determined that the goods had come into the master's constructive possession and that the offence was larceny and not embezzlement.

(o) R v Murray (1830), 1 Mood C C 276, R v Hawkins (1850), 4 Cox, C C 224, C C R, R v Wright (1858), Deans & B 431. In such cases the offence is larceny, and the prisoner may be convicted of that offence (see p 641, ante), or he may be indicted for a misdemeanour under the Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10).

(p) R v Masters (1848), 1 Den 332

(q) R v Guelder (1860), 8 Cox, C C 372, C C R, see also R v Foster (1856), 7 Cox, C C 204, C C R, R v White (1839), 8 C & P 742, R v Jackson (1841), 1 Car & Kir 384, R v Davison (1855), 7 Cox, C C 158, 162, 163. It appears impossible to reconcile with these cases R v Jones (1837), 7 C & P 833, in which BOLLAND, B, is reported to have said that for a clerk to put the money in his own pocket and make no entry was not sufficient evidence of embezzlement, and R v Creed (1843), 1 Car & Kir 63, where ERKINE, J., held that a clerk who had rendered a true account of money which he had received, and did not pay it over but absconded, could not be convicted of this offence, see also R v Winnall (1851), 5 Cox, C C 326.

(r) R v Hodgson (1828), 3 C & P 422, VAUGHAN, B

SMOT. 1

Taking
Property.

If the prisoner does not deny the receipt or appropriation of the property which he is accused of embezzling, but acknowledges that he received it and alleges a right, or an excuse for detaining the property, unless it is clear that such allegation is merely a pretence, he should not be convicted of embezzlement(e).

Where
embezzlement
committed

1316 The embezzlement is committed in the place where the accused person has refused to account (t), or, if there is no evidence of fraudulent embezzlement except the non-accounting, in the place where he ought to have accounted and failed to do so (a), or has accounted falsely (b), or in the place where he received and misappropriated the property in question (c)

Embezzlement by officer etc of Bank of England.

1317 Any officer or servant of the Bank of England or of the Bank of Ireland is by statute (d) guilty of felony who, being intrusted with any bond, deed, note, bill, dividend warrant, or warrant for payment of any annuity or interest or money, or with any security, money, or other effects (e) of such bank, or having any such property of any other person lodged or deposited with such bank or with him as an officer or servant thereof, secretes, embezzles, or runs away with the same or any part thereof

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (f)

Embezzle-
ment by person in the King's service,
police etc.

1318 Whoever, being employed in the King's public service, or being a constable or other person employed in the police of any county, city or place, and intrusted by virtue of such employment with the custody, management, or control of any chattel, money, or valuable security, embezzles any chattel, money, or valuable security intrusted to or received or taken into possession

(a) See R v Norman (1842) Car & M 501, CRESSWELL, J

(t) R v Murdock (1851), 5 Cox, C C 360, C C R, R v Taylor (1803), 2 Leach, 974. As to place of trial, see p 280, note (r), ante

(a) R v Davison (1855), 7 Cox, C C 158, 162, and see R v Rogers (1877), 3 Q B D 28, C C R, at p 40

(b) R v Murdock, supra, R v Rogers, supra, but not in a place where he has accounted truly and in which he did not receive the money alleged to be embezzled, there being no evidence to show that, although he lived there, he had taken the money to that place (R v Treadgold (1878), 14 Cox, C C 220, C C R.)

(c) R v Hobson (1803) Russ & Ry 56, R v Rogers, supra, at pp. 40, 41.

(d) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 73 Documents to which a bank clerk merely has access, but to which his duty has no relation, are not documents intrusted to him within the meaning of this section (R v Bakewell (1802), Russ. & Ry 35)

(e) Documents issued as Exchequer bills, but invalid as such from the want of a proper signature, are such "effects" (R v Aslett (1804), Russ & Ry. 67)

(f) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 73, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s. 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

SECT 1.
Taking
Property

by him by virtue of his employment, or in any manner fraudulently applies or disposes of the same to his own use or benefit, or for any purpose whatsoever except for the public service, is by statute deemed to have feloniously stolen the same from the King (g).

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (h).

Such person may be indicted either in the place where he is apprehended, or is in custody, or in which he has committed the offence. In the indictment the property may be laid in the King.

SUB-SECT 3 — Fraudulent Misappropriation by Directors, Trustees etc

1319 Everyone is by statute (i) guilty of a misdemeanour who, being a person authorised to receive money to arise from the sale of any annuities or securities purchased or transferred under the provisions of Part V of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (l), or any dividends thereon, or any such other money as is therein mentioned, appropriates the same otherwise than is directed by that Act or by the Treasury in pursuance thereof.

Misappropriation of annuities etc

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (l).

1320 Any director, member, or public officer of any body corporate or public company is by statute guilty of a misdemeanour (m) who fraudulently (n) takes or applies for his own use or benefit, or for any use or purposes other than the use or purposes of such body corporate or public company, any of its property.

Misappropriation by directors etc

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more

(g) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 70. As to larceny by such officers, see s 69, p 644, ante. For the definition of "valuable security," see p 642, ante. A person employed by an inspector of prisons to collect contributions due from the parents of children committed to reformatory and industrial schools is employed in the King's public service (R v Graham (1875), 13 Cox, C C 57, C C R). An assistant bailiff appointed by the high bailiff of a county court is not a person employed in the public service, but is the servant of the high bailiff and must be indicted as such (R v Parsons (1888), 10 Cox, C C 498). By the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 29, any moneys, chattels, or valuable securities received by any officer, clerk or other person in the service of the customs, either as duties or in virtue of his office or employment or otherwise for the use and service of His Majesty or of any public department, are to be deemed to be moneys, chattels, or valuable securities for the public service, and are to be considered as such within the meaning of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), and may be alleged in an indictment to be the property of His Majesty.

(h) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 70, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s. 1. The offence is, it seems, triable at quarter sessions, but see Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1.

(i) Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 50), s. 117, Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10).

(k) 45 & 46 Vict c. 50.

(l) Ibid., s 117, Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10), Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1.

(m) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict, c 96), s 81, see also p 657, post.

(n) Nelson v R. [1902] A C 250, P C.

SECT 1
Taking
Property.

Misappropriation by director etc.

than seven or less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (o).

1321 Any director, public officer, or manager of any body corporate or public company is by statute guilty of a misdemeanour (p) who as such receives or possesses himself of any of its property otherwise than in payment of a just debt or demand, and who with intent to defraud omits to make or to cause or direct to be made a full and true entry thereof in its books and accounts

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (q)

Misappropriation by trustee.

1322 Everyone is by statute (r) guilty of a misdemeanour who, being a trustee of any property (s) for the use or benefit, either wholly or partially, of some other person, or for any public or charitable purpose, with intent to defraud converts or appropriates the same or any part thereof to his own use or benefit, or the use or benefit of any person other than such person as aforesaid, or for any purpose other than such public or charitable purpose, or otherwise disposes of or destroys such property or any part thereof

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (t)

No prosecution for this offence may be commenced without the sanction of the Attorney-General or, if that office be vacant, of the Solicitor-General

(o) Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10, s 1 (1)), Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The punishment for this offence, and for offences against ss 77—84 of the Act of 1861, is stated in s 75 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), that section was repealed by the Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10), s 1 of which is substituted for ss 75 and 76 of the Larceny Act, 1861, and imposes the same punishment None of the offences mentioned in ss 77—86 of the Larceny Act, 1861, or in the Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10), are triable at quarter sessions (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 87) As to evidence see p 657, note (b), post

(p) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 82

(q) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(r) Ibid, s 80

(s) The term "trustee" here means a trustee on some express trust created by some deed, will, or instrument in writing, and includes the heir or personal representative of any such trustee and any other person upon or to whom the duty of such trustee shall have devolved or come, and also an executor and administrator and an official manager, assignee, liquidator, or other like officer, acting under any Act relating to joint stock companies, bankruptcy or insolvency (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 1) For a definition of "property" see ibid, and p 681, note (a), post The secretary, trustee, and manager of a savings bank has been held to be within this definition a trustee of money which he received as secretary, and the rules of such a society may be such an instrument as to create an express trust (R v Fletcher (1862), Le & Ca 180) A document by which a debtor undertook to hold certain goods in trust for his creditor and to pay him the proceeds thereof is an instrument creating such a trust (R v Townshend (1884), 15 Cox, C C 466) It is sufficient for the indictment to allege that the defendant was a trustee without alleging an express trust (R v Piper (1900), 65 J P 10)

(t) Larceny Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 75, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c. 69), s. 1; and see note (o), supra

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

If any civil proceedings have been taken against the defendant, no person who has taken such civil proceedings may commence any prosecution for this offence without the sanction of the court or judge before whom such civil proceedings have been or shall be pending (a)

The defendant cannot be convicted of this offence by any evidence whatever in respect of any act done by him, if he shall at any time previously to his being charged with such offence have first disclosed such act on oath in consequence of any compulsory process of any court in any action, suit or proceeding bonâ fide instituted by any party aggrieved (b).

1323 Everyone is by statute (c) guilty of a misdemeanour who, being intrusted, either solely or jointly with any other person, with any power of attorney for the sale or transfer of any property (d), fraudulently sells or transfers or otherwise converts the same or any part thereof to his own use or benefit, or the use or benefit of any person other than the person by whom he was so intrusted

Fraudulent
abuse of power of attorney.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not less than two years (e)

1324 Everyone is by statute (e) guilty of a misdemeanour who, being a factor or agent intrusted either solely or jointly with any other person for the purpose of sale or otherwise with the possession of goods or of any document of title to goods (f), makes, contrary to or without the authority of his principal, for the use or benefit of himself or of any person other than his principal and in violation of good faith, any consignment, deposit, transfer, or delivery of any goods or documents of title so intrusted to him, by way of pledge, lien or security for any money or valuable security borrowed or received by such factor or agent, or accepts any advance on the

Frauds by factors and agents

(a) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 80

(b) Ibid, s 85 A statement or admission made by the defendant in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court on the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy is not admissible in evidence against him in any proceeding in respect of the offence mentioned in ss 77 to 85 of the Larceny Act, 1861, or in the Larceny Act, 1901 (Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict c 71), s 27 (2), see p 399, note (g), ante, but his statement of affairs is admissible (R v Pike, [1902] 1 K B 552, O O R) "Shall have first disclosed" means shall have first made known that which before was not known, and there is a great distinction between what is known and what is mere gossip or surmise (R v Gunnell (1886), 16 Cox, C C 154, 157, 158, O. C R.)

(c) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 77

(d) For definition of "property," see ibid, s 1, and p 684, post

(e) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 78, Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c 10), ss. 1, 2 As to evidence, see note (b), supra

(f) "Document of title to goods" includes any bill of lading, India warrant, dock warrant, warehouse keeper's certificate, warrant or order for the delivery or transfer of any goods or valuable thing, bought and sold note, or any other document used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, or authorising or purporting to authorise, either by indorsement or by delivery, the possession of such document to transfer or receive any goods thereby represented or therein mentioned or referred to (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 1)

SECT 1
Taking
Property.

faith of any contract to consign, deposit, transfer or deliver such goods or documents of title

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than seven or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (g)

Every clerk or other person who knowingly and wilfully assists such factor or agent to commit this offence is guilty of a misdemeanour (h)

The punishment is penal servitude for not exceeding seven years (i)

No such factor or agent is liable to any prosecution for consigning, depositing, transferring or delivering any such goods or documents of title if the same are not made a security for or subject to the payment of any greater sum of money than the amount which at that time was justly due to such agent from his principal, together with the amount of any bill of exchange drawn by or on account of the principal and accepted by the factor or agent (k)

Fraudulent
misappropriation of
property

1325 Everyone is by statute (l) guilty of a misdemeanour who, (1) being intrusted, either solely or jointly with any other person, with any property (m) in order that he may retain in safe custody (n)

(g) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 78, Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10), ss 1, 2, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(h) Ibid, s 77

(i) Ibid, s 75

(k) Ibid, s 78. It is provided by s 79 that any factor or agent so intrusted and possessed of any such document of title, whether derived immediately from the owner or obtained by reason of the factor or agent having been intrusted with the possession of the goods or of any document of title thereto, is to be deemed to have been intrusted with the goods represented by the document of title, every contract pledging or giving a lien upon such document of title is to be deemed to be a pledge of and a lien upon the goods, such factor or agent is to be deemed to be possessed of such goods or document whether the same are in his actual custody or held by any other person subject to his control, or for him or on his behalf, where any advance is bona fide made to any factor or agent so intrusted on the faith of any contract in writing to consign, deposit, transfer, or deliver the goods or documents of title, and such goods or documents are actually received by the person making such advance without notice that the factor or agent was not authorized to make the pledge or security, such advance is to be deemed to be an advance on the security of the goods or documents of title, though such goods or documents are not actually received by the person making the same till some period subsequent thereto, any contract, whether made direct with the factor or agent or with any clerk or other person on his behalf, is to be deemed to be a contract made with him, any payment made, whether by money, bill of exchange, or other negotiable security is to be deemed to be an advance within the meaning of s 78, and a factor or agent in possession as aforesaid of such goods or documents is to be taken for the purposes of that section to have been intrusted therewith by the owner, unless the contrary be shown in evidence. All the cases provided for by s 78 of the Act would now appear to be covered by the wider and simpler terms of the Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10), s 1, under which proceedings are now usually taken.

(l) Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10), s 1. This Act is to have effect as part of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), it repeals ss. 75 and 76 of that Act, and s 1 of the Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10), is to be deemed to be substituted for those sections, and references in any Act to those sections are to be construed as references to s 1 of the Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10) As to evidence, see p 657, note (b), ante

(m) For definition of property, see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 1, and p 684, post.

(n) See R v. Cooper (1874), L R 2 C O R 123, R v Newman (1882),

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

or apply, pay or deliver, for any purpose or to any person, the property or any part thereof or any proceeds thereof, or (2) having, either solely or jointly with any other person, received any property (o) for or on account of any other person (p), fraudulently converts to his own use or benefit, or the use or benefit of any other person, the property or any part thereof or any proceeds thereof

This provision does not apply to or affect any trustee on any express trust created by a deed or will (q) or any mortgagee of any property, real or personal, in respect of any act done by the trustee or mortgagee in relation to the property affected by the trust or mortgage (r)

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (s).

SUB-SECT 4—Falsification etc of Accounts

Falsification
of accounts.

1326 Any clerk, officer, or servant, or any person employed or acting in the capacity of a clerk, officer, or servant (t) is by statute guilty of a misdemeanour (u) who, (1) wilfully and with intent to defraud, destroys, alters, mutilates, or falsifies any book, paper, writing, valuable security (x) or account which belongs to or is in the possession of his employer, or has been received by him for or on behalf of his employer, or who, (2) wilfully and with intent to defraud, makes or concurs in making any false entry in, or omits or alters, or concurs in omitting or altering, any material particular from or in any such book, or any document or account (a)

8 Q. B. D. 706, C. C. R. decided on as 75, 76 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), now repealed

(o) See note (a), p. 654, ante

(p) A debt collector who dishonestly appropriates moneys received for his principal may be convicted of this offence (R. v. Lord (1905), 69 J. P. 467, C. C. R.), compare R. v. Hotine (1904), 68 J. P. 143. BOSANQUET, K. C., Common Serjeant, where the money having been received by the defendant as deposits from persons whom he engaged as clerks, it was held that the case was not within the Act. The receipt must be for or on account of the prosecutor, and where the money was received from debtors who only knew the defendant as their creditor, and knew nothing of the prosecutor to whom the defendant had transferred his business, an acquittal was directed (R. v. South (1907), 71 J. P. 191, BOSANQUET, K. C., Common Serjeant)

(q) As to trustees, see p. 656, ante

(r) Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 10), s. 1 (2)

(s) Ibid., s. 1, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1

(t) See p. 651, ante. The record of a taxicab is an account within this section (R. v. Solomons (1909), 25 T. L. R. 747, C. C. A.)

(u) Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 24), s. 1. This Act is to be read as one with the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96) (ibid., s. 3). It is sufficient in any indictment under the Act to allege a general intent to defraud without naming any particular person intended to be defrauded (ibid., s. 2). To cause fraudulently an innocent person to make, or to concur fraudulently in his making, a false entry is within the Act (R. v. Butt (1884), 15 Cox, C. C. 564, C. C. R.). A person who delivers an account accurate in its details, and which states the final balance as being "balance in hand," does not commit this offence, although he may not have in his possession the amount of such balance (R. v. Williams (1899), 19 Cox, C. C. 239, C. C. R.). As to the use by an agent of a false document with intent to deceive his principal, see p. 710, post

(x) See p. 642, ante

(a) Although not so expressly stated in the section, document or account

SECT 1
Taking
Property.

Destruction
of book of company by director etc

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than two years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (b)

1327. Any director, officer, or contributory of any company being wound up is by statute guilty of a misdemeanour (c) who (1) destroys, mutilates, alters, or falsifies any books, papers, or securities, or who (2) makes or is privy to making any false or fraudulent entry in any register, book of account, or document belonging to the company with intent to defraud or deceive any person.

The punishment is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (d)

1328 Any director, manager, public officer, or member of any body corporate, or public company is guilty of a misdemeanour (e) who, with intent to defraud, (1) destroys, alters, mutilates, or falsifies any book, paper, writing, or valuable security (f) belonging to the body corporate or company, or (2) makes or concurs in making any false entry, or omits or concurs in omitting any material particular in any book of account or other document

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not less than two years (g)

False statements by director etc

1329 A director, manager (h), or public officer of any body corporate or public company is by statute guilty of a misdemeanour (i) who makes, circulates, or publishes, or concurs in here mentioned must be a document or account belonging to or in possession of the employer, or received by the prisoner for or on account of the employer, and must be so alleged in the indictment (R v Palm, [1906] 1 K B 7, (C C R)). The falsification of a mechanical means of recording an account is within the Act (R v Solemens (1909), 25 T L R 747, C C A)

(b) Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 24), ss 1, 3 Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The defendant may also be fined and required to find sureties for good behaviour Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 117

(c) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 69), s 216

(d) Ibid This offence and those previously mentioned in this sub-section are triable at quarter sessions

(e) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 83, see also s 81, and as to evidence p 657, note (b), ante

(f) See p 642, ante

(g) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 83

(h) A person who is de facto manager of the business affairs of the company is a manager within the meaning of the section, although he may not have been formally appointed to that office, but a person who merely controls the policy of the directors or of the company, and who has not been appointed manager, is not within the section (R v Lawson, [1905] 1 K B 541, 545, 550, C C R)

(i) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 96), s 84 There is an intent to deceive and defraud if the defendant made or published false statements of account, knowing they were false, with the intent that they should be acted upon by those whom they should reach (R v Birt (1899), 63 J. P 328, see also R London and Globe Finance Corporation, Ltd, [1903] 1 Ch 728, 732) If it appears to the court having jurisdiction in the winding up of public companies in the course of the winding up by or subject to the supervision of the court that any past or present director, manager, officer, or member of the company has been guilty of any offence in relation to the company for which he is criminally responsible, the making, circulating, or publishing any written statement or account which he knows to be false in any material particular with intent to deceive or defraud any member, shareholder, or creditor thereof, or with intent to induce any person to become a shareholder or partner therein, or to intrust or advance any property to such body corporate or public company, or to enter into any security for the benefit thereof

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (k).

SUB SECT. 5.—Robbery

1330 Robbery is a felony at common law and also by statute, and consists in the felonious taking (l) of money or goods of some value from the person of another, or in his presence, if the property is under his immediate and personal care and protection (m), against his will and either by violence or by putting him in fear

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than fourteen or less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (n)

Unless there was a putting in fear, there must have been some violence used. The putting in fear must be before or at the time of the taking, it is not sufficient if it only follows it (o). A surreptitious taking from the person is not robbery, nor is a sudden

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

Robbery.

court may, on the application of any person interested in the winding up, or of its own motion, direct the liquidator to prosecute for the offence, and may order the costs and expenses to be paid out of the assets of the company. In the case of a voluntary winding up the liquidator may, with the previous sanction of the court, prosecute any such officer or member for any such offence, and the expenses of the prosecution are payable out of the assets of the company in priority to all other liabilities (Companies (Consolidation) Act 1909 (8 Edw 7, c 69), s 217). In deciding upon an application for leave to institute such a prosecution the court will look to see whether such facts are made out as that, if they are not shown to be erroneous or displaced by other facts, a conviction ought to ensue, it will not have regard to the interests or advantage of any person or class, but will consider whether a good citizen in discharge of his duty to the State would think that in such a case he ought to prosecute and bear the expense (Re London and Globe Finance Corporation, Ltd, [1903] 1 Ch 728, 733, 735), and the court will not refuse to direct a prosecution merely because the law officers have refused to sanction it (ibid, see also Re Denham & Co (1884), 53 L J (CH) 1113).

(k) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 84, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(l) Robbery includes a larceny, as to what amounts to a taking in larceny, see p 630, ante. There is a sufficient taking even though the goods be only for an instant of time in the robber's possession (R v Japier (1784), 1 Leach, 320).

(m) 1 Hale, P C 533. If one, having first assaulted another, takes away his horse standing by him, or, having put him in fear, drives his cattle out of his pasture in his presence, or takes up his purse which, in his fright, he has thrown into a bush, these are robberies (1 Hawk P C, c 34 s 8, 2 East, P C 707, R v Francis (1735), 2 Stra 1015, R v Donnelly (1779), 1 Leach, 193, 199, R v Selway (1859), 8 Cox, C C 235).

(n) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 40, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. The offence is triable at quarter sessions, but an offence under the Larceny Act, 1861, supra, s 43, is not.

(o) 1 Hawk P C, c 34, s 9, R v Gnosel (1824), 1 C & P 304.

SECT 1
Taking
Property.

snatching unawares, unless some injury be thereby done to the person, or unless there has been some previous struggle for the possession of the property (p)

It is not necessary to allege in the indictment, or to prove that there was actual fear on the part of the person robbed. If money be demanded, and the fact be attended with those circumstances of terror and violence which in common experience are likely to induce a man to part with his property for the safety of his person, the law will presume fear (q)

The mode of threatening or the absence of any verbal threat is immaterial, if the circumstances show an intentional putting in fear (r). Nor is it necessary that a demand of money should be made, if money is paid from motives of terror (s)

It is robbery, if a person is by force or fear compelled to sell his goods at an inadequate price, and if the prisoner's intent was felonious (t). The fear may be either of personal violence to the person robbed, or to a member of his family (a), or of serious injury to his property (b), or of loss of character or place by reason of being charged with unnatural practices, where such a charge is threatened (c), whether such charge be true or false (d).

Threats to accuse one of a crime other than unnatural practices (e), or to accuse a third person of an unnatural offence (f), are not sufficient to support an indictment for robbery.

If money is obtained by means of a threat to accuse of unnatural practices, this does not amount to robbery, unless the payment is made at the time, if the payment is not until after the prosecutor

(p) 2 East, P C 702 708, R v Lapiet (1784), 1 Leach, 320, R v Macanley (1783), 1 Leach, 287, R v Baker (1783), ibid 290, R v Moore (1784), ibid 330, R v Walls (1840), 2 Car & Kir 214. But where the prosecutor's watch was fastened to a steel chain which went round his neck, and the prisoner stole the watch by jerking and breaking the chain, a conviction for robbery was affirmed by the judges (R v Mason (1820), Russ & Ry 419)

(q) Foot 128, approved by the judges in R v Donolly (1779), 1 Leach, 193, 196, 197, 2 East, P C 710, see also 2 East, P C 711, 1 Hawk P C, c 34, s 9. But if there is no violence, and the prosecutor states that he did not part with his property from any apprehension of violence to his person or injury to his character, but for some other reason, there is no robbery (R v Reane (1794), 2 Leach, 616, R v Fuller (1820), Russ & Ry 408)

(r) As where a man with a drawn sword, or other circumstances of terror indicating a felonious intent, begs alms (2 East, P C 711)

(s) H v Blackham (1787), 2 East, P C 711, where the prisoner was attempting to commit a rape upon the prosecutrix and without any demand by him, she gave him money to induce him to desist.

(t) R v Simons (1773), 2 East, P C 712, R v Spencer (1783), 2 East, P C 712, see 1 Hawk P C, c 34, s 14

(a) R v Donolly, supra

(b) Ibid., see R v Winkworth (1830), 4 C & P 444

(c) R v Reane, supra, R v Jones (1776), 1 Leach, 139, R v Donolly, supra, R v Hickman (1783), 1 Leach, 278, R v Cannon (1809), Russ & Ry 146, R v Egerton (1819), Russ & Ry 375, R v Elmstead (1802), 2 Russell on Crimes, 106; R v Stringer (1842), 2 Mood C C 261, see, however, R v Taunton (1840), 2 Mood C C 118

(d) R v Gardner (1824) 1 C & P, 479, as to attempts to extort money by threats to accuse of crime, see p 666, post

(e) R v Kneeland (1796), 2 Leach, 721, 730

(f) R v Edward (1833), 1 Mood & R 257

has had time to consult another person or to obtain assistance, the offence of robbery is not committed (g).

A bona fide claim of right to the money or goods taken is a good defence to an indictment for robbery (h).

The return of the property by the robber will not purge the offence (i).

Any property may be the subject of robbery which is capable of being stolen, the value is immaterial, provided it be of any value at all to the prosecutor (k). It must be the prosecutor's property and have been in his peaceable possession (l).

One or more prisoners may be charged in one indictment with robberies committed upon different persons, if such robberies constituted one entire transaction without an interval of time (m).

1331 If upon the trial of a person upon an indictment for robbery it appears to the jury that he did not commit robbery, but that he committed an assault with intent to rob, they may find him guilty of and he may be punished for the latter offence. No person so tried is liable to be afterwards prosecuted for an assault with intent to commit the robbery for which he was so tried (n).

Upon an indictment for an assault with intent to rob the prisoner cannot be convicted of a common assault (o).

Upon an indictment for robbery, or for larceny from the person, the prisoner may be convicted of simple larceny (p).

1332 Whoever assaults any person with intent to rob is guilty of felony and liable to penal servitude for not more than five or not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (q).

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

Verdict of assault with intent to rob.

Assault with intent to rob

(g) R v Jackson (1802), 1 Leach, 193, n

(h) R v Hall (1828), 3 C & P 409, R v Hemmings (1864), 4 F & F 50, where the prisoner had assaulted the prosecutor, who was his debtor, and so obtained a cheque from him, and it was held not to be robbery, see also R v Boden (1844), 1 Car & Kir 395

(i) 1 Hawk P C, c 34, s 2, R v Peat (1781), 1 Leach, 228

(k) R v Bringley (1833), 5 C & P 602

(l) R v Phipoe (1795), 2 Leach, 673, where the prosecutor was compelled to give a promissory note, the paper on which it was written being the property of the prisoner, and this was held not to be robbery. Such cases are now met by the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 48, p 667, post

(m) R v Giddins (1842), Car & M 634, where the indictment contained only one count

(n) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 41. But if a count for an assault with intent to rob is added to an indictment for robbery, the prosecution may be required to elect upon which count they will proceed (R v Gough (1831), 1 Mood & R 71)

(o) R v Woodhall (1872), 12 Cox, C C 240

(p) 2 Hale, P C 302

(q) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 42, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. The indictment must allege either an intent to rob, or an intent to violently steal (R v Monteth (1795), 2 Leach, 702, R v Huxley (1842), Car & M 596). There need be no actual demand for money or goods (R v Trusty (1783), 1 East, P C 418, R v Sharwin (1785), 1 East, P C 421). An assault coupled with a threat to accuse of unnatural practices with a view to extort money is an assault with intent to rob (R v Stringer (1842), 2 Mood C C 261). As to the effect of a claim of right to the goods or money demanded, see R v Boden, supra, as to what amounts to an assault, p. 606 ante

SMOT 1.
Taking
Property.

Robbery etc
by person armed with weapon

1333 Everyone is by statute guilty of felony (1) who, being armed with any offensive weapon or instrument, robs, or assaults with intent to rob, any person, or (2) who, together with one or more other persons, robs, or assaults with intent to rob, any person, or (3) who robs any person and, at the time of, or immediately before, or immediately after such robbery, wounds, beats, strikes, or uses any other personal violence to any person (r)

The punishment for such offence is penal servitude for life (s), the offender may also be sentenced to be once, twice, or thrice privately whipped, provided (1) that in the case of a male whose age does not exceed sixteen years the number of strokes at each whipping must not exceed twenty-five, and the instrument used must be a birch rod, (2) that in the case of any other offender the number of strokes at each whipping must not exceed fifty, (3) that the court must in each case specify the number of strokes to be inflicted and the instrument to be used, (4) that no whipping shall take place after the expiration of six months from the passing of the sentence, and (5) that in the case of a person sentenced to penal servitude the whipping must be inflicted before he is removed to a convict prison (t)

Stealing
from the person

1334 It is by statute (a) a felony to steal any chattel, money, or valuable security from the person

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than fourteen or not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (b)

The property stolen must have been completely removed from the person of the prosecutor. An asportation sufficient to constitute simple larceny (c) is not necessarily sufficient to support an indictment for stealing from the person (d), but if the property is temporarily, though but for one moment, in the prisoner's possession, he may be convicted of this offence (e)

SUB SECT 6 — Extortion by Threats

Demanding
money etc
by threatening letter

1335 It is by statute (f) a felony to send, deliver, or utter, or directly or indirectly to cause to be received, knowing the contents

(r) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 43

(s) Ibid. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(t) Gaolers Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict c 44), s 1. The provisions of this Act also apply to attempts to choke or strangle with intent to commit any indictable offence punishable under the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 100), s 21, p 602, ante

(a) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 40

(b) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(c) See p 630, ante.

(d) R. v Thompson (1825), 1 Mood C C 78, where the prisoner having lifted a pocket-book partly out of the prosecutor's pocket, it was held that, although guilty of simple larceny, he had been wrongly convicted of larceny from the person. The ruling in this case was disapproved by JERVIS, C J, in R v Simpson (1854), Dears C C 421, 424

(e) R v Laper (1784), 1 Leach, 320, where an earring torn from a lady's ear dropped in her hair, R v Simpson, supra, watch and chain taken, but a key on the chain caught in the prosecutor's clothes and prevented an entire removal.

(f) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s. 44.

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

thereof, any letter or writing demanding of any person with menaces, and without any reasonable or probable cause (g), any property (h), chattel, money, valuable security (i), or other valuable thing.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, and if the offender is a male under sixteen years of age, a whipping may be added (k)

The menaces may be of duress or of other personal violence, or of great injury (l), or to accuse the prosecutor of misconduct, even though not amounting to an offence against the criminal law (m). They must be of such a nature as to unsettle the mind of the person to whom they are made, and take away that element of free voluntary action which alone constitutes consent (n), but if the threats are such as ought not to influence anybody, they will not support an indictment (o)

If the title to the property demanded is in dispute between the parties, a threat of personal violence if the property is not given up does not constitute the offence, if the prisoner believed he had a legal right to what he demanded (p)

Whether a document contains menaces is a question for the jury and not for the judge, unless the judge holds that it can by no possible construction involve a threat (q)

It is immaterial whether the menaces or threats be of violence, injury, or accusation to be caused or made by the offender or by any other person (r)

As the offence consists in sending or causing the letter to be sent, an admission by the prisoner that he wrote it is not without further evidence sufficient to warrant a conviction (s)

To leave such a letter where it is likely to be found by the person whom it is intended to threaten is a sufficient sending (t)

(g) The words "reasonable or probable cause" apply to the money demanded, not to the truth of an accusation constituting the threat (R v Hamilton (1843), 1 Car & Kir 212), see also R v Mard (1844), 1 Cox, C. C. 22

(h) For definition of "property," see p 684, post

(i) For definition of "valuable security," see p 642, ante

(k) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c. 96), s 44, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c. 69), s 1. The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(l) R v Smith (1849), 1 Den 510, 514.

(n) R v Tomlinson, [1895] 1 Q B 706, C C R., R v Chalmers (1867), 10 Cox, C C 450, C C R., as to threatening to accuse of a crime, see ss 46, 47, and p 666, post

(o) R v Walton (1863), Le & Ca 288, 298

(p) R v Tomlinson, supra, at p 710

(q) R v Hemmings (1799), 2 East, P O 1116, R v Walton, supra, at p 297

(r) R v Carruthers (1844), 1 Cox, C C. 138, R v Walton, supra, R v Tomlinson, supra

(s) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c. 96), s 49. This also applies to the offences punishable under ss 45, 46, 47, 48 of the Act (see p 666, post).

(t) R v Howe (1836), 7 C & P 268

(u) R v Wagstaff (1819), Russ & Ry 398, R v Gremwade (1844), 1 Den 30

SECT 1

Taking
Property.

1336 It is by statute (a) a felony to demand with menaces (b) or by force any property (c), chattel, money, valuable security (d), or other valuable thing of any person with intent to steal the same.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than five or less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (e)

Letter
accusing of crime

1337 It is by statute (f) a felony to send, deliver, or utter, or directly or indirectly cause to be received, knowing the contents thereof, any letter or writing accusing or threatening to accuse any other person of any crime punishable by law with death or penal servitude for not less than seven years, or of any assault with intent to commit a rape, or of any attempt to commit a rape, or of any infamous crime (g) with a view or intent to extort or gain by means of such letter or writing any property, chattel, money, valuable security, or other valuable thing from any person

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, and in the case of a male under the age of sixteen years a whipping may be added (h)

Accusation of crime for the purpose
of extortion

1338 It is by statute (i) a felony to accuse or threaten to accuse either the person to whom the accusation or threat is made, or any other person, of any infamous crime (j), with the view or intent to extort or gain from the person so accused or threatened to be

(a) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 45

(b) As to menaces, see p 665, ante. The fact that the property has been completely obtained by means of the threats is no defence (R v Robertson (1864), Le & Ca 483). A threat to imprison upon a fictitious charge is a menace within the meaning of the section (ibid). It is not necessary to prove an actual demand in words if the circumstances show that there was an attempt by the prisoner to extort payment by threats (R v Jackson (1783), 1 Leach, 267). To obtain money by threats, and in particular by the use or threatened use of process of law, was an indictable misdemeanour at common law, provided the threats were of such a nature as to be calculated to overcome a firm and prudent man (R v Woodward (1707), 11 Mod Rep 137), but it appears that such threats must have been of personal violence or imprisonment (R v Southerton (1805), 6 East, 126, 140, where it was held that obtaining money by a threat to take proceedings for penalties was not so indictable)

(c) For definition of "property," see p 684, post

(d) For definition of "valuable security," see p 642, ante

(e) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 45, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is triable at quarter sessions

(f) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 46

(g) This expression includes sodomy and bestiality, an assault with intent to commit the same, an attempt to commit the same, and a solicitation, persuasion, promise, or threat offered or made to any person to move or induce him to commit or permit the same (ibid), but it does not include a threat to accuse of indecent conduct with another male person (R v Gulgannon (1899), 63 J P 457, see also R v Norton (1838), 8 C & P 671). A threat of this kind may, however, amount to a threat to accuse of solicitation to sodomy or of an attempt to commit or permit that offence, see R v Cooper (1849), 3 Cox, C C 547, R v Bragwell (1850), 4 Cox, C C 402

(h) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96) s 46, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(i) Ibid, s 47

(j) See note (g), supra.

accused, or any other person, any property, chattel, money, valuable security, or other valuable thing

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property

The punishment is the same as that for the last-mentioned offence (k)

1339 If the defendant intended to extort money by threatening to make an accusation, it is immaterial whether such accusation, if made, would be true or false (l) It is not necessary that the threat should be to accuse before a legal tribunal or an officer of the law, it is sufficient if it is to accuse before any third person (m) If the object of the threat is to induce the person threatened to buy anything, there is an intent to extort or gain by means of the threat (n)

Nature of
threat

It is for the jury to determine what was the nature of the charge made, and whether the prisoner in fact intended to make, or to threaten to make, an accusation of one of the crimes above mentioned, for this purpose the jury are entitled to consider the whole conduct of the prisoner (o)

To prove the intent to extort, evidence may be given of the obtaining of money by the prisoner by making similar accusations on other occasions (p), unless the intent to extort is manifest from the nature of the threat used (q)

1340 Everyone is by statute (r) guilty of felony who, with intent to defraud or injure any other person, by any unlawful violence to or restraint of the person of another, or by accusing or threatening to accuse any person of any treason, felony, or infamous crime (s), compels or induces any person to execute, make, accept, endorse, alter, or destroy the whole or any part of any valuable security (t), or to write, impress, or affix his name or the name of any other person or firm, or the seal of any body, corporate company, or society to any paper or parchment, in order that the same may be afterwards made or converted into or used or dealt with as a valuable security

Extorting
execution of valuable securities

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for

(k) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 47 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(l) R v Minage (1862), 3 F & F 310, R v Cracknell (1866), 10 Cox, C C 408 But it may be material upon the question whether the intention was only to compound a felony or obtain compensation (R v Richards (1865), 11 Cox, C C 43) The prosecutor may be cross-examined as to the truth of the accusation with the object of impeaching his credit, but he cannot be contradicted on this point by other evidence (R v Cracknell, supra)

(m) R v Robinson (1837), 2 Mood & R 14

(n) R v Redman (1865), L R 1 C C R 12

(o) R v Cooper (1849), 3 Cox, C C 547, R v Braynell (1850), 4 Cox, C C 402 In these cases the accusation was only of indecent assault, see also R v Kain (1837), 8 C & P 187 So, also, if the meaning of a threatening letter is doubtful or ambiguous, the prosecutor may adduce evidence of facts to show its meaning (R v Tuler (1826), 1 Mood C C 134, R v Henly (1850), 4 Cox, C C 213)

(p) R v Cooper, supra, at p 549

(q) R v McDonnell (1850), 5 Cox, C C 153

(r) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 48

(s) See note (g) on p 666, ante

(t) For definition of "valuable security," see p 642, ante An agreement or promise to pay money for a consideration appearing upon the face of the document is a "valuable security," although it is not a negotiable security (R v John (1875), 13 Cox, C C 100)

SECT 1
Taking
Property.

Threatening to publish a libel

not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than ten years (u).

1341 It is by statute (a) a misdemeanour to threaten to publish a libel with intent to extort money or any valuable thing

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than three years (b).

SUB-SECT 7 —Burglary

Burglary

1342 Burglary is the breaking and entering the dwelling-house of another person in the night with intent to commit some felony therein, whether such intent be executed or not (c)

Burglary is a felony at common law and by statute (d) The punishment is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (e)

Night

The offence must be wholly committed in the night If the breaking be effected in the day and the entry in the night, or vice versa, the offence is not burglary (f) But if the breaking with intent to commit a felony be on one night and the entry with the like intent on a subsequent night, this is burglary (g)

Night is deemed to commence at nine o'clock in the evening of each day and to conclude at six o'clock in the morning of the next succeeding day (h)

Dwelling
house

The place must be a dwelling-house in which a person or his family is in the habit of residing

It is sufficient if the owner occupies the house for a part only of the year (i), or if, having occupied it, he leaves it for a time, with the intention of returning to live in it again (k), or if he occupies it by his servants only, who are members of his family, though he himself may never have slept there (l)

A house to which the owner has only moved his goods without yet having slept there is not his dwelling-house for this purpose (m), (u) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 48, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(a) Libel Act 1843 (6 & 7 Vict c 96), s 3

(b) Ibid The offence, it seems is not triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1) See also title LIBEL AND SLANDER

(c) 1 Hawk P C, c 38, s 1

(d) Ibid

(e) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 52, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The offence may be tried at quarter sessions, but if the case appears to be of a grave or difficult nature, the committing magistrate must send it for trial at the assizes (Burglary Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict c 57))

(f) 1 Hale, P C 501 The offence is then housebreaking If two persons agree to commit a burglary and one alone breaks on one night, and the other enters in his absence on the next night, both are guilty of the whole offence (R v Jordan (1836), 7 C & P 432)

(g) Ibid R v Smith (1820), Russ & Ry 417.

(h) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 1

(i) 1 Hawk P C, c 38, s 11.

(k) R v Nuthbrown (1750), Fost 76, R v Murry (1698), 2 East, P C 496

(l) R v Gibbons (1821), Russ & Ry 442, R v Stock (1810), Russ & Ry 185, R v Westwood (1822), ibid 495 But if a mere caretaker is put into premises to protect the goods there, neither the owner nor his family or servants having an intention of living there, the house is not the owner's dwelling house (R v Flannagan (1810), Russ & Ry 187, R v Davies (1800), 2 Leach, 876, R v Smith (1787), 2 Leach, 1019, n)

(m) R v Harris (1795), 2 Leach, 701, R v Thompson (1796), ibid 771.

nor is a house which has only been used by the owner for the purpose of taking his meals, if neither he nor his family have slept there (n)

SECT 1.
Taking
Property.

The building must be of a permanent and not merely a temporary nature (o)

No building, although within the same curtilage with any dwelling-house, and occupied therewith, is deemed to be part of such dwelling-house, unless there is a communication between such building and dwelling-house, either immediate or by means of a covered and inclosed passage leading from the one to the other (p), and the outbuilding, to form part of the dwelling-house, must be held with it by the same owner (q)

The ownership of the dwelling-house must be correctly alleged in the indictment (r) The owner for this purpose is the person who occupies the premises in his own right for residential purposes, either by himself or his family or servants (s)

1343 The breaking which is necessary to constitute burglary may be either actual or constructive Breaking

The breaking must be of some part of the house, and not merely of the outer fence or wall of the curtilage, if such wall is not part of the wall of the dwelling-house or does not open into any outbuildings in respect of which burglary can be committed (t)

(n) R v Martin (1806), Russ & Ry 106

(o) So that a tent or booth in a fair or market is not such a domus mansuonalis wherein burglary may be committed (1 Hale, P O 557, 1 Hawk P O, c 38, s 17) But a permanent building of mud and brick in which the prosecutor slept, though only during a fair, was held a sufficient dwelling house (R v Smith (1835), 1 Mood & R 256)

(p) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 53 As to breaking into outbuildings not so communicating, see s 55

(q) R v Jenkins (1812), Russ & Ry 244

(r) But the court has power to order an amendment in this respect, if any variance appears between the statement in the indictment and the evidence for the prosecution (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 1, p 354, ante) This is one of the cases in which a local description is necessary, see p 337, ante

(s) R v Collett (1823), Russ & Ry 498, R v Bridges (1815), 1 Cox, O O 261, where it was held that a tenancy at will was sufficient to constitute ownership As to the occupation by servants of houses or rooms belonging to their masters, see R v Stock (1810), Russ & Ry 185, R v Jobling (1823), Russ & Ry 525, R v Camfield (1824), 1 Mood (' C 42, R v Witt (1829), 1 Mood (' O 218, R v Rees (1836), 7 O & P 568, R v Jarvis (1824), 1 Mood. O O 7 As to alleging ownership where the occupation is by partners occupying separate parts, see R v Jones (1790), 1 Leach, 537 A club house is not the dwelling-house of the steward, although he resides there (R v Ashley (1843), 1 Car & Kir 198) With regard to lodgings, if the owner lives on the premises and there is an interior communication the house must be alleged to be his dwelling house (R v Rogers (1772), 1 Leach, 90, n., 2 Keil 83, 84; R v Sefton (1811), Russ & Ry 202, R v Gibbons (1821), Russ & Ry 442), but if there is no such internal communication, or if the lodging house keeper does not live on the premises, the part broken into must be described as the dwelling-house of the lodger who occupies it (1 Hale, P O 556 R v Rogers, supra, R v Trapahaw (1786), 1 Leach, 427, R v Carrell (1782), 1 Leach, 237) The indictment need not allege the ownership of any goods which may have been stolen, it is sufficient to allege that the goods were in the house (R v Clarke (1844), 1 Car & Kir 421)

(t) R v Bennett (1815), Russ & Ry 289 (door in a fence opening into a yard), R v Davis (1817), Russ & Ry 322 (area gate)

SECT 1
Taking
Property

Thus it is not burglary to break chests in a house (a), or external fixtures (b), or internal fixtures or cupboards (c)

It is an actual breaking either to break with the purpose of entering any such part of the house as is mentioned above, or to open with the like purpose either an outer or an inner (d) door or window which is latched or otherwise fastened, or which without being fastened is completely closed (e)

It is not a breaking of a house to open wider a door or window which is already partly open (f), or to enter through a hole in a cellar window (g), or through an existing hole in the roof (h) Lifting a cellar-flap held down by its own weight is a breaking (i)

There is a breaking by construction of law when an entrance to the house is obtained by fraud (k), or by conspiracy (l), or by threats (m), although no part of the house is actually broken

(a) 1 Hale, P C 553, 554

(b) R v Paine (1834), 7 C & P 135 (shutter box)

(c) Fost 108, 109, 2 East, P C 489

(d) Even though the entering into the house has been through an open door or window, if an inner door is afterwards broken (1 Hale, P C 553, 1 Hawk P C, c 38, s 4, R v Johnson (1786), 2 Fost, P C 488)

(e) 1 Hale, P C 552, R v Foster (1828), 1 Lew C O 33, R v Owen (1827), 1 Lew C O 35, R v Laurence (1830) 4 C & P 231, R v Jordan (1836), 7 C & P 432, Pugh v Griffith (1836) 7 Ad & El 827 836 (lifting latches), R v Haines (1821), Russ & Ry 451, R v Hyams (1836), 7 C & P 441, R v Hull (1818), Russ & Ry 355, R v Robinson (1831), 1 Mood C C 527, R v Poles (1824) 1 C & P 300 (opening windows) To pick a lock is a breaking (1 Hale, P C 552, Re George and Goldsmiths and General Burglary Insurance Association, [1898] 2 Q B 137, 139), so also is to get down a chimney (1 Hale, P C 552, 2 East, P C 485, R v Erice (1821), Russ & Ry 450)

(f) R v Smith (1827), 1 Mood C C 178 But to put the hand through an existing hole in a window, and so to undo the window fastening, is a sufficient breaking, whether or not the hole be enlarged for that purpose (R v Robinson (1831), 1 Mood C C 327, Ryan v Snellcock (1831), 7 Exch 72, 76)

(g) R v Lewis (1827), 2 C & P 628

(h) R v Spriggs (1834) 1 Mood & R 357

(i) R v Russell (1833) 1 Mood C C 377, R v Brown (1799), 2 East, P C 487 There is, however, some authority the other way, see R v Lawrence (1830), 4 C & P 231, BOLLAND, B, R v Callan (1801), Russ & Ry 157, in which case twelve judges were equally divided

(k) As where lodgings are taken with a design to rob the house (R v Cassey (1666), Kel 62 1 Hawk P C, c 38, s 9), or by fraudulently raising the hue and cry and so obtaining entrance with a constable into the house (Kel 82, 1 Hawk P C, c 35, s 10, see also R v Gascoyne (1753), 1 Leach, 280, 284), or by pretence of business (R v Le Mott (undated), Kel 42, 2 East, P C 485), or by enticing away a servant (R v Hawkins (1704), 2 East, P C 485), or by obtaining possession by a fraudulent action at law (R v Farre, (1665), Kel 43)

(l) R v Farre, supra, as, e.g., with the owner's servants (R v Cornwall (1730), 2 Stra 881, 2 East, P C 486), where, however, a servant by arrangement with the owner pretended to connive with the prisoner and let him into the house in order that he might be arrested, the prisoner was held not to have committed burglary, though, as there had been an asportation, he was convicted of larceny in the dwelling-house (R v Johnson (1841), Car & M. 218)

(m) R v Swallow (1813), 2 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed, 8 But only if the house were opened in consequence of the threats and an entry effected, if under the fear of the threats the owner throws money out of the door or window, the offence is not burglary, though it will be robbery if the money is taken up (2 East, P C 486)

SPOT 1
Taking
Property.

A person who enters the dwelling-house of another with intent to commit any felony therein, or who, being in such dwelling-house, commits any felony therein, and in either case breaks out of the dwelling-house in the night, is deemed guilty of burglary (n).

1344 To constitute the crime of burglary there must be an entry of the premises as well as a breaking, and the entry must be consequent on the breaking (o)

The least entry either with the whole or with but part of the body will satisfy the requirement of an entry (p), so also will the insertion of any instrument, provided it be introduced for the purpose not merely of making an entry, but also for the purpose of extracting property (q), so also will the insertion of any weapon, if for the purpose of killing the inmates of the house (r)

If there was a breaking, but there is no sufficient evidence of an entry, the prisoner may be convicted of an attempt to commit a burglary (s)

1345 The intent of the breaking and entering must be to commit either a common law or statutory felony

The particular felony intended to be committed must be alleged in the indictment and must be proved as laid (t), but different (n) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 51. The section applies, although the prisoner was lawfully in the house, if he committed a felony there (R v Hieldon (1839), 8 C & P 717). As in the case of a burglarious breaking in, it will be sufficient if he has broken out by merely lifting a latch (ibid). But in R v Lawrence (1830), 4 C & P 231, BOLLAND, B., held that, although unlocking and opening the hall-door was a sufficient breaking out, lifting a trap-door over a cellar which was kept down by its own weight was not (sed quare, see p 670, note (s), ante). In R v M'Kearney (1829), Jebb, C C 99, it was held by the judges that the prisoner, who had only put his head out of a skylight, which he had broken, and had then fallen back into the room, had broken out.

(o) R v Davis (1854), 6 Cox, C C 369, but not necessarily on the same night (p 668, ante), and see supra.

(p) 1 Hale, P C 553, 555, 1 Hawk P C, c 38, s 7, R v Gibbons (1752), Foat 107, 2 East, P C 490, R v Bailey (1818), Russ & Ry 341 (where the hand was put between the glass of an outer window and an inner shutter), R v Davis (1823), Russ & Ry 499 (where part of the prisoner's finger went through a window).

(q) 1 Hale, P C 555, R v Hughes (1785), 1 Leach, 406, R v Roberts (1828), Carington's Supplement, 293, R v Rust (1828), 1 Mood C C 183, R v O'Brien (1850), 4 Cox, C C 395.

(r) 1 Hawk P C, c 38, s 7, R v O'Brien, supra. It is doubtful whether firing a loaded gun into a house, the gun being entirely outside, is a sufficient entry (see 1 Hale, P C 555, 1 Hawk P C, c 38, s 7, 2 East, P C 490).

(s) R v Spanner (1872), 12 Cox, C C 155.

(t) 3 Co Inst 65, 1 Hawk P C, c 38, ss 36, 38, R v Knight (1751), 2 East, P C 510, 511. Thus an indictment lies for burglary with intent to commit a rape, though rape was not a felony at common law, but was made so by statute (R v Gray (1721), 1 Stra 481). Although the intent should be expressly alleged in the indictment, it has been held that an allegation that a felony had been committed was, if the commission of such felony were proved, but not otherwise, sufficient, although the intention was not alleged (R v Furnival (1821), Russ & Ry 445). In practice it is usual to allege both the intent to commit the particular felony and also, if such be the case, that it was committed. If the intent was to steal the goods then in the house, it should be so alleged, it is not necessary to state the owner of the goods (R v Lawes (1843), 1 Car & Ku 62, R v Clarke (1844), 1 Car & Kir 421).

SECT 1
Taking
Property.

intents may be alleged in different counts of the same indictment (a)

An intent to commit a misdemeanour or trespass is insufficient to support an indictment for burglary (b) It is immaterial whether the intended felony was committed or not

Evidence

1346. Where several burglaries are committed on one night and the circumstances are intermixed, evidence of the details of each burglary may be given upon the trial of the prisoner for any one of them (c)

Verdict on indictment
for burglary

1347 If upon the trial of an indictment for burglary it appears that the house was not a dwelling-house, or that the breaking and entering were not in the night, or that there is no sufficient evidence of the entry, the prisoner may be convicted of house-breaking, or, if the indictment alleges a stealing and the goods stolen from the dwelling-house amounted to £5 in value, of larceny in a dwelling-house to that amount, or, if the indictment alleges a stealing, of simple larceny (d)

Upon an indictment of two persons for burglary and larceny one may be convicted of the whole offence and the other of the larceny only (e)

SUB SECT 8—Housebreaking

House-
breaking

1348 It is by statute (f) a felony to break and enter (g) any dwelling-house (h), school-house, shop (i), warehouse (k), or counting

(a) R v Thompson (1781), 2 East P C 515

(b) 3 Co Inst 65, R v Dobbs (1770), 2 East, P C 513

(c) R v Cobden (1862), 3 F & F 833 "If crimes do so intermix, the court must go through the detail I remember a case where a man committed three burglaries in one night, he took a shirt at one place and left it at another, and they were all so connected that the court went through the history of the three different burglaries" (R v Wylie (1804), 1 Bos & P (N R) 92, per Lord EILLENBOROUGH, O J, at p 94)

(d) R v Withal (1772) 1 Leach, 88, R v Compton (1828), 3 C & P 418, R v Brookes (1842) Car & M 543, but not of a distinct larceny committed on a previous day (R v Vandercumb (1796), 2 Leach, 708)

(e) R v Butterworth (1823), Russ & Ry 520.

(f) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 56

(g) As to what amounts to a breaking and entering, see pp 669, 671, ante Breaking open or opening the inner door of a shop, communicating with an adjoining house under the same roof, is a breaking of the shop (R v Wenmouth (1860), 8 Cox, C C, 345)

(h) As to what is a dwelling house, see p 668, ante

(i) It appears to be doubtful whether the shop must be a place for the sale of articles, or whether a workshop (e.g., a blacksmith's shop or forge) is within the section In R v Sanders (1839), 9 C & P 79 ALDERSON, B, held it was not, as also did TINDAL C J, in R v Chapman (1843), 7 J P 132, but in R v Carter (1843), 1 Car & Kir 173, Lord DENMAN, C J, held that it was, and declined to follow R v Sanders, supra As the word "shop" is derived from A S scoppa, which meant a booth or shed for trade or work, and as the modern ordinary usage is in conformity with that meaning, it is submitted that the view of Lord DENMAN was correct A photographer who, without making any structural alteration in a private house, exhibited photographs outside and used the ground floor for the exhibition of photographs and the sale of albums, cases and frames, the door being kept open by day, was held to have converted the house into a shop (Willison v Rogers (1864), 2 De G J & Sm 62)

(k) A "warehouse" is a place where goods are stowed or kept which are not house (l) and commit any felony (m) therein, or being in any such building to commit any felony therein and to break out of the same

SECT 1
Taking
Property

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than fourteen or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (n)

1349. It is by statute (o) a felony to break and enter (p) any dwelling-house (q), church, chapel, meeting-house, or other place of divine worship (r), or any building within the curtilage, school-house, shop, warehouse or counting-house with intent to commit any felony therein

Breaking
with intent.

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than seven or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (s)

1350 It is by statute (t) a felony to enter any dwelling-house (a) in the night (b) with intent to commit any felony therein

Entering
with intent.

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than seven or not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (c)

1351 It is by statute (d) a felony to break and enter any building, and to commit any felony therein, such building being within the Buildings within curtilage

immediately wanted for sale, and a cellar under a shop, and used for that purpose, is a warehouse (R v Hill (1843), 2 Mood & R 438)

(l) A "counting-house" is a part of a commercial establishment in which the book-keeping, correspondence etc are carried on. But it has been held that a solicitor's office may be a counting-house (Re Creeke (1863), 11 W R 234). A weighing room at a factory in which accounts of weights and workmen's times were kept, and where wages were paid, was held to be a counting-house within the meaning of the section (R v Potter (1851), 2 Den 235), see also Piercy v Maclean (1870), L R 5 C P 252, 256, 261.

(m) If the felony committed in the house is alleged to be larceny there must be some evidence of asportation (as to which, see p 630, ante), but it need not be shown that the goods were removed from the house (R v Amner (1834), 6 C & P 314). If the indictment alleges a larceny, it must state the goods which were stolen, and where proof of the larceny failed on account of the goods specified not being in the house at the time it was held that the prisoner could not be convicted on that indictment of breaking and entering the house and attempting to steal (R v M'Pherson (1837) Denis & B 197, where the goods had been previously stolen by another thief), but as to attempts of this kind, see p 259, ante.

(n) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 56, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(o) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 57.

(p) As to what amounts to breaking and entering, see pp 669, 671, ante, and see note (m), supra.

(q) As to what is a dwelling house, see p 668, ante.

(r) As to sacrilege, see p 675, post.

(s) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 57, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(t) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 54.

(u) As to what is a dwelling house, see p 668, ante.

(v) For definition of "night," see p 668, ante.

(w) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 54, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(x) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 55.

SECT 1
Taking
Property

curtilage (e) of a dwelling-house (f) and occupied therewith, but not being part thereof (g), or being in any such building to commit any felony therein and to break out of the same

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (h)

Stealing in
dwelling-
house

1352 It is by statute (i) a felony (l) to steal in any dwelling-house (k) any chattel, money or valuable security (l) to the value in the whole of £5 or more (m), or (2) to steal in a dwelling-house any chattel, money, or valuable security to any value, and by any menace or threat to put anyone being therein in bodily fear (n)

The punishment for such offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen years nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (o)

Being found armed by night

1353 Everyone is by statute (p) guilty of a misdemeanour (q) who is found by night (q) armed with any dangerous or offensive

(e) If the building within the curtilage has a communication between itself and the dwelling house, either immediate or by means of a covered and inclosed passage leading from the one to the other it is a part of the dwelling house, and the offence is burglary (see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 53, and p 669, ante). "The curtilage is a small court, yard, grith, or piece of ground attached to a dwelling-house, and forming one enclosure with it or so regarded by the law, the area attached to and containing a dwelling house and its outbuildings" (New English Dictionary, Murray). The outer fence of the curtilage not opening into any of the buildings was no part of the dwelling house, even before the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96) (R v Bennett (1815), Russ & Ry 289) nor was an area gate, if there was a door between the area and the house (R v Davis (1817), Russ & Ry 322). East apparently considered the words "within the curtilage" as synonymous with "within the same common fence" (2 P C 193), and see R v Westwood (1822), Russ & Ry 495.

(f) As to what is a dwelling house, see p 668, ante.

(g) As to what is "part thereof," see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 53.

(h) Ibid, s 55, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(i) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), ss 60, 61.

(k) The dwelling-house must be such a house that burglary could be committed in it (2 East, P C 499, 614). As to what is such a dwelling house, see p 668, ante. A person may be convicted of this offence although he himself is the owner of the dwelling house (R v Bowden (1813), 2 Mood C C 285).

(l) For definition of "valuable security," see p 612, ante.

(m) If the indictment charges only an attempt to steal goods in the dwelling house it need not specify any particular goods (R v Johnson (1864), Le & Ca 489). The goods must be under the protection of the house, i.e., deposited there for safe custody, it is not sufficient that they are on the person of one who is in the house, or that they are under the eye or personal care of someone who happens to be there (R v Owen (1792), 2 East, P C 645, R v Castledine (1792), ibid., R v Watson (1794), 2 Leach, 640, 643, n., R v Campbell (1792), 2 Leach, 664, R v Taylor (1820), 2 Russ & Ry 418, R v Carroll (1825), 1 Mood. C C 89). The question whether goods are under the protection of the house or in the personal care of the owner is one for the judge and not for the jury (R v Thomas (1827), Carrington, Supplement, 295).

(n) The indictment must state that the person in the house was put in fear by the prisoner (R v Etherington (1795), 2 Leach, 671).

(o) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), ss 60, 61, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(p) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 58.

(q) For definition of "night," see p 668, ante.

Sect. 1.
Taking
Property

weapon or instrument, with intent to break or enter into any dwelling-house or other building whatsoever, and to commit any felony therein (r), or (2) who is found by night having in his possession (s) without lawful excuse (the proof of which excuse lies on such person) any picklock key, crow, jack, bit, or other implement of housebreaking (t), or (3) who is found by night having his face blackened or otherwise disguised with intent to commit any felony, or (4) who is found by night in any dwelling-house or other building whatsoever with intent to commit any felony therein

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (a), if the prisoner has been previously convicted either of felony or of such misdemeanour, he may be sentenced to penal servitude for ten years (b)

1354 It is by statute (c) a felony to break and enter (d) any church (e), chapel (f), meeting-house, or other place of divine worship and commit any felony therein, or being in any such place to commit any felony therein and break out of the same Sacrilege.

The punishment is penal servitude for life or for not less than

(r) An indictment under this part of the section must allege the particular house or building intended to be broken or entered, and (probably) the particular felony intended to be committed (R v Jarrald (1863), Le & Ca 301)

(s) Where several persons are engaged in one party with the common purpose of housebreaking, the possession of implements of housebreaking by one is the possession of all (R v Thompson (1869), 11 Cox, C C 362, C C R)

(t) Any implement capable of being used for the purpose of housebreaking is an implement of housebreaking within the meaning of the statute, though it may also be capable of an innocent use, e.g., a key or a chisel, if the jury find that the prisoner had it in his possession for the purpose of housebreaking (R v Oldham (1852), 2 Den 472). In the section as printed by the King's printer there is no comma after the word 'picklock' (see R v Oldham, supra, 474). The comma is inserted in Greaves' Criminal Consolidation Act and in 2 Russell on Crimes, 50, but 'picklock key' is a phrase in use (see Murray, New English Dictionary, VII, 827). In an indictment under this part of the section, it is not necessary to allege an intent to commit a felony (R v Bailey (1853), Dears C C 244)

(a) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 58. Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1, Larceny Act, 1861, s 117. This offence is triable at quarter sessions

(b) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 59, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(c) Ibid, s 50

(d) As to what amounts to a breaking and entering, see pp 669, 671, ante

(e) A vestry formed out of what had formerly been the church porch was held to be part of the church (R v Evans (1842), Car & M 298), a church tower, to which access is gained through the church, is part of the church (R v Wheeler (1829), 3 O & P 585), neither the ownership of the church, if it is a parish church, nor, if the felony committed therein was larceny, the ownership of the goods, need, it appears, be stated (R v Nicholas (1845), 1 Cox, C C 216), but if the goods appertain to the church they may be alleged to be the goods of the parishioners or, in the case of a chapel-of-ease, to be the goods of such and such a person, i.e., the person who has the custody of them (2 East, P C 651), a fixed offertory box and its contents may be alleged to be the property of the vicar and churchwardens, giving their names (R v Worley (1846), 1 Den 162)

(f) "Chapel" includes only a chapel of the Church of England (R v Richardson (1834), 6 O & P 335, R v Nixon (1836), 7 O & P 412 decided on stat 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 29, s 10, which did not in terms mention meeting houses). A dis-enting chapel should be described in an indictment as a meeting-house.

SECT 1
Taking
Property.

three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (g)

SUB-SECT 9 —Receiving Stolen Goods

Receiving
stolen goods

1355. Receiving goods knowing them to have been stolen is a common law misdemeanour punishable by fine and imprisonment (h)

Statutory
offence

1356 By statute (i) everyone is guilty of felony who receives any chattel, money, valuable security (k), or other property (l) whatsoever the stealing, taking, extorting, obtaining, embezzling or otherwise disposing of which amounts to a felony (m), knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen, taken, extorted, obtained, embezzled or disposed of

A person charged with this offence may be indicted and convicted either as an accessory after the fact or for a substantive felony (n), and in the latter case whether the principal felon has or has not been previously convicted or is or is not amenable to justice (o)

The punishment for such receiver, however convicted, is penal servitude for not more than fourteen or not less than three years, or

(g) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 50, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(h) 1 Hale, P C 620, the bare reception of the goods with a guilty knowledge did not render the receiver an accessory after the fact, as it was the goods, and not the thief, which were received and harboured, but in Hale's opinion (ibid), if the thief came himself to the receiver and delivered the goods to him to keep for him, or if the receiver took the goods to facilitate the thief's escape, or to furnish him with supplies out of them, and so supplied him, this would make the receiver an accessory after the fact

(i) Larceny Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 91

(k) For definition of "valuable security," see p 642, ante

(l) For definition of "property," see p 684, post

(m) Id, either at common law or by virtue of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), as to what may be the subject of larceny, see p 636 et seq, ante

(n) Id, for receiving the stolen goods well knowing at the time when he received them that they had been feloniously stolen, in such an indictment the name of the thief, if it is not known, need not be alleged (R v Thomas (1766), 2 East, P C 781, R v Baxter (1792), 2 East, P C 781, R v Jervis (1833), 6 C & P 156) Where, upon an indictment against one person for stealing and another for receiving the goods "so feloniously stolen as aforesaid," the person alleged to be the thief was acquitted, PAIRSON, J, held that the receiver could not be convicted, although the goods were proved to have been stolen by someone (R v Woolford (1834), 1 Mood & R 384), but where an indictment alleged in the first two counts that the prisoner stole the goods of H, and in the third count that he had received the same goods "so as aforesaid feloniously stolen," and the jury acquitted him on the first two counts, but convicted him on the third, the court upheld the conviction, but without purporting to overrule R v Woolford, supra (R v Craddock (1850), 2 Den 31, see also R v Huntley (1860), Bell, C C 238 (where, upon similar facts to those in R v Craddock, supra, the court held that the words "so as aforesaid feloniously stolen" may be construed to mean simply "stolen goods," and that the words "so as aforesaid" were an immaterial averment)

(o) If after the receiver has been convicted the principal is tried and acquitted, the conviction of the receiver will still stand (R v Hughes (1860), Bell, C C 242, 248) imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, and, if the offender is a male under the age of sixteen, a whipping, but no person, in whatever manner he has been tried for receiving, is liable to be prosecuted a second time for the same offence (p)

SECT 1.
Taking
Property.

1357 Everyone is by statute (q) guilty of a misdemeanour who receives any chattel, money, valuable, security, or other property, the stealing, taking, obtaining (r), converting, or disposing whereof is made a misdemeanour by the Larceny Act, 1861 (s), or the Larceny Act, 1896 (t), or the Larceny Act, 1901 (u), knowing it to have been unlawfully stolen, taken, obtained, converted or disposed of

Receiving property not feloniously taken

A person charged with this offence may be indicted and convicted thereof whether the principal has or has not been previously convicted, or is or is not amenable to justice

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than seven or not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, and if the offender is a male under the age of sixteen he may be sentenced to a whipping (a).

1358 In an indictment for feloniously stealing (b) any property a count or several counts may be added for feloniously receiving such property or any part of it (c) knowing it to have been stolen. The prosecutor is not to be put to his election, and the jury may find a verdict of guilty either of stealing the property or of receiving it knowing it to have been stolen, or that some of the prisoners named in the indictment were guilty of the one offence and some of the other (d)

Indictment
for receiving

Any number of receivers at different times of the stolen property or parts of it may be charged with substantive felonies in the same indictment and may be tried together, although the thief is not

(p) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 91, see also the Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 94), s 1, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(q) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 95

(r) An indictment for receiving goods obtained by false pretences must allege that they were obtained by false pretences, it is not sufficient to allege that they were "unlawfully obtained, taken, and carried away" (R v Wilson (1838), 2 Mood C C 52), but the particular false pretences need not be alleged in the indictment (Taylor v R, [1891] 1 Q B 201)

(s) 24 & 25 Vict c 96

(t) 59 & 60 Vict c 52 See p 680, post, as to this Act, which is to have effect as part of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96)

(u) 1 Edw 7, c 10, see p 660, ante, as to this Act, which is to have effect as part of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96)

(a) Larceny Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 95, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(b) The same applies where the taking or obtaining is a misdemeanour, no express provision to this effect being necessary as the receiving in such a case is only a misdemeanour, see supra

(c) But where an indictment for stealing certain goods contains a count for receiving those and other goods the prosecution will be required to elect upon which charge they will proceed (R v Ward (1860), 2 F & F 19) The count for receiving must allege that the money or goods charged to have been received are the same or part of the same as those alleged in the first count to have been stolen (R v Sarafeld (1852), 6 Cox C C 12, C C R (1r))

(d) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 92

SECT 1
Taking
Property.

included in the indictment or is not in custody or amenable to justice (e)

If upon the trial of two or more persons indicted for jointly receiving it is proved that one or more of them separately received any part of the property, the jury may convict such of them as are proved to have received such part (f)

A receiver may be tried in any place in which he has or has had any of the property in his possession, or where the principal may be tried (g)

POSSESSION

1359 A receiving imports possession, and there must be proved to have been a possession by the accused, either actual or constructive (h), and a control over the goods. The possession of the receiver must be distinct from that of the thief, so that the mere receiving a thief with stolen goods in his possession does not alone constitute a man a receiver of the goods (i). A claim made to the goods is not evidence of possession or receiving (j). It is unnecessary to prove a manual possession of the goods by the prisoner, it is sufficient that they were under his absolute control (k), or that he is in joint possession with the thief (l). Goods which are in the hands of an innocent agent or bailee of the accused are in the constructive possession of the latter (m).

A person who is guilty of stealing goods as a principal in either the first or the second degree cannot be convicted of receiving them (n)

(e) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 93

(f) Ibid, s 94. This section was applied where there was no evidence of any joint receipt but each of the prisoners separately received the whole of the stolen property (R v Beardon (1866), L R 1 C C R 31)

(g) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 96. If upon an indictment against two persons for larceny and receiving the venue is laid in county A, and the count against the receiver alleges the receiving to have been in county B, but does not state that the goods had been received from the thief, the count for receiving is bad as showing no jurisdiction to try in county A (R v Martin (1849), 1 Den 398), compare R v Hinley (1843), 2 Mood & R 524

(h) Bare knowledge of the whereabouts of stolen goods does not amount to constructive possession, where there is no evidence that the person to whose possession the goods have been traced either saw them or interfered with them (R v Orris (1908), 73 J P 15, C C A). A master cannot be convicted on mere receipt by his servant, there must be evidence that the servant received with the authority or knowledge of the master (R v Pearson (1908), 72 J P 451, C C A)

R v Biley (1850), 2 Den 37, 48, 50

R v Hill (1849), 1 Den 453

R v Smith (1855), Deans C C 491, R v Hobson (1854), Deans C C

R v Miller (1853), 6 Cox, C C 353, C C R (Ir)

(i) R v Smith, supra

(m) R v Cryer (1857), Deans & B 324, R v Rogers (1865), L R 1 C C R 1

(n) R v Owen (1825), 1 Mood, C C 96, R v Ferkens (1852), 2 Den 459, R v Coggins (1873), 12 Cox, C C 517, C C R. In these cases the principal in the first degree delivered the goods to the principal in the second degree, and it was held that the latter could not be convicted of receiving, see also R v Kelly (1847), 2 Car & Kir 379, R v Dyer (1801), 2 East, P C 767, R v Atwell (1801), 2 East, P C 768, R v Hilton (1858), Bell, O C 20, 26, R v Grumell (1839), 9 C & P 365, R v Densley (1834), 6 C & P 399. As to goods stolen abroad and brought by the thief into this country, see p 660, post

1360 A husband may be convicted of knowingly receiving property stolen by his wife (o), but a wife cannot be convicted of knowingly receiving property stolen by her husband (p)

SECT 1
Taking
Property.

If a wife receives stolen property directly from her husband, she ought not to be convicted of receiving, as it is to be assumed that she acted under marital coercion (q)

Husband and
wife

Where a husband and wife are jointly indicted for receiving, the wife may be convicted if there is evidence of a receiving by her separate and apart from the husband (r)

If stolen goods are received by a wife without her husband's knowledge, and he, upon becoming aware of it, passively assents to what she has done but takes no active part in the matter, he is not guilty of receiving (s), but it is otherwise if, although he may not touch the stolen property, he ratifies what she has done (t)

1361 It is immaterial whether the accused received the goods for profit, or merely to assist the thief, or for the mere purpose of concealment (u)

What is
receiving.

A receiver from another guilty receiver may be convicted of this offence (v)

If the accused has stolen the goods from the thief, or taken them from him without his concurrence, he cannot, it seems, be convicted of receiving them (w), he commits a new larceny of the goods

At the time of the receiving the goods must still be stolen property, if, after the stealing but before the receiving, they have come back into the possession of the owner or his agent the accused cannot be convicted of receiving (x)

If, after the larceny and before the receiving, there has been a change of form in the chattel stolen but the identity remains, the receiver may be convicted of this offence (a) But if the indictment charges a stealing and receiving of goods and the evidence shows that it was only the proceeds of the stolen goods which were received by the person accused as receiver, the latter cannot be convicted on that indictment (b)

(o) R v M'Athey (1862), 1 e & c 210

(p) R v Brooks (1853), Dears C C 164

(q) R v Archer (1820), 1 Mood C C 113, R v Brooks (1853), Dears C C 184, R v Vardroper (1860), 8 Cox, C C 281, C C R

(r) R v Barnes (1900), 69 L J (Q B) 651, C C R

(s) R v Dring (1857), Dears & B 329

(t) As by bargaining with the thief as to the price (R v Woodward (1862), Le & Ca 122)

(u) R v Davis (1833), 6 C & P 177, R v Richardson (1834), 6 C & P 335, • 336

R v Reardon (1864) L R 1 C C R 31

R v Brett (1840), 1 Cox, C C 261 R v Wade (1844), 1 Car & Kir 730

R v Dolan (1853), 6 Cox, C C 449, C C R, R v Schmidt (1866),

1 C C R 15, R v Hancock (1878), 14 Cox, C C 119, R v Villinsky, •

[1892] 2 Q B 697, C C R In these cases the property had been stolen, but was recovered by the prosecutors or their representatives, who then, with the view of entrapping the receiver, caused it to be delivered to him

(a) As where a sheep was stolen and converted into mutton (R v Cowell (1796), 2 East, P C 617, and see p 282, ante

(b) R v Walkley (1829) 4 C & P 132 where six £100 notes were stolen by the thief, who changed them into notes of smaller denomination which he

SECT 1
Taking
Property

1362 To establish the statutory offence of receiving, the goods received must be proved to have been stolen, taken, or obtained under such circumstances as to constitute a crime either against the common law or against the Larceny Act, 1861 (c), or some Act to be read with it (d). A person cannot, therefore, be convicted upon an indictment charging him with feloniously receiving goods stolen by one member of a partnership or one joint owner from another (e), or by a wife from her husband (f), but in the latter instance (g) the accused may be indicted for the common law misdemeanour of receiving stolen goods (h).

To prove that the goods were stolen a confession by the thief is admissible, if it was made in the prisoner's presence, but not otherwise, if the thief has been convicted on his own confession or otherwise, proof of his conviction is not evidence, on the trial of the receiver, that the goods were stolen. In other respects evidence of the larceny which would be admissible against the thief is admissible as prima facie evidence on the trial of the receiver (i).

The thief is an admissible witness, but the alleged receiver should not be convicted on his evidence alone without corroboration (k).

Receiving
property
stolen abroad

1363 Any person who, without lawful excuse, receives or has in his possession in the United Kingdom (l) any property stolen outside the United Kingdom, knowing it to have been stolen, may be by statute indicted for such offence in any county or place in which he has or has had the property (m).

delivered to the other prisoner who was charged with receiving the £100 notes. Whether such a receiver can be convicted upon a separate indictment which charges him with receiving the proceeds of the stolen property is doubtful, see R v Chapple (1810), 9 O & P 355, R v Robinson (1864), 4 F & F 43, R v Ellhott (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 10, 2 Russell on Crimes, 436, n.

(c) 24 & 25 Vict c 91.

(d) See Larceny Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict c 52), s 1 (1) and Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7 c 10), s 2 (2). As to the indictment, see R v Strick, [1908] 1 K B 617.

(e) This being an offence created by the Larceny Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict c 116) s 1 see p 635 ante. R v Smith (1870) L R 1 C C R 266.

(f) An offence against the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 75), ss 12, 16, see p 631, ante. R v Streeter, [1900] 2 Q B 601 C C R. The rule was the same before that Act (R v Kenny (1877), 2 Q B D 307, C C R, distinguishing R v Deer (1862) 32 L J (M C) 33, C C R, where the wife had been assisted by another person in stealing the goods).

(g) And also, it is submitted, in the former.

(h) R v Payne, [1906] 1 K B 97, C C R. In such a case it is not necessary that it should appear on the face of the indictment that the goods were stolen under such circumstances that there was no offence at common law or under the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96).

(i) R v Turner (1832), 1 Mood C C 317, C C R, R v Cox (1838), 1 F & F 90, R v Kelly (1900) 64 J P 81, BRUCE, J. It appears impossible to reconcile these cases with the ruling of ROSANQUET, J, in R v Black (1830), 4 C & P 377.

(k) R v Haslam (1766), 1 Leach, 418, R v Robinson (1864), 4 F & F 43.

* The mere fact that the goods were found at the alleged receiver's house has been held not to be a sufficient corroboration, as the thief himself might have put them there (R v Pratt (1865), 4 F & F 315).

(l) See R v Graham (1901), 65 J P 248. In that case the prisoners, who had themselves stolen goods in Paris, were convicted at the North London Sessions of having such goods in their possession in the United Kingdom.

(m) Larceny Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict c 52), s 1 (1), R v Pannell (1897), 61 J P 536. The Act is to be construed and have effect as part of the Larceny Act,

SECT 1.
Taking
Property.

For this purpose property is deemed to have been stolen where it has been taken, extorted, obtained, embezzled, converted, or disposed of under such circumstances that if the act had been committed in the United Kingdom the person committing it would have been guilty of an indictable offence according to the law for the time being of the United Kingdom (n)

Such offence of receiving is a felony or misdemeanour according as the act committed outside the United Kingdom would have been a felony or misdemeanour if committed in England or Ireland (o).

The punishment for such offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (p)

1364 If any person in any one part of the United Kingdom receives or has in his possession any money or other property which has been stolen or otherwise feloniously taken in any other part of the United Kingdom, such person knowing such property to have been stolen or otherwise feloniously taken, he may be indicted, tried and punished in that part of the United Kingdom where he so receives or has such property as if it had been originally stolen or taken in that part (q). Venue.

1365. In an indictment for receiving stolen goods it must be alleged, and it must also be proved, that the accused at the time when he received the goods knew that they were stolen or dishonestly obtained (a) It is not necessary to show that he knew the exact nature of the principal offence, nor that his knowledge should have amounted to certainty It is sufficient if the jury is satisfied that he believed that the property had been stolen or dishonestly obtained (b) Indictment.

The possession by a person of property which has been recently stolen is some evidence, in the absence of a reasonable explanation by him as to how it came into his possession, that he either stole it or received it knowing it to be stolen Whether it is evidence of larceny or of receiving depends upon the circumstances of the case (c) The weight of such evidence depends upon the nature of Possession of property recently stolen

1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96) (ibid, s 1 (1)) The Channel Islands are not part of the United Kingdom, and if goods are stolen there and received in England the indictment must be under this Act (see R v Deland (1861), 11 Cox, C C 207)

Larceny Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c 52), s 1 (2)

(o) Ibid, s 1 (3)

(p) Ibid, s 1 (1), Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1

(q) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 114

(a) R v Wilson (1838), 2 Mood C C 52 It is sufficient to allege knowledge that the goods were "feloniously stolen," without stating whether the theft was felony at common law or by statute (R v Stride, [1908] 1 K B 617 C C R)

(b) R v White (1849), 1 F & F 665, see R v Adams (1858), 1 F & F 56

(c) R v Langmead (1864), Le & Ca 427 "If no other person is involved in the transaction forming the subject of the inquiry, and the whole of the case against the prisoner is that he was found in the possession of the stolen property, the evidence would, no doubt, point to a case of stealing rather than a case of receiving, but in every case, except indeed where the possession is so recent that it is impossible for anyone else to have committed the theft, it becomes a mere question for the jury whether the person found in possession of the stolen property stole it himself or received it from someone else (ibid, per POLLOCK, C B, at p 439)

SECT 1
Taking
Property

the goods and the length of time which has elapsed from the time when they were stolen to the date when they are proved to have been in the possession of the accused (d)

If a person is accused of receiving stolen property, and the stolen property is found in his possession under circumstances requiring him to give a reasonable account of how he became possessed of it, and he gives such a reasonable account by stating the name of the person from whom he received it, who is shown to be a real person, it is incumbent upon the prosecution, unless there is other substantial evidence against the prisoner negating the truth of his account, to show that that account is false by calling as a witness the person named by the prisoner. If the prisoner's account is unreasonable or improbable on the face of it, or if there is other evidence against him, the onus of proving the truth of his account lies on him (e)

(d) 2 East, P. O. 665, R v Cuckin (1836), 2 Lew O C 235, R v. Adams (1829), 3 C & P 600, where PARKE, J., directed an acquittal upon the ground that possession of the stolen property (an axe, a saw, and a mattock) three months after it was lost was not such a recent possession as to require the prisoner to show how he came by it. In Anon (1826), 2 O & P 459, the goods had been lost for sixteen months, and the prisoner was not required to account for having them in his possession. In R v Partridge (1836), 7 C & P 551, upon an indictment for stealing forty yards of cloth of which the prisoner was found in possession two months after it was missed, PATILSON, J., allowed the case to go to the jury, observing that if the goods were such as to pass from hand to hand readily two months would be a long time, but that there it was not so. In R v Cooper (1852), 3 Car & Kir 318, the only evidence against the prisoner was that he was found in possession of a horse which had been lost six months previously, MAULE J., said that he ought not to be called upon to account for it, and directed an acquittal. A similar course was taken by CHANNILL, B., in R v Harris (1860), 8 Cox, C C 353 where a sheep found in the prisoner's possession had been lost six months previously.

The goods must be proved to have been in the possession of the prisoner or under his control, that they were in a place to which he and others had access is insufficient in the absence of other evidence against him (R v Hughes (1878), 14 Cox C C 223, C C R). The mere fact that the goods were found on the prisoner's premises is not of itself sufficient evidence that he received them or that they were in his possession, as they might have been placed there by the thief or some other person without his knowledge or assent (R v Pratt (1865), 4 F & F 315), see also Ex parte Hauley (1823) 2 Dow & Ry (N C) 572, where the court quashed a conviction under stat 11 Geo 1, c 30 s 16, for knowingly harbouring and concealing three gallons of smuggled spirits, upon the ground that the mere fact of the spirits being found in the defendant's house during his absence could not be considered conclusive evidence of knowingly harbouring them there. In R v Matthews (1850), 1 Den 596 t01, CORERIDGE, J., said that prima facie if stolen goods are found in a man's house he, not being the thief, is a receiver, but in that case there was evidence that the prisoner had bought the stolen fowls from the thief. In R v Oris (1908), 73 J P 15, C C A, it was held that bare knowledge of the whereabouts of stolen goods does not amount to constructive possession.

(e) R v Crouhurst (1844), 1 Car & Kir 370, R v Smith (1845), 2 Car. & Kir 207, R v Hurmer (1848), 2 Cox, C C 487, compare R v Wilson (1857), Dears. & B 157, C C R, where the court, although evidently disapproving the conviction declined to quash it on the ground that there was some evidence against the prisoner, see also R v Risteen (1884), 15 Cox, C C 478, C C R, where, the thief having given evidence proving the untruth of the prisoner's account the prosecution did not call the person from whom the prisoner said he bought the goods, and the court upheld the conviction. As to the effect of a presumption of guilt on the defence see R v Stoddart (1909), 23 T L R 612, C C A.

1366 To prove the guilty knowledge evidence may be given of the prisoner having received from the thief other property stolen by him from the prosecutor (f)

SECT. 17
Taking
Property.

Evidence of possession of other stolen property

Where proceedings are taken against any person for having received property knowing it to be stolen, or for having in possession stolen property, evidence may be given at any stage of the proceedings that there was found in his possession (q) other property (h) stolen within the preceding twelve months, and such evidence may be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that he knew the property which forms the subject of the proceedings against him to be stolen (i)

Evidence of previous convictions

Where evidence has been given that the property alleged in the indictment to have been stolen was found in the possession of the person charged as receiver, then if such person has within five years immediately preceding been convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty evidence of such previous conviction may be given at any stage of the proceedings, and may be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that the person accused knew the property which was proved to be in his possession to have been stolen. Not less than seven days' notice in writing (j) must, however, be given to the accused that evidence is intended to be given of such previous conviction. It is not necessary, for the purpose of giving such evidence, to charge the previous conviction in the indictment (k)

(f) R v Dunn (1826), 1 Mood C C 146, R v Davis (1833), 6 C & P 177. In R v Nicholls (1858), 1 F & F 51, upon an indictment against two men for stealing and receiving lead, COCKBURN, C J, allowed evidence to be given of several sales of similar lead during the month previous to the alleged stealing, the lead sold on the last occasion being identified as the prosecutor's property, but he confined the evidence to sales made by the prisoners when in company together. See as to evidence of this class p 380, ante

(g) The property must have been found in his possession at the same time when the property which is the subject of the indictment was found in his possession. The fact that the prisoner had been in possession and had disposed of other stolen property before the goods which are the subject of the indictment were found in his possession is not admissible in evidence, unless the case falls within the principle of R v Dunn (1826) 1 Mood C C 146, and R v Nicholls (1858), 1 F & F 51 (R v Drage (1878), 14 Cox, C C 85, R v Carter (1884), 12 Q. B D 522, C C R). But the two findings need not be absolutely simultaneous, and it is sufficient that the goods previously stolen are found on a second search of the prisoner's premises made shortly after the search when the goods which are the subject of the indictment were found (ibid, per HAWKINS, J)

(h) The fact that this property is the subject of another indictment against the prisoner does not render this evidence inadmissible (R v Jones (1877), 14 Cox, C C 3)

(i) Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict c 112), s 19. Evidence of this kind is not admissible where the real charge against the prisoner is larceny, although the indictment contains a count for receiving (R v Girod (1906), 70 J P 514, C C R)

(j) See as to this R v Whitley (1908), 72 J P 272

(k) Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict c 112), s 19. The evidence is admissible although the charge of receiving does not stand alone but is coupled with a count for stealing (R v Bromhead (1906), 71 J P 103, C C R). Where the case is substantially one of stealing the mere fact of adding a count for receiving will not make such evidence admissible (ibid, and see R v Girod, supra)

SMO. 1

Taking Property.

Receiving goods stolen
from the
Post Office

1367 It is a felony (l) to receive any mailbag or any postal packet (m), or any chattel, or money, or valuable security (n), the stealing, or taking, or embezzling, or secreting whereof amounts to a felony under the Post Office Act, 1908 (o), if the receiver knows that the same has been so feloniously taken, embezzled, or secreted, and has been sent or intended to be sent by post

This offence is punishable in the same way as the stealing, taking, embezzling, or secreting the same, and the offender may be indicted and convicted, whether the principal offender has or has not been previously convicted, or is or is not amenable to justice (p)

Pawnbroker

1368 If a pawnbroker is convicted on indictment of any fraud in his business, or of receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen, the court before which he is convicted may, if it thinks fit, direct that his licence shall cease to have effect, and it shall so cease accordingly (q)

SUB SLIC 10—Orders for Restitution of Property.

Restitution
of stolen
property

1369 If any person guilty of any felony or misdemeanour mentioned in the Larceny Act, 1861 (r), or the Larceny Act, 1896 (s), in stealing, taking, obtaining, extorting, embezzling, converting, or disposing of, or in knowingly receiving any chattel, money, valuable security (t), or other property (u) whatsoever is indicted for such

(l) Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 48), s 52

(m) Evidence that any article is in the course of transmission by post, or has been accepted on behalf of the Postmaster-General for transmission by post, is sufficient evidence that the article is a postal packet (Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 48), s 71)

(n) "Valuable security" has the same meaning in the Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 48) as in the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96) (as to which see p 612, ante), and includes anything which is a valuable security within the meaning of that Act and any part of such thing (Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 48) s 89)

(o) 8 Edw 7, c 48, as to the offences which amount to felonies under this Act, see p 644, ante

(p) Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 48), s 52 As to venue, see s 72 The property may be alleged to belong to His Majesty's Postmaster-General (s 71)

(q) Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict c 93), s 19

(r) 24 & 25 Vict c 96

(s) 59 & 60 Vict c 52, which relates to property stolen abroad and received in the United Kingdom, see p 680, ante This Act is to be construed and have effect as part of the Larceny Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96) (ibid, s 1 (4)) An order of restitution cannot be made where the conviction is under the Post Office Act, 1906 (8 Edw 7, c 48) (R v Jones (1880), 14 Cox, C C 528), or for forgery (R v Rolfe (1889) 53 J P 523), nor, it is submitted, upon a conviction of a husband or wife under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 75), see R v Payne, [1906] 1 K B 97, C C R

(t) For the definition of "valuable security" see p 642, ante

(u) The term "property" in the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), includes every description of real and personal property, money, debts and legacies, and all deeds and instruments relating to, or evidencing the title or right to any property or giving a right to recover or receive any money or goods, and also includes not only such property as shall have been originally in the possession or under the control of any party, but also any property into

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

offence by or on behalf of the owner of the property (b), or his executor or administrator (c), and convicted thereof, the property is to be restored (d) to the owner or his representative, and the court before whom any person is tried for any such felony or misdemeanour (e) has power to award from time to time writs of restitution for the property or to order the restitution thereof in a summary manner (f)

If, however, it appears that any valuable security has been bond fide paid or discharged by some person liable to the payment thereof, or, being a negotiable security, has been bond fide taken or received by transfer or delivery by some person for a just and valuable consideration without any notice that it had by any felony or misdemeanour been stolen, obtained, converted, or disposed of, the court cannot order the restitution of such security (g)

or for which the same may have been converted or exchanged, and anything acquired by such conversion or exchange, whether immediately or otherwise (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 1)

(b) The prosecution of an offender by the Director of Public Prosecutions has, for the purpose of enabling a person to obtain a restitution of property, or obtaining, exercising or enforcing any right, claim or advantage whatsoever, the same effect as if such person had been bound over to prosecute, and had prosecuted the offender, provided that such person gives all reasonable information and assistance to the director in relation to the prosecution (Prosecution of Offences Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 22), s. 7)

(c) See also 1 Hale, P. C. 542

(d) The words in the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 100, are "the property shall be restored." Although, notwithstanding these words, the court has a discretion as to whether or not an order of restitution shall be made (see p. 687, post), yet even before the passing of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 24 (1) (as to which, see p. 686, post), their effect was that immediately upon the conviction the legal right to the goods reverted to the prosecutor if he had lost it by a sale in market overt or otherwise (Horswood v Smith (1788), 2 Term Rep. 750, Vilmon v Bentley (1886), 18 Q. B. 322, (1 A), affirmed (1887), 12 App. Cas. 471, but as to the last-mentioned case, see p. 686, post)

(e) Formerly the court of King's Bench, as part of its judgment upon an appeal of larceny, could award a writ of restitution. The King's Bench Division has now no such power except upon a conviction in that court (R v London Corporation (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 371)

(f) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 100. The procedure is now always by a summary order. The last reported writ of restitution appears to have been in Burges v Coney (1697), Trowaine's Pleas of the Crown, p. 315. A form of the writ is given in 4 Chitty, Criminal Law, 491. See also Golightly v Reynolds (1771), Lofft, 88, 90, 91

At common law an order of restitution could only be made upon a conviction on appeal, and not upon a conviction on indictment, the goods in the latter case, if in the convict's possession, or waived (i.e., thrown away in flight) by him, being forfeited to the Crown or the lord of the franchise. By stat. (1529) 21 Hen. 8, c. 11, the power to order restitution to the owner was given to the court before whom a person was convicted upon a prosecution by the owner by indictment for robbery or larceny, and the title of the Crown and of a purchaser in market overt was in such a case defeated.

(g) S. 100 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), adds the words "or any reasonable cause to suspect." It is submitted that these words, which were taken from stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 57, and were in conformity with the law as declared in Gill v Cubitt (1824), 5 Dow & Ry. (K. B.) 324, are now

SMOT 1
Taking
Property.

The provision for restitution does not apply in the case of any prosecution of any trustee, banker, merchant, attorney, factor, broker, or other agent intrusted with the possession of goods or documents of title to goods (h) for any misdemeanour (i) against the Larceny Act, 1861 (h), or the Larceny Act, 1901 (l)

Revesting
property

1370 Where goods have been stolen and the offender is prosecuted to conviction the property in the goods reverts in the person who was the owner or his personal representative, notwithstanding any intermediate dealing with them, whether by sale in market overt or otherwise (m), and an order of restitution can in such a case be made in his favour

Where goods have been obtained by fraud or other wrongful means not amounting to larceny the property in such goods does not revert in the person who was the owner of the goods by reason only of the conviction of the offender (n). But if the goods are in the possession of the defendant, the owner by disaffirming the fraudulent transaction regains a right to the property, and in such a case an order for restitution should be made impliedly repealed, at any rate so far as bills of exchange, promissory notes, and cheques are concerned, by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 61), ss 29, 38, 90, and that if the holder of such a document without notice of any defect of title, has given value for it, an order of restitution cannot be made against him, notwithstanding negligence on his part. The words referred to are therefore omitted in the text

(h) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 100. For definition of "documents of title to goods" see Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 1, p 642, ante

(i) As to these misdemeanours, see pp 657 et seq, ante. The provisions of the Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10), s 1, are substituted for ss 75 and 76 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96) and an order of restitution cannot therefore be made upon a conviction for fraudulent misappropriation under the Larceny Act 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 10) (R v Brockwell (1905), 69 J P 376), Sir F Furion, K C, Recorder of London)

(h) 24 & 25 Vict c 96, s 100

(l) 1 Edw 7, c 10

(m) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict c 71), s 24 (1). Horwood v Smith (1784), 2 Term Rep 750, Scattergood v Sylvester (1850), 15 Q B 506. It is enacted by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict c 71), s 21 (2), that nothing in the Act shall affect the provisions of the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 45), or any enactment enabling the apparent owner of goods to dispose of them as if he were the true owner thereof, and it was held in Payne v Wilson, [1895] 1 Q B 653, by the King's Bench Division, that when a title has been acquired under the Factors Act 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 45), s 9, by a person who has obtained possession of goods for value from one who has bought or agreed to buy the goods, his title is not divested by a conviction of the latter for larceny as a bailee of the goods. The judgment in this case was reversed on appeal ([1895] 2 Q B 537, C A), but only on the ground that there was in that case no agreement to buy

(n) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict c 71), s 24 (2). Before this Act it had been held by the House of Lords in Bentley v Ulmont (1887), 12 App Cas 471, overruling Moyce v Newington (1878), 4 Q B D 32, that the effect of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 100, was that upon a conviction for obtaining goods by false pretences, the property in the goods was reverted in the prosecutor as against an innocent purchaser from the fraudulent person, although the prosecutor, induced by the fraud, had sold the goods to the fraudulent person, and so passed the property to him. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict c 71) s 24 (2), overrides Bentley v Ulmont, and an order of restitution cannot therefore be made in such a case (R v Walker (1901), 65 J P 729, R v George (1901), 65 J P 729). If the conviction is for obtaining

SECT. 1.
Taking
Property.

If such owner parted with his property in the goods when they were obtained from him by fraud an order of restitution may be made in his favour as against the person convicted of the fraud, or his agent (o), or a donee from him, or an assignee with notice of the fraud, or an innocent holder for value whose title accrued after the contract induced by fraud had been revoked, but not as against an innocent holder for value whose title accrued before such revocation (p)

1371 An order of restitution can only be made against a person who is in possession of the goods at the time of the conviction (q) It can only be made in respect of the goods specified in an indictment upon which an offender has been convicted or their proceeds (r) A person against whom an application for an order of restitution is made is entitled to be heard in opposition (s)

Order for
restitution

The court has a discretion as to whether or not it will make the order (t), and if it refuses to make it the title (if any) of the prosecutor to the goods is not affected by such refusal (a)

An order may be made for the restitution of the proceeds of the stolen goods to the prosecutor, if such proceeds are in the hands of the convict or of an agent for him (b)

If a person is indicted for larceny and outlawed an order of restitution may be made (c)

by false pretences, but the evidence shows that the offence really amounted to larceny, an order of restitution can be made against an innocent holder for value, see R v Walker (1901), 65 J P 729, and p 702, post

(o) R v George (1901), 65 J P 729, and see Re Vautin, Ex parte Saffery, [1899] 2 Q B 549

(p) See Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict c 71), s. 23, and title SALE OF GOODS

(q) It cannot be made against a person who has parted with the goods, even with notice of the larceny (Horwood v Smith (1786), 2 Term Rep 700, Vilmont v Bentley (1886), 18 Q B D 322 331, C A)

(r) R v London Corporation (1858), F B & E 509, S C, R v Pierce, 8 Cox, C C 344 If in the possession of a third person the goods ought to be produced and identified before an order is made (R v Macklin (1850), 6 Cox, C C 216, R v Goldsmith (1873), 12 Cox, C C 594, R v Smith (1873), 12 Cox, C C 597, R v Ford (1869), 11 Cox, C C 320)

(s) R v Macklin, supra

(t) Vilmont v Bentley supra, at p 327

(a) Scattergood v Sylvester (1850), 15 Q B 506, Vilmont v Bentley, supra In this case the court which tried the prisoner had refused to make an order of restitution

(b) See the definition of "property" in the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 1 (p 684, ante), R v Powell (1836), 7 C & P 640 If the proceeds are in the hands of an innocent third party who holds them for value an order of restitution ought not to be made as regards such proceeds (Lindsay v Cundy (1876), 1 Q B D 318 The judgment in this case was reversed on appeal ((1878) 3 App Cas 459), but not on this point), see also R v Justices of Central Criminal Court (1886), 17 Q B D 598, 18 Q B D 314, C A, and R v Elliott (1908) 1 Cr App Rep 15

(c) The outlawry for felony being equivalent to a conviction (1 Hale, P O 545, 2 Hawk P C, c 48, s 22) This is not so if the outlawry is for misdemeanour (R v Tippin (1689), 2 Salk 494) But outlawry is practically obsolete, see p 431, ante It appears that an order of restitution cannot be made in favour of an alien enemy (Bro Abr tit Restitution, 35)

SECT. 1.

Taking
Property.

Restitution
of stolen goods
pawned.

A person against whom an order of restitution is made has no right of appeal against it to the Court of Criminal Appeal (d).

1372 If any person is convicted in any court of feloniously taking or fraudulently obtaining any goods and chattels, and it appears to the court that the same have been pawned with a pawnbroker, the court on proof of the ownership of the goods may, if it thinks fit, order the delivery thereof to the owner, either on payment to the pawnbroker of the amount of the loan, or of any part thereof, or without such payment, as to the court, according to the conduct of the owner and the other circumstances of the case, seems just and fitting (e)

Compensation to innocent purchaser
of stolen
property

1373 Where a prisoner is convicted of larceny or any other offence which includes the stealing of any property, and it appears by the evidence that the prisoner has sold the stolen property to a person who has had no knowledge that the same was stolen, and that any moneys have been taken from the prisoner on his apprehension, the court may, on the application of such purchaser and on the restitution of the stolen property to the prosecutor, order that out of such moneys a sum not exceeding the amount of the proceeds of the sale be delivered to the purchaser (f)

The court of trial may, upon the application of any person aggrieved, and immediately after the conviction of any person for felony, award any sum of money, not exceeding £100, by way of satisfaction or compensation for any loss of property suffered by the applicant through or by means of the felony. The amount so awarded is to be deemed a judgment debt due to the person entitled to receive it from the convict, and may be ordered to be paid out of any moneys taken from the convict on his apprehension, or may be enforced in the same way as a judgment or order of any court for the payment of any costs in any civil action or proceeding may for the time being be enforced (g)

SECT. 2 — Obtaining Property by Fraud.

Obtaining
property by

1374 If a person obtains the property of another by fraud in such circumstances that the ownership of the property passes to (d) R v Elliott, [1908] 2 K B 452, C O A. Nor is there an appeal to any other court although if the order has been made at quarter sessions it can, if wrongly made, be quashed by certiorari. As to the suspension of the operation of an order of restitution pending an appeal by the convict and the power of the Court of Criminal Appeal to rescind or vary such order if the appeal is allowed, see p 437 ante.

(e) Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict c 93), s 30 (2). As regard goods obtained by fraud this provision must be read subject to the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict c 71), s 24 (2), p 686, ante. The discretionary power given by the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict c 93), s 30, to make a restitution order conditional upon the whole or part of a pawnbroker's advance being repaid to him only applies where the pledge is for a sum not exceeding £10, see s. 10 of that Act. And see title PAWNBROKERS AND PLEDGERS.

(f) Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict c 35), s 9.

(g) Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c 23), s 4, see R v Iovett (1870), 11 Cox, C C 603.

such person with the consent of the owner, this does not constitute larceny (h), nor at common law does it constitute a criminal offence at all, unless it amounts to a cheat or a forgery (i)

SECT. 2.
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.

SUB-SECT 1.—Common Law Cheat

1375 Obtaining the property of another by fraud does not amount to a cheat at common law unless it is effected by a deceitful and illegal practice, not amounting to felony, which directly affects or may affect the public (h), and the contrivance used must be of

Cheating

(h) See 2 East, P C 816, R v Prince (1868), L R 1 C C R 150, and p 638, ante. If the owner is tricked by a person into parting with the possession or temporary use of property, and the person appropriates the property to his own use with a dishonest mind, such person is guilty of larceny (R v Russell [1892] 2 Q B 312, C C R, R v Buckmaster (1887), 20 Q B D 182, C C R). B by a mistake, induced in consequence of the fraud of A, believes that A is C, and B, acting under this belief, enters into a contract with A and delivers goods to him in the belief that he is C. As B not intended to contract with A, the property does not pass to A, and if A appropriates the goods, he is guilty of larceny (Gundy v Lindsay (1876), 3 App Cas 459). If a servant or agent with only a limited authority to dispose of property is induced by fraud to part with the property in a case to which his authority does not extend the property does not pass and the person who so obtains it is guilty of larceny (R v Longstreth (1826), 1 Mood C C 137), see Oppenheimer v Frazer, [1907] 2 K B 50, C A.

(i) As to the distinction between a cheat and a forgery at common law, see R v Ward (1727), 2 Stra 717.

(h) 2 East, P C 816, R v Brasford, [1905] 2 K B 730, at p 745. At common law fraud, "to be indictable, must be such a one as affects the public, as if a man uses false weights and measures, and sells by them to all or many of his customers, or uses them in the general course of dealing, so if a man defrauds another under false tokens, so if there be a conspiracy to cheat" (R v Wheatly (1761), 2 Burr 1125, per Lord Mansfield, C J, at p 1127, and see R v Young (1789), 3 Term Rep 98, per BURKE, J, at p 104, R v Lara (1796), 6 Term Rep 566). The following are instances of cheats indictable at common law—Preparing false evidence (R v Vreones, [1891] 1 Q B 360, C C R), making other deceitful contrivances to interfere with the administration of justice (2 East, P C 821, Omealy Newell (1807), 8 East, 364), selling unwholesome provisions (R v Treves (1796), 2 East, P C 821, R v Dixon (1814), 3 M & S 11, R v Mucharty (1705), 2 Ld Raym 1179, 3 Ld Raym 325), non-accounting or false accounting by a public officer (R v Benbridge (1783), 22 State Tr 1, R v Commings (1696), 6 Mod Rep 179, R v Martin (1809), 2 Camp 265), fraudulent enlistment by an apprentice (R v Jones (1777), 1 Leach, 174), fraudulent pretending to have power to discharge a soldier and taking money to discharge him (R v Serlested (1627), Lat 202), using false weights or measures or tokens, or marks of a public nature, putting a false mark or token on an article to make it appear to be genuine (R v Closs (1658), Dears & B 460), playing with false dice (Maddock's Case (1619), 2 Roll Rep 107, 2 East, P C 820), conspiracy to defraud (R v Orbell (1703), 6 Mod Rep 42, 2 East, P C 823), obtaining a passport from the Foreign Office by false representations (R v Brasford, [1905] 2 K B 730). Some of the cheats which were indictable at common law are now made statutory offences (see Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict c 109), s 17, Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict c 68), s 7, Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 24), s 1, Admiralty Powers etc. Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict c 124), s 6, Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 63), ss 3, 4, Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict c 49), s 25, Government Annuities Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 51), ss 11, 12, Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28), s 2, Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 21), s 22 (see s 33), Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict c 21), s 12, Police Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict c 45), s 9, Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 70), s 3, Anchors and Chain

SECT 2
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.

such a character that common prudence and caution are not sufficient security against a person being defrauded thereby (l).

A mere private cheat or imposition, even if accompanied by a false affirmation, is not indictable as a cheat at common law, if no false token is used (m). And even the use of a false token or of a forged document does not amount to a cheat at common law, unless some property is obtained by means of such use (n). A common law cheat is a misdemeanour.

The punishment is imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour, or a fine with or without imprisonment (o).

SUB-SECT 2—False Pretences

Obtaining
chattel etc
by false
pretences.

1376 By statute (p) it is a misdemeanour for a person by any false pretence to obtain from another any chattel, money, or valuable security with intent to defraud (q).

Cables Act, 1890 (62 & 63 Vict c 23), ss 13—16. As to fraudulent enlistment, see Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict c 58), ss 96, 99. Misconduct on the part of a public officer in performing a statutory duty is not indictable when the statute imposing the duty provides other remedies (R v Hall, [1891] 1 Q B 747).

(l) 1 Hawk P C, c 23, s 1, and see R v Jones (1703), 1 Salk 379, R v Nchuff (1705), 1 Salk 151, R v Wheatly (1761), 2 Burr 1125, at pp 1127, 1129.

(m) R v Pinkney (1733), 2 East, P O 818, R v Wheatly (1761), 2 Burr 1125.

(n) See R v Hamilton, [1901] 1 K B 740, O C R. A forgery at common law is only indictable as a cheat at common law, when some person is actually prejudiced (R v Ward (1727), 2 Stia 747).

(o) Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 29, see R v Hamilton, [1901] 1 K B 740, O C R. The offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(p) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 88.

(q) The first statute against false pretences was the stat (1541) 33 Hen 8, c 1, which made it an offence for any person falsely and deceitfully to obtain or get into his hands or possession any money, goods, chattels, jewels, or other things of any other person by colour and means of a false token or counterfeit letter made in any other man's name. This statute was extended by the stat (1757) 30 Geo 2, c 24, s 1, which made it an offence knowingly and designedly, by false pretences, to obtain money, goods, wares or merchandises, with intent to cheat or defraud any person of the same. The stat (1757) 30 Geo 2, c 24, s 1, was extended by the stat (1812) 52 Geo 3, c 64, s 1, so as to include the obtaining of any bond, bill of exchange, bank note, promissory note, or other security for the payment of money, or any warrant or order for the payment of money or delivery or transfer of goods or other valuable thing. These three statutes were repealed by stat (1827) 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 27, and their place was taken by stat (1827) 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 29, s 53, which provided that every person who should, by any false pretences, obtain from any other person any chattel, money, or valuable security with intent to cheat or defraud any person of the same, should be guilty of a misdemeanour. Under the stat (1827) 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 29, it was formerly necessary to allege in an indictment for false pretences an intent to defraud some particular person, but this was made unnecessary by the Criminal Procedure Act 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 8, which made it sufficient to allege simply an intent to defraud. The provisions of stat (1827) 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 29, s 53, and of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 8, were repealed by stat (1861) 24 & 25 Vict c 95, and were re-enacted by the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 88, with some alterations and additions. The word "cheat" was omitted from the phrase "with intent to cheat or defraud," because it means the same as "defraud" and is therefore unnecessary (see

The punishment for the offence is penal servitude for not more than five or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (v)

SECT. 2.
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.

Winning
money etc.
by fraud
at gaming

1377 A person who, by any fraud or unlawful device or ill-practice (1) in playing at or with cards, dice, tables, or other game, or (2) in bearing a part in the stakes, wagers, or adventures, or (3) in betting on the sides or hands of those that play, or (4) in wagering on the event of any game, sport, pastime or other exercise, wins from any other person to himself or to any other or others any sum of money or valuable thing, is by statute to be deemed guilty of obtaining such money or valuable thing with intent to defraud such persons (s)

R v Ingham (1809), Bell, C C 181, at p 185) A proviso was added, making it unnecessary to allege any ownership of the chattel, money, or valuable security (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 88) This renders obsolete the cases of R v Norton (1805) 8 C & P 196, R v Martin (1838) 8 Ad & El 481, Sill v R (1853), 1 E & B 553 A section (s 89) was also added, which extends the meaning of the word "obtain", it provides that a person who, by any false pretences, causes or procures any money to be paid, or any chattel or valuable security to be delivered to any other person for the use or benefit, or on account of the person making the false pretences, or of any other person, with intent to defraud, is to be deemed to have obtained such money etc within the meaning of s 88, s 89 renders obsolete the cases of R v Warrell (1829), 1 Mood C C 224 (where it was held that obtaining credit in account by a false pretence was not within the stat (1827) 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 29, s 53), R v Jarrett (1853), Dears C C 232 (where it was held that under the stat 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 29, s 53, the obtaining must be by the person who made the false pretence or his agent), R v Martin (1859), 1 F & F 501 (where, by a false pretence made to B, A obtained the delivery to C of certain goods which he sold to C, and for which he received payment from C, and it was held that A could not be found guilty of an indictment under the stat (1827) 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 29, of obtaining the goods from B by false pretences (see Greaves, Criminal Law Consolidation Acts, 2nd ed., 177) Except on points to which these alterations and additions apply, the decisions on the stat (1827) 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 29, s 53, as amended by the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), ss 8, 12, are authorities on the present law The decisions on the statutes before stat (1827) 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 29, are sometimes now quoted as authorities, but are to be used with caution owing to the difference in language between those statutes and the statutes now in force (see R v Bowen (1849), 13 Q B 790, per DENMAN, C J, at p 794, commenting on R v Henderson (1841), 2 Mood C C 192)

(r) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 88, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 Either in lieu of or in addition to the penal servitude a fine may be imposed, and the offender may be required to enter into his own recognisances and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 117) A previous conviction for any other crime before the commission of the offence of obtaining property by false pretences is not a matter which can be alleged in an indictment for false pretences (R v Horn (1883), 15 Cox, C C 205, C C R). The offence is triable at quarter sessions

(s) Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict c 109), s 17 "Tables," it seems, means the game of backgammon (Bailey's English Dictionary, sub voce "Backgammon") It is not necessary to state in the indictment to whom the sum of money or valuable thing belongs (R v Moss (1856), Dears & B 104, per POLLOCK, C B, at p 108) An omission to state such ownership is at all events cured by verdict (R v Moss, supra, per ERLE, J, at p 109) The material part of the indictment in that case was as follows "That W M on the of in the year of our Lord by fraud, unlawful device and ill practice in playing at and with cards, unlawfully did win from one H F B to a certain

SECT. 2*Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.

Pretending to exercise
witchcraft

1378 Everyone is by statute guilty of an indictable misdemeanour (t) who (1) pretends to exercise or use any kind of witchcraft, sorcery, enchantment, or conjuration, or (2) undertakes to tell fortunes, or (3) pretends from skill or knowledge in any occult or crafty science to discover where and in what manner any goods or chattels, supposed to have been stolen or lost, may be found

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment for a year without hard labour (u)

Obtaining
execution of security etc
by fraud

1379 A person is by statute guilty of a misdemeanour (x) who, with intent to defraud or injure any other person by any false pretence, fraudulently causes or induces any other person to execute, make, accept, indorse, or destroy the whole or any part of any valuable security or to write, impress, or affix his name or the name of any other person, or of any company, firm, or copartnership, or the seal of any body corporate, company, or society upon any paper or parchment, in order that the same may be afterwards made or converted into or used or dealt with as a valuable security

False
pretences
and larceny

1380 If a person is tried on an indictment for the misdemeanour of obtaining property by false pretences, and the evidence shows that his offence amounts to larceny, he may, nevertheless, be convicted of the misdemeanour. If, however, he is tried for the misdemeanour, he cannot afterwards be prosecuted for larceny on the person whose name is to the jurors unknown, a certain sum of money with intent to cheat him, the said H F B of the same" It does not seem that the provisions of s 88 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), apply to this indictment. It seems, therefore, that an allegation to defraud a particular person is necessary. To constitute the offence there must be fraud or an unlawful device or ill practice during the game etc, it is not sufficient, if fraud is resorted to in order to induce the prosecutor to play in the game (R v Bailey (1850), 4 Cox, C. C 390). It is not clear whether it is necessary to allege in the indictment the name of the game in the course of which the fraud is used, but the evidence must show that there was some "game, sport, pastime, or exercise" played. Tossing with coins, if not a game or sport, is a "pastime or exercise" within the statute (R v Connor (1881), 15 Cox, C. C 3, C. C R). A bet over a conjuring trick or slight of hand or other trick is not within the statute (R v Hudson (1860), Bell, C. C 263). If several persons join together in a fraudulent design to cheat some other person, as by inducing such person by fraud to play in a game or by any other act which if done by one person is not within the statute, an indictment will lie against the confederates for a conspiracy to defraud (R v Bailey (1850), 4 Cox, C. C 390).

(t) Witchcraft Act, 1735 (9 Geo 2, c 5), s 4. A person professing to tell fortunes "to deceive or impose upon" any person is also punishable as a rogue and vagabond under the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo 4, c 83), s 4 (see Penny v. Hanson (1887), 18 Q. B 478, Monck v. Hillen (1877), 2 Ex D 268).

(u) Witchcraft Act, 1735 (9 Geo 2, c 5), s 4. The offender may also be ordered by the court before which he is tried to give sureties for good behaviour in such sum and for such time as the court may think proper, and if so ordered, may be imprisoned until such sureties are given (ibid). The offence is, it seems, triable at quarter sessions.

(x) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 90. See R v Gordon (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 354. C. C R., s 88 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), does not apply to an indictment for this offence, and it is necessary to name in such an indictment the person whom the defendant intended to defraud (Archbold, Criminal Pleading, 23rd ed., 617). In other respects mutatis mutandis the indictment will be in the same form as an indictment for obtaining money etc. by false pretences, see p. 694, ante.

same facts (y) The result is the same if the evidence shows that the offence amounted to some felony other than larceny (a).

SECT. 2.
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.

Essentials of the offence.

1381. The essential ingredients of the misdemeanour of obtaining goods etc by false pretences are four—there must be a false pretence made by the defendant to some other person, there must be knowledge on the part of the defendant that the pretence was false, there must be an obtaining of money, or a chattel, or a valuable security, by means of such false pretences, and there must be an intent to defraud (b)

The false pretence must be of a fact that exists or has existed; a pretence that something will be done or will occur in the future is not of itself sufficient (c)

(y) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 88, R v King (1896), 66 L J (Q B) 87, C C R, [1897] 1 Q B 214, O O R, as to the difference between larceny and obtaining by false pretences, see p 689, ante. If there is any doubt whether an offence amounts to larceny or false pretences, the better course is to indict the offender for false pretences, as on an indictment for false pretences the offender may be found guilty, if the false pretences are proved, although the facts amount to larceny, but on an indictment for larceny the offender cannot be found guilty, if the facts amount to false pretences. On an indictment for false pretences, if the facts show larceny, the defendant cannot be convicted, unless the alleged pretences are proved (R v Bulmer (1861), Le & Ca 476)

(a) Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 12. The court may, if it thinks fit, in such a case discharge the jury, and direct that the defendant be indicted for the felony

(b) R v Aspinall (1876), 2 Q B D 48, C A, at p 57

(c) "A mere lie about an existing fact told for a fraudulent purpose" is a false pretence (R v Woolley (1850), 1 Den, 659, per ALDERSON, B, at p 564), see Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict c 22), s 3. The following are instances of false statements or representations which have been held to be pretences of existing or past facts. That the defendant had been intimated by the Duke of L to take some horses from Ireland to London and had been detained so long by contrary winds that his money was spent (R v Villeneuve (1778), 3 Term Rep, cited at p 104, see R v Hallett (1871), 12 Cox, O C 68, C C R), that one of the defendants had made a bet of 600 guineas "with a colonel of the army then at Bath" that A B would run ten miles in an hour (Young v R (1789), 3 Term Rep 98), that the defendant, a carrier, had delivered goods to the consignee, who had given a receipt for them, but that the defendant had lost or mislaid the receipt (R v Aney (1801), 2 East, 30), that a certain document was a lease for nine years of a certain house (R v Grubby (1845), 1 Cox, O C 249), that the defendant had sufficient funds to pay a bill for £2,638 except the sum of £100 (R v Crossley (1837), 2 Mood & R 17); that the defendant was a single man and able to contract a valid marriage with the prosecutrix, and was in a position to maintain an action for breach of promise of marriage against the prosecutrix (R v Copeland (1842), Car & M 516), that the defendant was Mr H. (R v Bloomfield (1842), Car & M 537), that the defendant was a captain in the Dragoon Guards (R v Hamilton (1845), 1 Cox, C C 244), that a club for which the defendant was canvassing was "a very strong club" and had £7,000 in the bank (R v Welman (1853), Dears C C 188), that a customer for whom the defendant had agreed to make false teeth had refused to pay him any money on account (R v Jones (1853), 6 Cox, O C 467), that the defendant wanted some goods for J S, who was a person to whom the defendant "durst trust £1,000" (R v Archer (1855), Dears C C 449), that a house had been built on some land which the defendant wished to mortgage (R v Burgon (1856), Dears & B 11), that mortgaged property was unincumbered (R v Meakin (1869), 11 Cox, C C 270, C C R, and see R v Simpson (1885), 52 L T 772), that a £1 note was a £5 note (R v Jessop (1858), Dears & B 412), that a "flash note" was a genuine note (R v Wells (1840), cited at Dears & B

SECT 2

Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.Indictment and evidence

1382 An indictment for obtaining property by a false pretence must allege that the defendant made a certain false pretence, and

30, R v Coulson (1850), 1 Den 592), that a worthless cheque or note was a valuable security (R v Doney (1868), 37 L J (M C) 52, C C R, R v Hazelton (1874), L R 2 C C R 134, R v Jurman (1875), 14 Cox, C C 111, C C R, see R v Smith (1854), 6 Cox, C C 314, and R v Walne (1870), 11 Cox, C C 647, C C R), that a forged order for the payment of money was genuine (R v Prince (1868), L R 1 C C R 150), that a person who lived in a large house "down the street," and who had a daughter married some time back, had been "at the defendant about some carpet," and had asked him to procure a piece of carpet (R v Burnsides (1860), Bell, C C 282), that the defendant was authorised to order linen on behalf of a hospital (R v Franklin (1864), 4 F & F 94), that the defendant had power to bring back the prosecutor's husband, who had deserted her (R v Giles (1865), Lo & Ca 502), that the defendant could communicate with the spirits of the dead (R v Lawrence (1877), 16 L T 404), that the defendant was carrying on a bona fide business, or a bona fide extensive business (R v Crab (1868), 11 Cox, C C 85, C C R, R v Cooper (1877), 2 Q B 110, C C R, R v King, [1897] 1 Q B 214, C C R, R v Rhodes, [1899] 1 Q B 77, C C R, and see R v Randell (1887), 16 Cox, C C 335, C C R), that a particular amount of money was owing from the prosecutor (or someone else) to the defendant (or someone else) (R v Woolley (1850), 1 Den 559, R v Leonard (1818), 1 Den 304, R v Barnes (1850), 2 Den 59, R v Withell (1798), 2 East, P O 830, R v Taylor (1883), 15 Cox C C 265, but see R v Oates (1855), Deans C C 459), that the defendant had done work which he had not done (R v Rigby (1858), 7 Cox, C C 307, R v Hunter (1867), 10 Cox, C C 642, C C R), that a greater weight of goods had been delivered than was actually the case (R v Eagleton (1855), Deans C C 576, 515), that defendant was collecting information for a new directory which W & Co were getting up (R v Sperd (1881), 15 Cox, C C 24, C C R) that defendant had got a carriage and put and expected it down "that day or the next" and that he had a large property abroad (R v Howarth (1870), 11 Cox, C C 588, C C R) See also R v Paynter (1908), 25 T L R 191, C O A, where the false pretence was that persons could earn money by writing. Many cases of false pretences arise when a contract is entered into in consequence of the false pretence (R v Kenrick (1843), 5 Q B 49, R v Asterley (1833), 7 C & P 191, R v Abbott (1847), 1 Den 273, R v Park (1847), 1 Den 276, R v Garlick (1847) 1 Den 276, R v Goss (1860) Bell, C C 208, R v Martin (1867), L R 1 C C R 56). Mere commendation, however extravagant, of an article or of a business offered for sale is not a false pretence (see R v Bryan (1857), Deans & B 265, R v Williamson (1869), 11 Cox C C 328, R v Levine (1867), 10 Cox, C C 374). It is doubtful, however, whether these cases are now of any authority, see 2 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed, 498, and R v Lewis (1869), 11 Cox, C C 401. A misstatement of fact as to the quality or weight of goods may amount to a false pretence (R v Ardley (1871), 40 L J (M C) 85, C C R, R v Foster (1877), 2 Q B 110, C C R, R v Kenrick supra, R v Sherwood (1857), Deans & B 251, R v Lee (1804), 1 E & Ca 416, R v Dundas (1853), 6 Cox, C C 380, R v Suter (1867), 10 Cox, C C 577, C C R, R v Hall (1842), Cal & M 249, R v Stevens (1844), 1 Cox, C C 83, R v Roebuck (1856), Deans & B 24). The decisions to the contrary effect of Lord ELLENBOROUGH C J, in R v Pywell (1816), 1 Stark 402, and of LITTLEDALE, J, in R v Codrington (1825), 1 C & P 661, are not now authorities (see R v Kenrick (1843), 5 Q B 49, at p 64, R v Ward (1841), 1 Cox, C C 101, at p 102, R v Bates (1848) 3 Cox, C C 201). The false pretence may be by conduct with or without the use of any spoken or written words (R v Barnard (1837), 7 C & P 781, R v Story (1805), Russ & Ry 81, R v Jackson (1813), 3 Camp. 370, R v Leeth (1807), Russ & Ry 127, R v Goss (1860), Bell, C C 208, R v Huxton (1874), L R 2 C C R 134, R v Murphy (1876), 13 Cox, C C 298, C C R (Ir), R v Bull (1877), 13 Cox, C C 608, C C R, R v Jarman (1878), 14 Cox, C C 111, C C R, R v Hunter (1867), 10 Cox, C C 642, C C R, R v Poull (1894), 15 Cox, C C 568, C C R, R v Sampson (1865), 49 J P. 807, C C R). But there must be some deceit spoken, written or acted, to constitute a false pretence (see R v Jones, [1898] 1 Q B 119, must expressly allege that the pretence was false (d); it must set out the false pretence sufficiently (e). It is sufficient, if the effect of the pretence is set out, it is not necessary to state the words actually used (f).

C. O. R.) A promise to do something in the future (e.g. a promise to pay for goods on delivery) is not a false pretence (R v Hall (1821), Russ. & Ry. 463, R v Burrows (1869), 11 Cox, C. O. 258, C. O. R., R v Woodman (1879), 14 Cox, C. O. 179, R v Johnston (1842), 2 Mood C. O. 254). In R v Douglas (1836), 1 Mood C. O. 462, an indictment alleging as a false pretence that the defendant would tell the prosecutor where certain horses that had strayed were, if the prosecutor would give defendant a sovereign, was held to be bad, the indictment ought to have alleged as the false pretence that the defendant knew where the horses were, see R v Lee (1863), Le & Ca 309 (where it was held that a statement that the defendant "was going to pay" or "had got to pay his rent" was not a false pretence of an existing fact), compare R v Henshaw (1861), Le & Ca 444, R v Johnston, supra. But if a misrepresentation of an existing or past fact is accompanied by a promise, the promise does not prevent the misrepresentation from being a false pretence (R v Fry (1858), Deans & B 449, R v West (1858), Deans & B 575, R v Bates (1848), 3 Cox, C. O. 201, R v Jennison (1862), Le & Ca 157). A representation may be future in form, but may none the less be a representation as to an existing fact, e.g., a statement that a cheque would be paid on presentation is a statement as to an existing fact and amounts to a representation that the cheque is a good one (R v Hughes (1838), 1 F. & F 305, and see R v Hazelton (1874), L. R. 2 C. O. R. 134, R v Giles (1865), Le & Ca 502). In R v Gordon (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 351, C. O. R., it was held that a representation that "the defendant was prepared to pay to the prosecutor £100" was a false pretence of an existing fact, sed quere, see R v Johnston (1842), 2 Mood C. O. 254.

(d) The following is the form of an indictment for false pretences: "The Jurors for our lord the King upon their oath present that A. B. [on the — day of — in the year of Our Lord] unlawfully [knowingly and designedly] did falsely pretend to C. D. that he the said A. B. was then in the employ of E. F. by means of which said false pretences the said A. B. did then unlawfully obtain from the said C. D. money to the amount of £1 with intent to defraud whereas in truth and in fact the said A. B. was not then in the employ of the said E. F. as he the said A. B. at the time when he did so falsely pretend as aforesaid well knew." The words "knowingly and designedly" are not essential, an indictment without an allegation of knowledge that the pretences are false is cured by verdict (R v Bowen (1849), 13 Q. B. 790. Quere whether to allege that the defendant did feloniously pretend makes the indictment bad (R v Walker (1844), 6 C. & P. 657).

(e) R v Muson (1788) 2 Term Rep. 561, R v Oates (1850), Deans C. O. 459, R v Henshaw (1861), Le & Ca 444, see R v Airey (1801), 2 East, 30. An indictment which omits to set out the particular false pretence alleged is bad, if the objection is taken before verdict, but if no such objection is taken and there is a verdict of guilty on such an indictment, the defect is cured by verdict (R v Goldsmith (1873), L. R. 2 C. O. R. 74, see Heymann v R (1873), L. R. 8 Q. B. 102). It is not necessary to set out the false pretences in an indictment for a conspiracy to obtain by false pretences (R v Gill (1818), 2 B. & Ald. 204) or for receiving goods obtained by false pretences (Taylor v R, [1895] 1 Q. B. 25. An allegation that A. and B. made a certain false pretence is satisfactorily proved if it is shown that A. and B. were acting together in a fraudulent design, and that A., in the absence of B., made the alleged pretences (R v Kerrigan (1864), 9 Cox, C. O. 441, C. O. R., R. v. Muland (1843), 2 Mood C. O. 276). As to false pretences by an agent, see R v Boyd (1851), 5 Cox, C. O. 502, R v Butcher (1858), Bell, C. O. 6.

(f) R v Scott (1832), 2 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed., 532. If the false pretence relates to a written instrument, the instrument must be sufficiently described, but it is not necessary to set out the instrument (R v Coulson (1800), 1 Den. 592, R v Brown (1817), 2 Cox, C. O. 348, but see R v Wickham (1839), 10 Ad. & El. 34).

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE.

SECT. 2 Obtaining Property by Fraud.

The false pretence must be proved as it is laid in the indictment, and if there is a substantial variance between the pretence laid and that proved, there can be no conviction (g).

The indictment must mention or describe the person to whom it is alleged that the defendant made a false pretence, and must name the person from whom the property was obtained by means of such false pretence (h). It must allege, and the evidence must

(g) R v Fleslow (1806), 1 Camp 494 (where the pretence laid was that the "defendant had paid" a sum of money into the Bank of England and the statement proved was that "the money had been paid at the bank", and the variance was held to be fatal), R v Butcher (1858), Bell, C C 6 (where the pretence alleged was that the defendant was sent by A B and C D to receive moneys payable to them and the pretence proved was a representation by a boy, an innocent agent of the defendant, that he (the boy) had authority to receive the moneys, and the conviction was quashed), R v Bailey (1852), 6 Cox, C C 29 (where the pretence laid was that the defendant had been to H on behalf of X Y, and had served a certain order of affiliation on S T, and the pretence proved was that the defendant had been with the order to H to serve S T, and had left it with S T's landlord, as S T was out, and it was held that the variance was fatal and that there was no power to amend the indictment under the Criminal Procedure Act, 1825 (1 & 2 Vict c 100), s 1, R v Harl (1841), 1 Cox, C C 101 (where the pretence laid was that certain horses belonged to a family named T, that lived at S, and that Mr T was dead, and the pretence proved was that the family lived two miles from S, and that the elder member of the family was dead, and it was held that the variance was fatal) L v Bulmer (1861), Le & Ca 476 (where the pretence laid was that the defendant was the servant of a person named Hardman, and the pretence proved was that the defendant was the servant of a person named Harding, and the conviction was quashed, it seems that this was a case which could have been cured by amendment, but no application to amend appears to have been made (see 2 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed, 542). In R v Colucci (1861), 3 F & F 101, the defendant was alleged to have pretended that a certain parcel contained all the letters written from the prosecutrix to the defendant, and it was held that this allegation was sufficiently proved, although it was shown that some of the letters had been destroyed by the prosecutrix. In R v Kealey (1851), 2 Don 68, the indictment alleged that certain false pretences were made to B and others, and it was shown that the pretences were made to B alone, and it was held that there was no variance. If the false pretence is contained in a written document, the document must be produced or its non-production accounted for, if it is proved to be lost, secondary evidence of its contents can be given (R v Chadwick (1833), 6 C & P 161). If a defendant orally made the pretences alleged in the indictment, evidence of such oral pretences can be given, although for the purpose of carrying out the fraud a deed was afterwards entered into and the deed alleged a consideration for parting with the money different from that contained in the oral pretences (R v Adameon (1843), 2 Mood C C 286).

(h) If there is no averment of any person to whom the false pretence was made and from whom the property was obtained, the indictment is bad (R v Sowerby, [1884] 2 Q B 173, C C R). But it is sufficient to aver that the pretence was made to "the subjects of His Majesty the King" (R v Suterlock, [1891] 2 Q B 766, C C R). It is not necessary to allege or to prove that the pretence was made to the person from whom the property was obtained (R v Brown (1847), 2 Cox, C C 345, where R v Tully (1840), 9 C & P 227, was doubted, see also R v Hunt (1813), 1 Car & Kir 249). If the pretence is made to some other person than the one from whom the property is obtained, it must be proved that the pretence operated upon the mind of the person from whom the property was obtained (R v Butcher, supra, WILLIAMS, J, at p 19). As to a pretence made to a servant or agent, see R v Douglass (1808), 1 Camp 212. An allegation that property was obtained from the prosecutor is proved by evidence showing that it was obtained from his agent (R v Moseley (1861), Le & Ca 92). An allegation that a false pretence was made to A B (the secretary of a friendly society), and that by means of this false pretence money establish, that the defendant by means of the alleged false pretences, unlawfully obtained either a chattel, money, or valuable security, as the case may be (i), which must be sufficiently described (k), but it is not necessary to allege any ownership thereof (l).

PART XIII.—OFFENCES AGAINST PROPERTY.

SECT. 2. Obtaining Property by Fraud.

It is not necessary to allege that the alleged false pretence was made with the intention of obtaining the property which was obtained, or to show how the false pretence was calculated to effect or had effected the obtaining of the property, or to state that there was no pretence besides the one or more charged, but the evidence must show that the false pretence was made for the purpose of obtaining the property etc. (m).

was obtained from A B, was held to be established by evidence that A B accompanied the defendant to C D (the treasurer of the society), who paid the money to the defendant (R v Rouse (1849), 4 Cox, C C 7).

(i) A chattel, to come within the statute, must be something which is the subject of larceny (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 88). A dog is not a chattel which is the subject of larceny, and, it seems, is not a chattel within the statute as to false pretences (R v Robinson (1859), Bell, C C 34). The half of a bank note or a re-issuable note that has been satisfied may be properly described as a chattel (R v Vyse (1829), 1 Mood C C 218, R v Mead (1831), 4 O & P 535, see R v Clarke (1810), 2 Leach, 1036). A railway passenger ticket is a chattel within the statute, although it has to be delivered up at the end of the journey (R v Boulton (1819) 1 Den 508, and see R v Becham (1851), 5 Cox, C C 181, but see R v Hulham (1870), L R 1 C C R 261). It is not necessary that the chattel should be in existence at the time that the pretence is made, so long as the subsequent obtaining of the chattel is directly connected with the false pretence (R v Martin (1867), L R 1 C C R 56).

(k) In R v Douglass (1808), 1 Camp 212, it was held that a "basket of fish" might be described in an indictment as a "parcel." As to the description of money see Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 18, p 340, ante. The expression "valuable security" includes any order, Exchequer acquittance, or other security whatsoever, entitling or evidencing the title of any person or body corporate to any share or interest in any public stock or fund, whether of the United Kingdom, or of Great Britain or of Ireland, or of any foreign state, or in any funds of any body corporate, company or society, whether within the United Kingdom or in any foreign state or country, or to any deposit in any bank, and also includes any debenture, deed, bond, bill, note, warrant or order, or other security whatsoever, for money or for payment of money, whether of the United Kingdom, or of Great Britain or of Ireland, or of any foreign state, and any document of title to land or goods. The expression "document of title to land" includes any deed, map, paper, or parchment, written or printed, or partly written and partly printed, being or containing evidence of the title or any part of the title to any real estate, or to any interest in or out of any real estate (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 1, see R v Greenhalgh (1854), Dears C C 267). A post-office money order is a valuable security within the meaning of the last-mentioned section (Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 48), s 50).

(l) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 88.

(m) Hamilton v R (1846), 9 Q B 271, R v Brown (1847), 2 Cox, C C 318, and see R v Waking (1823), Russ & Ry 504, where, on a pauper being told to go to work, the pauper falsely said he had no shoes, and thereupon the overseer gave him a pair, and it was held that the false statement was rather a false excuse for not working than a false pretence to obtain goods, and that the pauper could not be convicted of obtaining the shoes by false pretences (see also R v Stone (1858), 1 F & F 311). It is immaterial that the false pretence was not originally made for the purpose of obtaining the property in question, if the false pretence was persevered in or reiterated with that purpose (Id v. Hamilton (1845), 1 Cox, C C 244).

SMOT. 2
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.
—
Obtaining

It is not necessary to allege the time when, or the place where, the pretence was made, or the chattel etc obtained (n)

1383 The chattel, money, or valuable security must be obtained by the defendant, and obtained by means of the false pretences alleged (o) If the defendant with fraudulent intent causes the chattel etc to be delivered to anyone else than the defendant for the use or benefit or on account of the defendant or of any other person, the defendant is deemed to have "obtained" the chattel (p)

It is essential for the completion of the offence that there should have been an intention to deprive the owner wholly of the property in the chattel, therefore to obtain by false pretences the use of a chattel other than money, by way of loan for a limited time, is not an offence within the statute (q) But to obtain the loan of money is, it seems, to obtain money within the statute (r), and this is the case also with regard to the loan of a valuable security, except where there is an expectation that the identical security will be returned (s)

To obtain a gift of money etc by a false pretence (e g, by a false tale contained in a begging letter) is within the statute (t)

Although a false pretence may have been made and although property may have been obtained with a fraudulent intent, yet if the property was not obtained by means of the false pretence alleged in the indictment there can be no conviction (u)

(n) Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), ss 23, 24

(o) If the chattel etc is not actually obtained, but the defendant attempted to obtain it by false pretences, he can be convicted of the attempt (see R v Burton, [1900] 2 Q B 597, C C R)

(p) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 89 This section in effect supersedes the narrow interpretation given to the word "obtain" in R v Garrett (1853) Deans C C 232 (see 2 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed, 465) The section also meets such cases as R v Martin (1859), 1 F & F 501, and R v Wavell (1829), 1 Mood C C 224, where the charge was of obtaining credit in account by false pretences for which there was no provision under the earlier Acts, see also as to obtaining credit by fraud, title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol II, p 350

(q) R v Kilham (1870), 1 R 1 C C R 261

(r) See R v Burgon (1856), Deans & B 11, per CROMPTON, J, at p 20

(s) Ibid

(t) R v Jones (1850) 1 Den 551

(u) R v Jones (1881), 15 Cox, C C 470 C C R R v Bulmer (1864), 9 Cox, C C 492 C C R, R v Dale (1836), 7 C & P 352, R v Dent (1843), 1 Car & Kir 249 R v Butcher (1858) Bell, C C 6, R v Hunt (1861), 8 Cox, C C 495, R v Cosnett (1901), 20 Cox, C C 6, C C R

The pretences alleged and proved must not be too remote from the obtaining (see R v Gardner (1856), Deans & B 40, R v Baugh (1861), 2 F & F 567, but see also as to these two cases R v Martin (1867), 36 L J (M C) 20, C C R, at p 23, and R v Burton (1886), 16 Cox, C C 62, C C R). The false pretences may be made on several different occasions in different conversations or communications, if such conversations can be reasonably connected together (R v Welfman (1853), Deans C C 188) - As to a continuing false pretence, see R v Greathead (1878), 14 Cox, C C 108, C C R. If a person enters in a race in a false name and obtains a long start and wins the race he may be convicted of attempting to obtain the prize by false pretences (R v Burton, [1900] 2 Q B 597, C C R, following R v Dukenson (1879), Roscoe, Criminal Evidence, 13th ed, 408, and disapproving of R v Lamer (1880), 14 Cox, C C 497). The false pretence must be made before the property is obtained (R v Brooks (1859), 1 F & F 502, and see R v Steels (1867), 11 Cox, C C 5, C C R) If a Treasury

SECT. 2
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.

It is sufficient if part only of the alleged false pretence is proved, so long as what is proved operated on the mind of the prosecutor (b).

It is immaterial that in parting with the chattel etc. the prosecutor's mind was influenced by other circumstances as well as by the false pretence (c), or that the prosecutor had the means of finding out whether the pretence was true or not (d).

The indictment must allege, and the evidence must show, that the act of making a false pretence and obtaining property thereby was done with intent to defraud (e).

minute authorising the payment of money is obtained by means of a false pretence, and the money is paid, the money is obtained by the false pretence (R v Cooke (1858), 1 F & F 64). A misrepresentation of the state of accounts between a defendant and his partner in business, followed by the payment of money by the partner to the defendant, is not an obtaining of money by false pretences, as the partner still has rights over the money (R v Evans (1862), Le & Ca 252, and see R v Crosby (1843), 1 Cox, C C 10). If a person is induced by false and fraudulent allegations to enter into a partnership and to advance money, an indictment will lie (R v Adamson (1843), 2 Mood C C 286), but if the contract is not rescinded and money is advanced as part of the capital by the prosecutor, this is not an obtaining of money within the statute (R v Watson (1857), Deans & B 348 at p 362). If at the time when a chattel is obtained the prosecutor knew that the pretence was false, the defendant cannot be convicted of obtaining the chattel by false pretences (R v Mills (1857), Deans & B 205, but see R v Ady (1835), 7 C & P 140) but may be convicted of attempting to obtain (R v Rothwell (1836), Deans & B 24, R v Hensler (1870), 11 Cox, C C 570, C C R). The fact that the prosecutor believed the false pretence may be proved by asking him in the witness box what opinion he formed as to the defendant's statement on its being made (R v King (1896), 66 L J (Q B) 87, C C R). As to the defendant obtaining a larger sum than he asks for, see R v Smith (1832), 2 Russell on Crimes, 520.

(b) R v Lince (1873), 12 Cox, C C 401 C C R, per BOVILL O J, at p 453. It is not necessary that all the pretences should be false, if any one of them is false and the mind of the prosecutor is operated upon by it, the offence is committed (R v Ady (1835), 7 C & P 140, per PATTERSON, J at p 141, R v Perrott (1814), 2 M & S 379, per BAYLY, J, at p 390, L v Hill (1811), Russ & Ry 190). But in R v Wickham (1839), 10 Ad & El 34, it was held that two pretences were so connected together in the indictment that they could not be separated, and as one false pretence was insufficiently alleged, the whole indictment was quashed, see also R v Ward (1814), 1 Cox, C C 101.

(c) R v Lince, supra, see R v Hewgill (1854), Deans C C 315, at p 322.

(d) See R v Jessop (1856), Deans & B 442, R v Woolley (1850), 1 Don 559, at p 564, R v Wickham supra, at p 37 (disapproving of R v Jones (1704), 2 Ld Raym 1013). "There are indeed cases where the pretence is so very foolish that it is difficult to say that an imposition is practised, but still, who is to give the measure?" (R v Wickham, supra).

(e) The allegation of the intent to defraud is essential, the omission of this allegation makes an indictment bad even after verdict, and is not amendable (R v James (1871), 12 Cox, C C 127). It is not necessary to allege or to prove an intent to defraud any particular person (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 88). Proof of the falsity of the pretence and of the defendant's knowledge that it was false is prima facie evidence of an intent to defraud, but is not sufficient if the facts show that there was no such intent: thus in R v Williams (1838), 7 C & P 354, the defendant, by a pretence which he knew to be false, obtained certain goods from a person who owed and would not pay money to the defendant's master, and the defendant made the false pretence in order to secure to his master the means of enforcing payment of the debt, and COLRIDGE, J, directed the jury that, if they were satisfied that the defendant did the act only to put it in his master's power to compel the prosecutor to pay a just debt, they ought to acquit the defendant, and the defendant was accordingly acquitted. See also R v Stime (1858), 1 F & F 311. Unless the jury are

SECT. 2

Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.Negating
the false pretence.

1384 The indictment must particularly negative the alleged false pretence. An indictment is insufficient if it merely alleges that the defendant falsely pretended that certain facts were true, it must go on to allege that the particular statements made were untrue (f)

The evidence must show that the alleged false pretences or some of them were untrue, and that those which were proved to be untrue affected the prosecutor's mind in parting with his property (g)

After negating the false pretences the indictment usually avers that the defendant at the time of making the false pretences knew that the pretences were false (h) It is not clear whether this averment is necessary, but it is necessary that the evidence should show that the defendant knew that the pretences he made were false (i)

satisfied that there was an intent to defraud on the part of the defendant, the charge fails (R v Gray (1891), 17 Cox, C C 299, C C R) If, however, the jury find that the defendant made a pretence which was false to his knowledge and that he made it to induce the prosecutor to part with goods, and that the prosecutor was induced to part with the goods by the false pretence, a finding by the jury that the defendant at the time he made the pretence and obtained the goods intended to pay the prosecutor for the price of them, when it should be in the defendant's power, does not negative the intention to defraud, and on such a finding the defendant should be convicted (R v Naylor (1865), 10 Cox, C C 119, C C R) Obtaining property by false pretences may be a crime, although the defendant does not intend ultimately to cheat the person from whom the property was obtained (R v Hamilton (1815), 1 Cox, C C 211, per Pollock, C B, at p 217, R v Naylor, supra) In order to prove an intent to defraud evidence may be given that the defendant, either before or after the acts charged against him, obtained or attempted to obtain property from the defendant or other persons by means of similar false pretences (R v Robuck (1856), Dears & B 24, R v Francis (1874), 43 L J (M C) 97, C C R, not following R v Holt (1860), Bell, C C 280, R v Cooper (1870), 1 Q B D 19, C C R, R v Rhodes, [1899] 1 Q B 77, C C R, R v Ollis, [1900] 2 Q B 758, C C R, R v Wyatt, [1904] 1 K B 188, C C R)

(f) R v Ferrott (1811), 2 M & S 379, R v Kelleher (1877), 14 Cox, C C 48, C C R (1r) The insertion of the word "falsely" ("falsely pretended") is not essential if the false pretences are expressly negatived (R v Arey (1801), 2 East, 30) The usual form for the negating of the false pretences commences with the words "whereas in truth and in fact" and goes on to state with particularity that each of the alleged pretences is not true (see Saunders, Precedents of Indictments, 3rd ed, 112) As to what is sufficient evidence to negative false pretences, see R v Baroisse (1852), 5 Cox, C C 559, R v Walker (1811), 1 Cox, C C 99, R v Winham (1866), 10 Cox, C C 222, R v Finch (1908), 72 J P 102, C C R

(g) See p 695 ante

(h) See Saunders, Precedents of Indictments, 3rd ed, 110, 112—137 The usual form of the averment is "as he the said A B well knew at the time when he did so falsely pretend as aforesaid"

(i) In cases under stat (1757) 30 Geo 2, c 24, s 1, it was usual to aver that the defendant did "knowingly and designedly" falsely pretend, as those words were in the statute, see the forms of indictments, 2 Starkie, Criminal Pleading, 2nd ed, 496, 3 Chitry, Criminal Law, 1007 Those forms do not contain the words "as he the said A B well knew, etc," for the scienter had been already laid by the use of the words "knowingly and designedly" in the earlier part of the indictment The stat (1826) 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 29, s 53, omitted the words "knowingly and designedly" from the description of the offence. The forms of indictment under that statute do not contain the words "knowingly and designedly," and do not allege that the defendant knew that the pretences were false (Matthews, Digest of the Criminal Law, 1833 ed., p. 471) In R v Henderson (1811), 3 Mood C C 192 an indictment under the stat 7 Geo 4, c 29, s 53,

SECT. 2.
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.

1385 In an indictment for false pretences several separate offences may be charged in separate counts (k). But if the defendant is embarrassed by the joinder of different counts, the prosecutor may be put to his election and compelled to proceed on one count alone (l).

Joining several charges in one indictment.
Venue.

1386 If the crime of obtaining by false pretences is begun in one county and completed in another, e g, if the false pretence is made in one county and the chattel etc is obtained in another county, the offence may be tried in either county (m)

If the offence is begun in one country and completed in another, it seems that the offence of obtaining can be tried in England only, was held bad on demurrer, because it omitted to state that the defendant knew that the pretences were false, see also R v Wickham (1839), 8 L. J. (M. C.) 87, per Lord DENMAN, C. J., at p. 89, Hamilton v R (1846), 9 Q. B. 271, per PARSONS, J., at p. 278. The decision in R v Henderson, supra, was followed in R v Philpotts (1843), 1 Car. & Kir. 112, but was adversely criticised in R v Bowen (1849), 13 Q. B. 790, where an indictment which contained no express averment of the defendant's knowledge of the falsity of the pretences was held good after verdict by virtue of the Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo. 4, c. 64), s. 21, in R v Grubby (1845), 1 Cox, C. C. 249, it was held that an indictment without such an averment was good, although the objection was taken before verdict. It is submitted that a specific allegation of the defendant's knowledge of the falsity of the pretences is not essential (see R v Mackarty (1705), 2 Ld. Raym. 1179), that such knowledge is alleged by implication in the allegation of the intent to defraud. It seems clear that, even if the allegation is necessary, the omission of such an allegation is cured by verdict (R v Bowen, supra). The knowledge of the defendant that the alleged pretence is false must be established by evidence (R v Bowen, supra, at p. 795).

(k) R v Young (1789), 3 Term Rep. 98.

(l) R v Bassett (1813), 1 Cox, C. C. 51. As to joining a number of counts for false pretences in one indictment, see R v King, [1897] 1 Q. B. 214, C. C. R., per HAWKINS, J., at p. 216, and as to joining counts for false pretences in the counts for conspiracy, see R v Stoddard (1909), 25 T. L. R. 612, C. C. R.

(m) Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo. 4, c. 64), s. 12, R v Atington (1893), 9 T. L. R. 199, C. C. R. But the offence cannot be tried in a county into which the defendant takes the property which he has obtained in another county (R v Stanbury (1862), Le. & Ca. 128). Before the Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo. 4, c. 64), the offence (under the stat. 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, s. 1) was only triable in the county where the chattel etc. was obtained (R v Buttery, cited R v Burdett (1820), 4 B. & Ald. 95, at p. 179). If money is obtained by false pretences, and is in consequence of the defendant's request put in a letter and posted in the county of A and received by the defendant in the county of B, the defendant may, apart from the provisions of the Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo. 4, c. 64), s. 12, be tried either in the county of A or in the county of B (R v Jones (1850), 1 Den. 551, and see R v Leech (1806), Dears C. C. 642). In R v Cooke (1858), 1 F. & L. 64, where the defendant posted a letter containing a false pretence in Northampton and then obtained a Treasury minute, in consequence of which he obtained payment of money in Westminster, it was held that the defendant might be tried in Northamptonshire. The Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo. 4, c. 64), was not referred to in that case, but it seems that only by virtue of that Act can the decision be supported, unless the fact was, as it may very well have been, that the Treasury minute was obtained in Northampton, and therefore the money was obtained there, although it was paid in Westminster, but the case does not state where the minute was obtained, and the decision proceeds on the ground that the letter containing the false pretence was posted in Northampton. This case was referred to by DENMAN, J., in R v Holmes (1883), 12 Q. B. D. 23, C. C. R., but Lord COLERIDGE, C. J., there said that, although he did not intend to cast any doubt upon R v Cooke, his judgment was independent of it.

SECT 2
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.

if the property is obtained in England (n) If the false pretence is made in England and the property is obtained in another country and no part is obtained here, the offence is apparently not triable in England (o).

SUB SECT 3 —Restitution

Order of restitution
of property obtained by false
pretences

1387 If a person is indicted for obtaining property by false pretences by or on behalf of the owner of the property or his executor or administrator and is convicted of the offence, the court before whom such person is tried for the offence may order restitution of the property mentioned in the indictment and produced and identified in court, or of the proceeds of such property (p)

A person who has obtained the property of another by false pretences acquires a voidable title to the property, the original owner from whom the property was so obtained on becoming aware of the fraud can repudiate the transaction by means of which the property was obtained, and if the property or its proceeds are still in the possession of the offender or his agent, or are in the hands of a donee from the offender, or of a purchaser for value who has notice of the fraud, the ownership reverts by virtue of such repudiation in the original owner

Such owner may sue for the recovery of the property or its proceeds, or, on the conviction of the offender for obtaining the property by false pretences, he may obtain from the court which tries the offence a summary order for the restitution of the property or its proceeds (a)

Not against bonâ fide purchaser

If before the repudiation the defrauder transfers the property for value to an innocent purchaser, such purchaser acquires a good title to the property A subsequent repudiation by the original

(n) See R v Holmes (1883), 12 Q B D 25, C C R R v Ellis, [1899] 1 Q B 230, 1 Q C R, compare R v Peters (1886), 16 Q B D 636, C C R, R v Stoddart (1909), 25 T L R 612, C C A

(o) Such a case would be governed by the common law rule as to venue (see p 261, ante, R v Buttery cited R v Burdett (1820) 4 B & Ald 45, at p 179, compare R v Dawson (1888), 16 Cox, C C 556, C C R) The only cases dealing with the point (R v Holmes, R v Ellis, R v Peters, supra) are all cases where the obtaining was in England In R v Garrett (1853), 10 Cox C C 232, a false pretence was made in Russia, and money was in consequence obtained in Russia, and a worthless security which affected to be payable in England was given by the defendant in Russia, and the person who received the security presented it in England, where it was dishonoured It was held (before the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96)) that the defendant could not be convicted of attempting to obtain money in England It seems that now, by virtue of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 89 (see p 696, ante), it would be held that in such a case there was an attempt to obtain in England

(p) Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 100, see p 684, ante, R v Justices of Central Criminal Court (1886), 18 Q B D 314, C A

(a) R v George (1901), 65 J P 729, see Re Vautin Ex parte Saffery (1899), 2 Q B 549, and Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 1, R v Justices of Central Criminal Court, supra There is a difference between stolen property and property obtained by false pretences Stolen property, if in the hands of the thief or his agent, or of a donee from him, or of a purchaser even for value, if the sale is not in market overt, and does not come within the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict c 45), s 9 (see p 686, ante), remains the property of the owner, and no repudiation or reversion is necessary Property obtained by fraud passes to the defrauder, who acquires a voidable title to it, and does not pass back to the original owner, until it is reversioned in him by repudiation of the transaction by which the property was obtained (see R v George, supra).

owner will not operate to revest the title in the original owner, even though the defrauder is convicted of obtaining the property by false pretences, and no order for the restitution of the property can in such a case be made (b)

SECT. 2.
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.

SUB-SECT. 4—Attempts to obtain by False Pretences

1388 An attempt to obtain property by false pretences is a common law misdemeanour

Attempt to obtain property by false
pretences

The punishment is a fine or imprisonment without hard labour, with or without a fine (c)

1389 If a defendant is indicted for obtaining property by false pretences and the evidence proves that the defendant made the alleged false pretences, that they were false, and that the defendant had an intent to defraud, but the evidence fails to prove that the defendant obtained the property or that the alleged false pretences led to the obtaining, the defendant may be convicted of the misdemeanour of the attempt to obtain by false pretences (d). Or a defendant may in the first instance be tried on an indictment which charges him with attempting to obtain money etc by false pretences with intent to defraud (e)

(b) R v Willer (1901), 65 J P 729, Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict c 71), s. 23, 24 (2). S. 24 (2) of this Act has altered the law laid down in Bentley v Ulmont (1887), (12 App Cas 471, which decided that, when goods had been obtained by false pretences, and the property in them passed to an innocent purchaser from the defrauder, the title, by virtue of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s. 100, reverted in the original owner on the conviction of the defrauder in the same way as stolen property to which a title had been acquired by a purchaser in market overt or otherwise reverted in the original owner on the conviction of the thief. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict c 71), only applies to personal chattels other than money, and does not apply to choses in action, while the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s. 100, applies not only to money but also to valuable securities. As regards money there can be no reversion, if it has passed in currency to a person who receives it in good faith and for value, and if money has so passed in currency, no order for its restitution can be made under s. 100 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96) (see Moss v Hancock [1899], 2 Q B 111), nor can any order under that section be made as regards a valuable security which has been bona fide paid or discharged by the person or body corporate liable to pay it, or which, being a negotiable instrument, has been bona fide taken or received by transfer or delivery by some person or body corporate for a just and valuable consideration without any notice or reasonable cause to suspect that it had been stolen (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96) s. 100). Quære whether, if a valuable security which is not a negotiable instrument has been obtained by false pretences and has passed to an innocent purchaser for value without notice, and has not been paid or discharged as above, the property in such a security does not revert in the original owner on the conviction of the offender. As the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict c 71), does not apply to choses in action, it might be contended that to such a case Bentley v Ulmont, supra, still applies, but see Attenborough, The Recovery of Stolen Goods etc., 61.

(c) There is no limit at common law to the term of the imprisonment, see p 410, ante. The offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(d) Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s. 9. See R v Roebuck (1856), Dears & B 24, R v Hensler (1870), 11 Cox, O C 570.

(e) See R v Rugby (1858), 7 Cox, C C 507, R v Egleton (1855), Dears. C C 515. The indictment should set out the false pretences and negative them, and should be in the same form as an indictment for the complete offence, except that the allegation of "did attempt to obtain" should be substituted for "did obtain" (R v Marsh (1849), 1 Den 505, and R v Hawley (1848), 2 Cox, C C 464). See also R v Dunleavy (1909), 73 J P 56, C C A.

SECT. 2.
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.

False statement by money-lender

The punishment for this offence is the same as for obtaining money etc by false pretences (f)

1390 Any money-lender, or any manager, agent, or clerk of a money-lender, or a director, manager or officer of a corporation carrying on the business of a money-lender, is guilty of an indictable misdemeanour (g), who by any false, misleading or deceptive statement, representation, or promise, or by any dishonest concealment of material facts, fraudulently induces or attempts to induce any person to borrow money or to agree to the terms on which money is borrowed or is to be borrowed

The punishment is imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding two years, or a fine not exceeding £500, or both (h)

SUB-SECT. 5 — Fraudulent Conveyances

Conveyance of land to defraud
creditors

1391 Every feoffment, gift, grant, alienation, bargain, and conveyance of land, tenements, hereditaments, goods, and chattels, or any of them, or of any lease, rent, common or other profit or charge out of such lands etc, by writing or otherwise, and every bond, suit, judgment, and execution had or made with the intent to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors and others of their just debts is void as against the persons intended to be delayed, hindered, or defrauded (i)

All the parties to such a fraudulent conveyance etc who wittingly and willingly put in use, avow, maintain, justify, or defend the same as true, and had or made bond fide and upon good

(f) See p 691, ante

(g) Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict c 51), s 4 By money-lender is meant a person whose business is that of money lending, or who advertises or announces himself as carrying on that business, the Act does not apply to a pawnbroker in respect of business carried on by him in accordance with the provisions of the Act relating to pawnbrokers, or to a registered friendly society within the meaning of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict c 25), or having rules certified under ss 2 or 4 of that Act, or under the Benefit Building Societies Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will 4, c 32), or the Loan Societies Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict c 110), or under the Building Societies Act 1874 to 1894, or to any body corporate, incorporated or empowered by a special Act of Parliament to lend money in accordance with such special Act or to any person bond fide carrying on the business of banking or insurance, or bond fide carrying on any business not having for its primary object the lending of money, or to any body corporate for the time being exempted from registration under the Money-lenders Act, 1900, by order of the Board of Trade made and published pursuant to regulations of the Board of Trade As to who is a money lender, see Newton v Pyke (1908), 25 T L R 127 The Act is wider than the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 90 (see p 703, ante), and includes the case of a false pretence of a future part or a promise to do something in the future An offence like that in R v Gordon (1889), 23 Q B D 354, C C R, might now be prosecuted under the Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict c 51)

(h) Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict c 51), s 4 See, generally, title MONEY AND MONEY-LENDING

(i) Stat. (1571) 13 Eliz c 5, ss 1 and 2, Twyne's Case (1601), 1 Smith, L C 11th ed., 1. For an instance of an indictment under the statute, see R v Smith (1852), 6 Cox, C C 31 It is not necessary to set out in the indictment the specific facts constituting the fraud, if the words of the statute are followed (R v Smith, supra) Communications between a client and a solicitor for the purpose of committing a fraud under the statute are not privileged from disclosure (R v Cox (1884), 15 Cox, C C 611, C C R.)

consideration, or who alien or assign any such lands etc. conveyed to them by such fraudulent conveyance etc., are by statute guilty of a misdemeanour (j)

SECT. 2.
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.

The punishment for this offence is the forfeiture of one year's value of the lands conveyed, and the whole value of the goods and chattels, and the money to which any such fraudulent bond may relate, and imprisonment for half a year (j)

There are corresponding provisions as to conveyances etc. of lands, tenements, or other hereditaments with intent to defraud and deceive subsequent purchasers of such lands etc (k)

To defraud
purchasers.

1392 Any seller or mortgagor of land, or of any chattels real or personal, or choses in action, conveyed or assigned to a purchaser or mortgagee, or the solicitor or agent of any such seller or mortgagee, is by statute guilty of an indictable misdemeanour (l) who, with intent to defraud, conceals any settlement, deed, will, or other instrument material to the title, or any incumbrance, from the purchaser or mortgagee, or falsifies any pedigree upon which the title does or may depend, in order to induce such purchaser or mortgagee to accept the title offered or produced to him

Fraudulent
concealment
by seller or mortgagor.

The punishment for this offence is a fine or imprisonment with or without hard labour for any term not exceeding two years, or both (m).

1393 Any person concerned as principal or agent in proceedings before the registrar or the court under the Land Transfer Act, 1875 (n), is by statute guilty of an indictable misdemeanour (o) who, with intent to conceal the title or claim of any person, or to substantiate a false claim, suppresses, attempts to suppress, or is privy to the suppression of any document or fact

Fraudulent
suppression of documents etc in proceedings
under Land
Transfer Act,
1875

Everyone is by statute guilty of an indictable misdemeanour (p) who fraudulently procures, fraudulently attempts to procure, or is privy to the fraudulent procurement of any entry on the register under the Land Transfer Act, 1875 (q), or any erasure from or alteration of such register

Fraudulent
entry on register
under Land
Transfer Act,
1875

The punishment for each of the two last-named misdemeanours is imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour, or a fine not exceeding £500 (r)

(j) See note (i), p 704, ante

(k) Stat (1884) 27 Eliz c 4, ss 1, 2, Twyne's Case (1601), 1 Smith, L. C., 11th ed., 1 See Voluntary Conveyances Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict c 21) These offences are, it seems, triable at quarter sessions

(l) Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict c 35), s 24, Law of Property Amendment Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict c 38), s 8

(m) Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict c 35), s 24 No prosecution for any offence in this section is to be commenced without the sanction of the Attorney-General or of the Solicitor-General, if the office of Attorney General is vacant, such sanction is not to be given without such previous notice of the application for leave to prosecute to the person intended to be prosecuted as the Attorney General or Solicitor-General may direct (ibid) The offence is, it seems, triable at quarter sessions.

(n) 38 & 39 Vict. c 87

(o) Ibid, s. 96

(p) Ibid, s. 100

(q) 38 & 39 Vict c 89

(r) Ibid, ss 99, 100

SECT 2

Obtaining
Property
by Fraud*PersonationSUB-SECT 6—Personation

1394 To personate another with a fraudulent purpose is an indictable misdemeanour at common law, if it amounts to a common law cheat (s)

Many cases of fraudulent personation are now statutory offences (t)

Personation
of share holders etc

1395. It is by statute (a) a felony falsely and deceitfully to personate any owner of any share or interest of or in any stock, annuity, or other public fund transferable at the Bank of England or the Bank of Ireland, or any owner of any share or interest of or in the capital stock of any body corporate, company, or society established by charter or by Act of Parliament, or any owner of any dividend or money payable in respect of such share or interest, if the offender by such personation transfers or endeavours to transfer any share or interest belonging to such owner, or by such personation receives or endeavours to receive any money due to any such owner, as if the offender were the true and lawful owner

The punishment is penal servitude for life or for any term not not less than three years, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (b)

Personation of stock holder

1396 It is by statute (c) a felony falsely and deceitfully to personate any owner of any share or interest of or in any India stock, or in any stock as defined in the National Debt Act, 1870 (d), or any stock certificate or coupon issued in pursuance of the India Stock Certificate Act, 1863 (e), or of Part V of the National Debt Act, 1870 (f), and thereby to obtain or endeavour to obtain any such stock certificate or coupon, or to receive or endeavour to receive any money due to any such owner, as if the offender were the true and lawful owner

This offence is punishable in the same way as the last-mentioned felony (g)

(s) I.e., if the offence may affect the public interest, as by false personation to defeat the administration of justice or if there is a conspiracy, and see p 689, ante, 2 East, P C 1010. Many of the cases of personation in the books are cases of conspiracy to defraud, see R v Hiley (1782), 2 East, P C 1010, R v Robinson (1746), 1 Leuch, 37, R v Mackarty (1700), 2 Ld Raym 1179, 3 Ld Raym 320, see 2 East, P C 824, 2 Burr 1129. The offence is triable at quarter sessions

(t) As to personation at elections, see title ELECTIONS

(a) Forgery Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 3, see Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 83), s 32, Colonial Stock Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict c 59), s 21, Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict c 102), s 19, and see Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 41), s 10

(b) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(c) Forgery Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c 58), s 4, India Stock Certificate Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict c 73), s 14

(d) 33 & 34 Vict c 71, see s 3, and First Schedule

(e) 26 & 27 Vict c 73

(f) 33 & 34 Vict c 71

(g) Forgery Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c 58), s 4, India Stock Certificate Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict c 73) s 14, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

1397 It is by statute (h) a felony to personate any owner of any share or interest in any company established under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (i), or of any share, warrant, or coupon issued under that Act

SECT. 2.
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.

This offence is punishable in the same way as the last-mentioned felony (k)

1398 It is by statute (l) a felony falsely and deceitfully to personate any person, or the heir, executor, or administrator, wife, widow, next of kin, or relation of any person, with intent fraudulently to obtain any land, estate, chattel, money, valuable security, or property

Personation
to obtain land etc.

This offence is punishable in the same way as the last-mentioned felony (m)

1399 It is by statute (n) a felony for anyone wittingly and knowingly to personate or falsely assume the name or character, or procure any other so to personate or falsely assume the name or character, of any officer, non-commissioned officer, soldier, or other person entitled or supposed to be entitled to any pension, wages, pay, grant, or other allowance of money, prize money or relief, due or supposed to be due or payable, for or on account of any service done or supposed to be done by any such officer, non-commissioned officer, soldier, or other person in the King's army or other military service, or to personate or falsely assume the name or character of the executor or administrator, wife, relation, or creditor of any such officer etc., in order fraudulently to receive any such pension etc.

Personation
to obtain army pension
etc

(h) 8 Edw 7, c 69, s 38 (1) (ii)

(i) Ibid

(k) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 69), s 38 (ii), Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69) s 1

(l) False Personation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict c 36), s 1. Nothing in the Act is to prevent a person from being proceeded against and punished under any other Act or at common law for an offence punishable as well under the Act as under any other Act or at common law. As to an offence under this Act in relation to any military pay etc., see Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict c 58), s 142 (3)

(m) False Personation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict c 36), s 1, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(n) Chelsea and Kilmainham Hospitals Act, 1826 (7 Geo 4, c 10), s 38, there are almost identical provisions in the Army Prize Money Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will 4, c 53), as to anyone personating etc any officer etc entitled etc to any "prize money, grant, bounty money, share, or other allowance of money" due etc for or on account of any service performed etc by any officer etc "who shall have really served or be supposed to have really served" in the King's army or "in any other military service," or as to personating or acting, aiding or assisting in personating etc "the executor, administrators wife, widow, next of kin, relation or creditor" of any such officer etc, in order to receive or enable any other person to receive "any such prize money etc", see also Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict c 58), s 142 (2), (3). If A believe B to be C, and at B's request assumes the character of C for the purpose of receiving a share of prize money etc, A commits an offence under the Act (R v Lake (1869), 11 Cox, C C 333). The offence of personating someone for the purpose of obtaining payment of a part of a pension is committed even although the pension is no longer in existence (R v Pringle (1849), 9 C & P 408), but there must be a person who was in the service of the King etc and whose name and character were assumed, and see p 708, post

SECT. 2
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.
 ———
Personation
of naval
pensioner etc

This offence is punishable in the same way as the last-mentioned felony (o).

1400 It is an indictable misdemeanour (p) falsely and deceitfully to personate any person entitled or supposed to be entitled to receive any pay, wages, allotment, prize money, bounty money, grant, or other allowance of the same nature, half-pay, pension, or allowance from the Compassionate Fund of the navy, payable or supposed to be payable by the Admiralty, or any other money so payable or supposed to be payable, or any effects or money in charge or supposed to be in charge of the Admiralty, in order to receive such pay etc

The punishment for this offence in the case of conviction on indictment is penal servitude for not more than five or for not less than three years, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (q)

There are other cases of personation which are punishable only on summary conviction (r)

SUB-SECT. 7 — Conspiracy to Defraud

Conspiracy

1401 If two or more persons conspire together to cheat or defraud another or others, the confederates commit an indictable common law misdemeanour, whether the act which they agree to do is or is not of itself criminal

The punishment for this offence is fine and imprisonment with or without hard labour (s)

(o) Cheltenham and Kidlington Hospitals Act, 1826 (7 Geo 4, c 16), s 35, Penal Servitude Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict c 3), s 2, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(p) Admiralty Powers etc Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict c 124), s 8, see Naval Pensions Act, 1864 (47 & 48 Vict c 41), s 2 The offence is committed even though the person whose name or character is assumed is dead (R v Martin (1817), Russ & Ry 321, R v Cramp (1817), Russ & Ry 327) But the offence is not committed unless the person whose name or character is assumed was or was supposed to be entitled to the pay etc which it is sought to obtain (R v Brown, R v M'Annally (1800), 2 East, P C 1009) In R v Tannet (1818), Russ & Ry 351, a man was indicted for personating one Peter McCann, a person entitled to prize money on board of the ship Tremendous, a person named Peter McCann was entitled to prize money in respect of services on that ship, but there was no person of the name of Peter McCann, the jury found that the prisoner meant to personate Peter McCann, but the conviction was held by all the judges to be wrong, they were of opinion that the "personating" must apply to some person who had belonged to the ship, and that the indictment must charge the personating of that person The principle of the decision is still, it seems, applicable, although the particular defect in the case could now be remedied by amending the indictment, see p 344, ante A person who aids and abets another in personating someone else is guilty of an offence under the statute (R v Potts (1818), Russ & Ry 353)

(q) Admiralty Powers etc Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict c 124), s 8, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The offence is also punishable on summary conviction, see Admiralty Powers etc Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict c 124) The offence is triable at quarter sessions

(r) The offence is only triable at quarter sessions if the conspiracy is to commit a crime triable at quarter sessions (Quarter Sessions Act, 1812 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1)

(s) See Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict c 21), s 12, Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict c 58), s 142

An agreement made with a fraudulent mind to do that which, if done, would give to the prosecutor a right of action founded on fraud is a criminal conspiracy (t)

As the essence of the crime of conspiracy to defraud is the agreement of two or more persons to defraud someone else, it is unnecessary in an indictment for such a conspiracy to specify the particular means and devices by which the defendants conspired to defraud, or any overt act committed in justification of the agreement (u)

SECT. 2.
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.
Indictment.

(t) R v Aspinall (1876), 2 Q. B. D. 48, O. A., per BRETT, J. A., at p. 59, R v Hevey (1782), 2 East, P. O. 856, R v Warburton (1870), L. R. 1 O. O. R. 274. Agreements to do the following things are instances of conspiracies to defraud—To raise the price of the public funds on a particular day by false rumours (R v De Berenger (1814), 3 M. & S. 67), to procure by false statements a quotation of the shares of a company on the official list of the Stock Exchange in order to give a fictitious value to such shares (R v Aspinall (1876), 2 Q. B. D. 48, O. A.), to induce a false belief among investors that there is a bona fide market for certain shares (Scott v Brown, Dunning, McAdams & Co., [1892] 2 Q. B. 721, (C. A.)), to purchase shares in a company in order to induce persons to take shares in a new company which was to take over the business of an old company which the conspirators knew was hopelessly insolvent (R v Gurney (1869), 11 Cox, C. C. 414), to represent a bank and its affairs to be in a sound and prosperous condition when it is really insolvent (R v Esdaile (1858), 1 F. & F. 213), to make and publish a false balance-sheet misrepresenting the financial condition of a company (R v Birch (1866), 4 F. & F. 407), to fabricate false shares in a company in addition to the number prescribed by the rules and to sell them as good shares (R v Mott (1827), 2 C. & P. 221), to deprive a partner of his interest in some of the partnership property by false entries and false documents (R v Warburton (1870), L. R. 1 O. O. R. 274), to make false representations so as to enforce by means of legal process the payment of sums of money known not to be due (R v Taylor (1883), 15 Cox, C. C. 265, 268), to defraud an execution creditor of the fruits of a judgment by falsely ante dating a deed relating to the property of the judgment debtor (R v Cor (1854), 14 Q. B. D. 153, C. C. R.), knowingly to make false representations as to the solvency of a purchaser of goods on credit and thus to enable the purchaser to get goods on credit when it is known that he does not intend to pay for them (R v Ouman (1880), 14 Cox, C. C. 381), to cause indigent persons to be reputed and believed to be persons of considerable credit for the purpose of defrauding tradesmen (R v Whitehouse (1852), 6 Cox, C. C. 38, R v Roberts (1808), 1 Camp 399), to dispose of goods in contemplation of bankruptcy in order to defraud the creditor of the person to whom the goods belong (Heymann v R (1873), L. R. 8 Q. B. 102, R v Hull (1865), 1 F. & F. 33), to cause goods at an auction to be sold at a price far below their real value with intent to divide between the conspirators the difference between the auction price and the fair price (Levi v Levi (1833), 6 C. & P. 239), to hold a sham auction with sham bidders for the purpose of selling goods at prices grossly above the real value (R v Lewis (1869), 11 Cox, C. C. 404, where R v Lewis (1867), 10 Cox, C. C. 374, was commented upon and distinguished), to defraud a railway company by obtaining excursion tickets which were not transferable and selling them to other persons to be used by them (R v Absolom (1859), 1 F. & F. 498), to make false and fraudulent representations as to the soundness of a horse which the owners had agreed to sell and so to induce him to accept a less price than that at which he had agreed to sell the horse for (R v Carlisle (1851), Dears C. C. 337), falsely and fraudulently to represent that a horse is the property of a private person and not of a horsedealer and thus to induce a person to buy it (R v Kenrick (1843), 5 Q. B. 49), to obtain money from another person by false pretences with intent to defraud (R v Gull (1818), 2 B. & Ald. 204)

(u) R v Kinnarsley (1719), 1 Stra. 193, R v Gull (1818), 2 B. & Ald. 204, R v Kenrick (1843), 5 Q. B. 49, Sydesoff v R (1847), 11 Q. B. 245, Ex Ch. An indictment is sufficient which alleges that A. and B. "unlawfully conspired by false pretences and subtle means and devices to obtain from C. divers large sums of

SECT 2
Obtaining
Property
by Fraud.

In conspiracy the unlawful agreement is of itself a sufficient overt act (x) But in a prosecution for conspiracy, unless there is direct proof of the unlawful agreement, the evidence must, in order to establish the agreement, show an overt act done in pursuance of the alleged agreement, evidence of such an act is always desirable, even when it is not necessary

Evidence.

An overt act done by one of the conspirators in furtherance of the agreement will be evidence against all, if the agreement is established by other evidence (y)

SUB-SECT 8—Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906

Corrupt
transactions
with agents

1402 By statute (a) (1) if any agent corruptly accepts or obtains or agrees to accept or attempts to obtain from any person for himself or for any other person any gift or consideration as an inducement or reward for doing or forbearing to do, or for having done or forbore to do, any act in relation to his principal's affairs or business, or for showing or forbearing to show favour or disfavour to any person in relation thereto, or (2) if any person corruptly gives, or agrees to give, or offers any gift or consideration to any agent as an inducement or reward for doing or forbearing to do any such act or for showing or forbearing to show favour or disfavour to any person in relation to his principal's affairs or business, or (3) if any person knowingly gives to any agent, or if any agent knowingly uses with intent to deceive his principal, any receipt, account, or other document in respect of which the principal is interested, and which contains any statement which is false or erroneous or defective in any material particular, and which to his knowledge is intended to mislead the principal, he commits a misdemeanour and is liable to imprisonment with or without hard labour for two years or to a fine not exceeding £500, or to both

SEC 3—Offences against the Bankruptcy Acts

Offence by bankrupt

1403 A number of offences on the part of a bankrupt, or by a person against whom a receiving order has been made, have also been created by statute (b)

money with intent to defraud,' although if the indictment had been against one person it would have been necessary to set out the false pretences (R v Gill, supra, R v Kemuk, supra, see p 694, ante Merely to allege that A and B unlawfully fraudulently, and deceitfully did conspire, combine, confederate and agree together to cheat and defraud C of his goods and chattels is sufficient (Sydney v R, supra) But see R v Richardson (1844) 1 Mood & R 402, R v Fowle (1831), 4 Q. & P 592 It is, it seems, necessary to allege an intent to defraud someone, but an allegation of an intent to defraud the public is sufficient (R v De Berenger (1814) 3 M & S 67, R v Gurney (1809), 11 Cox, C C 414 at p 440, but see White v R (1870), 13 Cox, C C 318), and 1 Russell on Crime, 6th ed., 119 (n 1)

(x) Mulcahy v R (1868), L. R 3 H. L. 306

(y) R v Diamond (1868), 11 Cox, C C 146

(a) Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 31) These offences are not triable at quarter sessions (ibid s 2 (v)) The consent of the Attorney or Solicitor General to the prosecution must be obtained (ibid, s 2 (1))

(b) For a full treatment of these offences, see title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol II, pp 345—351. As to obtaining credit by fraud, see ibid, and R v Muirhead (1905, 73 J P 31, C C A These offences are triable at quarter sessions

SECT 4—*Forgery.*SECT 4
Forgery.SUB-SECT 1—Forgery at Common Law

1404 Forgery is the fraudulent making of a written instrument which purports to be that which it is not (c). It is indictable as a misdemeanour at common law, and the forgery of certain instruments and certain acts relating to or preparatory to forgery have been made statutory offences (d).

Definition of
forgery

Forgery must be of some document or writing (c). The

(c) Ex parte Windsor (1865), 10 Cox, C C 118 at pp 123, 124, R v Ritson (1869), L R 1 C C R 200, at pp 203, 204. For other definitions, see J v Parkes (1796), 2 Leach, 775, at p 785; R v Jones (1785), 1 Leach, 366, 367, R v Fpps (1864), 4 F & F 81 per WILLES, J, at p 86, 2 East, P C 852, 4 Bl Com 245, 4 Com Dig tit Forgery, A, 1, 1 Hawk P C, c 70, s 2 ("the notion of forgery doth not so much consist in the counterfeiting of a man's hand and seal but in the endeavouring to give an appearance of truth to a mere deceit and falsity, and either to impose that upon the world as the solemn act of another which he is in no way privy to, or at least to make a man's own act appear to have been done at a time when it was not done and by force of such a falsity to give it an operation which in truth and justice it ought not to have"), Tomlin, Law Dictionary, tit Forgery. Every fraudulent alteration of a true instrument is a forgery of the whole instrument (R v Teague (1802), 2 East, P C 979) so the forgery of a signature to a document may amount to the forgery of the entire document (R v Autry (1857), Deans & B 294). As to uttering a forged instrument, see p 714, post.

(d) See p 715, post. These statutes contain no definition of forgery, and in them forgery has the same meaning as forgery at common law (see R v Ritson (1869), L R 1 C C R 200, at pp 204, 205).

(e) It is not forgery fraudulently to insert the signature of a painter in a picture, even when the picture is not painted by him (R v Close (1858), Deans & B 460, 466). Such an act is, however, made punishable in certain cases by the Fine Art Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict c 68) s 7 (see title COPYRIGHT, Vol VIII, p 199). If a tradesman or manufacturer for the purpose of passing off his goods as those of another tradesman or manufacturer imitates the printed wrappers used by the other tradesman or manufacturer, and sells his goods in such wrappers, this is not forgery (R v Smith (1858), Deans & B 566). Such an offence is, however, punishable under the Merchandise Mark Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28), ss 2, 5 (see title TRADE MARKS AND DESIGNS). It is forgery at common law to make a false certificate of character (R v Toshack (1819), 1 Den 492, R v Shurman (1818), Deans C C 285, R v Mouch (1818), 7 Cox, C C 503 C C R, but see R v Hodgson (1856), 7 Cox, C C 122, C C R). There are also statutory provisions as to the giving or using of false characters, see Servants' Characters Act 1792 (32 Geo 3 c 56), s 4, Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 104. Seamen's and Soldiers' false Characters Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 5), ss 1, 2. It is forgery at common law fraudulently to fill up a county court summons or to alter a distringas into a summons (R v Collier (1831), 5 C & P 160) to put a seal to a document which is invalid without a seal (R v Collins (1844), 1 Cox, C C 57), to alter the entries made by donors on a list of subscriptions (R v Hamilton, [1901] 1 K B 740, C C R), to forge a certificate of ordination or an entry in a register of ordinations (R v Etheridge (1901) 19 Cox, C C 676, 678, n, and see Slader v Smallbrooke (1861), 1 Lev 138) to forge a railway pass (R v Boulton (1818), 2 Car & Kir 604), or to forge an order from a magistrate to discharge a prisoner (R v Harris (1831), 1 Mood C C 39; see R v Faircliff (1793), 2 East, P C 862), a bill of lading (R v Stocker (1695), 5 Mod Rep 137), an acquittance (R v Ferrers (1666), 1 Sid 278), a receipt (R v Ward (1727), 2 Stra 747), a warrant of attorney (Ferr's Case (1663), T Raym. 81), a marriage register (Dudley's Case (1658), 2 Sid 71); a bill of exchange (R v Sheldon (1680), cited 2 Stra 718), a promissory note (R v Hales (1728), 17 State Tr 162), letters of credence to collect money (Savage's Case (1647), Sty 12), a consent to act as next friend in a suit (R v Smythes (1849), 1 Den 498). It is not forgery to make an entry in a

SPOT 4
Forgery.

instrument or some part of it must be false in some material respect (f)

book of accounts containing a false statement (Ex parte Windsor (1865), 10 Cox, O O 118, at p 121, but see Re Arton (No 2), [1896] 1 Q B 609, at p 515) But this is a statutory offence in certain cases (see Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 24), s 1; Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 83) It is not forgery to fill in voting papers with the names and marks of voters who are marksmen (R v Hartshorn (1853), 6 Cox, O O 395, but see now Blake v Allen (1600), Moore (κ β), 619, R v Combes (1805), Moore (κ β), 759, R v Elsworth (1780), 2 East, P O 986, R v Kinder (1800), 2 East, P O 855, R v Atkinson (1837), 7 C & P 669; R v Treble (1810), 2 Taunt 328, Ex Ch, R v Post (1806), Russ & Ry 101)

(f) R v Berkhett (1813), Russ & Ry 251, R v Griffiths (1858), Dears & B 548, R v Hart (1817), 1 Mood O O 486, Flower v Shaw (1848), 2 Car & Kir 703 It is forgery to make a deed fraudulently with a false date, when the date is material, although the deed is in fact made and executed by and between the persons by and between whom it purports to be made and executed (R v Ritten (1869), L R 1 C O R 200, see R v Lewis (1754), Fost 116) It is forgery to alter the name of a banker at whose bank a note is payable and substitute the name of another banker (R v Treble (1810), 2 Taunt 328, Ex Ch) An instrument is a false instrument if it contains the signature of the defendant in his own name, if such signature is intended by the defendant to pass as that of another person, whether there be such another person in existence or not, so of an instrument signed by another person with the defendant's authority in such other person's real name, but with the intent that the signature should pass as that of a third person, whether existing or non existing (R v Parkes (1796), 2 Leach, 775, and see 2 East, P O 957, Mad v Young (1790), 4 Term Rep 28, R v Lewis (1754), Fost 116, R v Hadfield (1803), Evans Collection of Statutes, Vol VI, 91, Part V, ch xii, p 380, R v Rogers (1838), 8 O & P 629, R v Mitchell (1841) 1 Don 282, R v Blenkinsop (1847), 2 Car & Kir 531, R v Epps (1864), 4 F & F 81, R v Nisbett (1851), 6 Cox, O O 320, R v Mahony (1854), 6 Cox, O O 487, C C R (Ir), but see R v Webb (1819), Russ & Ry 403) Thus to write the acceptance of an existing person or persons to a bill of exchange without authority or the name of a non-existing person or persons in acceptance of a bill is forgery, if a person writes an acceptance in his own name to represent a fictitious person or persons with intent to defraud he commits forgery (R v Rogers, supra, and see R v Wilks (1767) 2 East, P O 957, R v Bolland (1772), 2 East, P O 958, R v Lockett (1772), 2 East, P O 910, R v Taft (1777), 2 East P O 959, R v Taylor (1779), 2 East, P O 960, R v Wardell (1862), 3 F & F 82) But if a person gives a note or other written instrument as his own his subscribing it by a fictitious name will not make it a forgery, if credit is wholly given to himself, without any regard to the name or any relation to a third person (R v Martin (1879) 5 Q B D 34, C C R, R v Dunn (1765), 1 Leach, 57, and see R v Bontien (1813), Russ & Ry 260), aliter if the fictitious name is assumed for the purpose of carrying out the particular fraud with which the defendant is charged (see R v Sheppard (1781), 1 Leach, 226, R v Aichles (1787), 2 East P O 968, R v Whaley (1805), Russ & Ry 90, R v Pearce (1814), Russ & Ry 278, R v Whyte (1851), 5 Cox O O 290, R v Francis (1811), Russ & Ry 209, R v Bontien (1813), Russ & Ry 260) If D represents himself to be E and signs E's name and thereby obtains payment of money due to E from F, who would not have paid the money unless he had believed that D was E, D is guilty of forgery (R v Dunn, supra, and see R v Parkes (1848), 1 Cox, O O 4) It is not forgery for a person falsely to represent himself to be someone else who has actually signed an instrument (R v Hovey (1782), 2 East, P O 856) It is not forgery to procure a person's signature to a document, the contents of which have been altered without such person's knowledge (R v Chadwick (1841), 2 Mood & R 545, and see R v Collins (1841), 2 Mood & R 461, at p 466) But it is forgery to make a false copy of a document for the purpose of using it as evidence of the contents of an original alleged to be lost (Upfold v. Leat (1801), 5 Esp 103) If a blank cheque is given to a person with a limited authority to complete it and he inserts an amount different from that which he has authority to insert, or if he completes it when his authority has been determined, he is guilty of forgery

SECT. 4.
Forgery.Resemblance to genuine
document.

1405 To constitute the crime of forgery it is not essential that the forged instrument should be so made that, if it were in truth what it purports to be, it would be valid; but the false instrument must carry on the face of it the semblance of a valid instrument, and must not be obviously an illegal document (g)

It is not necessary that the resemblance to a genuine instrument should be exact, it is sufficient if the false instrument is so like as to be calculated to deceive persons who on ordinary observation, although persons having special experience as regards such instruments, would not be deceived (h).

1406 An intent to defraud is a necessary ingredient of the crime of forgery (i). It is not necessary that anyone should be actually injured (k) Intent.

(R v Bateman (1845), 1 Cox, C C 186. R v Wilson (1847), 2 Car & Kir 527) If a person has a general authority to draw cheques, he cannot be convicted of forgery in drawing a cheque which he misappropriates (R v Richardson (1860), 2 F & F 343) If a person draws a cheque or accepts a bill of exchange or signs any other document in the name of another, it is forgery, unless the person drawing or accepting had authority from the other person or bonâ fide believed that he had authority (R v Forbes (1835), 7 O & P 224, R v Beard (1837), 8 C & P 143, R v Parish (1837), 8 O & P 94, R v Beardsall (1830) 1 F & F 529, see R v Smith (1862), 3 F & F 504, R v Clifford (1846), 2 Car & Kir 202, R v Ineson (1833), 2 Lew O O 178 It is not forgery at common law for a person fraudulently to sign his own name to a bill per procuratorem (R v White (1847), 1 Den 208), but such an act is now punishable as a statutory offence, see pp 720, 727, post

(g) 2 East, P C 948, R v Deakins (1674), 1 Sid 142, R v Crooke (1731), 2 East, P C 921, R v Groat (1700), 1 Ld Raym 737, R v Murphy (1783), 19 State Tr 693, R v Sterling (1773), 2 East, P C 950, R v Coogan (1787), 1 Leach, 449, R v Lynn (1813), Russ & Ry 253, R v Burke (1822), Russ & Ry 496, R v Pike (1838), 2 Mood C C 70, R v Taylor (1813), 1 Car & Kir 213, see R v Butternick (1839), 2 Mood & R 196, R v Crooks (1838), 8 O & P 582, R v Hicks (1809), Russ & Ry 149 Forgery can be committed of an instrument on unstamped paper or paper insufficiently stamped, although payment of such an instrument could not be enforced by action (R v Hawkeswood (1783), 1 Leach, 257, R v Lee (1781), 1 Leach, 258, n (a), R v Morton (1795), 1 Leach, 258, n (b), R v Reulst (1795), 2 Leach, 703, R v Teague (1802), 2 East, P C 979, R v Pike (1838), 2 Mood C C 70, at p 75) If the false instrument is void on the face of it, the person who makes it does not, it seems, commit forgery (R v Wall (1800), 2 East, P C 953, R v Moffatt (1787), 2 East, 954, R v Jones (1774) 1 Doug (KB) 300, R v Reading (1793), 2 Leach, 590, R v Pateman (1821), Russ & Ry 455, R v Bartlett (1841), 2 Mood & R 362, R v Moffatt (1787), 1 Leach, 431, R v Donnelly (1835), 1 Mood C C 438, but see R v Reed (1838), 2 Mood C C 62, at p 65, and compare R v Harper (1881), 7 Q B D 78, O O R., and R v Cartwright (1806) Russ & Ry 106, 107, n (b) It is no answer to a charge of forgery that the false instrument would, if genuine, be invalid by reason of some objection not appearing on the face of it (R v McIntosh (1800), 2 East, P C 942, R v Pike (1838), 2 Mood C C 70) •

(h) 2 East, P C 558, 950, R v Hoost (1802), 2 East, P C 950, R v Elliot (1777), 1 Leach, 175, R v Collicott (1812), 2 Leach, 1048

(i) 2 East, P C 854, see R v Allday (1837), 8 O & P 136, R v Hartshorn (1853), 6 Cox, C C 395, R v Powner (1872), 12 Cox, C C 235

(j) R v Ward (1727), 2 East, P C 861, at p 862 Quære whether there must be a possibility of some person being injured in consequence of the forgery (see R v Marcus (1846), 2 Car & Kir 356, per CRESSWELL, J., at p 361, R v Holston (1847), 2 Car & Kir 777, R v Ward, supra, 2 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed., 600, n (l), but see R v. Nash (1862), 2 Den 493, at p 499) In R v Holden (1809), Russ & Ry 164, the prisoner, on the invitation of a person who was acting for the purpose of detecting forgeries, sold forged notes as forged and not as genuine

SECT 4
Forgery

Uttering

1407 The offence of forgery is complete, if a false instrument is made with an intent to defraud, it is not necessary that the instrument should be uttered or published (l).

1408 It is a common law offence to utter any forged instrument the forgery of which is an offence at common law (m)

It is immaterial whether the attempt to defraud by the uttering is or is not effectual (n)

A false document is said to be uttered, when it is parted with or tendered or used in some way to get money or credit upon it or by means of it (o)

and yet was found guilty, although owing to circumstances of which the defendant was not apprised the prosecutor could not be injured by the defendant's act. If the immediate effect of the forgery is to defraud the prosecutor, that is sufficient evidence of an intent to defraud (R v Sheppard (1810), Russ & Ry 169). If the forgery or uttering of a false document is part of a fraud it is immaterial that, before the false document was given, the prosecutor had already parted with the money of which it is alleged that he was defrauded (R v Martin (1836), 1 Mood C C 483, R v Moody (1862), Le & Ca 173, see R v Boardman (1835), 2 Mood & R 147). If a defendant pays in to his bank a forged note, it is for the jury to say whether he had an intent to defraud, even though he has given to the bank guarantees for an overdraft exceeding the amount of the note (R v James (1836), 7 C & P 553). To utter a bill of exchange all the names on which are fictitious is an offence if the person to whom the bill is uttered did not know that the names were fictitious, and it is immaterial that the defendant intended to provide for the payment of the bill (R v Hull (1838), 2 Mood C C 30). The offence is complete at the time of uttering, and it is immaterial that the bill is afterwards paid (R v Teach (1810), 9 C & P 499, where a defendant was convicted although the bill was paid before the institution of the prosecution). If a person utters a forged document knowing that it is forged, and means it to be taken as a genuine document, the inevitable conclusion is that he intended to defraud (R v Cooke (1838), 8 C & P 536, R v Todd (1844), 1 Cox, C C 57, see R v Crowther (1832), 5 C & P 316). If a person has reasonable ground for believing that he has authority to accept bills in the name of another person, and acting on that impression accepts a bill in that person's name this is not forgery, but it is forgery if he does so without authority, or belief on reasonable ground that he has authority (R v Forbes (1835), 7 C & P 221, R v Parish (1837), 8 C & P 94, R v Hard (1837), 8 C & P 113, R v Beardsall (1859), 1 F & F 529, and see R v Smith (1862), 3 F & F 504). It is not necessary in an indictment for forgery to allege an intent to defraud any particular person or on the trial of any such offence to prove an intent to defraud any particular person, but it is sufficient to allege and to prove that the defendant did the act charged with intent to defraud (Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 44, which is a re-enactment of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 8). It seems that it is not essential to constitute forgery at common law that there should be an intent to defraud any particular person (see R v Nash (1852), 2 Don 493 per MAULE, J, at p 303, Tatnell v Harris (1789), 3 Term Rep 174, at pp 176, 181, but see R v Mazagona (1815), Russ & Ry 291, and R v Trenfield (1858), 1 F & F 43. The cases of R v Tuffs (1846), 1 Don 319 (decided before the passing of the Criminal Procedure Act 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100)), and R v Hodgson (1856), Dears & B 3 cannot now be regarded as authorities to the contrary effect (see Greaves Criminal Law Consolidation Acts, 2nd ed, 303).

(l) R v Elliot (1777), 1 Leach, 175, R v Crocker (1805), Russ & Ry 97, at p 98

(m) R v Sharman (1854), Dears C C 285

(n) R v Sharman, supra (disapproving on this point of R v Boulton (1848), 2 Car & Kir 604). It is usual in indictments for forgery to add a count for uttering to the count for forging, but the practice formerly was to indict for forgery a person who uttered (see 2 East, P C 973, R v Boulton (1848), 2 Car & Kir 604, 606, n)

(o) R v Irem (1852), 21 L. J. (M C) 166, C C R., per Lord CAMPBELL, O J, at

SECT. 4.
Forgery.

A person who delivers a forged document to an accomplice in order that the accomplice may utter it does not himself thereby utter such document (p) If a person delivers a forged document to an innocent agent in order that the agent may utter it, the person who delivers it is guilty of uttering (q) A conditional uttering* of a forged instrument is equally an offence with any other kind of uttering (r)

The punishment for a common law forgery is fine or imprisonment without hard labour, or both fine and imprisonment (s) Punishment

SUB-SECT. 2—Forgery by Statute

1409 The Forgery Act, 1861 (t), and other statutes (a) have made various acts of forgery felonious and punishable with penal servitude, and have made other acts connected with or preliminary to forgery statutory offences Statutory forgeries.

(1) Bank Notes etc

1410 A person is by statute guilty of felony who with intent to defraud (1) forges or alters any note or bill of exchange of the Bank of England or of the Bank of Ireland, or of any other body corporate, company, or persons carrying on the business of bankers, commonly called a bank note or a bank bill of exchange or a bank post bill (b), (2) forges or alters any indorsement on or assignment of such bank note etc., (3) offers, utters, disposes of, or puts off any forged or altered bank note etc. with knowledge that it is forged or altered, or any forged indorsement on or assignment of any such bank note etc. (c) Forging notes etc of Bank of England etc

p 168 A person who produces for inspection a forged receipt, but refuses to part with it, utters a forgery, and it is immaterial that the forged receipt is exhibited not directly to gain credit upon it for the payment for which it purports to vouch, but to induce the belief that the person who exhibits it is a man of substance, and so to induce the person inspecting the receipt to lend money to a third person (R v Radford (1841), 1 Den 59 R v Ion, supra compare R v Welch (1851), 2 Den 78) But the mere showing of an instrument the uttering of which would be criminal, or the act of handing such instrument to any person to be taken care of, though done to induce the belief that the owner is a man of substance, is not uttering, unless there is clear evidence of intent to get money or credit by means of the instrument (R v Ion, supra, see R v Shukard (1811), Russ & Ry 200)

(p) R v Heywood (1847), 2 Cir & Kn 352, R v Palmer (1804), 1 Bos & P (N. B.) 96 Such an act would now be in some cases a statutory offence as a "disposing" or "putting away", see note (c), infra

(q) R v Palmer, supra, and see R v Collicott (1812), Russ & Ry 212

(r) R v Cooke (1838), 8 C & P 582

(s) If the forgery is successful and someone is defrauded, the offender might be indicted for a common law cheat, and might then be sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour (R v Hamilton, [1901] 1 K B 740, O C R., Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), s 29) But a person cannot be indicted for a common law cheat in respect of a forgery, unless it is successful (R v Hard (1727), 2 Stra 747) Forgery is not triable at quarter sessions

(t) 24 & 25 Vict c 98

(a) See pp 731 et seq, post

(b) See as to bank post bills and bank bills of exchange, R v Birkett (1813), Russ & Ry 251

(c) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 96), s. 12. To discharge one indorsement*

SECT. 4.
Forgery

The punishment for the offence is penal servitude for life or for any period not less than three years, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (d)

Possession of forged notes
etc

1411 A person is by statute (e) guilty of felony who without lawful authority or excuse purchases or receives from any other person or has in his custody or possession any forged bank note, bank bill of exchange, or a bank post bill or blank bank note, blank bank bill of exchange or blank bank post bill, with knowledge that it is forged. The onus of proving lawful authority and excuse is on the accused (f)

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years and not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding two years (c)

Possession of instruments
etc for making
forged notes

1412 A person is by statute (g) guilty of felony —

(1) Who without lawful authority or excuse makes, uses, or knowingly has in his custody or possession any frame, mould, or instrument for the making of paper with the words "Bank of England" or "Bank of Ireland" or any part of such word or words intended to resemble and pass for them, or for the making of paper with curved or waving bar lines, or with the laying wire lines thereof in a waving or curving shape, or with any number, sum, or amount expressed in a word or words in Roman letters visible in the substance of the paper, or with any device or distinction peculiar to and appearing in the substance of the paper used by these banks for any notes, bills of exchange, or bank post bills of such banks and insert another, or to make an indorsement general instead of special, or to alter an indorsement (R v Birkitt (1813), Russ & Ry 251). It is immaterial, if the alteration is such as to make the note as altered ungrammatical — e.g., to alter one pound to ten pounds (R v Post (1806) Russ & Ry 101). It is not necessary to constitute a forged note that the resemblance to a true note should be exact (see p 713, ante). A person who uses an accomplice to get rid of forged notes is guilty of "disposing and putting away" the note but not of uttering (R v Palmer (1804), Russ & Ry 72). As to intent to defraud, see p 713, ante.

(d) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 12, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(e) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 13, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. The offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(f) Forgery Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 13. As to the meaning of "lawful authority or excuse," see R v Harrey (1871), L R 1 C O R 284, Dickins v Gill, [1896] 2 Q B 310. Where the having any matter in the custody or possession of any person is in the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), expressed to be an offence, if any person has such matter in his personal custody or possession, or knowingly and wilfully has it in the actual custody or possession of any other person, or in any dwelling-house or other building, lodging, apartment, field, or other place, open or inclosed, whether belonging to or occupied by himself or not, and whether he has such matter for his own use or for the use or benefit of another, every such person is to be deemed to have such matter in his custody or possession within the meaning of the Act (Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 45), see R v Rouley (1806), Russ & Ry. 110. If the original possession is innocent, as when a forged note is given to a person in the course of his business, and he afterwards finds out that it is forged, he does not commit any offence by retaining possession of the note (Brooks v Harnack 1818), 2 Stark 389).

(g) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 14. The onus of proving lawful

(2) Who makes, uses, sells, exposes to sale, utters, or disposes of, or knowingly has in his custody or possession, any paper with such words or parts of such words as before mentioned visible in the substance of the paper, or any paper with the before-mentioned lines or numbers or device or distinction (h).

SECT 4.
Forgery.

(3) Who by any art or contrivance causes such words or parts of such words or such device or distinction to appear visible in the substance of any paper, or causes the numerical sum or amount of any bank note or bank bill of exchange or bank post bill or blank bank note, or blank bank bill of exchange, or blank post bill in a word or words in Roman letters to appear visible in the substance of the paper whereon the same are written or printed (i).

(4) Who engraves or makes upon any plate or upon any wood, stone, or other material, any promissory note, bill of exchange, or bank post bill, or part of such note or bill purporting to be a bank note or bank bill of exchange, or bank post bill or part of such note, or to be a blank bank note, blank promissory note, blank bank bill of exchange, or blank bank post bill of the governor and company of the Bank of England or of Ireland or of any other body corporate, company or person carrying on the business of bankers (k).

Forgery of
bank notes.

(5) Who engraves or makes as aforesaid any name, word or character resembling or apparently intended to resemble any subscription to any bill of exchange or promissory note issued by any of the before-mentioned banks (l).

(6) Who uses, or knowingly has in his custody or possession any such plate, wood, stone, or other material, or any such instrument or device for the making or printing of any such bank note or bill part thereof (m).

authority is on the defendant (ibid), nothing in this section is to prevent any person using any bill of exchange or promissory note having the amount expressed in guineas or in numerical figures denoting the amount in pounds sterling appearing visible in the substance of the paper, or from making, using, or selling any paper having waving or curved lines or any other devices in the nature of watermarks visible in the substance of the paper, not being bar lines or laying wire lines, provided they are not so contrived as to form the ground-work or texture of the paper, or to resemble the waving or curved laying wire lines or bar lines or the watermark of the paper used by the Banks of England and Ireland (Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 15)

(h) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 11

(i) Ibid

(k) Ibid, s 16 Every part of what usually circulates as a note, the ornamental border as well as the obligatory words, is part of the note (R v Keith (1851), Dears C C 466) Whether the engraving "purports" to be a bank note etc is a question of fact to be ascertained by comparison with a genuine note, extrinsic evidence being admissible (R v Keith, supra) A document which does not purport on the face thereof to be a bank note cannot be made so to purport by reason of any statement made by the party disposing of it (R v Jones (1779), 1 Doug (K B) 300, see also R v Gibbs (1800), 1 East, 173, at p 180, n The section applies to the notes of any bankers, wherever they carry on business" (R v Brackenridge (1868), L. R 1 Q O R 133 Banks carrying on business in Scotland are included in spite of s 55, which provides that "nothing in this Act contained shall extend to Scotland." As to banks carrying on business in foreign countries, see R v Auffret (1898), 62 J P. 521, R v. Hanmon (1839), 9 C & P 11

(l) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s. 16

(m) Ibid

SMOT. 4
Forgery

(7) Who knowingly offers, utters, disposes of, or puts off, or has in his custody or possession, any paper on which is made or printed any blank bank note etc. of the Bank of England etc., or part of such bank note etc. or any name, word, or character resembling or apparently intended to resemble any such subscription to any such note etc. (n).

(8) Who engraves or makes upon any plate &c any word, number, figure, device, character or ornament, the impression of which resembles or is apparently intended to resemble any part of a bank note etc. of the Bank of England etc. or any other body corporate, company, or person carrying on the business of bankers (o).

(9) Who uses, or knowingly has in his custody or possession any such plate, wood, stone, or other material, or any other instrument or device for impressing or making upon any paper or other material any word, number, figure, character, or ornament resembling or apparently intended to resemble any part of a bank note or bill of the Bank of England or Ireland or any other bank (p).

Forgery of
bank notes.

(10) Who knowingly offers, utters etc. or has in his custody or possession any paper or other material bearing an impression of such matter as aforesaid (q).

(11) Who makes, uses, or knowingly has in his custody or possession any frame, mould, or instrument for making paper with the name of any firm of bankers other than the Banks of England and Ireland appearing visible in the substance of the paper (r).

(12) Who makes, uses, sells, exposes to sale, utters, or disposes of, or knowingly has in his custody or possession any paper with any such name appearing in the substance of the paper (s).

(13) Who by any art or contrivance causes any such name to appear visible in the substance of the paper upon which the same shall be written or printed (t).

(14) Who engraves or makes upon any wood, stone, or other material in any language, whether intended to be under seal or not, the whole or part of any bill of exchange, promissory note, undertaking, or order for payment of money purporting to be the bill, note, undertaking, or order or part thereof, of any foreign prince or state, or any minister or officer in the service of any such foreign prince etc., or of any body corporate or body of the like nature constituted or recognised by any foreign prince etc., or of any person or company of persons resident outside the King's dominions (u).

(n) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), s. 16.

(o) Ibid., s. 17. A prisoner may be indicted under this section for having plates etc. for forging the note of a bank established in a foreign country (R. v. Aulfrat (1898), 62 J. P. 521), as to a bank carrying on the business of bankers, but incorporated for a totally different purpose, see R. v. Catapodis (1804), Russ. & Ry. 65, as to custody or possession, see p. 716, ante.

(p) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), s. 17.

(q) Ibid.

(r) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), s. 18.

(s) Ibid.

(t) Ibid.

(u) Ibid., s. 19. Formerly, where the forged bill was in a foreign language, it was necessary that the indictment should contain an English translation (R.

(15) Who uses or knowingly has in his custody or possession any plate etc. on which the whole or part of such foreign bill, note, undertaking, or order is engraved or made (b)

SECT. 4.
Forgery.

(16) Who knowingly utters or has custody or possession of any paper on which is made or printed any part of such foreign bill, note, undertaking, or order (c).

The punishment for any such offence is penal servitude for fourteen years, or for any term not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (d)

(u) Orders for Payment of Money etc

1413. Everyone is by statute (e) guilty of felony who, with intent to defraud, forges, or alters, or utters, disposes of, or puts off with knowledge that it is forged or altered—(1) any undertaking, warrant, order, authority or request, for the payment of money (f), or for the delivery or transfer of any goods (g) or chattels, or of any note, bill, or other security for the payment of money, or for procuring or giving credit, or any indorsement on or assignment of any such undertaking, warrant, order, authority, or request, or (2) any accountable receipt, acquittance, or receipt for money or for goods, or for any note, bill, or other security for the payment of money, or any indorsement on or assignment of any such accountable receipt Forging etc.

orders etc
for payment of money etc

The punishment for such offence is penal servitude for life, or for any period not less than three years, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (h)

1414 Everyone is by statute (i) guilty of felony who without lawful authority or excuse, and with intent to defraud, draws, makes, signs, accepts, or indorses any bill of exchange or promissory note, undertaking, warrant, order, authority, or request for the payment of

Fraudulent
drawing etc of bill of exchange etc

v Goldstein (1822), Russ & Ry 473, and see R v Harris (1836) 7 C & P 429, but now it is not necessary to set out the forged instrument (Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 43). A photographic impression on glass is within the section (R v Rinaldi (1863), 9 L. T. 395, C. C. R.). Where prisoners are charged jointly with this offence it is not necessary in order to convict them that all should have been present when the order to engrave was given, all must have jointly employed the engraver, but it is sufficient if one first instructed the others and by his authority they employed the engraver. See R v Mazeau (1840), 9 C & P 676

(b) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 19, and see s 43

(c) Ibid, s 19

(d) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), ss 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s. 1. These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

(e) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 23

(f) The order or undertaking may be conditional, and therefore not within the definition of a negotiable instrument (R v Anderson (1843), 2 Mood & R. 469, see p 721, post, R v Joyce (1865), 10 Cox, C. C. 100).

(g) Even the smallest quantity, the maxim De minimis non curat lex having no application, so that an order to taste wine comes within the statute (R v Illidge (1849), 2 Car & Kir 871)

(h) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 23, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s. 1. These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

(i) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), s. 24

SECT 4
Forgery.

money or for the delivery or transfer of goods or chattels, or of any bill, note, or other security for money, by procuration or otherwise, for, in the name or on the account of, any other person, or who offers, utters, disposes of or puts off any such bill, note, undertaking, warrant, order, or request so drawn, made, signed, accepted or indorsed by procuration or otherwise, without lawful authority or excuse, with knowledge that it was so drawn etc

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (k)

Undertaking.

1415. An undertaking for the payment of money includes a conditional undertaking (l) The undertaking need not be for payment by the person who purports to give it, it may be a guarantee or undertaking that a third person shall pay on a contingency (m) It must, however, be an undertaking which, if genuine, would be binding in law (n)

Warrant.

1416 A warrant for the payment of money includes any instrument for payment under which, if genuine, the payer may recover the amount against the party signing it (o) The state of the account between the parties and the question whether the party signing it has at the time funds in the hands of the party to whom it is addressed are immaterial (p)

(k) Forgery Act, 1861 (21 & 25 Vict c 98), s 24, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(l) R v Reed (1838), 2 Mood C C 62, R v Anderson (1843), 2 Mood. & R 469 (c q, a promise to pay a specified sum, or such other smaller sum as A B may incur by reason of a suretyship)

(m) R v Stone (1846), 2 Car & Ku 361 See R v Joyce (1865), 10 Cox, C C 100

(n) That is, binding in law at the date of the forgery though not necessarily so at the date of the Forgery Act, 1861 (21 & 25 Vict c 98) Thus where a guarantee was not binding at the date of the Forgery Act, 1830 (11 Geo 4 & 1 Will 4, c 66) but was subsequently made binding by the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict c 97), s 3, the forgery of such a guarantee became punishable on the passing of the later Act (R v Coelho (1861) 9 Cox C C 8)

(o) R v Vivian (1844), 1 Car & Kir 719, R v Ferguson (1845), 1 Cox, C C 211 R v Pilling (1858), 1 F & F 324, and see R v Dawson (1851), 2 Den C C 75 As to instruments which would be of no force, even if genuine, but upon which money is in fact paid, see R v Rouse (1849), 4 Cox, C C 7, and p 721, post

(p) R v Vivian, supra It is not necessary that the name of a party who is in account with another should be forged, it is sufficient if the name of that party's agent or of a person saying in effect that he has that party's authority to require payment be forged (ibid)

A document in the following form "to A B & Co Pay to my order two months after date, to C D the sum of 80<sup>l</sup> and deduct the same out of my account," being unsigned, but indorsed, and having the word accepted and the name of the acceptor written across the face, constitutes a warrant, because, if genuine, it would be a warrant from the acceptor to A B & Co to pay the money (R v Smith (1845), 1 Car & Kir 700) So a document in the following form was held to be a warrant—"Mr L London Bought of D two bushels of apples 9s November 9 Sir,—I hope you will excuse me sending for such a trifle but I am obliged to hunt after every shilling D" (R v Dawson (1851), 2 Den 75, see also R v Harris (1842), 1 Car & Kir 179). An ordinary cheque or bill of exchange is a warrant (p 723, post), and l.

A warrant need not be addressed to any particular person (g), and may be conditional (r), but a mere request to pay is not a warrant (s). A warrant or order for the payment of money must purport to be made by some person who might command the payment of the money and to be made upon a person who is bound to obey the command (t).

SECT. 4.
Forgery.

A document in the form of a certificate or receipt may be shown by parol evidence to be treated in the course of a particular business as a warrant (a).

Authority and request.

An indictment lies for forging a mere authority or request for the payment of money (b).

1417 If an instrument, had it been genuine, would have been effectual in the ordinary course of business between the parties as an order, no defect being patent on the face of it, such instrument may be the subject-matter of a forgery, although the instrument itself, if genuine, would have been void in law for want of compliance with some statutory direction governing the particular form of order (c).

Forgery of
void instrument

warrant includes a forged cheque drawn on a bank where the supposed drawer has a deposit account on which he is not entitled to draw cheques (p 723, post, R v Williams (1816), 2 Car & Kin 51), but such cheque is not an "order." A post office money order is an order for the payment of money within the section (Post Office Act 1908 (8 Edw 7, c. 48), s 59, see R v Gilchrist (1841), 2 Mood C C 233).

(g) R v Rogers (1839) 9 C & P 41

(r) R v Anderson (1843), 2 Mood & R 469

(s) R v Thorn (1841), Car & M 206

(t) R v Clinch (1791), 2 East, P C 934

(a) R v Kay (1870), 11 Cox, C C 529, C C R. A certificate may be shown by certificate of character, although its production may entitle a person to the evidence to be treated as a warrant (R v Rogers (1839), 9 C & P 41), but a payment of money, is neither an undertaking nor a warrant nor an order for the payment of money (R v Mitchell (1860), 2 F & F 44).

(b) See Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 23. As to a pawnbroker's ticket, see R v Morrison (1859) 8 Cox, C C 194, C C R.

(c) R v Mchintosh (1800), 2 Leach, 893, where the order was an order by a seaman which, if genuine, would have been void for want of attestation under stat 32 Geo 3, c 31, s 2, and see R v Richards (1811), Russ & Ry 193. See, too, R v Jones (1764), 1 Leach, 51, where to an indictment for forging an order for the redelivery of plate sent to Goldsmiths' Hall to be marked in the form "please to deliver my work to the bearer" it was held to be no defence that the order was irregular because by the rule of the plate office the several species of work with the weight of the silver ought to have been mentioned in the order, R v Pike (1836) 2 Mood C C 70, where to an indictment for forging one of the signatures to an order of a board of guardians of a poor law union it was held that it was no defence to show that the person who signed the order as presiding chairman was not in fact chairman on the day when he signed, R v M'Connell (1844), 1 Car & Kir 371, where the forged "pass" of a discharged prisoner whereby he was made to appear entitled to certain payments under stat 5 Geo 4, c 85, was held to be a forged warrant and order for the payment of money, although the forged pass was not in statutory form or properly sealed, see, however, R v Donnelly (1835), 1 Mood C C 438, where a similar document was held not to be a warrant or order, but in that case the document was ungrammatical and at variance with the form given in the Act, and therefore defective on the face of it, see also R v Moffatt (1767), 1 Leach, 431 where the defect of form was patent on the face of the instrument, R v Vanderstein (1865), 10 Cox, C C 177, C C R (Ir), where it was held that a forged post office order was an order for payment of money, though signed in an irregular manner, and though no letter of advice was ever

SECT 4

Forgery

Forging incomplete
document.

An instrument which after making or alteration still remains incomplete (d) and has no resemblance to a genuine instrument cannot be an order.

An ineffectual addition to a document which already constitutes a complete order is not forgery, but where the document is so far incomplete that a signature is required as a condition of payment, as in the case where dividend warrants of a railway company require the shareholders' indorsement before the money can be paid, the false making of such signature is forgery of a warrant or order for payment of money (e).

Date of order

1418 It is not necessary that the party to whom an order to pay is directed should be bound to pay at once, or, it appears (f), unconditionally. Thus, a post-dated cheque constitutes an order (g), as also does an order for payment on a certain date contingent upon a certain event (h).

sent, R v Rouse (1819), 4 Cox, C C 7, where it was held that an indictment for forging a certificate purporting to relate to the death of the member of a lodge which had been dissolved could not be sustained, as at the time of the forgery there was no such lodge in existence. It is immaterial, however, whether the name forged be that of an actually existing or fictitious person (h v Lockett (1772), 1 Leach, 94, R v Vanderstein, (1860), 10 Cox, C C 177, C C R (11)).

(d) I. q., where an order is not under seal as required by a statute and is addressed to the wrong person and is otherwise irregular (R v Rushworth (1816) Russ & Ry 317), quære whether such a document would not now be an "authority" or "request" within the meaning of s 24 of the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96). R v Rushworth, supra, was decided under stat 7 Geo 2, c 22, which did not contain those words. R v Lee (1848), 3 Cox, C C 80, where by the rules of a society all cheques upon the bankers of the society were required to be signed by four members and countersigned by the clerk, and the signatures of the four members were forged, and the signature of the clerk was afterwards obtained, it was held that although the instrument was not complete until the signature of the clerk had been obtained, yet as the clerk's signature was subsequently obtained, an indictment for forging a warrant for the payment of money was sustainable, if a signature is forged to an incomplete document which if complete would be an order for the payment of money, and the document is afterwards completed, then the document becomes an order, and the offence of forgery is complete.

(e) R v Autey (1857), 7 Cox, C C 329, C C R. This case was decided before the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 23, which for the first time made the forgery of an indorsement a substantive offence. In such a case as R v Autey supra, a person might now be indicted either for forging a warrant for the payment of money or for forging the indorsement on such a warrant.

(f) See, however, R v Howie (1869), 11 Cox, 320.

(g) R v Taylor (1843), 1 Car & Kir 213.

(h) R v Lonsdale (1847), 2 Cox, C C 222. It is not necessary to aver in the indictment the performance of the condition (ibid). An order to pay A B or order a sum as advance money on an intended voyage, with a marginal note "on receiving the cheque I agree to sail in the ship Mary Ann, and to be on board within sixteen hours from the date of this cheque," has been held to be an order for payment of money (R v Bamfield (1834), 1 Mood C C 416, see also R v Anderson (1843), 2 Mood & R 469), but a seaman's advance note containing a promise to pay ten days after the sailing of a ship a sum of money to any person advancing the same to A B "provided the said A B shall sail in the said ship" was held not to be a promissory note or order for the payment of money, because it was conditional (R v Howie (1869), 11 Cox, 320). In the case it was held, it seems, that the document was not a promissory note, quære whether, if the indictment had been for forging an order for the payment of money, it would have been good, see R v Lonsdale, supra.

1419. An ordinary bill of exchange (i) or cheque (k), constitutes both a warrant and an order, a warrant authorising the banker to pay, and an order upon him to do so (l), and a cheque is none the less an order by reason that the banker has no assets in his hands of the party who appears to have signed it (m). A person, however, who has a deposit account on which he is not entitled to draw cheques cannot draw a cheque which constitutes an order, and even though such cheque be honoured, it is not an "order," though it is still a "warrant," and may be so described (n).

SECT. 4.

Forgery.Nature of warrant or order.

1420 An order for the delivery of goods or money must, in order to come within the statute, purport to be the order of the owner, or of some person who claims an interest in or a disposing power over such goods or money, so that the person to whom it is addressed is bound to obey it (o). It is not the less an order by reason that the person to whom it is addressed has no authority to obey it, until some form has been complied with (p).

Order must purport to be genuine.

1421 It is not necessary that the order should be addressed to anyone, if the evidence shows for whom it is intended (q). There must, however, in the case of an order for payment of money, be a payee, so that an instrument payable to blank or order is not an order for the payment of money (r).

Addressee.

1422 In order to ascertain the nature of a given instrument both Interpretation.

(i) R v Shepherd (1791), 2 East, P C 944, R v Willoughby (1783), 2 East, P C 944, see R v Ravenscroft (1809), Russ & Ry 161

(k) R v Crouther (1832), 5 C & P 316

(l) R v Crouther, supra, per BOSANQUET, J, at p 317. It may therefore be described as a warrant and order for the payment of money.

(m) R v Lockett (1772), 1 Leach, 91, R v Abrahams (1714), 2 East, P C 941, R v Crouther (1832), 5 C & P 316, R v Denny (1845), 1 Cox, C C 178, R v Carter (1845) 1 Den 65, per PARKER, B, at p 67, R v Dawson (1851), 2 Den 75, per CRESSWELL, J, at p 77.

(n) R v Williams (1816), 2 Car & Kir 51

(o) Mitchell's (Mary) Case (1754), Fost 119, where the prosecution failed, because the alleged order was in substance a request. That case, which was decided under stat (1734) 7 Geo 2, c 22, has been frequently cited and followed. R v Ellor (1784), 1 Leach, 323, and R v Clinch (1791), 1 Leach, 540, 544, decided under the same statute, are to the same effect. But the wording of the Forgery Act of 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s 23, is different, and provides for the forgery of a mere request for the payment of money or the delivery of goods. See GREAVES, Criminal Law Consolidation Acts, 2nd ed, 285, see R v Newton (1848), 2 Mood C C 59, under the Forgery Act, 1830 (11 Geo 4 & 1 Will 4, c 66), which provided for forgery of a request for the delivery of goods or for the delivery of a security for the payment of money.

(p) R v Illidge (1849), 2 Car & Kir 871

(q) R v Gilchrist (1841), Car & M 221, R v Snelling (1863), 6 Cox, C C 230. The authorities to the contrary effect (R v Clinch (1791), 1 Leach 540, R v Denny (1845), 1 Cox, C C 178, R v Ravenscroft (1809), Russ & Ry 161) must be deemed to be overruled or inapplicable. In this respect there is no distinction between an order and a request, evidence being admissible in both cases to show to whom the instrument is addressed (R v Snelling, supra, per WILLIAMS, J, at p 235, R v Cullen (1831), 1 Mood C C 300, R v Carney (1832), 1 Mood C C 351, R v Pullbrook (1839), 9 C & P 37).

(r) R v Richards (1811), Russ & Ry 193

SECT 4.
Forgery

the form and substance must be regarded (s) Words which are ambiguous in themselves and are not shown to be used in a special sense will not be held to constitute an order, request, or warrant (t), but evidence is admissible to show that an instrument, though in the form of a request, is treated in the ordinary course of business as an order (a), or, though in the form of a certificate (b) or receipt (c), is treated as a warrant, authority or request (d) To constitute a "request" for delivery of goods or money it is not necessary that the person whose writing is forged should have any authority over or interest in the goods or money sought to be obtained (e)

As in the case of an order, it is not necessary that such request should be addressed to the person whom the indictment alleges that it was intended to defraud (f), or even that it should be addressed to any person whatever (g)

Security
for money

1423 A security for payment of money must be one which, if genuine, would be binding at law A person who, in consideration of a creditor forbearing to sue, gives an IOU signed by himself, and also forges the name of another person thereto, is guilty of forging a security (h)

(s) The difference between an order and a request is that a request purports to be made without authority to command an order with authority (R v Snelling (1853), 6 Cox, C C 230 (C C R, per JERVIS C J, at p 231) See also R v Thorn (1811), 2 Mood C C 210, R v Dawson (1851) 2 Den 75 As to the indorsement of a letter of credit see R v Hilton (1855), 1 F & F 391, as to an instrument in the form of a bill of exchange, but without an acceptance, see R v Curry (1811), 2 Mood C C 218 In R v Iqan (1843), 1 Cox C C 29, it was held that a document in the following words, "I hereby authorise my servant man A B to procure a watch of you" was not an order or request, but such a document would be an "authority" which word was probably inserted to meet that case in the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 94), s 23

(t) Such words as "per bearer," followed by a description of goods and a signature (R v Cullen (1831), 1 Mood C C 300), or "W Trim, 2s" (R v Ellis (1850), 4 Cox, C C 258) do not amount to an order or request for the delivery of goods But see R v Pullbrook (1839), 9 C & P 37

(u) L q, foreign letters requesting a correspondent of the writer in England to advance money (R v Raake (1838), 2 Mood C C 66), a document in these words "Mr J Please to pay A B the sum of £13, by order of C D your obliged C D" (R v Carter (1844) 1 Car & Kir 741), see R v Denny (1845), 1 Cox C C 178 and R v Turberville (1849), 4 Cox, C C 13, R v Snelling (1853), 6 Cox, C C 230, C C R, per JERVIS, C J, at p. 233

(b) R v Rogers (1839) 9 C & P 41

(c) R v Kay (1870) 11 Cox, C C 529, C C R, where it was proved that by the custom of a building society such instruments were so treated

(d) R v Walters (1812), Car & M 588, see R v Hunter (1794), 2 Leach, 624; R v Rouse (1840), 4 Cox, C C 7, R v Turberville (1849), 4 Cox, C C 13; R v Snelling (1855), 6 Cox, C C 230, and cases there cited, but see R v Ellis (1850), 4 Cox C C 258

(e) R v Thomas (1837) 2 Mood C C 16, R v James (1838), 8 C & P 292, and see R v Evans (1833), 5 C & P 353

(f) R v Carter (1834) 7 C & P 134

(g) R v Carney (1832), 1 Mood C C 331, R v Cullen (1831), 1 Mood. C C 300, R v Pullbrook (1839) 9 C & P 37

(h) R v Chambers (1871) 12 Cox, C C 109, C C R.

SECT. 4.
Forgery.

Receipt.

1424. A receipt or acquittance is to be distinguished from an authority to pay (i). A mere recital or memorandum of a payment not purporting to be signed or acknowledged by the pretended payee is not a receipt, though properly stamped and uttered as a receipt (k). But if an instrument purporting to be an agreement contains a recital of indebtedness followed by a release upon the payment of certain money and the words "the receipt of which money is hereby acknowledged," these words constitute a receipt (l).

It is not necessary that the words "receipt" or "received" should appear at all. An instrument which represents that a person has received goods for which he holds himself accountable to another is an accountable receipt, although the word "received" does not appear on it (m).

An instrument, the possession of which entitles a person to receive a delivery note, which delivery note enables him in the course of a business to obtain possession of the goods described

(i) R v Parker (1817), 2 Cox, C C 274, also reported as R v Cooper (1847) 2 Car & Kir 586, where the treasurer of a county in paying the expenses of a prosecution was accustomed to pay the whole amount to the attorney for the prosecution, but before making payment he required the signature of every person named in the order for payment to be written on the back of the order, and it was held that such signature was not a receipt, but only an authority from the person signing to the treasurer to pay the person producing the order. This case is now provided for by the addition of the word "authority" to the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 23, stat 7 Geo 4 & 1 Will 4, c 66, s 10 under which R v Parker, supra, was decided, did not have the word "authority." See R v Rice (1831), 6 C & P 631, where a receipt signed by the captain of a detachment, on the authority of which money was received from an army agent, was held to be a receipt, although it was proved that such receipts were frequently cashed by tradesmen who afterwards received the money from the army agents, and see R v Hope (1831), 1 Mood C C 414, where it was held that a paymaster's receipt for soldiers' subsistence money which was cashed and ultimately paid to bearer by the agent of the regiment was properly described as a receipt, and not an order for payment of money.

(k) R v Harvey (1812), Russ & Ry 227. A signature is, not necessary, however, to complete the forgery of a receipt (R v Indi (1814) 2 Car & Kir 636). A scrip certificate of a railway company, although it referred to the payment of a sum of money by the holder and acknowledged the right of the holder to interest and to a share in the company was held not to be a receipt or acquittance or an undertaking for the payment of money (R v West (1847), 1 Den 258, Clark v Newsam (1847), 1 Lxch 131).

(l) R v Hill (1847), 2 Cox, C C 246, see R v Vaughan (1838), 8 C & P 276.

(m) R v Pries (1853), 6 Cox, C C 165 where the document read, "By order of A B we have this day transferred into the name of C D 759 quarters wheat ex E F Entered by A B and now lying at our granaries G H." A pawnbroker's ticket is an accountable receipt for goods (R v Fitch (1807), 7 Cox, C C 257, C C R, per CROMPTON J, at p 260). A turnpike ticket is a receipt for money (R v Fitch (1862), 9 Cox, C C 100, C C R). An ordinary railway ticket is not an acquittance or receipt for money (R v Gooden (1871), 11 Cox, C C 672). A document called a "clearance," certifying that a member of a friendly society has paid all dues and demands, is not an acquittance or receipt (R v French (1870), 11 Cox, C C 472, C O R). If a person writes under a tradesman's bill the word "paid" and the name of the tradesman, this purports to be a receipt for money (R v Houseman (1837), 8 C & P 180). See R v Martin (1836), 7 C & P 549, overruling R v Thompson (1801), 2 Leach, 910). As to proving that a document which does not purport to be a receipt is a receipt, see R v Hunter (1794), 2 Leach, 624, R v Rogers (1839), 9 C & P 14.

SECT. 4.
Forgery

therein, is a receipt (n) An entry in a banker's pass-book is an accountable receipt for the payment of money (o).

The receipt need not be for money which the person defrauded held in his individual right, it may be for money which he held in right of others (p)

It is not necessary that the forgery should be in the body of the receipt (q) The document must, however, be complete, and therefore a "scrip receipt" not filled up with the name of the subscriber is not a receipt (r)

Forgery may be committed in respect of a copy of a receipt if the party making the false copy relies upon it as evidence upon the supposed loss of the original (s)

Where part payment has been received by an agent for his principal and duly accounted for, and after the termination of the agency, the former agent collects the balance of the debt under false pretences and alters the receipt previously given, such alteration of a "spent" receipt is not forgery of a receipt (t)

(n) R v Mough (1857), 7 Cox, C O 101

(o) R v Harrison (1777), 1 Leach 180, and see R v Smith (1862), 9 Cox, C O 162, C O R, where a prisoner, who was both treasurer and member of an unenrolled friendly society, made fictitious entries in a book purporting to be a bank pass book (such entries purporting to vouch that he had paid certain moneys into the bank, and that the bank had acknowledged the receipt of them, whereas the entries were false and fraudulent), and it was held that the prisoner, although a member of the society and interested in the moneys, might be convicted of forgery of a receipt, and see R v Atkinson (1811), 2 Mood C O 215, where bankers being accustomed to give receipts on deposit of money in the following form "Received of A B £85 to his credit This receipt not transferable," and on the return of the receipt with A B's signature to repay the money with interest, it was held that forgery of A B's signature constituted forgery of an "acquittance" for £85 and interest

(p) E g, on behalf of a charitable institution (R v Jones (1785), 1 Leach, 366)

(q) Thus where the body of an accountable receipt acknowledged four pounds, and the prisoner altered the figure 4 in the corner of the receipt to 40, and in passing the instrument stated that the word four in the body had been written by mistake, it was held that the prisoner had committed forgery (R v Johnston (1811), 6 Cox, C O 133, C O R (Ir))

(r) R v Lyon (1793), 2 Leach 597 Such a case is to be distinguished from an entry in a banker's pass-book, where the entry purports to be in a book containing receipts from customers, and therefore shows that the money was received from the person to whom the book belonged

(s) Upfold v Lest (1803), 5 Esp 101

(t) R v Sargent (1863), 10 Cox, C O 161 The offence here committed is that of obtaining money by false pretences It is not forgery of a receipt for a person to sign a receipt in his own name for someone else, e g, "Received for R Auchman, G Aiscott" (R v Aiscott (1834), 6 C. & P 408) and such receipt is apparently not within s 21 of the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98) If words are added which do not alter the original character of the receipt this of itself does not amount to forgery of a receipt (R v Milton (1866), 10 Cox, C O 364) In a case where a station-master, whose duty it was to pay B both for collection and delivery of parcels, set down items of collection and delivery in parallel columns, but paid for collection only, and obtained a receipt at the bottom of the collection column, under which he secretly put a stamp and wrote across it the amount appearing due on both columns, it was found by the jury that the document to which this addition was made bore a different meaning afterwards from that which it bore before, and it was held that the prisoner was rightly convicted of forging a receipt (R v Griffiths (1858), 7 Cox, C O 501, C O R).

(iii) Bills of Exchange etc.

SECT. 4.

Forgery.

Forging bill of exchange etc.

1425 Everyone is guilty of felony who, with intent to defraud (a), (1) forges or alters any bill of exchange (b) or any acceptance, indorsement, or assignment thereof, or any promissory note (c) or indorsement or assignment thereof, or knowingly offers, utters etc. any such bill etc with knowledge that it is forged (d); (2) obliterates, adds to, or alters the crossing on any cheque or draft on a banker (e); (3) offers, utters etc (f) any such cheque or draft with any such obliteration, addition or alteration of words with knowledge that such obliteration etc has been made (g)

The punishment for such offence is penal servitude for life, or for any period not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour (h)

1426 Everyone is by statute guilty of felony who without lawful authority or excuse (i) and with intent to defraud draws, makes, signs, accepts, or indorses any bill of exchange or promissory note by procuration or otherwise on behalf of any other person, or offers, utters, disposes of or puts off any such bill or note, so drawn etc. with knowledge that it was so drawn etc

Drawing bill etc by procuration.

The punishment for such offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour (k)

1427 The expression "a bill of exchange" includes a cheque (l) A document which by reason of the transposition of words departs

Cheques.

(a) As to intent to defraud, see R v Wilson (1847), 2 Car & Kir 527, Flower v Shaw (1818), 2 Car & Kir 703, R v Houtson (1813), Russ & Ry 260, and p 713, ante

(b) R v Birkett (1813) Russ & Ry 251, R v Chisholm (1815), Russ & Ry 297 The words "any bill of exchange" have been held to cover foreign as well as inland bills (R v Roberts (1857), 7 Cox, O C 422, C C R (Ir))

(c) A conditional agreement to pay is not a promissory note (Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 61), s 83 (1)) See R v Howie (1869), 11 Cox, C C 320, as to an instrument alleged to be a promissory note, but really a nullity, see R v Burle (1822) Russ & Ry 496

(d) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98) s 22 As to definition of bill of exchange and promissory note, see Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 61), ss 3 (1), 83 (1), and title BILLS OF EXCHANGE, Vol II, p 462

(e) The term "cheque or draft on a banker" includes any coupon bearing across its face an addition in written, printed, or stamped letters of the name of any banker, or of the words "and company" in full or abbreviated between two transverse lines (The Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 83), s 32) and on any document issued by a customer of any banker intended to enable any person or body corporate to obtain payment from such banker of the sum mentioned in such document (Revenue Act, 1983 (46 & 47 Vict c. 50) s 17)

(f) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 25

(g) Ibid

(h) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(i) This section does not, like many others, provide that the proof of lawful authority or excuse shall lie on the party accused.

(k) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 24, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(l) Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c 61), s. 73, where a cheque is defined as a bill of exchange drawn on a banker, payable on demand

SECT 4 Forgery

Altering amount of bill of exchange

from the ordinary form of a cheque may still be a cheque for the forgery of which an indictment will lie (m) Forgery may be committed in respect of a post-dated cheque (n)

1428 The alteration of a bill of exchange from a lower to a higher sum constitutes forgery as well as "altering", therefore a prisoner who has committed such offence may be convicted without any specific charge of altering in the indictment (o) Alteration of the date of payment, or even the slightest insertion, alteration, or erasure in any material part of a true instrument so as to give it a new operation constitutes forgery (p)

It is not necessary that the bill or note as altered should be grammatical (q) or negotiable (r), or that the signature should be a fac simile of that of the person whose signature it purports to be (s)

There can be no forging or uttering of a bill of exchange or note, if it is incomplete as forged (t)

(m) The test appears to be whether the drawer would be obliged to pay, if the bank refused. Thus "pay Mr C seventeen or better pounds, eleven shillings," dated, signed and addressed as a cheque, was held to constitute a cheque capable of being the subject of forgery (R v Boreham (1847), 2 Cox, C C 189)

(n) See Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 61), s 13 (2). In R v Taylor (1813), 1 Car & Kir 213, which was the case of a post-dated cheque, the indictment was for forgery of an order for the payment of money. An indictment for the forgery of a cheque would in such a case now, it seems, be good. As to forgery of an unnecessary indorsement for the sake of obtaining credit and getting a cheque cashed, see R v Wardell (1862), 3 F & F 82

(o) R v Tenque (1802), Russ & Ry 31

(p) R v Atkinson (1837), 7 C & P 669, per PARK, J, at p 671, R v Treble (1810), 2 Taunt 328, Ex Ch (alteration of place of payment), and see Dishon v Weatherley (1834), 6 C & P 758 (insertion of place of payment). But where a customer of a bank on receiving back a paid cheque altered the handwriting and returned it, declaring it to have been a forgery, not for the purpose of giving a new operation to the cheque, but in order to support a false charge of forgery, and in order to obtain money by a false pretence, it was held that such alteration was not forgery (Brittain v Bank of London (1863), 3 F & F 465). Such an act would be indictable as an attempt to obtain money by false pretences, see p 692, ante

(q) R v Post (1806), Russ & Ry 101 (a banker's one pound note changed to ten pound, pound being left in the singular)

(r) R v Box (1813), Russ & Ry 300, R v Wintertottom (1814), 2 Car & Kir 37 (a bill payable to the order of four persons indorsed with the forged signature of one of them)

(s) R v Mahony (1854), 6 Cox, C C 487, C C R (Ir) (where a prisoner induced his wife, whose maiden name was Ann Watters, to sign two notes A Watters, and handed them to the prosecutor as being the notes of his mother-in-law Catherine Watters, it was held that the variation of signature, not being sufficient to put a party on inquiry, did not prevent the prisoner from being guilty of forging and uttering), see also R v Parke (1843), 1 Cox, C C 4, and compare R v Fitzgerald (1741), 1 Leach, 20 (a conviction for forging a will of Peter Perry under the name of John Perry)

(t) E.g., if there is no signature to a promissory note (R v Pateman (1821), Russ & Ry 405, or no drawer's name to a bill of exchange (R v Harper (1881), 7 Q B D. 78, C C R), R v Butterwick (1839), 2 Mood & R 196, R v Mopary (1866), 11 Cox, 143, see Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 61), s 3, or no payee's names (R v Pandall (1811), Russ & Ry 193, R v Richards (1811), Russ & Ry 193). It seems that one who writes another person's name across a blank stamp cannot be convicted of forgery, though the stamped document be

1429 To sign a bill or indorsement in an assumed name with intent to defraud is forgery, and it is immaterial that the bill would have been equally taken if the person charged had indorsed his own name (a)

SECT. 4.
Forgery.

Use of assumed name

Where a person has assumed a false name for the purpose of committing a fraud by drawing, accepting, or indorsing bills in that name, and subsequently signs bills in that name, he commits forgery, and the onus is upon him of proving that he assumed the false name on other occasions and for other purposes (b). But if a person has assumed the name for other fraudulent purposes and signs the assumed name to a false instrument, he is not guilty of forgery, unless when he assumed the fictitious name he contemplated the making of the false instrument (c).

An acceptance, drawing, or indorsement written or procured to be written in the name of a fictitious or non-existing person is a forgery (d), and as in the case of an assumed name it is immaterial

Fictitious or non-existing person

afterwards filled up by a confederate (R v Cooke (1838) 8 C & P 582). But if the person who forges the name, utters the instrument after it has been filled up, he could be convicted of the offence of uttering (ibid). So if a cheque which requires the signature of more than one person is altered, while it only has the signature of one, the person who made the alteration cannot be convicted of forging the cheque (R v Turpin (1819) 2 Cui & Kir 820). There cannot be a conviction for forgery of a bill, if on the face of it is void (R v Moffatt 61787, 1 Leach, 431), but there may be a conviction for forgery, if the bill is void for reasons not appearing on the face of it (R v Munkintosh (1800), 2 Leach, (83)). A person who forges a document in the form of a bill of exchange, but requiring the drawee to pay to his own order, accepted by the drawee and indorsed by the drawer, cannot be convicted of forging a bill of exchange (R v Bartlett (1841), 2 Mood & R 362). See now Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 61, s 5), and Fiedler v Marshall (1861), 9 C B (N S) 606, Peto v Reynolds (1854), 9 Exch 410, Edis v Bury (1827), 6 B & C 433. As to forgery of a document in the form of a promissory note, made payable to a number of unspecified persons associated under a general name and not constituting a firm or corporation, see R v Clarkson (1844), 1 Cox, C C 110, but see the definition of promissory note in the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 61), s 83. As to a bill of exchange without a drawee, see R v Hawkes (1838), 2 Mood C C 60, R v Smith (1843), 2 Mood C C 295, Gray v Melner (1819), 8 Taunt 739, R v Hunter (1823), Russ & Ry 511, R v Curry (1841), 2 Mood C C 218, but see now Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 61), s 3. A document in the form of a bill in which the words "(without acceptance)" are added is none the less a bill of exchange (R v Kinnear (1838), 2 Mood & R 117). A person may be convicted of forgery of a document which by law should be stamped, although it is unstamped or insufficiently stamped (R v Reuellet (1796), 2 Leach, 703, R v Hawkeswood (1783), 1 Leach, 257, R v Morton (1795), 2 East, P C 955).

(a) R v Marshall (1804), Russ & Ry 75, R v Francis (1811), Russ & Ry 209, R v Whyte (1805), Russ & Ry 90.

(b) R v Peacock (1814), Russ & Ry 278.

(c) R v Whyte (1851), 5 Cox, C C 290, R v Dontson (1813), Russ & Ry 260, R v Pearock, supra, see R v Aickles (1787), 1 Leach, 438; see 2 last, P C 969.

(d) R v Rogers (1838), 8 C & P 629, R v Taft (1777), 1 Leach, 172, R v Bolland (1772), 1 Leach, 83, R v Taylor (1779), 1 Leach, 214, R v Mitchell (1847), 1 Den 282, R v Lockett (1772), 1 Leach, 94 (signing a fictitious name as the pretended drawer of a cheque). Proof that no person of the drawer's name keeps an account or has a right to draw cheque on the drawee is prima facie evidence that the drawer is a fictitious person (R v Buckler (1831), 5 C & P 118, and see R v Ashby (1860), 2 F & F 560).

SECT 4
Forgery

that the money obtained by the uttering of the forged indorsement might equally have been obtained by a true indorsement (e)

An acceptance written by a person in his own name to represent a fictitious firm (e), or an indorsement written by a person in his own name (which happens to be the same as that of the payee) with the knowledge that the real payee is another person (f), is forgery

It is not forgery for anyone to pass himself off as the person whose genuine indorsement is on a bill (g).

Unauthorised acceptance
 etc.

1430 It is forgery to write or procure another person to write the acceptance of an existing person without his authority (h) It

(e) R v Taft (1777), 1 Leach, 172, and R v Taylor (1779), 1 Leach, 214

(f) Mead v Young (1790), 4 Term Rep 28, see also R v Parke (1843), 1 Cox, 4, where a bank post bill payable to J Parke & Son, and intended for John Parke & Son, was obtained by a person carrying on business as J Parke & Co, and indorsed by him in name of Jas Parke & Son, a fictitious firm, intent to defraud being proved, it was held that the indorser was guilty of forgery. If A B with the authority of C D, who has the same name as E F, writes the name of C D for the purpose of passing a bill off as that of E F, A B is guilty of forgery, and this whether E F is an existing or a non existing person. But if a person gives a note entirely as his own, his signing it in a fictitious name is not forgery, if the credit is given wholly to himself without any regard to the name signed or to any third person (R v Martin (1879), 5 Q. B. D 34, C O R, R v Dunn (1765), 1 Leach, 57, R v Parkes (1796), 2 Leach, 775)

(g) R v Hevey (1782), 2 East, P O 856. A person who acted in this way might be convicted of obtaining or of attempting to obtain money by false pretences, see p 692, ante. When a bill is addressed to a person whose name is given with a description and addition, and the bill is accepted by a person who bears that name but to whom the description and addition do not apply, and there is no one of that name to whom that description and addition do apply, the person who utters such a bill containing the false description is not guilty of forgery (R v Webb (1819) Russ & Ry 405), and see R v Japps (1864), 4 F & F 81, where a prisoner having induced a person to accept a bill directed to B, but having no addition, description or address, subsequently added a false address but no description, representing that the acceptance was that of "a customer," it was held there was no forgery. In these two cases there was no evidence that the prisoner intended to make the acceptance to appear to be by a person other than the actual acceptor (ibid., at p 83, per WILLES, J). But where a prisoner induced a person to sign his name upon a blank stamp, and afterwards on the paper where the name appeared wrote a bill of exchange with the name of a drawee identical with the name signed, and added a place of payment in another town, intending the bill to appear drawn upon and accepted by another existing person of the same name as that signed, but residing in such other town, it was held that forgery had been committed (R v Blenkinsop (1847), 2 Car & Kir 531), and it is immaterial whether such other person actually exists or not (R v Japps, supra), but see R v Watts (1821), Russ & Ry 436 (where a prisoner uttered a promissory note purporting to be drawn by A B of Tipton and payable to prisoner and stated at the time that A B kept the "Bull's Head" at Tipton, it was held that he was guilty of forgery, although there were two persons of the drawer's name at Tipton, and only the one who kept the "Bull's Head" was called to deny the signature), R v Hampton (1830), 1 Mood C O 255, where a bill purported to be accepted by A B, draper, Birmingham, upon A B's evidence that he knew no other draper at Birmingham of his name, it was held there was evidence for the jury that he was the only draper in Birmingham of that name (R v White (1861), 2 F & F 554, see also R v King (1832), 5 C & P 123). If a bill purports to be accepted by A B, and A B on being shown the bill says it is a "good bill," this is evidence for the jury that A B wrote the acceptance (R v Hevey (1782), 1 Leach, 232).

(h) R v Rogers (1838), 8 C & P 629, R v Mitchell (1844), 1 Den 282, n. In

SECT. 4.
Forgery.

is immaterial that the person writing such acceptance may believe either that he will be able to pay the bill or that the person defrauded will refrain from prosecuting (i). But authority may be implied from acts, and a person who signs another person's name on a bill believing upon reasonable grounds that he has authority is not guilty of forgery (k).

It is forgery to indorse a bill by procuration under a false and fraudulent assumption of authority so to indorse it (l).

If a person holding a blank cheque or acceptance with authority to fill it up for a certain amount fills it up for a larger amount, he commits forgery (m), even though he believes such larger amount to be due to him from the owner of the cheque (n).

(iv) Exchequer Bills etc.

1431 Everyone is by statute (o) guilty of felony who with intent to defraud forges or alters or knowingly utters, disposes, or puts off with knowledge that it is forged or altered any Exchequer bill, including a Treasury bill (p), and a war bond (q), Exchequer bond or Exchequer debenture, or indorsement thereon, or assignment thereof, or any receipt or certificate for interest accruing thereon.

Forging
Exchequer
bills etc.

The punishment for such offence is penal servitude for life or for any period not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour (r).

1432 Everyone is by statute (s) guilty of felony who without lawful authority or excuse (t) makes or causes to be made or assists in making, or knowingly has custody or possession of (1) any frame, mould, or instrument having therein any words, letters, figures, marks, lines, or devices, peculiar to and appearing in the substance of any

Making etc
instruments
etc for forging
Exchequer
bills etc.

the case of forgery of a receipt it was held sufficient if the prisoner by letter directed his innocent agent that he was "at liberty" to sign the name of a third person (R v Clifford (1841), 2 Car & Kir 202).

(i) R v Forbes (1830), 7 C & P 224, R v Beard (1837), 8 C & P 143. See intent to defraud, p 713, ante. On a charge of uttering a forged bill it is immaterial that the bill has since been paid by the prisoner, if the offence has been completed at the time of uttering (R v Geach (1830), 9 C & P 499).

(k) R v Beard, supra, at p 150, R v Forbes, supra. The intimacy of the parties, and the fact that the prisoner's act has been ratified on a previous occasion may be taken into account (R v Parish (1837), 8 C & P 94).

(l) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 24. Before that Act it was not forgery, see R v Whit (1847), 2 Car & Kir 404.

(m) R v Hart (1836) 7 C & P 652, R v Bateman (1845), 1 Cox, C C 186, R v Wilson (1847), 2 Car & Kir 527. In all cases there must be the intent to defraud. As to evidence of the intent, see p 380, ante, and p 764, post.

R v Wilson (1847), 2 Car & Kir 527, and intent to defraud, p 713, ante.

(o) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 8.

(p) Treasury Bills Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict c 2), s 10.

(q) Under the War Loan Act, 1900 (War Loan Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict c 2), s 4 (3)).

(r) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 8, Exchequer Bills and Bonds Act, 1886 (29 & 30 Vict c 25), ss 15, 25, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(s) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), ss 9, 10.

(t) The onus of proof of such authority or excuse in each case lies on the party accused (ss 9, 10).

SECT 4
Forgery

paper provided or to be provided or used for Exchequer bills (a), bonds, or debentures (b); (2) any machinery for working any threads into the substance of any paper or any such thread, and intended to imitate such words, letters, figures, marks, lines, threads, or devices, or (8) any plate peculiarly employed for printing such exchequer bills, bonds, or debentures, or (4) any die or seal peculiarly used for preparing any such plate or for sealing such Exchequer bills, bonds, or debentures as aforesaid, (5) any plate, die, or seal intended to imitate any such plate, die, or seal as aforesaid (c), (6) any paper in the substance of which shall appear any such words, letters, figures, marks, lines, threads, or other devices as aforesaid, or any part of such words etc intended to imitate such words etc (d), also everyone who (7) causes or assists in causing such words, letters, figures, marks, lines, threads, or other devices, or parts thereof, intended to imitate the same to appear in the substance of any paper whatever (e), or (8) takes or assists in taking any impression of any such plate, die, or seal as aforesaid (e)

The punishment for any such offence is penal servitude for seven years, or for any period not less than three years, or imprisonment for any period not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour (f)

Purchase of paper provided for Exchequer
bills etc.

1433 Everyone is by statute (g) guilty of misdemeanour who without lawful authority or excuse (h) purchases or receives or knowingly has custody or possession of (1) any paper manufactured or provided by or under authority of the Inland Revenue Commissioners or Commissioners of the Treasury for the purpose of being used as Treasury bills (i), war bonds (k), Exchequer bills, bonds, or debentures, before such paper shall have been duly stamped, signed, and issued for public use, (2) any such plate, die or seal as aforesaid

The punishment for such offence is imprisonment for any term not more than five nor less than three years with or without hard labour (l)

(a) The term "Exchequer bill" includes Treasury bills (Treasury Bills Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict c 2), s 10, war bonds (War Loan Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict c 2), s 4 (d)), and Metropolitan bills (Metropolitan Board of Works (Money) Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict c 27), s 21)

(b) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 9.

(c) Ibid

(d) Ibid, s. 10

(e) Ibid

(f) Ibid ss 9, 10, as altered by the Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c 69) s 1, see also the Exchequer Bills and Bonds Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c 25) ss 20, 21, 25, which deals with the manufacturing and unlawful possession of paper, plates etc intended to imitate those used for Exchequer bills. The offence is not triable at quarter sessions, but see Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c 38), s 1

(g) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 11

(h) The onus of proof of such authority or excuse lies on the party accused (ibid, s 11)

(i) Treasury Bills Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict c 2), s 10

(k) War Loan Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict c 2), s 4 (3)

(l) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98) s 11

1434 Every person is by statute (m) guilty of felony who with intent to defraud forges, alters, or offers, utters, disposes of, or puts off, knowing that it is forged or altered, any bond commonly called an East India bond, or any bond, debenture, or security issued or made under any Act passed or to be passed relating to the East Indies, or any indorsement thereon or assignment thereof

SMOT. 4
Forgery.

Forging East
India bond.

The punishment of this offence is penal servitude for life or for any period not less than three years, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (n)

1435 Any person is by statute (o) guilty of felony who fraudulently forges or alters or offers, utters, disposes of, or puts off, knowing that it is forged or altered, any debenture issued under any lawful authority whatsoever either within the King's dominions or elsewhere

Forging
debentures

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for fourteen years or for any period not less than three years, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (p)

(v) Deeds etc

1436 Everyone is by statute (q) guilty of felony who, with intent to defraud (r), commits any of the following acts (1) forges or alters any deed (s), (2) forges or alters any bond or writing deeds etc.

Forging

(m) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 7

(n) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(o) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 26 As to the meaning of 'debenture' see British India Steam Navigation Co v Inland Revenue Commissioners (1881), 7 Q B D 165, Edmonds v Blaina Furnaces Co (1887), 36 Ch D 215, Levy v Abercrombie Slate and Slab Co (1887), 37 Ch D 280

(p) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 26, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), Statute Law Revision (No 2) Act 1893 (56 & 57 Vict c 54) The words 'with intent to defraud' are omitted from this section and 'fraudulently' is used instead, as to which, see R v L'oumer (1872), 12 Cox, C C 235 The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(q) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 20

(r) But not necessarily to defraud the person whose name is forged (R v Trenfield (1858), 1 F & F 43)

(s) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 20 For the meaning of a deed within this statute see R v Morton (1873), L R 2 C C R 22, where it was held that a letter of orders under the seal of a bishop was not a deed for the purposes of this section "Any instrument delivered as a deed which either itself passes an interest or property or is in affirmation or confirmation of something whereby an interest or property passes is a deed" (per BOVILL, C J, at p 27) Quere whether the probate of a will is a deed (per BLACKBURN, J, at p 28) A power of attorney under seal is a deed (ibid, R v Lyon (1813), Russ. & Ry 250, R v Fauntleroy (1824), 1 O & P 421, see also Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), ss 2, 4

It is forgery under s. 20 to make a deed fraudulently with a false date, when the date is a material part of the deed, although the deed is in fact made by and between the persons by and between whom it purports to be made (R v Ritson (1869), L R 1 C C R 200, and see Re Cooper, Cooper v Vesey (1882), 20 Ch D 611, C A, where a son who was heir-at-law of his father and co-executor and co-trustee under his father's will alone executed deeds in his own name as absolute owner, and it was held that such deeds were forgeries, see per LINDLEY, L J, at p. 634) It is no defence to an indictment for forgery of a deed that the deed is not executed in compliance with the directory provision of a statute, if

SECT. 4
Forgery.

obligatory (a), or assignment of such bond or writing obligatory, or (3) knowingly utters, disposes of, or puts off with knowledge that it is forged or altered, any forged or altered deed or bond or writing obligatory, or assignment of such bond or writing obligatory (b), (4) forges any name, handwriting, or signature purporting to be that of an attesting witness to a deed or bond or writing obligatory, (5) offers, utters, disposes of, or puts off any deed, bond, or writing obligatory, having a name, handwriting, or signature so forged, with knowledge that it is forged (c)

The punishment for such offence is penal servitude for life or for any period not less than three years, or imprisonment for any period not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour (d)

Forging will.

1437 Everyone is by statute (e) guilty of felony who with intent to defraud (f), forges or alters any will, testament, codicil, or testamentary instrument, whether or no such instrument be designated by any special name in any statute, or offers, utters, disposes of or puts off any such instrument knowing it to be forged or altered

The punishment is the same as in the case of the last-mentioned offence (g)

It is not necessary to constitute this offence that the person whose will is forged should be deceased (h), or should ever have existed (i)

the non-compliance with such provision does not make the deed void (R v Lyon (1813), Russ & Ry 255) Aliter, it seems, if the deed as executed would be wholly void

(n) See as to an administration bond R v Barber (1844), 1 Car & Kir 434 In R v Dunnett (1792), 2 Leach, 381, on the construction of the words "bond, writing obligatory" in the Perjury Act, 1728 (2 Geo 2, c 23), s 1, it was held that a bond was rightly described as a "bond and writing obligatory," although it had no condition with a penalty or defeasance attached to it Any security (other than debenture stock) issued under the Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 83), is a writing obligatory within this section see ibid, s 32

(b) See note (a), supra, Forgery Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 20 It is forgery to put a seal fraudulently to a document which is invalid without seal after such document has been signed (or marked), but it is not forgery to induce a person to execute a deed by misrepresenting its legal effect (R v Collins (1843), 2 Mood & L 161, 466, compare R v Chadwick (1844), 2 Mood & R 345) Where a bond is joint and several, an indictment lies for the forgery of one signature, although the other signature is genuine (R v Richards (1844), 1 Cox, C C 62)

(c) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 20

(d) Ibid, as altered by the Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(e) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 39

(f) A prisoner in a case tried before the statute (R v Tufts (1848), 3 Cox, C C 160, C C R.) was proved to have forged the will of his father, but in the absence of proof that any person had been defrauded thereby, it was held that he could not be convicted of intent to defraud any person See intent to defraud, ante

(g) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 39, and see note (d), supra

(h) The offence consists in the fraudulent making of the will, not in the legal effect of the forgery (R v Coogan (1787), 2 East, P C 948, R v Stirling (1773), 1 Leach, 99).

(i) R v Avery (1838), 8 C & P 396 (under the corresponding section (s 3) of Forgery Act, 1830 (11 Geo 4 & 1 Will 4, c 66)) The offence is none the less committed, although the correct christian name of the supposed testator is not signed (R v Fitzgerald (1741), 1 Leach, 20) The rule which prohibits the giving in evidence of documents placed in a solicitor's hands in professional

(vi) Forging the King's Seals.

SECT 4

ForgeryForging the King's seals.

1438 Everyone is by statute (k) guilty of felony, (1) who forges or counterfeits any of the King's seals or the stamp or impression thereof, or (2) who utters, knowing it to be forged or counterfeited, any such seal, stamp, or impression (or any forged or counterfeited stamp or impression apparently intended to resemble such stamp or impression), or (3) who forges or alters, or utters, knowing it to be forged or altered, any document or instrument bearing such stamps or impressions.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (h). These offences are not triable at quarter sessions (l).

(vii) Records, Processes of Court, and Instruments of Evidence

1439 A person is guilty by statute (m) of felony who with intent to defraud (n) commits any of the following offences —

Forging
record of court etc.

(1) Forges or fraudulently alters or knowingly offers, utters, disposes of, or puts off with knowledge that it is forged, any record or other original document of any court of record or court of equity or Court of Admiralty in England or Ireland, or any document or writing or copy thereof intended to be used as evidence in any such court (o).

(2) Being a clerk of any court (whether of record or not) or other officer having custody of the records (p) of any such court, or the deputy of any such clerk or officer, utters any false copy or certificate of any record knowing such copy etc. to be false, or not being such confidence does not apply to the case of a forged will given by a prisoner to his solicitor ostensibly for the purposes of seeking professional advice but in reality with the intention that the solicitor shall act upon it, such will may accordingly be called for and read (R v Jones (1846), 1 Den 166, see also R v Tufts (1846), 3 Cox, C C 160, 162, 163, C C R, and R v Farley (1846), 2 Car & Kir 313, R v Avery (1838), 5 O & P 596). Unrevoked probate of a will is not conclusive evidence of its validity, so as to be a bar to a prosecution for forgery of the will (R v Buttery (1818), Russ & Ry 342, 343, n). Where persons were charged jointly with procuring another person to utter a forged will, and the evidence showed no joint act but only separate acts, it was held nevertheless that all might be convicted (R v Barber and Others (1844), 1 Car & Kir 442).

(k) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 1.

(l) Quarter Sessions Act, 1841 (5 & 6 Vict c 38), s 1.

(m) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), ss 27—29.

(n) Though the words "with intent to defraud" do not appear in ss 27—29 of the Forgery Act, 1861, they are imported into s 28 (and similarly, it is apprehended, into ss 27 and 29) from the common law definition of forgery, and must be alleged in the indictment (R v Powner (1872), 12 Cox, C C 230).

(o) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 27. The documents specified are any record, writ, return, panel, process, rule, order, warrant, interrogatory, deposition, affidavit, affirmation, recognisance, cognovit actionem, warrant of attorney, bill, petition, process, notice, rule, answer, pleading, report, or decree (ibid, s. 27).

(p) "Records" include official documents kept as records for the purpose of the court, and not necessarily connected with litigation; but the register of ordinations is not the record of a bishop's court (R v Etheridge (1901), 19 Cox, C C 676).

SECT. 4
Forgery

clerk, officer or deputy, signs or certifies any copy or certificate of any record as such clerk, officer or deputy (q)

(3) Forges or fraudulently alters or utters etc with knowledge that it is forged etc any copy or certificate of any record (r) which is forged etc, or utters etc any copy of a certificate of a record which has thereon a false or forged name, handwriting, or signature with knowledge that the name etc is false etc (s)

(4) Being a clerk, officer, or deputy having custody of the records of a court where an offender has been convicted, utters a false certificate of indictment and conviction for a felony, or not being such clerk etc utters any such certificate with a false or counterfeit signature (t)

(5) Forges the seal of any court of record (a)

(6) Forges or fraudulently alters any process (b) of any court other than a court of record (c), or a court of equity, or a court of Admiralty in England or Ireland, or serves or enforces any forged process (b) of any court whatsoever, knowing that it is forged, or delivers or causes to be delivered to any person any paper falsely purporting to be such process (d) or a copy thereof, or any judgment, decree, or order of any court of law or equity or a copy thereof, or knowing that such process is false utters or professes to act under any such false process (e)

Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 28

As to records, see p 735, ante

Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 28

(t) Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo 4, c 28), s 11. There are similar provisions as to forging or uttering a certificate of an acquittal under the Crown Cases Act, 1818 (11 & 12 Vict c 78), s 6, but the maximum sentence of penal servitude for such an offence is ten years (ibid, s 6)

(a) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 28, see also the Inferior Courts Act 1844 (7 & 8 Vict c 19), s 5, the Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict c 77), s 28, the County Courts Act 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 43), s 180

(b) An affluence order is a "process" (R v Pinner (1872), 12 Cox, C C 230)

(c) As to forging the process of a county court see also the County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 43), s 180, which is similarly worded and includes "acting or professing to act under any false colour or pretence of the process or authority" of the court, it was held under the corresponding section of an older County Court Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict c 95), s 57, that "acting or professing to act" applies to the use of false instruments and not to mere false representations as to authority (R v Myott (1853), 6 Cox C C 400)

(d) An ordinary notice to produce does not "purport" to be a process of the court by reason of any heading which may be put to it, or by reason that it may have been intended to be thought such (R v Castle (1857), 7 Cox, C C 375, C C R)

(e) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 28, and see the Inferior Courts Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict c 19), s 5, and R v Ripper (1897) 32 L J 350, R v Myott, supra. Where a prisoner filled up a blank form of summons, and signed it "W G, Registrar of the T Court," and indorsed a notice that unless the claim were paid by a certain day an execution warrant would be issued, it was held that he had professed to act under a false colour or pretence of the T Court, within the Act of 1846 (9 & 10 Vict c 95), s 57 (since repealed) (R v Richmond (1859), 8 Cox, C C 200, C C R). It was sufficient under this Act if the prisoner pretended to act under the process of the county court, though, in fact, the document was not a county court document, and bore no resemblance thereto (R v Evans (1857), 7 Cox, C C 293, C C R., but see R v Castle, supra). As to the case of a county court process irregularly issued in blank, to be subsequently filled in, see R v Collier (1831), 5 C & P 160

(7) Forges or fraudulently alters or utters etc with knowledge that is forged etc any instrument which is or may be made evidence, by any Act passed or to be passed, and for the forgery or uttering of which no punishment is provided in the Forgery Act, 1861 (f)

SECT 4.
Forgery.

The punishment for any such offence is penal servitude for not more than seven years or for not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour (g).

1440 Everyone is by statute (h) guilty of a felony who —

Falsely
certifying copy of record etc

(1) Belonging to or being employed in the Public Record Office certifies any writing as a true and authentic copy of a record in the custody of the Master of the Rolls with knowledge that such writing is false in a material part

(2) Counterfeits the signature of an assistant record keeper for the purpose of counterfeiting a certified copy of a record, or forges or counterfeits the seal of the Public Record Office

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (i)

1441 Every person is by statute guilty of felony who —

Forging of seal etc of certificate

(1) Forges the seal, stamp, or signature of any certificate, official or public document, or document or proceeding of any corporation, joint-stock or other company, or of any certified copy of any document, bye law, entry in any register or other book, or other proceeding, if such certificate etc or certified copy is receivable in evidence under the Evidence Act, 1815 (h),

(2) Tenders in evidence any such certificate etc with a counterfeit seal, stamp, or signature with knowledge that such seal etc is counterfeit (l),

(3) Forges the signature of any judge of the superior courts to any order, decree, certificate, or other judicial or official document (m),

(4) Tenders in evidence any such order etc with a counterfeit signature with knowledge that it is counterfeit (n),

(5) Prints any copy of any private Act or of the journals of either House of Parliament which falsely purports to have been printed by the printers to the Crown or to either House of Parliament (o),

(6) Tenders in evidence any such copy with knowledge that it was not printed by the person by whom it purports to have been printed (p)

(f) 24 & 25 Vict c 98, s 29 The instrument may be written, or printed, or partly written and partly printed.

(g) Ibid, ss 27—29, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The offences are not be triable at quarter sessions

(h) Public Record Office Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict c 94), s 19, see ss 8, 20

(i) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

(k) 8 & 9 Vict c 113, see s 4

(l) Ibid, s 4

(m) Ibid, s 4

(n) Ibid, s 4

(o) Ibid, s 4

(p) Ibid, s 4 These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

SECT 4
Forgery

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for not more than ten nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (q)

Forgery of evidence.

1442 Everyone is by statute (r) guilty of felony who —

(1) Forges the seal, stamp, or signature of any document mentioned or referred to in the Evidence Act, 1851,

(2) Tenders in evidence any such document with a counterfeit seal etc with knowledge that such seal etc is counterfeit

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, and imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (s)

Forging signatures of probate registrar etc

1443 Everyone is by statute (a) guilty of felony who —

(1) Forges the signature of any probate registrar or district registrar or any commissioner for taking oaths (a),

(2) Forges the seal used in the probate branch of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice (b),

(3) Knowingly uses or concurs in using any such counterfeit signature or seal or tenders in evidence any document with such counterfeit signature or seal with knowledge that it is counterfeit (c)

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (d)

False copy of proclamation etc

1444 Every person is by statute (e) guilty of felony who —

(1) Prints any copy of any proclamation, order, or regulation which falsely purports to have been printed by the Government printer or under the authority of any British colony or possession (e),

(2) Tenders in evidence any copy of any such proclamation etc falsely purporting to have been printed as aforesaid with knowledge that it was not so printed (f),

(3) Forges or tenders in evidence with knowledge that it is forged any certificate authorised by the Documentary Evidence Act,

8 & 9 Vict c 113, s 4, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1
Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 99), s 17

Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The documents mentioned are—foreign and colonial acts of state, judgments, decrees, orders, and other judicial proceedings of any court of justice in any foreign state or British colony, and affidavits, pleadings, and other legal documents deposited in any such court (s 7), apothecaries' certificates (s 8), registers of British vessels and certificates of registry (s 12, now repealed), certified copies of records of a previous conviction or acquittal (s 13), examined or certified copies of public documents admissible in evidence on production from the proper custody (Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 99), s 14) These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

(a) Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict c 77), s 28, see Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict c 66), ss. 18, 34

(b) Ibid.

(c) Ibid

(d) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s. 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(e) Documentary Evidence Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict c. 37), s. 4 (1).

(f) Ibid

SECT. 4.
Forgery.

1868 (g), to be annexed to a copy of or extract from any proclamation, order, or regulation (h);

(4) Prints any copy of any Act, proclamation, order, regulation, royal warrant, circular, list, gazette, or document falsely purporting to be printed under the superintendence or authority of His Majesty's Stationery Office (i),

(5) Tenders in evidence any copy falsely purporting to have been printed as aforesaid with knowledge that it was not so printed (i),

(6) Forges, counterfeits, or fraudulently alters the seal or signature of any person authorised under the Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889 (k), to administer an oath,

(7) Tenders in evidence or otherwise uses an affidavit having any seal or signature so forged or counterfeited or fraudulently altered with knowledge that it is forged etc (l),

(8) Forges the signature of a Master in Lunacy or forges or counterfeits the seal of the office of such Master (m),

(9) Knowingly concurs in using any such forged or counterfeited signature or seal, or tenders in evidence any document with such false or counterfeit signature or seal with knowledge that such signature or seal is false or counterfeit (n)

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for not more than seven and not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (n)

1445 Every person is by statute (o) guilty of felony who with intent to defraud forges or alters or utters etc with knowledge that it is forged etc any summons, conviction, order, or warrant of any justice of the peace, or any recognisance purporting to have been entered into before any such justice or other officer authorised to take it, or any examination, deposition, affidavit, affirmation, or solemn declaration taken or made before such justice.

Forging
summons etc of justice of the peace.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for a term not exceeding five years or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding two years (p).

1446 Every person is by statute guilty of felony who without lawful authority or excuse in the name of any other person acknowledges any recognisance of bail or any cognovit actionem or

Falsely
acknowledging recognizance

(g) 31 & 32 Vict c 37

(h) Ibid, s 4

(i) Documentary Evidence Act, 1882 (45 Vict c 9), s 3

(k) 52 Vict c 10

(l) Ibid, s 8

(m) Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict c 5), s 147.

(n) Documentary Evidence Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict c 37), s 4 (1), Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo 4, c 28), s 8, Documentary Evidence Act, 1882 (45 Vict c 9), s 3, Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889 (52 Vict c 10), s 8; Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict c 5), s 147, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

(o) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 32

(p) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

SECT 4
Forgery

judgment, or any deed or other instrument before any court, judge, or other person lawfully authorised in that behalf (g).

The punishment is the same as for the last-mentioned felony, except that the maximum term of penal servitude is seven years (r)

Forging seal or signature under Municipal Corporations Act, 1882

1447 Every person is by statute (s) guilty of a misdemeanour who —

(1) Forges the seal or signature affixed or subscribed to a bye-law made under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (a), or the signature subscribed to any minute of proceedings of a municipal borough council under that Act,

(2) Tenders in evidence any such document with a false or counterfeit seal or signature knowing that it is false or counterfeit

The punishment for these offences on conviction is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (b)

Forging court roll etc

1448 Every person is by statute (c) guilty of felony who with intent to defraud forges or alters or offers, utters etc, with knowledge that it is forged or altered, any court roll or copy of any court roll relating to any copyhold or customary estate

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for a term not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding two years (d)

Forging memorial etc under Acts for registry of deeds

1449 Every person is by statute (e) guilty of felony who —

(1) Forges or fraudulently alters or offers, utters etc, with knowledge that it is forged or fraudulently altered, any memorial, affidavit, affirmation, entry, certificate, indorsement, document, or writing made or issued under the provisions of any Act passed or to be passed for or relating to the registry of deeds (e),

(2) Forges or counterfeits the seal of any office for the registry of deeds, or any stamp or impression of any such seal (f),

(3) Forges any name, handwriting, or signature purporting to be the name, handwriting, or signature to any such memorial etc required or directed to be signed by or by virtue of any Act passed or to be passed (f),

(4) Offers, utters etc any such memorial or other writing having any such forged stamp or impression of any such seal or any such forged name etc, with knowledge that it is forged (g)

(g) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 34

(r) Ibid., s 34 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(s) 45 & 46 Vict c 50, s 235

(a) 45 & 46 Vict c 50

(b) Ibid., s 17 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions On summary conviction the punishment is imprisonment for any term not exceeding three months (ibid.)

(c) Forgery Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 30

(d) Ibid., s 30, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(e) Forgery Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 31, see also Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 87), s 100 As to the Acts for registering deeds, see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL.

(f) Forgery Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 31

(g) Ibid. The section makes no reference to intent to defraud, but it is none the less necessary to allege and prove such intent (see p 713, ante)

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for a term not exceeding fourteen years or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for any term not exceeding two years (h)

SECT. 4.
Forgery.

1450 Every person is by statute (i) guilty of a misdemeanour who fraudulently procures or is privy to the fraudulent procurement of any entry on the land register established under the Land Transfer Act, 1875, or of any erasure from such register or alteration of the register (h)

Fraudulently
procuring entry on land
register.

The punishment for such offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour for any term not exceeding two years, or such fine not exceeding £500 as the court before which the offender is tried may award (h)

1451 Everyone is by statute (l) guilty of felony who forges, alters, or utters a certificate or document relating to land or title under the Declaration of Title Act, 1862 (m)

Forging
certificate
under Declaration of Title Act, 1862

The punishment for such offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment for any term not more than two years with or without hard labour (n).

1452 Everyone is by statute (o) guilty of a misdemeanour who, being an officer authorised or required by the Evidence Act, 1851 (p), to furnish any certified copies or extracts, wilfully certifies a document as being a true copy or extract when the same is not a true copy or extract certificate.

False

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment without hard labour for not more than eighteen months (q).

1453 Everyone is by statute (r) guilty of felony who —

(1) Unlawfully destroys, defaces, or injures or causes or permits to be destroyed, defaced, or injured the whole or part of any register of births, baptisms, marriages, deaths, or burials authorised or required by law to be kept in England or Ireland, or the whole or part of any certified copy of the whole or part of such register (i),

Destroying
etc register of births etc

(2) Forges or fraudulently alters in any such register or part of it any entry relating to any birth etc, or any certified copy of such register or of any part thereof (s),

(h) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 31, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(i) 38 & 39 Vict c 87, s 5

(k) Ibid, s 100 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(l) Declaration of Title Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict c 67), s 45

(m) 25 & 26 Vict c 67 *

(n) Ibid, s 45, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(o) Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 99), s 15

(p) Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 99)

(q) Ibid, s 15 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(r) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 36 As to the register of births etc, see title REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS AND DEATHS, see too Non-parochial Registers Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict c 92), s 8, Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict c 25), s 3, Burial Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict c 81), s 15

(s) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 36 See R v Bowen (1841),

SECT 4
Forgery

(3) Knowingly and unlawfully inserts or causes or permits to be inserted in such register or any certified copy thereof any false entry of any matter relating to any birth etc. (t) ;

(4) Knowingly and unlawfully gives any false certificate relating to any birth etc. (u) ,

(5) Certifies any writing to be a copy or extract from any such register knowing such writing or the part of such register whereof such copy or extract is given to be false in any material particular (u) ,

Forging etc
registers etc

(6) Forges or counterfeits the seal of or belonging to any register office or burial board (u) ,

(7) Utters etc any such register, entry, certified copy, certificate, or seal, or any copy of any entry in any such register with knowledge that it is false (v) ,

(8) Knowingly and wilfully inserts or causes or permits to be inserted in any copy of any register directed or required by law to be transmitted to any registrar or other officer any false entry of any matter relating to any baptism, marriage, or burial (x) ,

(9) Forges or alters or utters with knowledge that it is forged etc any copy of any such register (a) ,

(10) Wilfully signs or verifies any copy of any such register which copy is false in any part with knowledge that it is false (b) ,

(11) Unlawfully destroys, defaces, or injures or for any fraudulent purpose takes from its place of deposit or conceals any such copy of any register (c)

The punishment for any such offence is penal servitude for life or for any period not less than three years, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (d)

1 Don 22 As to intent to defraud, see R v Pounet (1872), 12 Cox, C C 235. Forgery Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98) s 36, see also Non parochial Registers Act, 1940 (3 & 4 Vict c 92), s 8, as amended by the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict c 25), and Burial Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict c 81)

(t) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 36 It is not necessary that such entry should be made with intent to defraud, nor is it necessary (where the matter relates to witnessing a marriage) that the marriage should be legal or the witness a necessary witness (R v Asplin (1873), 12 Cox, C C 391) As to causing a false entry to be inserted, see R v Mason (1848), 2 Car & Kir 622

(u) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 36, see also Non parochial Registers Act, 1940 (3 & 4 Vict c 92), s 8, as amended by Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict c 25) s 3, and Burial Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict c 81), s 15

(v) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 36 If A. hands a forged certificate of a marriage to B, an accomplice, in order that she may show it to C, this is not an uttering by A within the section, even though B does show it to C (R v Heywood (1847), 2 Car & Kir 352), but quære whether it is not a disposing of or putting off (see R v Palmer (1804), Russ & Ry 72).

(x) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c. 98), s 37

(a) Ibid

(b) Ibid.

(c) Ibid. These words were added to meet the case of R v Bowen (1844), 1 Don 22

(d) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c. 98), ss 36, 37, Penal Servitude Act, 1897 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

1454. Everyone is by statute guilty of a misdemeanour who wilfully makes any false certificate or declaration under the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1874 (e), or forges or falsifies any such certificate or declaration or order made under the same Act, or knowingly uses, gives, or sends any such false or forged certificate, declaration, or order as true

SECT 4.
Forgery.

Making false certificate etc under Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1874

The punishment for this offence on conviction on indictment is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (f)

1455 Everyone is by statute (g) guilty of felony who forges or fraudulently alters any licence or certificate for marriage or utters etc any such licence etc with knowledge that it is forged etc

Forging marriage licence.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, and imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (h)

1456 Every person is by statute (i) guilty of a misdemeanour who —

Making false entry in registry book of Stationers' Company

(1) Wilfully makes or causes to be made any false entry in the registry book of the Stationers' Company,

(2) Wilfully produces or causes to be tendered in evidence any paper falsely purporting to be a copy of any entry in such book

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment without hard labour, or by fine or both (k)

1457 Any person is by statute guilty of a misdemeanour who —

Making false entry in register under Trade Marks Act, 1905 etc

(1) Makes or causes to be made a false entry in the register kept under the Trade Marks Act, 1905 (l),

(2) Makes or causes to be made a false entry in a register kept under the Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (m), or a writing falsely purporting to be a copy of an entry in any such register (n),

(3) Produces or tenders or causes to be produced or tendered in evidence any such writing knowing the entry or writing to be false (o)

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment without hard labour, or fine, or both (p)

(e) 37 & 38 Vict c 88, see s 40 (2)

(f) Ibid, s 40 (2), Statute Law Revision (No 2) Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict c 54), Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s. 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions On summary conviction the punishment is a penalty not exceeding £10 A prosecution or indictment for such offence must be commenced within three years after the commission of such offence (ibid, s 46) Any rector, vicar, curate, or officiating minister may correct in the prescribed mode accidental errors in a register (Forgery Act, 1830 (11 Geo 4 & 1 Will 4, c 66), s 21)

(g) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 35

(h) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s. 1. The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(i) Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c 45), s 12

(k) Ibid The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(l) 5 Edw 7, c 15, see ibid, s 66

(m) 7 Edw 7, c 29

(n) Ibid, s 89 (1)

(o) Ibid

(p) Ibid This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

SECT. 4.

Forgery

Falsifying
register of pharmaceutical
chemists etc

1458 Every person is by statute guilty of a misdemeanour who:—

(1) Wilfully makes or causes to be made any falsification in any matter relating to the register of pharmaceutical chemists and chemists and druggists kept under the Pharmacy Act, 1868 (q),

(2) Wilfully procures or attempts to procure himself to be registered under the Pharmacy Act, 1852 (r), or the Pharmacy Act 1868 (s), by making or producing or causing to be made and produced any false or fraudulent representation or declaration, either verbally or in writing (t),

(3) Assists any other person in committing these offences (t).

The punishment for this offence is fine, or imprisonment for not more than twelve months (a)

(viii) Instruments issued by Public Officers

Forging
certificate of Inland
Revenue
Commissioners.

1459 Every person is by statute guilty of felony who with intent to defraud the King or any body politic or corporate or any persons whomsoever —

(1) Forges, counterfeits, or alters or causes or procures to be forged etc., or knowingly or wilfully assists in forging etc. any certificate of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue or any other commissioners acting in the execution of the Income Tax Act, 1812 (b), or any certificate or receipt which the cashier of the Bank of England or any officer for receipt is by that Act authorised to give on the receipt of any money payable under the Act (c),

(2) Utters any such forged etc. certificate or receipt (c)

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for a period not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (d)

Forging
certificate
etc. of paymaster-general etc

1460 Every person is by statute (e) guilty of felony who, with intent to defraud,

(1) Forges or alters any certificate, report, entry, indorsement, declaration of trust, note, direction, authority, instrument or writing made or purporting or appearing to be made by the paymaster-general or by his deputy, clerk or officer, or by any officer of any court in England or Ireland, or by any cashier or other officer or clerk of the Bank of England or of Ireland, or by any cashier or other officer or clerk of such bank, or the names or signatures or counter-signatures of the paymaster-general or of any such cashier etc.,

(q) 31 & 32 Vict. c. 121

(r) 15 & 16 Vict. c. 56

(s) 31 & 32 Vict. c. 121

(t) Ibid., s. 14

(a) Ibid. The imprisonment, it seems, is without hard labour; see p. 410, note. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(b) 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35

(c) Ibid., s. 181

(d) Ibid.; Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(e) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), s. 33, Court of Chancery (Funds) Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 14), ss. 4, 12, Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 16

(2) Utters etc. any such certificate etc. knowing that it is forged or altered (f).

SECT. 4.
Forgery.

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (g).

1461 Every person is by statute (h) guilty of felony who, with intent to defraud anyone,

Forging name
etc. of commissioners of customs

(1) Knowingly or wilfully forges or counterfeits or causes or procures to be forged etc., or knowingly and wilfully assists in forging etc., the name or handwriting of any commissioner of customs or of any accountant and comptroller-general of customs or of any person acting for them to any draft, instrument, or writing for or in order to the receiving or obtaining any of the money in the hands of the Bank of England on account of such commissioners,

(2) Forges or counterfeits or causes or procures to be forged etc., or knowingly and wilfully assists in forging etc., any draft, instrument, or writing made in form of a draft by such accountant-general or person (i),

(3) Utters or publishes such forged draft etc. with knowledge that it is forged (j).

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for a term not exceeding five and not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for a period not exceeding two years (k).

1462 Every person is by statute guilty of felony who.—

(1) Makes or causes or procures to be made or aids in making or knowingly has possession of without authority from the Commissioners of Inland Revenue and without lawful excuse any mould or frame or other instrument having any words, figures, marks, or devices peculiar to the paper used by such commissioners for permits or with any part of such words etc. intended to imitate or pass for the same (l),

Making etc
instrument for copying marks etc used by Inland
Revenue
Commissioners

(2) Without such authority makes etc. any paper in the substance of which such words, figures etc. or any part of them intended to imitate and pass for the same are visible (m),

(f) See note (e), p. 744, ante

(g) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), s. 33, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(h) Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), s. 28.

(i) Ibid.

(j) Ibid., s. 28.

(k) Ibid., s. 28, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. See also Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), s. 168, which provides for a penalty of £100 for making false declarations or for counterfeiting any document required by the Act etc. This penalty is, it seems, recoverable summarily before justices (see ibid., s. 223, and Sched. C, Counts VI. to IX.).

(l) Excise Permit Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 16), s. 3, Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 21), s. 37. Wherever these words appear in the section, the burden of proving the excuse etc. is on the person accused (Excise Permit Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 16), s. 3).

(m) Excise Permit Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 16), s. 3.

SECT. 4
Forgery

Forging
Inland
Revenue
documents

(3) Without such authority knowingly has possession of without lawful excuse any such paper (n),

(4) Without such authority by any act, mystery, or contrivance causes or procures or assists in causing or procuring such words to appear visible in the substance of any paper (o),

(5) Not being duly authorised and appointed in that behalf, engraves, casts, cuts, makes or causes or procures to be engraved etc or aids in engraving etc any plate, type, or other thing in imitation of or to resemble any plate etc made by the direction of such commissioners for the purpose of marking or printing paper to be used for permits (p),

(6) Not being duly authorised etc knowingly has possession without lawful excuse of any such plate etc (q),

(7) Counterfeits or forges or causes or procures to be counterfeited etc or assists in counterfeiting etc any permit or part of a permit, or counterfeits any impression, stamp, mark, figure or device provided or appointed by such commissioners to be put on such permit (r),

(8) Utters, gives or makes use of any counterfeited etc permit knowing it or part of it is counterfeited etc or any permit with any such counterfeited impression etc knowing that the same is counterfeited (s),

(9) Knowingly or willingly accepts or receives any counterfeited etc permit or any permit with such counterfeited impression knowing that the same is counterfeited (t),

(10) Without lawful authority etc makes or causes to be made, or aids in making or knowingly has custody or possession of any paper in the substance of which appear any words etc peculiar to and appearing in the substance of any paper provided or used by such commissioners for receiving the impression of any die or any part of such words etc and intended to imitate or pass for the same or to any such paper used for excise licences (a),

(11) Causes or assists in causing any such words etc or any part of them intended to imitate and pass for the same to appear in the substance of any paper (b)

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for not more n) Excise Permit Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 16), s. 3

o) Ibid., s. 3

p) Ibid., s. 3, and see s. 2

q) Ibid., s. 3

r) Ibid., s. 4

s) Ibid.

t) Ibid. There are similar provisions as to forging etc certificates for retailers of spirits under the Inland Revenue Act, 1849 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 121), see ibid., s. 18. It is an offence to forge or counterfeit request notes for permits, or fraudulently to promise permits or to misapply them, the penalty for such an offence is £500, recoverable, it seems, by action (see Advocate-General v. Grant (1853), 15 Durl. (Ot. of Sess.) 980), the offence is not made indictable (Excise Permit Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 16), s. 13)

(a) Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 38), s. 14 (a); Revenue Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 46), s. 12

(b) Ibid., s. 14 (b). The provisions relating to the punishment of offences connected with stamp duties (including those relating to paper and implements used in the manufacture of paper) are applied to similar offences connected with postal orders (see Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 48), s. 60).

than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for any term not exceeding two years (c). SECT 4.
Forgery.

1463 Everyone is by statute (d) guilty of a misdemeanour who without lawful authority or excuse purchases or receives or knowingly has in his custody or possession any paper manufactured and provided by or under the direction of such commissioners for the purpose of being used for receiving the impression of any die before such paper shall have been duly stamped and issued for public use, or for the purpose of being used for excise licences, or any plate, die, dandy-roller, mould, or other implement peculiarly used in the manufacture of any such paper Purchasing etc paper manufactured etc by the Inland
Revenue
Commissioners.

The punishment for these offences is imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding two years (e)

1464 Every person is by statute guilty of a felony who does or causes or procures to be done or knowingly aids, abets, or assists in doing any of the following acts Forging dies etc

(1) Forges a die or stamp used by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue (f),

(2) Prints or makes an impression upon any material from a forged die (g),

(3) Fraudulently prints or makes an impression upon any material from a genuine die (h),

(4) Fraudulently cuts, tears, or in any way removes from any material any stamp with intent that any use should be made of such stamp or any part thereof (i),

(5) Fraudulently mutilates any stamp with intent that any use should be made of any part of such stamp (k),

(6) Fraudulently fixes upon any material or stamp any stamp or part of a stamp which, whether fraudulently or not, has been cut etc or removed from any other material or out of or from any other stamp (l),

(c) Excise Permit Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will 4, c 16), ss 3, 4, Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 38), s 14, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 As to possession of forged stamps, see the Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 38), s 18 (1) As to search warrants by Inland Revenue Commissioners for such stamps, see ibid, s. 18 (2) This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(d) Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 38), s 15, Revenue Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict c 46), s 12 As to paper used for postal orders, see Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 48), s 60

(e) Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 38), s 15 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(f) Ibid, s 13 (1) "Die" includes any plate, type, tool or implement whatever used under the direction of the Inland Revenue Commissioners for expressing or denoting any duty or rate of duty, or the fact that any duty or rate of duty or penalty has been paid, or that an instrument is duly stamped or is not chargeable with any duty, or for denoting any fee, and also part of any such plate etc (ibid, s 27) "Stamp" means as well a stamp impressed by means of a die as an adhesive stamp for denoting any duty or fee (ibid, s. 27)

(g) Ibid, s. 13 (2)

(h) Ibid, s. 13 (3)

(i) Ibid, s 13 (4), see R v Field (1785), 1 Leach, 383

(k) Ibid, s 13 (5)

(l) Ibid, s 13 (6), see R v Smith (1831), 1 Mood C C 314

SECT. 4

Forgery.

(7) Fraudulently erases or otherwise really or apparently removes from any stamped material any name, sum, date, or other matter thereon written with the intent that any use should be made of the stamp upon such material (m),

(8) Knowingly sells or exposes for sale or utters or uses any forged stamp, or any stamp which has been fraudulently printed or impressed from a genuine die (n),

(9) Knowingly and without lawful excuse has in his possession any forged die or stamp, or any stamp which has been fraudulently printed etc from a genuine die, or any stamp or part of a stamp which has been fraudulently cut etc or fraudulently mutilated, or any stamped material out of which any name etc has been fraudulently erased or otherwise either really or apparently removed (o)

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, and imprisonment with or without hard labour for any term not exceeding two years (p)

Forging
certificate of redemption of land tax etc

1465 Anyone is by statute guilty of felony who —

(1) Forges, counterfeits, or alters, or causes or procures to be forged etc, or knowingly or wilfully assists in forging any contract, assignment, certificate, receipt, or attested copy of any certificate made out or purported to be made out by any person authorised by any Act of Parliament touching the redemption or sale of the land tax or of any part thereof (q),

(2) Forges etc or causes to be forged etc, or knowingly and wilfully assists in forging etc any register of the birth or baptism or death or burial of any person to be appointed a nominee under the Government Annuities Act, 1829 (r), or any copy or certificate of such register, or the name of any witness to any such certificate, or any affidavit or affirmation required to be taken for any of the purposes of that Act, or any certificate of any justice etc of any such affidavit etc having been taken before him, or any certificate of any person authorised by the Act to grant any certificate of the life or death of any nominee (s),

(3) Forges etc or causes to be forged etc, or knowingly or wilfully assists in forging etc any declaration, warrant, order, or

(m) Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 38), s. 13 (7), see R v Alliday (1837), 8 O & P 136

(n) Ibid., s. 13 (8) As to uttering, see R v Collicott (1812), Russ. & Ry 212

(o) Ibid., s. 13 (9) As to lawful excuse, see Dickins v Gull, [1896] 2 Q. B. 310.

(p) Ibid., s. 13 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. There are similar provisions as to the forging of stamps etc. in the Local Stamp Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 49), but under that Act the maximum period of penal servitude is five years (ibid., s. 8), but see Statute Law Revision (No. 2) Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 64). There are other offences relating to stamps not indictable, but punishable by a fine (see Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 38), ss. 20, 21). As to the making etc. of fictitious stamps in imitation of those used by the Post Office, see Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 48), ss. 64, 65.

(q) Land Tax Certificates Forgery Act, 1812 (52 Geo. 3, c. 143), s. 6.

(r) 10 Geo. 4, c. 24.

(s) Ibid., s. 41

other instrument, or any affidavit or declaration required to be made under the Government Annuities Act, 1832 (t), or by the National Debt Commissioners, or under any of the provisions of that Act, or under any authority given them for that purpose (a);

SECT. 4.
Forgery.

(4) Forges etc or causes to be forged etc, or knowingly or wilfully assists in forging etc. any certificate or order of such commissioners, or of any cashier or clerk of the Bank of England, or the name of any person in any transfer of any annuity, or in any certificate, order, warrant, or other instrument for the payment of money for the purchase of any annuity under the provisions of either of the two last-mentioned Acts, or in any transfer or acceptance of such annuity in the books of such commissioners, or in any receipt or discharge for such annuity, or for any payment due or to become due thereon, or in any letter of attorney or other authority or instrument to authorise such transfer etc (b),

(5) Wilfully, falsely, and deceitfully personates any true and real nominee or nominees, or wilfully utters or delivers or produces to any person acting under either of the two last-mentioned Acts any forged register or copy of register of any birth, baptism or marriage, or any forged etc declaration, affidavit or affirmation, or with knowledge that it is forged etc, with intent to defraud the King or any person (c)

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (d)

1466 Anyone is by statute (c) guilty of felony who —

(1) Knowingly and wilfully forges or counterfeits, or assists in forging etc the name or handwriting of the Commissioners of the Treasury, or any of them, to any power of attorney for the sale or transfer of stock, or of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, to any draft, instrument, or writing for the purpose of obtaining any money in the hands of the Bank of England or of Ireland, or of any private banker, on account of such commissioners (e),

Forging
name of Commissioners of
Treasury to any power of attorney etc

(2) Forges etc or causes to be forged etc, or knowingly and wilfully assists in forging etc any draft, instrument, or writing in form of a draft made by such Commissioners (f),

(3) Utters or publishes any such draft etc with intent to defraud either of the said banks, or any private banker, or any other person (g)

(t) 2 & 3 Will 4, c 59

(a) Ibid, s 19

• (b) Government Annuities Act, 1829 (10 Geo 4, c 24), s 41, Government Annuities Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will 4, c 59), s 19

(c) Ibid.

(d) Land Tax Certificates Forgery Act, 1812 (52 Geo 3, c 143), s 6 There are similar provisions as to the Commissioners of Customs (Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 28, Government Annuities Act, 1829 (10 Geo 4, c 24), s 41, Government Annuities Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will 4, c 59), Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 48, Penal Servitude Act, 1861 (34 & 35 Vict c 69), s 1) These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

(e) Crown Lands Act, 1829 (10 Geo 4, c 50), s 124

(f) Ibid, s 124.

(g) Ibid

SECT 4
Forgery

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for not more than seven or less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (h)

Forging
naval certificates.

1467. Every person is by statute (i) guilty of a misdemeanour who —

(1) Fraudulently counterfeits any certificate of service in the King's navy or any instrument purporting to be a protection from such service (i),

(2) Fraudulently utters or publishes any such forged certificate or instrument knowing it is forged (h),

(3) Fraudulently alters any such certificate or protection duly given (l),

(4) Forges or fraudulently alters any extract from a baptismal register, or knowingly utters any false extract from such register, or any false affidavit, certificate, or document in order to obtain from the Admiralty a protection from the King's naval service for himself or any other person (m),

(5) Being in possession of a protection lends, sells, or disposes thereof to any other person in order fraudulently to enable such other person to make an unlawful use of it (n),

(6) Produces, utters, or makes use of as a protection for himself a protection issued for any other person (o)

The punishment for these offences is imprisonment without hard labour, or fine, or both (p)

(ix) Forgery with relation to Pensions etc

Uttering false affidavit to obtain pension

1468 Every person is by statute (q) guilty of a misdemeanour who in order to sustain any claim to any pay, wage, allotment, prize money, bounty money, grant, or other allowance in the nature thereof, half pay, pension, or allowance from the Compassionate Fund of the Navy, or other money payable by the Admiralty, or to any effects or money in charge of the Admiralty, or in order to procure any person to be admitted a pensioner as the widow of an officer of the navy—

(1) Offers or utters to any person in the service of the Crown or of the Admiralty any false affidavit with knowledge that it is false,

(2) Makes or subscribes, or offers or utters, to any such person any false written petition, application, statement, answer, certificate, or voucher, or other false writing, with knowledge that it is false (q).

(A) Crown Lands Act, 1829 (10 Geo 4, c 50), s 124, Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo 4, c 28), s 8, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(i) Naval Enlistment Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will 4, c. 24), s 3

(k) Ibid

(l) Ibid

(m) Ibid

(n) Ibid

(o) Ibid

(p) Ibid Quere whether hard labour could not be awarded in these cases as for a common law cheat (see Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), s 29 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(q) Admiralty Powers, etc Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict c. 124), s 6, ss 40—42

SECT 4.
Forgery.

The punishment for these offences on indictment is penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, or on summary conviction imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than six months (r).

1469. Every person is by statute (s) guilty of felony who —

Forging name
of officer etc.
entitled to pension etc

(1) Forges or counterfeits, or alters, or causes or procures to be forged, or knowingly and willingly assists in forging etc the name of any officer, non-commissioned officer, soldier, or other person entitled or supposed to be entitled to any pension, wages, pay, grant, share, allowance of money, bounty money, prize money, or relief due or payable or supposed to be due etc for or on account of any service done or supposed to be done by any such officer etc in the King's army or other military service, or the name of any officer, under officer, clerk or servant of the Commissioners of Chelsea Hospital, or of any officer or person in any way concerned in the paying or ordering, directing or causing the payment of the said pension etc (v),

(2) Forges etc any letter of attorney, bill, ticket, order, certificate, voucher, receipt, will, or any other power, instrument, warrant, document, or authority whatsoever relating to or anywise concerning the payment or obtaining or claiming any such pension etc (t),

(3) Utters or publishes as true or knowingly and willingly assists in uttering etc any such letter of attorney etc with intent to obtain the payment of any such pension etc or with intent to defraud any person (a)

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (b).

1470 Every person is by statute (c) guilty of felon who —

Forging
minutes etc.
relating to payment of pension

(1) Forges, counterfeits, or alters, or causes or procures to be forged etc, or knowingly and willingly assists in forging etc any minute, copy of minute, assignment of pension, superannuation, or other allowance granted under the Pensions Act, 1839 (c), or any order, certificate, receipt, document, or authority, whatsoever, relating to the payment of any such pension etc (d),

(2) Utters or publishes as true or knowingly etc assists in 50—53 of the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), are incorporated with this Act (ibid, s 7).

(r) Ibid, s 6 These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

(a) Chelsea and Kumainham Hospitals Act, 1826 (7 Geo 4, c 16), s 35, Army Prize Money Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will 4, c 53), s 49 It is not necessary that the pension etc should be actually existing (R v Pringle (1840), 2 Mood C C 127)

(t) Ibid

(v) Ibid

(b) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(c) 2 & 3 Vict c. 51, s 9

(d) Ibid, s 9

SECT 4
Forgery

uttering etc with knowledge that it is forged etc any such minute etc, or the name of any pensioner, justice of the peace, guardian, parish or other officer, or any other person authorised or supposed or purporting to be authorised to sign any such minute etc., with intent to obtain or enable any other person to obtain the payment of any such pension etc (e).

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for not more than seven or less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (f)

Forging
seaman's pension papers.

1471. Every person is by statute (g) guilty of a misdemeanour who, for the purpose of obtaining either for himself or for another any pension, payment, or relief from the Merchant Seamen's Fund,

(1) Fraudulently forges or alters, or procures to be forged etc, or assists in forging etc any certificate or other document purporting to show or assist in showing a right to any such pension etc (g),

(2) Fraudulently makes use of any forged etc certificate etc or any certificate etc not belonging to him (h)

The punishment for these offences on indictment is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, or, on summary conviction, imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than six months (i)

(x) Documents under Merchant Shipping Act, 1894

Forging
documents
mentioned in the Merchant Shipping Act,
1894.

1472 Every person is by statute (k) guilty of a felony who —

(1) Forges, or fraudulently alters, or assists in forging etc or procures to be forged etc any of the following documents referred to in the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (k) register code (l), builder's certificate (m), surveyor's certificate (n), certificate of registry (o), declaration (p), bill of sale (q), instrument of mortgage (r), or certificate of mortgage or sale (s), or any entry or endorsement required by Part I of that Act (t) to be made in or on any of these documents (u);

(2) Forges the seal, stamp, or signature of any document to which section 695 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (x), applies,

(e) Pensions Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict c 51), s 9

(f) Ibid Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo 4, c 28), s 8 Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(g) Seamen's Fund Winding-up Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 102), s 55

(h) Ibid

(i) Ibid Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c. 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(k) 57 & 58 Vict c 60.

(l) Ibid., s 5

(m) Ibid., s 10

(n) Ibid., s 6.

(o) Ibid., s 14

(p) Ibid., ss 9, 25, 27, 38.

(q) Ibid., s 24

(r) Ibid., s 31.

(s) Ibid., s 39

(t) Ibid., ss 19, 49

(u) Ibid., ss 60, 66

(x) Merchant Shipping Act 1894 (57 & 58, Vict c 60), ss 66 and 695 (4)

(3) Tenders in evidence any such document with a false etc. seal etc., with knowledge that it is false etc (a)

SECT. 4.
Forgery.

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, and imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour (b)

1473 Every person is by statute (c) guilty of a misdemeanour who for the purpose of obtaining either for himself or for any other person any money deposited in a seamen's savings bank or any interest thereon —

Forging document relating to deposit in seamen's savings bank

(1) Forges or fraudulently alters, assists in forging etc., or procures to be forged etc. any document purporting to show or assist in showing any right to any such money etc (c),

(2) Makes use of any document which has been so forged etc (d);

(3) For the purpose of obtaining either for himself or for any other person any property (e) of any deceased seaman or apprentice to the sea service, forges etc. or assists in forging etc., or procures to be forged etc. any document purporting to show etc. any right to such property (f);

(4) Makes use of any document so forged etc (g).

The punishment for these offences on indictment is penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years, or on summary conviction, imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than six months (h)

1474 Every person is by statute (i) guilty of a misdemeanour who

Forging, etc. certificate of discharge under Merchant Shipping Act, 1894

(1) Forges or fraudulently alters any certificate of discharge or report of character, or copy of a report of character given under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (i),

(2) Assists in committing or procures to be committed the last-mentioned offence (k),

(3) Fraudulently uses any certificate of discharge etc. which is forged etc. or does not belong to him (l),

(4) Fraudulently alters, makes any false entry in or delivers a false copy of an agreement with the crew of a British ship under the Act (m),

(5) Forges etc. or assists in forging etc. any certificate of competency or an official copy of such certificate (n),

Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo 4, c 28), s 8, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

(a) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), ss 50, 60

(b) Ibid, ss 66 and 695 (4), Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo 4, c 28), s 8, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

(c) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 154.

(d) Ibid

(e) As to definition of property, see ibid, s. 676

(f) Ibid, s 180

(g) Ibid

(h) Ibid, ss 154 and 180, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69)

s. 1 These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

(i) 57 & 58 Vict c 60, see s. 130 (b) See R. v. Wilson (1858), Deane & B. 558

(k) Ibid, s 130 (c).

(l) Ibid, s 130 (d)

(m) Ibid, s 121

(n) Ibid, s 104 (a).

SECT 4
Forgery.

(6) Fraudulently uses a certificate etc which has been forged etc , cancelled, or suspended, or to which he is not entitled (o),

(7) Forges, assists in forging, procures to be forged, fraudulently alters, assists in fraudulently altering, or procures to be fraudulently altered, any declaration of survey or passenger steamer's certificate, or anything contained in or any signature to such declaration (p),

(8) In any proceedings under Part IX of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (q), in relation to salvage by the King's ships, forges etc any document (r);

(9) In any such proceedings puts off or makes use of any forged etc document knowing that it is forged etc (r),

(10) Being an officer to whose custody an original document is intrusted, wilfully certifies any document as being a true copy or extract knowing the same not to be a true copy or extract (s),

(11) Forges or fraudulently alters or assists in forging etc any document in support of an application for wages under s 197 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (t),

(12) Presents or makes use of any document so forged etc ,

(13) Forges, assists in forging, or procures to be forged, the seal or any other distinguishing mark of the Board of Trade or any form issued by the Board of Trade under the Act (u),

(14) Fraudulently alters any such form (a)

For these offences the punishment on indictment is imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years, except in the case of the offence No 10, in respect of which the maximum punishment is imprisonment for eighteen months (b)

Forging signature of sea fishery officer.

1475 Everyone is by statute (c) guilty of a misdemeanour who —

(1) Forges the signature of a sea-fishery officer to a document drawn up in pursuance of the first schedule to the Sea Fisheries Act, 1883,

(2) Makes use of such signature knowing that it is forged etc

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years on indictment, and for not more than three months on summary conviction (d).

(x1) Transfers of Stock etc

Forging transfer of stock etc.

1476 Everyone is by statute (e) guilty of felony who with intent to defraud —

(1) Forges or alters or utters etc with knowledge that it is (o) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 104 (c).

(p) Ibid, s 282

(q) 57 & 58 Vict c 60

(r) Ibid, s 564, and see p 560, ante

(s) Ibid, s 695 (3)

(t) Ibid, s. 197 (8)

(u) Ibid, s 722

(b) Ibid, ss 130, 104, 282, 564, 680, 695 (3) These offences are not triable at quarter sessions. On summary conviction, the punishment for any such offence is imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than six months or a fine not exceeding £100 (ibid)

(c) 46 & 47 Vict c 22, see ibid, s, 47

(d) Ibid, s 17 (4) This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(e) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 98), ss 2, 5, 7, Forgery Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c 58), ss. 3—6

SECT 4.
Forgery.

forged etc any transfer of any share or interest in any stock, annuity, or other public fund transferable at the Bank of England or Ireland, or in the capital stock of any body corporate, company, or society established by charter or by, under, or in virtue of any Act of Parliament (f);

(2) Forges etc or alters etc with knowledge that it is forged etc any power of attorney or other authority to transfer any share etc of or in any such stock etc or to receive any dividend or money payable in respect of any such share or interest (g),

(3) Demands or endeavours to have any such share or interest transferred or to receive any dividend or money payable in respect thereof by virtue of any such forged or altered power of attorney etc with knowledge that it is forged etc (h),

(4) Forges etc or utters etc with knowledge that it is forged etc any stock certificate or coupon or document purporting to be a certificate etc issued in pursuance of Part V of the National Debt Act, 1870 (i), or of any former Act or any India or colonial stock certificate etc, or any document purporting to be such certificate etc, or any bond, debenture or security commonly called an East India bond, or any bond etc issued or made under the authority of any Act passed or to be passed relating to the East Indies, or any indorsement on or assignment of such bond etc (k),

(5) Demands or endeavours to obtain or receive any share or interest of or in any stock as defined by the National Debt Act, 1870 (i), or of or in India or colonial stock, or to receive any dividend or money payable in respect thereof by virtue of any such forged etc certificate etc with knowledge that it is forged etc (l),

(6) Forges etc or utters etc with knowledge that it is forged etc any certificate or duplicate certificate required by Part VI of the National Debt Act, 1870 (i), or by any former like Act (m),

(7) Wilfully makes any false entry in or wilfully alters any word or figure in any of the books of accounts kept by the Bank of England or of Ireland in which the accounts of the owners of any stock, annuities or other public funds transferable at such bank are entered and kept (n),

(8) Wilfully falsifies any of the accounts of any such owner in any of such books (o), (f) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c. 98), s. 2. "Capital stock of a body corporate" includes consolidated stock created under the Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 102) (see ibid, s. 19, see now Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 40), debenture stock under the Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83) (see ibid), and colonial stock issued under the Colonial Stock Acts, 1877-1900 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 59, 55 & 56 Vict. c. 35, 63 & 64 Vict. c. 62) (see Colonial Stock Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 59), s. 21).

(g) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), s. 2.

(h) Ibid.

(i) 33 & 34 Vict. c. 71.

(k) Forgery Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 58), s. 3, Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), s. 7, India Stock Certificate Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 73), s. 13; Colonial Stock Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 59), s. 21.

(l) Ibid.

(m) Forgery Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 58), s. 6.

(n) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), s. 5.

(o) Ibid, s. 5.

SECT. 4
Forgery

(9) Wilfully makes any transfer of any share etc. of or in any such stock etc. in the name of any person not being the true and lawful owner of such shares etc (p),

(10) Forges etc. or utters etc with knowledge that it is forged etc any share warrant or coupon, or document purporting to be a share warrant etc issued in pursuance of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (q),

(11) By means of any such forged etc share warrant etc demands or endeavours to obtain or receive any share or interest in any company under the last-mentioned Act, or to receive any dividend or money payable in respect thereof by virtue of any such forged etc share warrant etc with knowledge that the same is forged etc (r)

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years (s)

Engraving
stock
certificate etc

1477 Everyone is by statute guilty of felony (t) who without lawful authority or excuse (u) —

(1) Engraves or makes on any plate, wood, stone, or other material any stock certificate or coupon purporting to be a stock certificate or coupon issued in pursuance of Part V of the National Debt Act,

(p) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 5
8 Edw 7, c 69, see s 38

Ibid, s 38

Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), ss 2, 5, 7; Forgery Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c 58), ss 3, 6, India Stock Certificate Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict c 73), s 13, Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict c 102), s 19, Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 83), Colonial Stock Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict c 59), s 21, Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 69), s 38, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 These offences are not triable at quarter sessions The forging or altering of a certificate required by the India Stock Transfer Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict c 7), or the uttering etc such certificate with knowledge that it is forged etc, or the forging of any name, handwriting, or signature, purporting to be the name etc of a witness attesting the execution of any power of attorney, or other authority to transfer any share or interest of or in any stock to which ss 2 and 3 of the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), apply, or to utter etc such name etc with knowledge that it is forged, is a felony punishable with penal servitude for not more than seven or less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years (India Stock Transfer Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict c 7), s 14, Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 4) To make a false entry in or to alter any of the books for transfer of consolidated stock created by the Metropolitan Board of Works or by the London County Council, or to falsify any of such books or to make any transfer of such stock in the name of any person who is not the true owner, is a felony punishable in the same way as the last-mentioned felonies, except that the maximum period of penal servitude is fourteen years (Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict c 102), s 20, Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 41), s 40, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1) The last-named offences are not triable at quarter sessions As to the forgery of debentures, see p. 733, ante, and the fraudulent personation of the owners of stock etc. see p. 706, ante

(t) Forgery Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c 58), s 5, Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 69), s 38

(u) The onus of proof of such authority or excuse in each case lies on the party accused (Forgery Act 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c 58), s 5, Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c 69), s 38)

SECT. 4.
Forgery.

1870 (a), or to be such a stock certificate or coupon in blank, or to be a part of such a stock certificate or coupon, or share warrant or coupon as aforesaid (b) ;

(2) Uses any such plate etc. for the making or printing of any such stock certificate etc. (c) ,

(3) Knowingly has in his custody or possession any such plate etc. (d) ,

(4) Knowingly utters etc , or has in his custody or possession any paper on which any such blank stock certificate or coupon, or part of any such stock certificate or coupon as aforesaid, is made or printed (e) ,

(5) Engraves or makes on any plate etc. any share warrant or coupon purporting to be a share warrant or coupon issued or made by any particular company in pursuance of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (f) , or to be a blank share warrant or coupon so issued or made, or to be part of such share warrant or coupon (g) ,

(6) Uses any such plates etc for making or printing any such share warrant etc (h) ,

(7) Knowingly has in his custody or possession any such plate etc

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for not more than fourteen years nor less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years (i)

1478 Every person is by statute guilty of felony who with intent to defraud —

Fraudulently making out dividend
warrant etc

(1) Being a clerk, officer, or servant of, or other person employed or intrusted by, the Bank of England or of Ireland, knowingly makes out or delivers any dividend warrant, or warrant for payment of any annuity, interest, or money payable at the Bank of England or of Ireland for a greater or less amount than the person on whose behalf such warrant shall be made out is entitled to (k) ,

(2) Being a clerk etc employed by the London County Council or the person or body corporate who keeps the books of transfer of consolidated stock created by the Metropolitan Board of Works or the London County Council, makes out or delivers any stock certificate, dividend warrant, or document for the payment of money with relation to such stock for a greater or less amount than the person on whose behalf such certificate is made out is entitled to (l).

(a) 33 & 34 Vict c 71

(b) Forgery Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 58), s. 5, Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c. 69), s. 38

(c) Ibid

(d) Ibid.

(e) Ibid

(f) 8 Edw 7, c. 69

(g) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), s. 38 (2)

(h) Ibid.

(i) Forgery Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 58), s. 5, Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw 7, c. 69), s. 38 (2), Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c. 69), s. 1 These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

(k) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), s. 6

(l) Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. s. 102), s. 21, Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c 41), s. 40

SECT 4

Forgery.

The punishment for any such offence is penal servitude for seven years or for any period not less than three years, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour (m).

Inserting false entry of number of shares in banking company in any contract for sale of shares etc

1479 Every person is by statute (n) guilty of a misdemeanour who in any contract, agreement, or token for the sale or transfer of any share or stock in any joint stock banking company in the United Kingdom, constituted under or regulated by the provisions of any Act of Parliament, royal charter, or letters patent, issuing shares or stock transferable by any deed or written instrument, wilfully inserts any false entry of the number of such shares or any name other than that of the person in whose name such shares etc stand in the register or book of such company.

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment without hard labour, or fine, or both (o)

(xii) Hall Marks on Plate.

Forging dies for stamping
gold or silver plate etc.

1480 Every person is by statute (p) guilty of felony who —

(1) Forges or counterfeits or utters, knowing it to be forged etc, any die or other instrument or part of such die etc provided and used by the Goldsmiths' Company in London, or the Goldsmiths' Companies in York, Exeter, Bristol, Chester, Norwich, or Newcastle-upon-Tyne, or the companies of guardians of the standard of wrought-plate in Sheffield or Birmingham for the marking or stamping of gold or silver wares (p),

(2) Marks with such forged etc die etc any ware of gold or silver or of base metal (p),

(3) Utters any such ware of gold or silver or of base metal marked with such forged etc die etc with knowledge that it was so marked (p),

(4) Forges etc or by any means produces an imitation of or utters, knowing that it is forged etc, any mark or part of any mark of any such die etc upon any ware of gold or silver or base metal (q),

(5) Transposes or removes or utters, knowing it is transposed etc, any mark of any such die etc from any ware of gold or silver to any ware of base metal (q),

(6) Has in his possession without lawful excuse any such forged etc die etc or any ware of gold etc having the mark of any such forged etc die, or any such forged etc mark or imitation of a mark or having a mark which has been transposed etc (q),

(7) Cuts or severs from any ware of gold etc any mark or part of mark of any such die with intent that such mark etc

(m) Forgery Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 98), s 6, Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 102), s 21, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c 68), s 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(n) Banking Companies' (Shares) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c 29), s 1. The Act does not extend to the Bank of England or of Ireland.

(o) Ibid. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(p) Gold and Silver Wares Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 22), s 2.

(q) Ibid.

SECT 4
Forgery.

may be placed upon or joined or affixed to any other ware of gold or silver or any ware of base metal (r),

(8) Places upon or joins or affixes to any ware of gold or silver or base metal any mark of any such die etc. cut or severed from any ware of gold or silver (r),

(9) With intent to defraud the King or any of the before-mentioned companies, uses any genuine die etc., or counsels, aids, or abets such offence (r)

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for not more than fourteen years nor less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years (s).

(XIII) Trade Marks etc

1481 Every person is by statute (t) guilty of a misdemeanour who — Forging trade marks etc.

(1) Forges any trade mark (t),

(2) Falsely applies to goods any trade mark or any mark so nearly resembling a trade mark as to be calculated to deceive (t),

(3) Makes any die, block, machine, or other instrument for the purpose of forging or of being used for forging a trade mark (t),

(4) Applies any false trade description to goods (a),

(5) Disposes of or has in his possession any die, block, machine, or other instrument for the purpose of forging a trade mark (b),

(6) Causes any of the things above mentioned to be done (c),

(7) Sells or exposes for sale or has in his possession for sale or for any purpose of trade or manufacture any goods or things to which any false trade mark or false trade description is applied or to which any trade marks or mark so nearly resembling a trade mark as to be calculated to deceive is falsely applied, unless the defendant proves that having taken all reasonable precautions against

(t) Gold and Silver Wares Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict c 22), s 2
(s) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 6) s 1 Except as regards the last mentioned offence, an intent to defraud is not a necessary ingredient of the offence (R v Spittle (1902), 18 T L R 436, see R v Ogden (1834), 6 C & P 631) There are similar provisions in the Plate Assay (Sheffield and Birmingham) Act, 1772 (13 Geo 3, c 52), s 14 These offences are not triable at quarter sessions

(t) Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28) s 2 As to meaning of trade mark, see title TRADE MARKS AND DESIGN

(a) Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict c 28), s 2 (d) "Trade description" means any description, statement, or other indication, direct or indirect, as to (a) the number, quantity, measure, gauge, or weight of any goods, (b) the place or county where any goods were made or produced, (c) mode of manufacturing or producing any goods, (d) the material of which the goods are composed, (e) any goods, being the subject of an existing patent, privilege, or copyright, and the use of any figure or mark which, according to the custom of the trade, is commonly taken to be an indication of any of the above matters "False trade description" means a trade description which is false in a material respect as regards the goods to which it is applied, and includes every alteration of a trade description, whether by way of addition, effacement, or otherwise, when that alteration makes the description false in a material respect, the fact that a trade description is a trade mark or a part of a trade mark does not prevent such trade mark being a false description (ibid, s 3)

(b) Ibid, s 2 (e)

(c) Ibid, s 2 (f) In all the above-mentioned cases the onus of disproving intent to defraud is on the defendant (see ibid, s 2)

SECT. 4
Forgery

committing an offence against the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (d), he had at the time of the commission of the alleged offence no reason to suspect the genuineness of the trade mark, mark, or trade description, and gave all the information in his power with regard to the persons from whom he obtained such goods etc., or that otherwise he acted innocently (e)

The punishment for these offences on indictment is imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years, or fine, or both (f)

(xiv) Miscellaneous Instruments

Forging
certificate of valuation
under Slave Trade Act,
1824 etc.

1482 Every person is by statute guilty of felony who —

(1) Wilfully and fraudulently forges or counterfeits any certificate, certificate of valuation, sentence, or decree of condemnation or restitution, copy of such sentence etc., or any receipt required by the Slave Trade Act, 1824 (g), or any part of such certificate etc (h),

(2) Knowingly etc utters or publishes such certificate etc with knowledge that it is forged etc with intent to defraud the King or any other person (i)

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years (j)

Forging
warranty for the purposes of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act,
1875

1483 Every person is guilty of a misdemeanour who forges, or for the purposes of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (k), utters, knowing it to be forged, any certificate or any writing purporting to contain a warranty (l)

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (m)

Forging
licence under
London
Hackney
Carriage A t,
1843, etc

1484 Every person is by statute (n) guilty of a misdemeanour who —

(1) Forges or counterfeits, or causes or procures to be forged etc any licence or ticket directed by the London Hackney Carriages Act, 1843 (n), to be provided for the driver of a hackney carriage or for the driver or conductor of a metropolitan stage carriage (o),

(d) 50 & 51 Vict c 28

(e) Ibid, s. 2(2)

(f) Ibid, s. 2(3). These offences are triable at quarter sessions. On summary conviction the punishment is imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than four months for a first offence and six months for a second offence, or a fine not exceeding £20 for a first offence or £50 for a second offence. In any case the defendant forfeits to the King every chattel, article, instrument, or thing by means of or in relation to which the offence has been committed. See also p 586, ante, and title TRADE MARKS AND DESIGNS.

(g) 5 Geo 4, c 113

(h) Ibid, s 10

(i) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s. 1. These offences are not triable at quarter sessions —

(k) 38 & 39 Vict c. 63

(l) Ibid, s. 27

(m) Ibid. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. See also title FOOD AND DRUGS

(n) 6 & 7 Vict c 86

(o) Ibid, s. 23.

(2) Sells or exchanges or exposes to sale or utters any such forged etc licence etc (p),

(3) Knowingly and without lawful excuse has or is possessed of such forged etc licence or ticket knowing it is forged etc. (q),

(4) Knowingly and wilfully aids and abets any person in committing any of these offences (r)

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour, or fine, or both (s).

1485 Every person is by statute (t) guilty of a misdemeanour who —

Forging
licence under Explosives
Act, 1875, etc.

(1) Forges or counterfeits any licence, certificate, document, or plan granted or required in pursuance or for the purposes of the Explosives Act, 1875 (t),

(2) Gives or signs any such document or plan which is to his knowledge false in any material particular (u),

(3) Wilfully makes use of any such forged counterfeit or false licence etc. (a)

The punishment for these offences is imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years on indictment, and on summary conviction for not more than one month (b)

1486 Every person is by statute (c) guilty of a misdemeanour who —

Forging
statement
under Coal Mines
Regulation
Act, 1887, etc.

(1) Forges or counterfeits or knowingly makes any false statement in any certificate of competency under the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (c), or any certificate of service granted under that Act or any Act repealed by that Act (d), or any official copy of any such certificate (e),

(2) Knowingly utters or uses any such certificate or copy which has been forged or counterfeited or contains any false statement (f),

(3) For the purpose of obtaining for himself or any other person employment as a certificated manager or under-manager, or the grant, renewal, or restoration of any certificate under the Act, or a copy thereof, makes or gives any declaration, representation, statement, or evidence which is false in any particular, or knowingly utters, produces, or makes use of any such declaration etc or any document containing the same (g)

(p) London Hackney Carriages Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict c 86), s 20

(q) Ibid The onus of proving the lawful excuse is on the defendant (ibid)

(r) Ibid

(s) Ibid There is no limit as to the term of imprisonment (ibid, see p 410, ante). These offences are not triable at quarter sessions. Forging a mark identifying a motor car or a licence under the Motor Car Act, 1903 (1 Edw 7, c 36), is an offence punishable on summary conviction (see ibid, ss 5, 11). See also title STREET TRAFFIC

(t) 38 Vict c 17, ibid, s. 81

(u) Ibid.

(b) Ibid, ss 81, 91 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(c) 50 & 51 Vict c. 58

(d) See ibid, schedule, 4.

(e) Ibid, s 32 (1)

(f) Ibid, s 32 (2)

(g) Ibid, s 32 (3)

SECT 4
Forgery

Forging nomination
paper under Ballot Act, 1872.

The punishment for these offences is imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour (h).

‘ 1487 Everyone is by statute (i) guilty of a misdemeanour who forges or fraudulently defaces or destroys any nomination paper used for the purpose of the Ballot Act, 1872(i), or knowingly delivers such forged paper to the returning officer, or forges or fraudulently defaces or destroys any ballot paper or the official mark on any ballot paper used for the purpose of the same Act (k)

The punishment for such offence, if the offender is a returning officer or officer or clerk in attendance at a polling station, is imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour, or if the offender is any other person, imprisonment for not more than six months, with or without hard labour (l)

Forging
nomination papers under Municipal Corporations
Act, 1882

1488 Everyone is by statute (m) guilty of a misdemeanour who forges or fraudulently defaces or destroys any nomination paper used for the purpose of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (m), or knowingly delivers such forged paper to the town clerk, or attempts to commit any such offence (n)

The punishment for any such offence is imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour (o)

Forging
telegrams

1489 Everyone is by statute (p) guilty of a misdemeanour who forges, or wilfully and without due authority alters a telegram, or utters a telegram so forged or altered, or transmits by telegraph as a telegram, or utters as a telegram a message or communication which he knows to be not a telegram

The punishment for such offence on conviction on indictment is imprisonment for not more than twelve months, with or without hard labour (q)

Demanding
money etc
under forged instrument

1490 Every person is by statute guilty of a felony who with intent to defraud demands, receives, or obtains, or causes or procures to be

(h) Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1867 (50 & 51 Vict c 58), s 32 These offences are not triable at quarter sessions See also title MINES, MINERALS, AND QUARRIES

(i) 35 & 36 Vict c 33

(k) Ibid, s 3

(l) Ibid This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(m) 45 & 46 Vict c 50

(n) Ibid, s 74

(o) Ibid This offence is not triable at quarter sessions See also title ELECTIONS

(p) Post Office (Protection) Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict c 76), s 11 This offence may be committed without intent to defraud (ibid), “telegram” means a “written or printed message or communication, sent to or delivered at a post office, or the office of a telegraph company, for transmission by telegraph, or delivered by the Post Office or a telegraph company as a message or communication transmitted by telegraph” (s 11) A telegram has also been held to be an “instrument” within the meaning of the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 38, which makes it an offence to obtain money by means of a forged instrument (R v Riley, [1896] 1 Q. B 309, O C R)

(q) Ibid, s 11 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions On summary conviction the punishment is a fine of not more than £10 (ibid) See also titles TELEGRAMS AND TELEPHONES

SECT. 4.
Forgery.

delivered or paid to any person, or endeavours to receive or obtain or to cause or procure to be delivered or paid to any person any chattel, money, security for money, or other property whatsoever under, upon, or by virtue of any forged or altered instrument with knowledge that it is forged etc., or under etc any probate or letters of administration with knowledge that the will etc on which probate or letters of administration have been obtained is forged etc., or that such probate etc has been obtained by any false oath, affirmation, or felony (r)

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years (s)

SUB-SECT. 3—Indictment, Evidence and Punishment

1491 In an indictment for forging, altering, offering, uttering, disposing, or putting off any instrument, the instrument may be described by any name or designation by which it is usually known or by the purport thereof without setting out any copy or facsimile or otherwise describing it or its value Indictment

A similar description is sufficient in an indictment for engraving or making the whole or any part of any instrument matter or thing, or for using or having unlawful custody or possession of any plate or other material upon which the whole or any part of any instrument etc has been made etc (t)

It is usual in an indictment for forgery to allege the offence in one count as a forgery and in a second count as an uttering (a)

1492 In an indictment for forging, uttering etc., any instrument, when it is necessary to allege an intent to defraud, it is sufficient to allege that the person accused did the act charged with intent to Intent to defraud

(r) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 38, see R v Riley, [1896] 1 Q B 309, C C R, in which a "telegram" was held to be an instrument within the meaning of the section

(s) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(t) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), ss 42, 43

The necessity for setting out a copy of a forged instrument was first abolished by stat (1832) 2 & 3 Will 4, c 123, s 3, which was superseded by the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict c 100), ss 5, 6 of which are reproduced in the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), ss 42, 43 It seems that the indictment even now must state what the instrument is (see R v Wileor (1893), Russ & Ry 50, and see R v Hunter (1794), 2 Leach, 624, R v Berkett (1813), Russ & Ry 251, R v Hunter (1823), Russ & Ry 511)

(a) Most of the statutes which make uttering a separate offence describe the offence by the use of the words "offer, utter, dispose of and put off" An indictment for forgery may be in the following form — "The jurors for our lord the King upon their oaths present that John Jones on the — day of March in the year of Our Lord —, feloniously did forge a certain bill of exchange with intent thereby then to defraud against the form of statute in that case made and provided Second count And the jurors aforesaid upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said John Jones afterwards to wit on the day and year aforesaid feloniously did offer, utter, dispose of and put off a certain forged bill of exchange with intent thereby to defraud, he the said John Jones at the time he so offered, uttered, disposed of and put off the said last-mentioned bill of exchange as aforesaid well knowing the same to be forged against the form etc"

SECT 4 Forgery

Evidence.

defraud without alleging an intent to defraud any particular person (b).

1493 On the trial of such an indictment it is therefore only necessary to prove a general intent to defraud, it is not necessary to prove an intent to defraud any particular person or that any particular person was defrauded. It is essential to prove that the defendant forged or altered the whole or part of the instrument in question or made some material addition to such instrument (c). Such proof is given by calling witnesses to show that the part which is forged is in the handwriting of the defendant, this may be shown by the admission of the defendant himself (d), or by the evidence of persons acquainted with his handwriting, either from having seen him write or from corresponding with him (e), or by the evidence of experts who are not acquainted with his handwriting but who by comparing the alleged forgery with other writing proved at the trial to be that of the defendant's can say that the alleged forgery is his work. Evidence must be given to show who was the person whose signature or writing is forged, and to show either that there is no such person (f) or, if there is such a person, that he did not write the alleged signature or writing (g).

It is not necessary to call the person whose signature or writing is forged, or to show that there was no authority to use his name, it is sufficient to prove that the alleged forgery was not in the handwriting of such person (h).

Production of forged document.

The forged document must, if it is possible, be produced at the trial. If the document is in the prisoner's possession, it may be obtained by means of a search warrant in cases in which a search warrant can be issued (i). If possession of a forged document has been traced to the defendant and the prosecution are unable to obtain possession of it, a notice to produce the document should be

(b) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 44. As to the law before the statute see R v Fowler (1872), 12 Cox, C C 235. In an indictment under the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98) s 28, where the intent to defraud does not appear in the definition of the offence, it seems that the common law definition of forgery must be imported into the section and that an intent to defraud must be alleged.

(c) Waldridge v Kennison (1794), 1 Esp 143. See, 249, note (p), ante.

(d) Hurr v Harper (1816), Holt (N P), 420, Willman v Worrall (1838), 8 O & P 380, Warner v Anderson (1839), 8 Scott, 384, Lewis v Sapio (1827), Mood & M 89, Gould v Jones (1762), 1 Wm Bl 384, R v Slaney (1832), 5 O & P 213.

(e) See Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict c 18), s 8, R v Silverlock, [1891] 2 Q B 766, O C R, see R v Williams (1838), 8 O & P 434. It is for the judge to decide whether a person tendered as a witness is qualified as an expert (R v Silverlock, supra, R v Wilbass (1863), 9 Cox, C. O 448, R v Harvey (1869), 11 Cox, C C 546).

(f) See R v Backler (1831), 5 O. & P 118, R v King (1832), 5 O & P 123, R v Brannan (1834), 6 O & P 326.

(g) R v Sponsanby (1784), 1 Leach, 332, R v Downes (1789), 1 Leach, 344, n.

(h) R v Hurley (1843), 2 Mood & R 473.

(i) See Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 98), s. 46. As to when search warrants may be issued, see p 309, ante.

SECT. 4
Forgery.

served on the defendant a reasonable time before the commencement of the sittings of the court at which he is tried, and, if such notice is duly served, and proof given of such service, the contents of the document can be proved by secondary evidence (k). If the document is proved to be lost (l), or if it is in the hands of a third person who, being served with a subpoena duces tecum refuses on the ground of privilege to produce it, secondary evidence of its contents may be given (m).

On an indictment for forging an instrument it is not necessary to prove any uttering (n).

1494 The offence of uttering a forged instrument is distinct from but connected with the act of forgery (o). Most of the statutes relating to forgery contain the words "offer, utter, dispose of, and put off," and these words cover the cases where a forged instrument is shown or produced, although not "uttered" in the strict sense of the word (a). Proof of uttering

(k) R v Hunter (1829), 4 C & P 128, R v Haworth (1830), 4 C & P 254
R v Fitzsimons (1870), 18 W R 763, C C R (Ir), see p 391, ante

(l) R v Hall (1872), 12 Cox, C C 159

(m) See p 391, ante

(n) See R v Croke (1731), 2 Stra 901, R v Gault (1700), 1 Ld Raym 737, R v Holden (1809), Russ & Ry 154, R v Mazagona (1815), Russ & Ry 291, R v Houston (1817), 2 Car & Kir 777, R v Nash (1852), 2 Den 493
R v Crowther (1832), 5 C & P 316. Quære whether it is not necessary that there must be a possibility of some person being defrauded by the forgery (R v Marius (1846), 2 Car & Kir 356). If a person is actually defrauded as the necessary consequence of the defendant's act, that is sufficient evidence of the intent (R v Trenfield (1858), 1 F & F 15), even although the person defrauded swears that he believed that the defendant had no intent to defraud (R v Sheppard (1810), Russ & Ry 169). If A B, knowing that a bill is forged, utters it to C D and means that C D should believe it to be genuine, the jury are bound to infer that A B did it with intent to defraud (R v Hall (1838), 2 Mood C C 30), even though A B's intention was to take up the bill and pay for it on maturity (R v Coole (1838), 8 C & P 562, R v Geach (1840), 9 C & P 499), or even if A B had a legal claim against the person defrauded to an amount equal to that obtained by the forgery (R v Wilson (1847), 1 Den 281). If a forged instrument is given by a defendant to his bankers, the fact that he has given guarantees to them to a larger amount than that of the instrument does not completely negative an intent to defraud, but the intent must be, notwithstanding such fact, left to the jury (R v James (1836), 7 C & P 55), and see R v Cooke, supra).

(o) 2 Last, P C 973

(a) To constitute an uttering the instrument must be parted with or tendered, or offered or used in some way to get money or credit upon it, i.e., by means of it (R v Ion (1852), 2 Den 475, at p 492). The mere showing of a forged bank note by a person with the intent of raising a false idea of the person's wealth, or the leaving it with another person to take care of, has been held not to constitute an uttering (R v Shukard (1811), Russ & Ry 200). To hand over a forged instrument as a pledge is an uttering (R v Birckett (1805), Russ & Ry 86). A conditional uttering is just as much a crime as any other uttering (R v Cooke (1838), 8 C & P 582). If A B, who owes money to C D, on being pressed by C D for payment produces to C D a forged receipt for the sum but refuses to part with the receipt, such a use of the receipt is either an offering or an uttering within the Forgery Act, 1830 (11 Geo 4 & 1 Will 4, c 66), s 10 (which is reproduced in ss 20 and 23 of the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98)) (R v Radford (1844), 1 Den 59). When proceedings were taken before justices against a pawnbroker to compel him to deliver goods which had been

SECT 4

Forgery.

In the case of uttering, evidence must be given to show that the instrument was forged, but, as in the case of forgery, it is not necessary to show by whom it was forged

The intent to defraud in the case of uttering is proved by evidence that the defendant uttered the forged document for the purpose of obtaining money or credit by means of it, and that at the time he so uttered it he knew that it was forged (b)

Knowledge that instrument was forged

Proof must be given that at the time when the defendant uttered the forged instrument he knew that it was forged. This proof can be given by evidence that the defendant on other occasions uttered or had possession of other forged instruments (c)

Punishment for statutory forgery not included in the Forgery Act, 1861

1495 Every person guilty of any forgery or offence connected therewith not included under the Forgery Act, 1861 (d), if made a felony by any Act in force at the date of the passing of that Act, and punishable before the Forgery Act, 1830 (e), with death, or any person aiding or abetting such offence, is punishable with penal servitude for life, or for any period not less than three years, or pledged with him, and the pawnbroker was defended by a solicitor, who, in his presence, produced and handed up to the justices a ticket and said that it was the ticket which had been returned on the delivery of the goods, it was held that this amounted to an uttering by the pawnbroker (R v Fitchie (1857), Deans & B 170). If an instrument is produced for some collateral purpose, and there is an intent to defraud, this amounts to an uttering, e.g., where E F, with the object of inducing G H to lend money to J K on the guarantee of E F, produced to G H for inspection by him forged receipts for the rates in respect of his house, it was held that this was an uttering within the Forgery Act 1830 (11 Geo 4 & 1 Will 4, c 66), s 10. If a forged instrument is posted in England in a letter addressed to a person abroad, the posting of the letter is an uttering of the instrument in England (R v Linkelstein (1886), 16 Cox, C C 107). If a person who produces a bill for the purpose of raising money, upon it makes false representations as to the circumstances, occupation etc. of the acceptor, this is evidence to justify a finding that the defendant uttered the name of the acceptor as the name of a fictitious person, although there was a person actually in existence and bearing the name of the acceptor (R v Nisbett (1853), 6 Cox, C C 320). If A with fraudulent intent hands a forged instrument to B in order that B may raise money by means of it, if B is an accomplice, A's act amounts to a disposing or putting away of the note, if B is an innocent agent, A is guilty of uttering (R v Palmer (1804), 1 Bos & P (N R) 96. R v Giles (1827), 1 Mood C C 167, as to principals and accessories see p 247, ante).

(b) See R v Hill (1838), 2 Mood C C 30.

(c) R v White (1804) 1 Bos & P (N R) 92, R v Hough (1806), Russ & Ry 120, R v Mallard (1813), Russ & Ry 245, R v Ball (1808), 1 Camp 324, R v Balls (1836) 1 Mood C C 470, R v Green (1852), 3 Oar & Kn 209, R v Forster (1855), Deans C C 456. R v Salt (1862), 3 F & F 834, R v Coldough (1882), 15 Cox, 92, C C R (Tr), this is the case even though such acts are the subject-matter of another indictment (R v Kirkwood (1830), 1 Low C C 103, R v Martin (1830), 1 Low C C 104, R v Aston (1838), 2 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed., 678, R v Lewis (1810), Archbold, Criminal Pleading, 8th ed., 365, but see R v Hodgson (1827), 1 Low C C 103, R v Thomas Smith (1827), 2 C & P 633. R v. Frederick Smith (1831) 4 C & P 411, Griffiths v Payne (1839), 11 Ad & Kl 131). As to evidence of what was said by the defendant respecting such other forged instruments, see R v Cooke (1838), 8 C & P 586, R v Brown (1861), 2 F & F 559.

(d) 24 & 25 Vict c 98.

(e) 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will 4, c 66.

with imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (f)

SECT 4

Forgery.

1496 There are a number of offences consisting of or arising out of forgery of particular instruments which are punishable on summary conviction only or for which penalties recoverable by action are imposed (g)

Summary
conviction

1497 The forging, altering, or uttering of any instrument (h) in England or Ireland which has been made an offence by the Forgery Act, 1861 (i), is none the less an offence by reason that such instrument may have been made or purport to have been made in any foreign country, or expressed in any foreign language, and the person committing such offence and any person aiding, abetting, or counselling him are punishable as if the instrument had been made in England or Ireland (k)

Foreign
document

1498 Where a felony has been committed under the Forgery Act, 1861 (l), the court may, in addition to the punishments authorised under that Act, require the offender to enter into his own recognisances and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace (m)

Alternative punishments
under Forgery Act,
1861

Where a misdemeanour has been committed under the same Act, the court may, in addition to, or in lieu of, the punishments authorised thereunder impose a fine, and require the prisoner to enter into his own recognisances and find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace (n)

(f) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 48, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. These offences are not triable at quarter sessions.

(g) See Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict c 49), s 32, Weights and Measures Act, 1904 (4 Edw 7 c 28) s 10, Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 36), s 168, Merchant Shipping Act, 1891 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 354, Borough Funds Act, 1903 (3 Edw 7, c 14), s 3, Sale of Gas Act, 1869 (22 & 23 Vict c 60), s 14, Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict c 66), ss 7, 8, Manufactured Tobacco Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict c 7), s 7, Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict c 58) s 121, Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict c 27), s 11, Pedlars Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict c 96), s 12, Pedlars Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict c 45), s 2, Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict c 93), ss 44, 49, Chimney Sweepers Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict c 70), s 19, Factory and Workshop Act 1901 (1 Edw 7, c 22), s 139, Seamen's and Soldiers' False Characters Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 6), s 1, Servants' Characters Act, 1792 (32 Geo 3, c 56), s 4.

(h) Writing or matter whatsoever (Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 40, (i) 24 & 25 Vict c 98

(k) Ibid, s 40, as to accessories and venue, see p 247, ante. A principal in the second degree or an accessory before the fact to a felony punishable under the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), is punishable in the same manner as the principal in the first degree. An accessory after the fact is punishable with imprisonment not exceeding two years with or without hard labour. A person aiding or abetting a misdemeanour under the same Act is punishable as a principal offender (ibid, s 49). As to principals and accessories in forgery, see R v Soares (1802) Russ & Ry 25, R v Davis (1806), Russ & Ry 113, R v Badenoch (1813) Russ & Ry 249, R v Morris (1814) Russ & Ry 270, R v Stewart (1818), Russ & Ry 363, R v Harris (1836), 7 C & P 416.

(l) 24 & 25 Vict c 98

(m) Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s 51

(n) Ibid. A justice of the peace has power to order search to be made for paper

SECT 5

Malicious
Damage to Property.*Malicious damage.*Malice.*SECT 5 —Malicious Damage to Property.*SUB-SECT 1 —Malice

1499 Under the provisions of various statutes (o) the unlawful and malicious destruction or injury to property has been made criminal

A man is said to do an act "maliciously," when he intended to do the very unlawful act with which he is charged, or if such act is the necessary consequence of some other criminal act in which he was engaged, or where the act charged was the probable result of the act contemplated by the defendant, who either foresaw or ought to have foreseen the consequence and yet persisted in the unlawful act in which he was engaged (p)

An act done out of mischief, without any formal design of injuring anyone, but wantonly or recklessly, may be malicious (q) Malice may be inferred from the commission of a reckless or cruel act, though the doer of the act may not have had the intention of causing injury (a)

or implements employed for the purpose of forgery, upon reasonable cause being shown for the belief that any person has unlawful possession thereof, and if such paper or implements are found, they may be destroyed or disposed of according to law (ibid, s 46)

(o) The most important and comprehensive of these statutes is the Malicious Damage Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97) The other statutes dealing with this subject are Dockyards etc Protection Act, 1772 (12 Geo 3, c 24) s 1, Railway Regulation Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict c 97), s 13, Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c 78), s 50, Drugging of Animals Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict c 13), s 1, Fisheries (Dynamite) Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict c 60), s 2, Monuments (Metropolis) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict c 29), s 4, Explosive Substances Act, 1882 (46 Vict c 3), ss 2, 3, Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c 60), s 60b

(p) Where a sailor entered a ship's spirit store for the purpose of stealing rum, and while tapping rum set fire to the spirit by a match which he held for the purpose of getting light, and the ship was destroyed by the fire, it was held that the sailor could not be convicted of unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to the ship (R v Faulkner (1877), 13 Cox, C C 550, C C R (Ir), R v Pemberton (1874), L R 2 C C R 119), and where a prisoner threw a stone, intending to strike a person, and thereby broke a window, it was held that he could not be convicted of unlawfully and maliciously breaking the window (see R v Tatmer (1886) 17 Q B D 359, C C R)

(q) Re Horrocks [1900] 2 F R 593 (where some boys broke into a room out of curiosity and did further damage in getting out, and it was held that they had acted wilfully and maliciously) R v Upton (1861), 5 Cox, C C 298 (where the defendants mischievously placed a stone between the points on a railway line to cause obstruction, and it was held that they were guilty of acting maliciously with intent to damage etc.) The placing on a railway line of an obstruction is "wilful" if it is done intentionally and with knowledge that the substance placed is likely to produce an obstruction, though not necessarily with a view to upsetting a train (R v Hulroyd (1841), 2 Mood & R 339) In R v Prestney (1849), 3 Cox, C C 505, damage done to a field by a poacher's dog was held not to be malicious injury

(a) R v Welch (1875), 13 Cox, C C 121, C C R On a charge of poisoning horses evidence of previous administration of poison to the same horses is receivable to show intent (R v Meggy (1830), 4 C & P 364) If a poisonous substance is mixed with the horses' food and given to them with the intent to improve the appearance of the horses, this is not an administering with intent to kill or injure (ibid) As to evidence of malice or intent, see R v Newbould

SECT. 8.
Malicious
Damage to
Property.

It is not a necessary ingredient of any of the offences under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (b), that the act charged should have been committed from malice conceived against the owner of the property in respect of which the offence is committed (c). Malice in its legal import does not mean spite or ill-will, but the wilful doing of an illegal act (d).

1500 In a prosecution under the Act for an offence of which an intent to injure or defraud is a necessary ingredient, it is not necessary to allege or to prove an intent to injure or defraud any particular person, it is sufficient to allege and to prove an intent to injure or defraud (e). Intent to injure.

1501 A person cannot be convicted of the offence of doing malicious injury to property if he is acting in the exercise of a legal right or if he is bonâ fide acting under a supposed right (f). If a servant bonâ fide acts in obedience to a master who claims a right, the servant cannot be said to act maliciously, even if the master claims a right which he knows does not exist. The servant in a case of this kind can only be criminally liable if the master was acting maliciously and if the servant knew that the master was so acting (g). If the accused has done more damage than he can Claim of right.

(1872), L R 1 C C R 314, R v Farrington (1811), Russ & Ry 207, R v Regan (1850), 4 Cox, C C 330, R v Dossat (1816), 2 Cox, C C 243, R v Harris (1864), 4 F & F 342, R v Taylor (1851), 5 Cox, C C 138, R v Bailey (1847), 2 Cox, C C 311, R v Gray (1866), 4 F & F 1102, R v Grant (1865), 4 F & F 322, R v Heseltine (1873), 12 Cox, C C 404.

(b) 24 & 25 Vict c 97.

(c) Ibid, s 58. And see R v Philp (1830), 1 Mood C C 263, R v Newill (1836), 1 Mood C C 458, R v Davies (1858), 1 F & F 69.

(d) See M'Pherson v Daniels (1829), 10 B & C 263, 272, per LITLEDALE, J; R v Harvey (1823), 2 B & C 257, 268, per BENTIN, J.

(e) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s. 60. Compare the corresponding provisions, as regards false pretences, of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), s. 88, see p 688, ante, and of the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 98), s. 44, see p 761, ante. The wording of s. 60 makes the case of R v Connor (1846), 2 Cox, C C 65, no longer applicable as an authority on this point. It is only necessary to allege or prove an intent to injure or defraud in the case of offences of which such an intent is a necessary ingredient, e.g., offences under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), ss. 3, 14, 15, 24, 28, 29, 31, 32, 33, 35, 43, 45, 46, 47, 54 (see R v Heseltine (1873), 12 Cox, C C 404, R v Newill (1836), 1 Mood C C 458, but see R v Smith (1831), 4 C & P 569). In an indictment under s. 3 for setting fire to the defendant's own house with intent to defraud an insurance company, it is not necessary to allege who is the owner of the property injured (R v Neuboult (1872), L R 1 C C R 314). Quære whether it is necessary to insert this allegation in any indictment under the Act, but where the essence of an offence is the unlawful and malicious injury of someone else's property, and when no offence could be committed, if the property injured belonged to the accused, it would seem advisable to aver to whom the property belongs.

(f) R v Rutter (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 174, R v Twiss (1879), 14 Cox, C C 327, Heard v Coles (1891), 56 J P 119, R v James (1837), 5 C & P 131, Hamilton v Bone (1888), 16 Cox, C C 437, R v Dodson (1839), 9 Ad & EL 704, Leyson v Williams (1890), 54 J P 631, Denny v Thunster, 55 L T 628, and see Croydon Rural District Council v Cowley (1909), 100 L T 441.

(g) R v James, supra. An indictment under the Malicious Damage Act,

SECT 5
Malicious
Damage to
Property.

Property in offender's possession

reasonably have supposed to be necessary for the assertion of his right, he loses his claim to protection (l)

1502 If a person does any act made punishable by the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (i), with an intent to injure or defraud any other person, he is none the less guilty although he may be in possession of the property against or in respect of which the act was done (h)

SUB-SECT 2 — Arson

Arson at common law

1503 It is a felony at common law wilfully and maliciously to burn the dwelling-house of another (l)

To constitute the offence of arson it is necessary that something should be actually consumed by fire (m), though no flame need be visible (n), charring is sufficient (o), but not mere scorching (p)

The punishment for arson at common law is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than three years (q)

Arson by statute

1504 By statute (r) everyone is guilty of felony who unlawfully and maliciously sets fire (1) to any church, chapel, meeting-house, or other place of divine worship (s), (2) to any dwelling-house,

1861 (21 & 25 Vict c 97), must allege that the act was done feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously (see R v Reader (1830), 4 C & P 245)

(h) R v Clemens, [1895] 1 Q B 556, O C R, Heaven v Crutchley (1903), 68 J P 53

(i) 21 & 25 Vict c 97, s 59

(k) Ibid This meets the case of injuries by tenants (see ibid, s 13, and Mills v Collett (1829), 6 Bing 80, but see R v Butler (1908), 1 Cr App Rep 171)

(l) 3 Co Inst 66, 67, 1 Hale, P C 566, cited in R v Faulkner (1877), 13 Cox, C C 500, at p 552, O C R (Ir) It must appear on the face of the indictment that the house was that of another, the indictment must also state whose the house is, and the evidence must establish that the house is a dwelling-house, and is the house of the person named in the indictment (R v Rickman (1789), 2 East, P C 1034, and see R v Glandfield (1791), 2 East, P C 1034, R v Connor (1846), 2 Cox, C C 60), but the house of another does not include a landlord's house of which the prisoner is in possession under a lease for years or from year to year (R v Breeme (1780), 1 Leach 220, R v Pelley (1782), 1 Leach, 212), and see R v Connor (1846), 2 Cox, C C 65, R v Kimbrey (1854), 6 Cox C C 461) It is a defendant by a wilful and malicious act sets fire to his own house with intent to defraud, and other houses contiguous thereto are consequently set on fire, the defendant is guilty of felony (R v Isaac (1799), 2 East, P C 1031, and see R v Faulkner, supra, per BARRY, J, at p 555) It is a misdemeanour at common law for a person to burn his own house, if it is contiguous to others (R v Probert (1799), 2 East, P C 1030)

(m) R v Russell (1842), Cnr & M 511

(n) R v Stallion (1833), 1 Mood C C 398

(o) R v Parker (1839), 9 O & P 45

(p) R v Russell, supra

(q) Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo 4, c 28), s 8, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The offence is not triable at quarter sessions As to the punishment of statutory arson, see p 772, post

(r) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (21 & 25 Vict c 97), ss 1-5 42

(s) Ibid, s 1.

any person being therein (a), (3) (b) to any house (c), any stable (d), coach-house, outhouse (e), warehouse, office, shop, mill, malthouse, hop-oast, barn (f), storehouse, granary, hovel, shed (g),

SECT. 5.
Malicious
Damage to
Property.

(a) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 2 It is sufficient to support the indictment, if the person charged was the only "person therein" at the time at which he committed the offence (R v Purdies (1894), 17 Cox, C O 715), but the house which is set on fire must be in the possession of someone who lives there. When an indictment for setting fire to a common gaol occupied by none but prisoners described the gaol as a house and alleged in divers counts that it was in the possession of the gaoler and of the inhabitants of a liberty and of the justices and of persons unknown, and it appeared that the gaoler did not live in the gaol, it was held that the indictment could not be supported (R v Connor (1846) 2 Cox, C O 65). But it appears that the prisoner could have been convicted if the gaoler's house had been part of the gaol (ibid), see R v Donnavan (1770), 1 Leach, 69, and R v Kimbrey (1854), 6 Cox, C O 464. It is also necessary that a person should be within at the moment when the house itself (as distinguished from an outhouse etc) is set on fire (R v Warren (1841), 1 Cox O O 68, R v Fletcher (1815), 2 Car & Kir 215). A person charged with this offence (without any charge of intent to injure or defraud any person) cannot be convicted of setting fire "to any house" under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 3, since for such latter offence the intent to defraud or injure is essential (R v Paine (1813), 1 Car & Kir 73, R v Fletcher, supra).

(b) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 3 A building intended for a house which is not finished is not a house within the meaning of this sub-section (R v Fiddell (1867), 11 Cox, C O 132, R v St Briavells (Inhabitants) (1828), 8 B & C 461), nor is a building in which it is intended that workmen shall eat, and dry their clothes, a house within the meaning of this sub-section (R v England (1814), 1 Car & Kir 533).

(c) It is not necessary that the house should be furnished (R v Kimbrey (1854) 6 Cox C O 461).

(d) The building set on fire must have been a stable at the time of the offence, therefore an erection originally built for and used as a stable, but subsequently and at the date of the fire used for another purpose, is not a stable (R v Colley (1813), 2 Mood & R 475, R v Munson (1847), 2 Cox, C O 186), but a stable remains a stable until some intention has been shown of using it permanently for a different purpose (R v Hammond (1814), Cox, C O 60, and see also R v Haughton (1833), 5 O & P 555).

(e) A building to constitute an "outhouse" must be parcel of a dwelling-house (R v St Briavells (Inhabitants) (1828), 8 B & C 461, R v Haughton (1833) 5 C & P 555). Thus it does not include an unfinished dwelling house where materials are deposited (R v St Briavells, supra), or a building standing apart from the nearest dwelling house, and wholly unconnected therewith (R v Haughton, supra, R v Lillison (1832), 1 Mood O C 336) or a cart-hovel consisting of a stubble roof supported by uprights in a field at a distance from other buildings (R v Parrot (1814), 6 O & P 402). An erection within the curtilage of a dwelling-house may, however, be an outhouse though not actually adjoining, as a schoolroom separated from the dwelling-house by a narrow passage and partly covered by the roof thereof (R v Winter (1815), Russ & Ry 295), or a shed in a farmyard fenced in along with the dwelling house but not contiguous thereto (R v Stallion (1834), 1 Mood O C 398), or a pig-stye opening into a yard in common with the dwelling house and fenced in along with the dwelling house (R v Jones (1844), 1 Car & Kir 303, see also R v North (1795), 2 East, P O 1021). Where the erection is wholly unconnected with a dwelling house, the actual distance by which it is separated is immaterial (R v Hammond (1844), 1 Cox, C O 60).

(f) An unfinished dwelling-house used for the purpose of a barn is not a barn (R v St Briavells (Inhabitants) (1828), 8 B & C 461). A person who sets fire to a stack as a natural and probable consequence of which a barn is burnt, is indictable for setting fire to the barn (R v Cooper (1833), 5 C. & P 535).

(g) An erection used for storing building material has been held to be a shed

SECT 5
Malicious
Damage to
Property

Arson by statute

or fold, or to any farm building, or to any building (h) or erection used in farming land, or in carrying on any trade or manufacture or any branch thereof (i), whether the same be in the possession of the offender or of any other person, with intent thereby to injure or defraud any person (h), (4) to any station, engine-house, warehouse, or other building belonging or appertaining to any railway, port, dock, harbour, canal, or other navigation (l), (5) to any public building other than those above-mentioned belonging to the King or any county, riding, division, city, borough, poor law union, parish, or place, or any university or college or hall thereof, or any inn of court, or devoted or dedicated to public use or ornament, or erected or maintained by public subscription or contribution (m), (6) to any ship or vessel whether complete or unfinished (n), (7) to any mine of coal, cannel coal, anthracite, or other mineral fuel (o)

The punishment for any such offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour, or if the offender is a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping (p)

(R v Imos (1831), 5 Cox, C C 222, C O R but see R v Munson (1847), 2 Cox, C O 186) It makes no difference how the erection is covered in (R v Imos, supra)

(h) A dwelling-house that is unfinished may be a building within the meaning of this sub-section (R v Manning (1871), 12 Cox, C C 106, C O R), but quære not if the external walls are complete (ibid, per KIRBY, C B, at p 108)

(i) See R v Munson (1847), 2 Cox, C O 186

(k) It has been held that in an indictment for this offence it is not necessary to state to whom the house belongs (R v Newbould (1872), 12 Cox, C C 148, C O R) It was held in R v March (1829), 1 Mood C O 182 that there must be an intent to injure or defraud some third person not identified with the prisoner and therefore a wife setting fire to her husband's house for the purpose of doing him a personal injury did not commit an offence under stat (1827) 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 30, s 2, which is to the same effect as s 3 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97) Since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict c 75) (see ss 12 and 16), a husband may be found guilty of setting fire to his wife's house or a wife of setting fire to her husband's house, but no criminal proceedings for such an offence can be taken under that Act while the husband and wife are living together, nor while they are living apart as to any act done by one in respect of the property of the other while they were living together (see ibid, s 12) As to the intent to injure or defraud, see p 769, ante

(l) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 4

(m) Ibid, s 5

(n) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 42 A small pleasure boat, eighteen feet long, appears to be a "ship or vessel" for the purpose of this offence (R v Sawyer (1831), 4 C & P 559) The same penalty is provided (ibid, s 43) where the setting fire is with intent to prejudice the owner, part-owner, or underwriters of "any policy of insurance upon such ship or vessel, or upon the freight thereof, or upon any goods on board the same" This offence may be committed by a person who is himself a part-owner (R v Philp (1830), 1 Mood C C 263, 272), and such part-owner may be guilty as accessory before the fact (R v Wallace (1841), Car & M 200) It has also been held that there may be an intent to prejudice the underwriter though no goods are "on board" the vessel (R v Wallace, supra) As to setting fire etc to His Majesty's ships, see p 773, post As to accidentally setting fire to a ship in the course of an unlawful act, see R v Faulkner (1877), 13 Cox, C O 550, C O R, and p 768, ante

(o) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 26

(p) Ibid, ss 1-5, 26 42, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69),

1505 By statute (g) everyone is guilty of felony who unlawfully and maliciously sets fire (1) (i) to any building other than those above mentioned; (2) to any matter or thing being in, against, or under any building under such circumstances that if the building were thereby set on fire a felony would be committed (s), (8) who by any overt act attempts to set fire to any building or to any matter or thing being in, against, or under any building (i), or to any ship (a), or to any mine (b) under such circumstances that, if the same were thereby set fire to, the offenders would be guilty of felony.

SECT 8
Malicious
Damage to
Property.

Setting fire
to other buildings etc

The punishment for any such offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen or for not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under the age of sixteen, with or without whipping (c)

1506 By statute (d) everyone is guilty of felony who wilfully and maliciously sets on fire, or causes to be set on fire, or assists etc in setting fire to (1) any of the King's ships of war, whether afloat or being built, or begun to be built in any of the King's dockyards or in private yards, (2) any of the King's arsenals, magazines, dockyards, ropeyards, victualling offices, or any of the buildings erected thereon or belonging thereto, (3) any timber or materials there placed for building, repairing, or fitting out of ships, (4) any of the King's military naval, or victualling stores or other ammunition of war, (5) any place where such stores or ammunition are kept, placed, or deposited

Setting fire to the King's ships etc.

The punishment for this offence is death (e) s 1, Statute Law Revision (No. 2) Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict c 71) Those offences are not triable at quarter sessions

(g) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), ss 6, 7, 16

(r) Ibid, s 6 It is immaterial whether it is complete or incomplete (R v Manning (1871), 12 Cox, C C 106, C C R) But possibly a house of which only the external walls are complete is not a building within the section (ibid)

(s) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97) s 7 A person does not commit this offence who merely sets fire to goods in a house without any intention of burning the house or injuring the owner of the house (R v Child (1871), 12 Cox, C C 64, C C R, R v Nattrass (1882), 15 Cox, C C 73, R v Harris (1882), 15 Cox, C C 75), and under such circumstances, even if the house is burnt, he is not guilty (R v Batstone (1864), 10 Cox, C C 20, per WILLIAMS, J, at p 22, R v Nattrass, supra, per ILAWKINS, J), but an intention to burn the house may be inferred where the prisoner knows that the probable result of his act will be the burning of the house, or is reckless whether the house catch fire or not (R v Nattrass, supra, R v Harris, supra)

(t) Ibid, s 27 As to what is an attempt by an overt act to set fire to a thing, see R v Taylor (1859), 1 F & F 511, where a defendant knelt close to a stack and struck a match intending to set fire to the stack, but discovering that he was watched, blew out the match and went away, and it was held that he was guilty of an attempt by an overt act to set fire to a stack.

(a) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 8

(b) Ibid, s 44

(c) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), ss. 6, 7, 8, 27, 41; Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s. 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(d) Dockyards, etc Protection Act, 1772 (12 Geo 3, c 24)

(e) Ibid, s 1 The offences under this Act are criminal whether committed in Great Britain or in any of the islands, countries, ports, or places thereunto belonging The sentences of death under this statute may be recorded. The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

SECT 5

Malicious
Damage to Property.

Setting fire to vegetable produce Setting fire
to crops

1507. Everyone is guilty of felony (f) who sets fire to certain specified vegetable produce (g)

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not more than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years, and in the case of a male under sixteen years of age, with or without a whipping (h)

1508 Everyone is guilty of felony who sets fire (i) to any crop of hay, grass, corn, grain, or pulse, or of any cultivated vegetable produce, whether standing or cut down, or to any part of any wood, coppice, or plantation of trees, or to any heath, gorse, furze, or fern wheresoever the same be growing (k)

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for any term not exceeding two years, and in the case of a male under sixteen years of age, with or without a whipping (l)

(f) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 17

(g) Namely, to any stack of corn, grain, pulse, tares, hay, straw, haulm, stubble, or of any cultivated vegetable produce or of furze, heath, fern, turf peat, coals charcoal, wood or bark, and to any 'steer' of red d or bark (ibid, s 17). It is not necessary to aver that the stack was thereby burnt (R v Salmon (1802) Russ & Ry 26), or that the prisoner then and there set fire to the stack (R v Swathins (1831), 4 C & P 513). An indictment for setting fire to a stack of beans or a stack of barley is good, beans being a species of pulse (R v Woodward (1831), 1 Mood C C 323), and barley a species of corn or grain (R v Swathins, supra), of which facts the court will take judicial notice. A mistake as to the name of the place where the offence was committed is immaterial (R v Woodward, supra). Material may be collected and "stacked" in a building as well as out of doors (R v Munson (1817), 2 Cox, C C 186), but an indictment for setting fire to a "cock" of hay is bad, but the indictment would, it seems, be good if drawn under s 16 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (R v McKiver (1871), 51 R C 1, 86). A parcel of unthreshed wheat is not a "stack" (R v Judd (1788) 1 Leach, 484). A quantity of straw on a lorry, though it may have been taken from a stack, is not a "stack" of straw (R v Satchwell (1873), 12 Cox, C C 149, C C R), and a score of faggots piled in a loft made by a temporary floor over an archway between two houses is not a stack of wood (R v Aris (1834), 6 C & P 348), with regard to the material itself, a stack of flax with the seed in it may be described as a stack of grain (R v Spencer (1856), 7 Cox C C 189, C C R), but a stack of stubble (R v Kauder (1830), 4 C & P 215), or a stack of which the lower part is clover seed straw, and the upper part wheat stubble is not a stack of straw (R v Tottenham (1835), 7 C & P 231), nor is a stack of sedge and rushes a stack of straw (R v Baldock (1846), 2 Cox, C C 55). Straw in this section means straw of wheat, barley, oats and rye.

(h) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 17, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. The offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(i) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 16.

(k) Idem. Flax with the seed in it may be described as grain (R v Spencer (1856), 7 Cox, C C 189, C C R). A single detached tree is not "a part of a wood" (R v Davy (1814), 1 Cox C C 60, decided under the corresponding words of stat. (1827) 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 30, s 17), but if a wood is unlawfully and maliciously fired, the means whereby the offence is committed are immaterial, therefore a prisoner is guilty if he sets fire to a summer house in a wood, and the wood is burnt in consequence of such act (R v Price (1841), 9 C & P 729).

(l) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 16. Penal Servitude Act 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. The offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

1509 Everyone who by any overt act attempts to set fire to any stack of corn etc or to any crop of hay etc (m) under such circumstances that if the same were thereby set fire to the offender would be guilty of felony, is also guilty of felony

SECT. 5.
Malicious
Damage to
Property

The punishment for such an offence is penal servitude not exceeding seven and not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, with or without a whipping (n)

Attempt to set fire to stack of corn
etc.

SECT-SLCT 3—Injury by Explosives

1510 Everyone is by statute (o) guilty of felony who unlawfully and maliciously causes by any explosive substance (p) an explosion of a nature likely to endanger life or to cause serious injury to property, whether any injury to person or property has been actually caused or not

Causing
explosion
likely to endanger life etc

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years (q)

1511 Everyone is by statute (r) guilty of felony who unlawfully or maliciously within or (being a subject of the King) without the King's dominions (1) does any act with intent to cause by an explosive substance, or conspires to cause by an explosive substance, an explosion in the United Kingdom of a nature likely to endanger life or to cause serious injury to property, (2) makes or has in his possession or under his control any explosive substance with intent by means thereof to endanger life or cause serious injury to property in the United Kingdom, or to enable any other person by means thereof to cause such injury etc. The offence is complete whether or not any explosion takes place or any injury to person or property has been actually caused

Doing act
with intent to cause
explosion.

The punishment for these offences is penal servitude for not more than twenty or not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour, on condition the explosive substance is to be forfeited (s)

1512 Everyone is by statute (t) guilty of felony who makes or knowingly has in his possession or under his control any explosive explosive substances

Making

(m) See Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), ss 16, 17

(n) Ibid, s 18, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The offence is not triable at quarter sessions As to threatening to set fire to buildings etc see p 791, post

(o) Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 Vict c 3), s 2

(p) As defined in s 9, namely, "any materials for making any explosive substance, also any apparatus, machine, implement, or materials used, or intended to be used, or adapted for causing, or aiding in causing, any explosion in or with any explosive substance, also any part of any such apparatus, machine or implement", see R v Charles (1892), 17 Cox, C C 499

(q) Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 Vict c 3), s 2, and see Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(r) Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 Vict c 3), s 3

(s) Ibid, s 3, and see Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. The offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(t) Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 Vict c 3), s 4 (1).

SECT 5

Malicious
Damage to
Property

substance under such circumstances as to give rise to a reasonable suspicion that he is not making it or does not have it in his possession or under his control for a lawful object, unless he can show that he made it or had it in his possession or under his control for a lawful object

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen or for not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour, and forfeiture of the explosive substance (u)

Accessory to crime under Explosive Substances
Act, 1883

1513 Every person is guilty of a felony (a) who within (or being a subject of the King without) the King's dominions by the supply of or solicitation for money, the finding of premises, the supply of materials, or in any manner whatever is accessory to the commission of any crime under the Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (b)

Such person may be tried and punished in the same manner as if he had been guilty as a principal (c)

Under the Explosives Act, 1875 (d), in the case of certain offences (e) against the Act, punishable on summary conviction, penalties are imposed and the forfeiture of certain explosives and ingredients is directed

Destruction of building by gunpowder

1514 Everyone is by statute (f) guilty of felony who unlawfully and maliciously by the explosion of gunpowder or other explosive substance destroys, throws down, or damages the whole or any part of any dwelling-house, any person being therein, or any building whereby the life of any person is endangered

(u) Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 Vict c 3), s 4 (1), Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (51 & 52 Vict c 69), s 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(a) Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 Vict c 3), s 5 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(b) 46 Vict c 3

(c) Ibid, s 5 As to inquiries under this Act see title EXPLOSIVES

In an indictment under the Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 Vict c 3), the same criminal act may be charged in different counts as constituting different crimes, and the prosecutor is not to be put to his election on which count he will proceed (ibid s 7 (2)) For all purposes of and incidental to arrest, trial, and punishment, a crime under the Act committed out of the United Kingdom is deemed to have been committed in the place in which the prisoner is apprehended, or is in custody (ibid, s 7 (3), see p 277 ante) The Act does not exempt any person from criminal proceedings at common law or under some other statute but no person may be punished twice for the same criminal act (ibid, s 7 (4))

(d) 38 Vict c 17

(e) See ibid, ss 9, 10, 13, 19, 22, 31, 32-37, 43, 63, 77 Most of these offences are punishable with pecuniary penalties but if the offence is calculated to endanger the safety or cause serious personal injury to any of the public or the persons employed in or about any factory etc., or to cause a dangerous accident, and was committed wilfully by the personal act, personal default, or personal negligence of the person accused, a sentence of imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than six months may be imposed (ibid, s 79). Offences under the Act may be prosecuted and penalties recovered and the forfeitures enforced either on indictment or before a court of summary jurisdiction (ibid, s 91) But a court of summary jurisdiction cannot impose a penalty exceeding £100 or award a term of imprisonment for a longer period than one month See for these offences title EXPLOSIVES

(f) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 9

To constitute this offence there must be an intent to destroy etc. a house, a mere act of wanton mischief or assault is not within the statute (g). In order to "endanger the life" of any person it is not necessary that any person should receive any actual injury, provided he is put into peril (h), nor is it necessary that he should be within the building at the time of the danger (h). But his life must be endangered as a result of the damage done to the building specified in the indictment. Evidence of damage to other buildings which may be inhabited is not admissible for the purpose of proving the endangering of life, but is admissible to show that the explosion was violent and calculated to do damage (h).

SECT. 5.
Malicious
Damage to
Property

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for any period not less than three years, or with imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping (i).

1515 Everyone is by statute (k) guilty of felony who unlawfully and maliciously places or throws any gunpowder or other explosive substance in, into, upon, under, against, or near any building with intent to destroy or damage any building or any engine, machinery, working tools, fixtures, goods, or chattels, whether or not any explosion takes place or any damage is caused.

Placing etc.
gunpowder in building etc

Though it is not necessary to constitute this offence that any explosion should take place, nevertheless it must be shown that the explosive substance was in a condition to explode at the time it was thrown (l).

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour, or if the offender is a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping (m).

There are various statutory provisions under which searches for and seizures of explosives can be made (n).

SUB-SECT. 4—Riotous Demolition

1516 All persons are by statute guilty of felony who, being riotously and tumultuously assembled together to the disturbance

Riotous demolition of churches,
houses etc

(g) R v Brown (1863), 3 F & F 821

(h) R v McGrath (1881), 14 Cox, C C 398

(i) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 9, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(k) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), ss 10, 45

(l) Thus, throwing or placing a bottle of gunpowder into a building without a lighted fuse or other means to cause an explosion would not be within the statute, but placing a bundle of lucifer matches against a window would be within the statute, because they are already in a condition to explode by contact (R v Sheppard (1868), 19 L. T. 19).

(m) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 10, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(n) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 55, Explosives Act, 1875 (38 Vict c 17), ss 73—75, Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 Vict c 3), s 8 (1). See title EXPLOSIVES. As to arrest without warrant of persons suspected of offences connected with explosive substances under this Act, see Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 61, Explosives Act, 1875, (38 Vict. c 17), s 78.

SECT 5
Malicious
Damage to
Property.

of the public peace, unlawfully and with force demolish, or pull down, or destroy, or begin to demolish, pull down, or destroy — (1) any church, chapel, meeting-house, or other place of divine worship, (2) any house, stable, coach-house, outhouse, warehouse, office, shop, mill, malthouse, hop-oast, barn, granary, shed, hovel or fold, or any building or erection used in farming land or in carrying on any trade or manufacture or any branch thereof (o), (3) any public building, other than those specified above, belonging to the King, or to any county, riding, division, city, borough, poor law union, parish, or place, or belonging to any university or college, or hall of any university, or to any inn of court, or devoted or dedicated to public use or ornament, or erected or maintained by public subscription, (4) any fixed or movable machinery prepared or employed in any manufacture or any branch thereof, (5) any steam engine or other engine for sinking, working, ventilating, or draining any mine, or any shaft, building, or erection (p) used in conducting the business of any mine, or any bridge, waggonway, or truck for conveying minerals from any mine (q)

Evidence

1517 To support a charge of riotously beginning to demolish a house it is necessary to prove that the object of the rioters was to demolish the house, and that they would have demolished it, if they had carried out their intentions (i)

Demolition means such demolition as leaves the house no house at all (a). It is not necessary that no stone should be left standing (b), but it is not enough that the house should be reduced to a dilapidated state if it still remains a house, no injury short of the actual demolition of the walls is sufficient (c).

If the rioters intended to demolish the house it is immaterial that they acted with some further motive in view, such as to injure

(o) These erections are similar to those enumerated in the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 3, which imposes penalties for arson (see p 770, ante), except that storeroom and farm building are here omitted. For decisions as to the meanings of the various terms used, see p 770, ante.

(p) A scaffold raised above the bottom of a mine for working a vein of coal level with the scaffold is an erection used in conducting the business of a mine (R v Whittingham (1840), 9 C & P 231). As to what is a riot, see p 471, ante.

(q) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 11.

(i) R v Thomas (1830), 4 C & P 237, R v Howell (1839), 9 C & P 437 (see Drake v Rootitt (1881) 7 Q B 11 201). These cases were decided on the repealed stat (1827) 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 30, s 8, the wording of which is reproduced in the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 11. If once the intention is proved and some act in pursuance thereof, the fact that completion of the intention was prevented is immaterial, but if the mob desist of their own accord before complete demolition, this is some evidence from which the jury may infer that there was no intention to demolish (R v Howell, supra). Destroying movable shop shutters is not beginning to demolish a house, as the shutters are not part of the freehold (R v Howell, supra).

(a) R v Langford (1812), Car & M. 602, C C R, per PATTESON, J.

(b) R v Langford, supra, R v Phillips (1842), 2 Mood. C C 252 (where the chimney was left standing).

(c) R v Adams (1842), Car & M 299.

SECT. 5.
Malicious
Damage to Property.

someone there (d), injury done not with the object of demolishing the house, but merely with a view to seizing a person who has taken refuge there, does not constitute the offence (e), nor does the demolition of a house in the assertion of a supposed right, although the demolition is accompanied by a riot (f).

The demolition may be accomplished as well by fire as by any other means (g), and in such case it is not necessary that the offender should be indicted for arson (h). Where a house has been demolished by fire by rioters, a rioter who was present after the commencement of the demolition may be convicted as a principal, although there may be no proof that he was present at the time the fire was lighted (i).

Persons are "riotously" assembled together where their assembly is attended with circumstances of alarm or terror to any of the King's subjects (j).

The punishment for any such offence is penal servitude for life or for any term not less than three years, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (k).

1518 All persons are by statute (l) guilty of a misdemeanour who, being riotously and tumultuously assembled together to the disturbance of the public peace, unlawfully and with force injure or damage any church or any of the erections or things specified above (m).

Damage to churches etc.
by rioters.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not exceeding seven years and not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years with or without hard labour (n).

(d) R v Howell, (1839), 9 C & P 117, R v Batt (1834), 6 C & P 320

(e) R v Price (1833), 5 C & P 610

(f) R v Langford (1842), Car & M 602, C C R. As to assertion of a supposed right, see p 769, ante. See R v Clemens, [1898] 1 Q B 556, C C R.

(g) R v Howell (1839), 9 C & P 437

(h) R v Harris (1842), Car & M 661, R v Whiston (1842), 2 Dowd (N S) 408

(i) R v Simpson (1812), Car & M 669. This is on the ground that the offence consists not simply in the fact of destroying a house by fire, but in the combined fact of riotously assembling, and during the riot demolishing the house. A person may be convicted of the offence who during the demolition of a house by fire has thrown articles of furniture into a fire which has been made outside the house, if the jury find that he was knowingly encouraging and taking part in the general design of destroying the house and furniture (R v Harris (1842), Car & M 661).

(j) Even to one person (R v Langford (1842), Car & M 602, C C R), see Field v Metropolitan Police (Receiver), [1907] 2 K B 853. See p 471, ante.

(k) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 11, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(l) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97) s 12. Any person put on trial for demolishing etc under s 11 may be found guilty of injuring under s 12 and punished accordingly. The object of s 12 is to provide for cases where there is no sufficient evidence of an intention to proceed to the total demolition of a house etc, and where no such intent ever existed, but where there is a riot and injury done (Greaves, Criminal Consolidation Acts, 2nd ed., 218).

(m) See p 778, ante.

(n) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 12. This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

SECT. 5

Malicious
Damage to Property.Injury to house by tenants.SUB-SECT 5.—Demolition by Tenants

1519 Everyone is by statute (o) guilty of a misdemeanour who, being possessed of a dwelling house or other building or part thereof, held for any term or at will, or held over after termination of a tenancy, unlawfully and maliciously pulls down or demolishes or begins to pull down or demolish the same or any part thereof, or pulls down or severs any fixtures affixed thereto (p)

The punishment for these offences is imprisonment without hard labour, or fine, or both (q)

SUB-SECT 6 — *Damaging Goods being Manufactured etc*Damaging goods in course of manufacture
etc.

1520 Everyone by statute (r) commits a felony who unlawfully and maliciously cuts, breaks, or destroys, or damages with intent to destroy or render useless (1) any goods or article of silk, woollen, linen, cotton, hair, mohair, or alpaca (or any one or more of these materials mixed with each other or with another material), framework-knitted piece, stocking, hose, or lace in the loom or frame, or on any machine or engine, or on the rack or tenters, or in any stage of manufacture (s), or (2) any warp or shute of the above-mentioned materials, (8) any fixed or movable loom, frame, machine, engine, rack, tackle (t), tool, or implement used in carding, spinning, throwing, weaving, fulling, shearing, or otherwise manufacturing or preparing any such goods or articles

(o) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 13 As to damage done in the course of a riot, see p 777, ante

(p) As to what persons may be considered in "possession," see R v Ball (1824), 1 Mood C C 30, R v Connor (1816), 2 Cox, C C 65, R v Wallis (1832), 1 Mood C C 311, R v Allison (1843), 1 Cox C C 24, R v Kimbrey (1864), 6 Cox, C C 461 As to fixtures, see title LANDLORD AND TENANT

(q) This offence is triable at quarter session

(r) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 14 The word "feloniously" must be used in the indictment for such an offence (R v Gray (1864), 9 Cox, C C 417 C C R so also must the words "unlawfully and maliciously" (R v Lewis (1830), 2 Russell on Crimes, 799) An indictment in such a case alleging that an offence was committed "feloniously, voluntarily and maliciously" instead of "unlawfully and maliciously" is bad (R v Reader (1830), 4 C & P 245)

(s) The process of manufacture continues until the article is fit for immediate sale Therefore an article which is complete so far as manufacture and texture are concerned but requires to be dyed before it will be fit for the market, is still in process of manufacture (R v Woodhead (1836), 1 Mood & R 549, decided under the corresponding words in the stat (1827) 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 30, s 3)

(t) Malicious cutting of tackle is a complete offence, and it is unnecessary to aver or prove an intent to destroy or render it useless (R v Smith (1853), 8 Cox, C C 128) The cords used to raise the "harness" or working body of a loom constitute tackle (ibid) Quere, whether the cutting of the "thrum" (i.e., the ends of the woollen threads generally left in the machine when the cloth is finished) is an offence, cutting the thrum is not cutting warp, but the fact that the prisoner cut the thrum may be given in evidence in support of a count for cutting "tackle" in order to show that the act was done maliciously (ibid.)

The wording of the section is different from that of the stat (1827) 7 & 8 Geo 4, c. 30, and the cases under that statute are no longer applicable as authorities for cases under s 14 (see R v Legg (1848), 3 Cox, C C 295) The removal of part of a frame without which the frame is imperfect and inoperative is "damaging" a frame, although the removed part is capable of being replaced and so making the frame complete and workable (R v Tacey (1821), Russ. & Ry 452; compare R v Fisher (1865), L R 1 C C 7, C C R).

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, or if the offender is a male under sixteen, whipping (u).

SECT. 4.
Malicious
Damage to
Property.

1521 Anyone is by statute (a) guilty of felony who by force enters any house, shop, building, or place with intent to commit any such offence

Forcible
entry

The punishment is the same as for the last-mentioned offence (b).

1522 Everyone by statute (c) commits a felony who unlawfully and maliciously cuts, breaks, or destroys, or damages with intent to destroy or render useless, (1) any fixed or movable machine or engine used, or intended to be used, for sowing, reaping, mowing, threshing, ploughing, or drawing, or for performing any other agricultural operation (d), (2) any machine or engine (e), or any tool or implement fixed or movable prepared for or employed in any manufacture other than that of the goods or articles specified in the description of the last-mentioned offences

Injury to
machinery

The punishment for any such offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, with or without a whipping (f)

SUB-SECT. 7.—Destroying Trees etc

1523 Everyone commits a felony (g) who unlawfully and maliciously cuts or otherwise destroys any hop-bunds growing on poles in any plantation of hops

Destroying
hop-bunds

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor

(u) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 14 Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 89), s 1

(a) Ibid

(b) Ibid

(c) Ibid, s 15

(d) Such displacement of parts of a machine as will prevent the machine from working, and may ultimately cause damage to result, constitutes "damage" to a machine, although if the displaced parts be restored the machine will become workable (R v Fisher (1865), L R 1 O O 7, O O R, compare R v Tacey (1821), Russ & Ry 452, and even a displacement or disarrangement of a machine which causes a trifling injury without preventing the machine from working constitutes "damage" (R v Foster (1852), 6 Cox, O O 25)

(e) The "silling" on which a machine rests is part of the machine (R v Foster, supra)

(f) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 15. An indictment under this section must allege that the act was done "feloniously" (R v Gray (1864), 9 Cox, C C 417, O O R) In order to constitute this offence it does not appear to be necessary that the machine should be pieced together and ready for use, it may have been taken to pieces and be in different places (R v Mackerel (1831), 4 O & P 448, or certain parts not essential to the working may be wanting (R v Bartlett (1831), 2 Deacon, Digest of Criminal Law, 1517, R v Chubb (1831), 2 Deacon, Digest of Criminal Law, 1517; and see note (d), supra) Where a machine has already been so far destroyed as to be incapable of working the destruction of the remaining parts is not the destruction of a "machine" (R v West (1831), 2 Deacon, Digest of Criminal Law, 1518) This offence is triable at quarter sessions

(g) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 19.

SECT 5

Malicious
Damage to Property.Destroying trees

less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, whipping (h).

1524 Everyone by statute (i) commits a felony who unlawfully and maliciously cuts, breaks, barks, roots up, or otherwise destroys or damages (k) (1) the whole or part of any tree, sapling, or shrub, or any underwood growing in any park, pleasure ground, garden, orchard, or avenue, or in any ground adjoining or belonging to any dwelling-house, in case the damage done exceeds the value of £1 (l), (2) the whole or any part of any tree etc growing elsewhere than in the places above specified, if the damage done exceeds £5 (m)

The punishment for such an offence is penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years, and in the case of a male under sixteen, with or without a whipping (n)

If the damage done to such tree, sapling, shrub, or underwood (wherever the same may be growing) amounts to 1s at the least, the offender may be tried summarily and fined or imprisoned (n) But anyone who, having been twice convicted of this offence, again commits such offence is guilty of an indictable misdemeanour The punishment on conviction of such misdemeanour is imprisonment, with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, with or without whipping (o)

Destroying
plants etc

1525 It is an offence punishable on summary conviction (p) to destroy or damage with intent to destroy any plant, root, fruit, or vegetable production growing in any garden, orchard, nursery ground, hot-house, green-house, or conservatory But anyone who,

(h) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 19, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69) s 1 To constitute the offence of "destroying," it is necessary to show that the plant was not merely crushed, but killed (R v Boucher (1841), 5 Jur 709), as to setting fire to crops or stacks of corn, see p 774, ante The offence is triable at quarter sessions

(i) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 20

(k) In R v Taylor (1819) Russ & R 373, decided under a statute (9 Geo 1, c 22) which makes it an offence to cut down or otherwise destroy, it was held that the cutting down of trees without destroying them was an offence within that Act It therefore seems that it is an offence under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), to cut etc trees although they are not totally destroyed

(l) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97) s 20 The indictment should state that the damage was done "unlawfully and maliciously", "feloniously" is not enough (R v Lewis (1830), 2 Russell on Crimes, 799)

(m) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), ss 20, 21 Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69) s 1 Damage to the amount specified must be done all at one time (R v Williams (1862), 9 Cox, C C 338, C O R. (11)), and must be exclusive of consequential damage (R v Whiteman (1854), 6 Cox, C C 370, C O R)

(n) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 22, see too, ibid, s. 53

(o) Ibid The offence is triable at quarter sessions

(p) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 97), s 23 The punishment is imprisonment with hard labour for not more than six calendar months. It is necessary in any such case to prove the intent to destroy or damage, but if any plant etc is destroyed or damaged the intent may be inferred, but if there is no destruction or substantial damage no offence is committed (Eley v Lytle (1885), 50 J P. 306) having been convicted of this offence, again commits such offence commits a felony (g).

The punishment for such felony is penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour for two years, and if the offender is a male, with or without a whipping (r).

SECT. 5
Malicious
Damage to
Property.

SUB-SECT. 8—Injuries to Mines etc.

1526. Everyone by statute (s) commits a felony who unlawfully and maliciously (1) causes water to be conveyed or run into any mine or subterranean passage communicating therewith with intent thereby to destroy or injure such mine, or hinder or delay the working thereof (t), (2) with the like intent fills up, obstructs, or damages with intent to destroy, obstruct, or render useless any airway, waterway, drain, pit, level, or shaft of or belonging to any mine (t), (3) pulls down or destroys or damages with intent to destroy or render useless any steam engine (a) or other engine for sinking, draining, ventilating, or working or assisting in sinking, draining, ventilating, or working any mine, or any appliance or apparatus in connection with any such steam engine or other engine, or any stail, building, or erection (b) used in conducting the business of

Injury to
mines

(g) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 23

(r) Ibid, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The offence is triable at quarter sessions. The offence of unlawfully and maliciously destroying etc any cultivated root used for the food of man or beast or for medicine, distilling or dyeing, or for or in the course of any manufacture, and growing in any land, open or inclosed, not being a garden, orchard or nursery ground, is only punishable on summary conviction (Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 24) The offence of unlawfully and maliciously cutting, beating, throwing down, or destroying any fence of any description, or any wall, stile, or gate, or part thereof, is also punishable only on summary conviction (ibid, s 25)

(s) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 29

(t) This provision does not extend to any damage committed underground by any owner of any adjoining mine in working the same, or by any person duly employed in such working (Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 28) As to setting fire to mines, see p 772, ante. In R v Jones (1843), 2 Mood C C 293, on an indictment under the stat 7 & 8 Geo 4, c 10, s 6, it was held that the mine might be laid as the property of the person in possession of and working it though only an agent for others. Quare whether in an indictment under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97) it is necessary to allege or prove whose the property injured is (see R v Newbould (1872), 12 Cox, C C 148, C C R) A person who closes the airway of a mine in the exercise of a supposed right does not commit a criminal offence for in such case he cannot be said to be acting maliciously (R v Matthews (1876), 14 Cox, C C 5)

A servant who closes such airway under orders of his master, believing his master's allegation that he has a right so to close it, does not commit a criminal offence, even though the master knows he has no such right, but if the servant knows that the master is acting maliciously he is guilty of the offence (R v James (1837), 8 C & P 131)

(a) Damage to a cylinder (known as a "drum") which a steam engine causes to revolve and take up rope is not damage to the steam engine (R v Whittingham (1840) 9 C & P 234) To set a steam engine going without the machinery being attached, so that the engine works with great velocity and is damaged, is to damage the steam engine (R v Norris (1840), 9 C & P. 241)

(b) A scaffold erected above the bottom of a mine for working a vein of coal on a level with the scaffold is an erection used in conducting the business of a mine (R v Whittingham (1840), 9 C & P 234)

SECT. 5
Malicious
Damage to
Property.

any mine, or any bridge, waggonway or trunk for conveying minerals from any mine, whether such engine, staith, building, erection, bridge, waggonway, or trunk be completed or in an unfinished state (c); or (4) who unlawfully and maliciously stops, obstructs, or hinders the working of such steam or other engine, appliance, or apparatus, with intent thereby to destroy or damage any mine, or hinder, obstruct, or delay its working (d), (5) wholly or partially cuts through, severs, breaks, or unfastens, or damages, with intent to destroy or render useless, any rope, chain, or tackle (of whatsoever material) used in any mine, or in or upon any inclined plane, railway, or other way, or other work whatsoever, in anywise belonging or appertaining to, or connected with, or employed in any mine or the working or business thereof.

The punishment for any such offence is penal servitude for not more than seven or not less than three years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years, and if the offender is a male, with or without a whipping (e).

SUB-SECT 9 —Injuries to Seabanks etc

Injury to
seabanks etc

1527. Everyone by statute (f) commits a felony who unlawfully and maliciously breaks down, or cuts down, or otherwise damages or destroys, any seabank or seawall, or the bank, dam, or wall of or belonging to any river, canal, drain, reservoir, pool, or marsh, whereby any land or building shall be or be in danger of being overflowed or damaged, (2) throws, breaks, or cuts down, levels, undermines, or otherwise destroys any quay, wharf, jetty, lock, sluice, floodgate, weir, tunnel, towing-path, drain, watercourse, or other work belonging to any port, harbour, dock, or reservoir, or on or belonging to any navigable river or canal.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, with or without whipping (g).

Injury to
seawalls,
waterways
etc.

1528 Everyone by statute (h) commits a felony who unlawfully and maliciously cuts off, draws up, or removes any piles, chalk, or other materials, fixed in the ground and used for securing any seabank or seawall, or the bank, dam, or wall of any river, canal, drain, aqueduct, marsh, reservoir, pool, port, harbour, dock, quay, wharf, jetty, or lock, or opens or draws up any floodgate or sluice, or does any other injury or mischief to any navigable river or canal with intent, and so as thereby to obstruct or prevent the carrying on, completing, or maintaining the navigation thereof

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or

(c) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 29

(d) Ibid.

(e) Ibid., ss. 28, 29; Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1. The offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(f) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 30

(g) Ibid., Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1. The offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

(h) Ibid., s. 31.

without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen years of age, a whipping (i).

SECT. 4.
Malicious
Damage to Property.

Destroying
dams etc.

1529. Any person is by statute (k) guilty of a misdemeanour (1) who unlawfully and maliciously cuts through, breaks down, or otherwise destroys any dam, floodgate, or sluice of any fishpond, or water which is private property, or in which there is any private right of fishery, with intent to take or destroy, or so as to cause the loss or destruction of the fish therein, or puts any lime or other noxious material in any such pond or water, or in any salmon river (l), with intent to destroy any fish that may there be or may thereafter be put therein, (2) cuts through, breaks down or otherwise destroys or injures the dam or floodgate of any mill-pond, reservoir, or pool.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, with or without a whipping (m).

SUB-SECT 10—Injuries to Bridges etc.

1530 Everyone by statute (n) commits a felony who unlawfully and maliciously (1) pulls or throws down, or in anywise destroys, any bridge, whether over any stream of water or not, viaduct, or aqueduct, over or under which any highway, railway, or canal shall pass, or (2) does any injury with intent to render, and so as in fact to render, such bridge, viaduct, or aqueduct, or the highway,

Destroying
bridges etc.

(i) Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. An Act of Parliament making it an offence to place an obstruction within ten feet of high water mark of a haven only applies to an obstruction in a place where a right of way exists, and does not take away the rights of individuals where there is no such right of way (Harrod v Worship (1861), 1 B & S 381).

(k) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 32. Salmon Fishery Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict c 71), s 13, and see title FISHERIES.

(l) See Salmon Fishery Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict c 71), s. 13, and R v Vasey, [1905] 2 K B 748, O C R.

(m) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 32, Salmon Fishery Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict c 71), s. 13, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s. 1. The offence is triable at quarter sessions. Persons also incur penalties under the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c. 109), s 5, who, otherwise than in the exercise of any right, cause or knowingly permit to flow, or put or knowingly permit to be put, into any waters containing salmon, or any tributaries thereof, any liquid or solid matter to such an extent as to cause the waters to poison or kill the fish. Even where a person does any such act in pursuance of a legal right he must use reasonable means to render such matter harmless. The Act is not intended either to prevent a person from acquiring a legal right, or to legalise any act or default which but for this Act would be a nuisance (ibid), these penalties are recoverable on summary conviction. Penalties recoverable on summary conviction are also incurred by persons who use dynamite or other explosive substance to catch or destroy fish either in a public fishery or in any private water. See Fisheries (Dynamite) Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c 65), s 2; Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict c 39), s 12. The manufacture, sale, or exposing for sale at any place within the British Islands of any instrument serving only or intended to damage or destroy fishing implements by cutting or otherwise is also punishable on summary conviction (Sea Fisheries Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 22), s 9). See also title FISHERIES.

(n) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 33, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. The offence is not triable at quarter sessions. See also title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES.

SECT 5
Malicious
Damage to
Property.

railway, or canal passing over or under the same, or any part thereof, dangerous or impassable

<sup>c</sup> The punishment for such offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, with or without a whipping (o)

Destroying
toll-bars &c

1531 Everyone is by statute (p) guilty of a misdemeanour who unlawfully and maliciously throws down, levels, or otherwise destroys in whole or in part any turnpike, gate, or toll-bar, wall, chain, rail, post, bar, or other fence (q) belonging thereto, or set up to prevent passengers passing by without paying any statutory toll, or any house, building, or weighing engine erected for the better collection, ascertainment, or security of any such toll

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment with or without hard labour, or fine, or both (r)

SUB SECT 11 —Injuries to Railways

Obstructing
railways

1532 Everyone by statute (s) commits a felony who unlawfully and maliciously puts, places, casts, or throws upon or across any railway, whether public or private (a), any wood, stone, or other matter or thing, or takes up, removes, or displaces any rail, sleeper, or other thing belonging to any railway, or turns, moves, or diverts any points or other machinery belonging to any railway, or makes or shows, hides, or removes any signal or light on or near any railway, or does or causes to be done any other act with intent to obstruct, upset, overthrow, injure, or destroy any engine, tender, carriage, or truck using such railway (b)

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, a whipping (c)

(o) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 33

(p) Ibid, s 34. Since the passing of the Act turnpike roads have almost if not entirely ceased to exist, but the provisions of the section may still be of practical importance with regard to toll-bars, toll houses, weighing machines etc

(q) Ibid

(r) The offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(s) Ibid, s 35

(a) O'Gorman v Sweet (1890), 54 J P 663

(b) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 35 Such an act done out of mischief, without the design of injuring anyone, may be malicious (R v Upton (1851), 6 Cox, C. C 298) As to malice generally, see p 768, ante A master is liable for the acts of his servants if he stands by while such acts are being done and encourages or orders them to do such acts (Robert v Preston (1860), 9 C B (N S) 208) Anyone who without lawful excuse (the proof whereof lies on the defendant) interferes with, removes, or alters any part of a tramway, or of the works connected therewith, or places or throws any stones, dirt, wood, refuse, or other material on any part of a tramway, or does or causes to be done anything in such manner as to obstruct any carriage using a tramway or to endanger the lives of persons therein or thereon, or knowingly aids or assists in the doing of any such thing, is liable on summary conviction (in addition to any proceedings by way of indictment or otherwise to which he may be subject) to a penalty not exceeding £5 (Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict c 78), s 60) And see title TRAMWAYS AND LIGHT RAILWAYS

(c) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 35, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1 The offence is not triable at quarter sessions.

1533 Everyone is by statute (d) guilty of a misdemeanour who by any unlawful act, wilful omission, or neglect, obstructs, or causes to be obstructed, any engine or carriage using any railway, or aids or assists therein

The punishment is imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour (e)

SECT. 8
Malicious
Damage to
Property

Obstructing
trains.

SUB SECT 12 — Injuries to Telegraphs

1534 Everyone is by statute (f) guilty of a misdemeanour who unlawfully and maliciously cuts, breaks, throws down, destroys, injures, or removes any battery, machinery, wire, cable, post, or other matter or thing being part of, or used in or about the working of any electric or magnetic telegraph, or prevents or obstructs in any manner the sending, conveyance, or delivery of any communication by any such telegraph

Injury to telegraphic apparatus

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour (g)

SUB-SECT 13 — Destroying Articles in Public Museum

1535 Everyone is by statute (h) guilty of a misdemeanour who unlawfully and maliciously destroys or damages (1) any book, manuscript, picture, print, statue, bust, or vase, or other article or thing kept for the purposes of art, science, or literature, or as an object of curiosity in any public museum, gallery, cabinet, library, or other repository which is either at all times, or from time to time, open to the public or any considerable number of persons by permission of the proprietor or by payment of money, (2) any picture, statue, monument, or other memorial of the dead, painted glass or other ornament or work of art in any church, chapel, or

Destroying
books etc in public museum

(d) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 36

(e) Ibid The offence is triable at quarter sessions. See also Railway Regulation Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict c 97), ss 13, 14, 16. As to offences by railway servants and other persons upon railways, see title RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The offence of obstructing under s 36 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), is committed by any person who, otherwise than by accident, leaves on a railway line any substance likely to cause an obstruction, though his object may not have been to create such obstruction, but merely to give the company's servants the trouble of removing the obstruction (R v Holroyd (1841), 2 Mood & M 339), or though the line may not yet be open to the public, and though no actual obstruction may have taken place (see R v Bradford (1860), 8 Cox, C C 309, C C R). The obstruction contemplated is not confined to a physical obstruction. A person who improperly goes on a railway line and by raising his arms induces a driver to diminish speed is guilty of the offence (R v Hardy (1871), L R 1 C C R 278), see also R v Hadfield (1870), L R 1 C C R 253, in which case a drunken man got on a railway and turned the signals, thereby causing a luggage train to go very slowly, and he was held to have obstructed an engine and carriages within the meaning of the section. Moving points or other machinery of a railway with malicious intent is a felony under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 35 (see p 786, ante)

(f) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 37

(g) Ibid Or the offender may be tried summarily and fined or imprisoned (ibid). Anyone who unlawfully and maliciously by any overt act attempts to commit any such offence is liable to be tried summarily and fined or imprisoned (ibid, s 38). This offence is triable at quarter sessions. And see title TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES

(h) Ibid, s 39

SECT. 5
Malicious
Damage to
Property.

meeting house or other place of divine worship, or in any building belonging to the King or to any county, riding, division, city, borough, poor law union, parish, or place or any university or college or hall of any university, or to any inn of court, or in any street, square, churchyard, burial ground, public garden, or ground; (3) any statue or monument exposed to public view, or any ornament, railing, or fence surrounding such statue or monument

The punishment for such an offence is imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than six calendar months, and if the offender is a male under sixteen years, with or without a whipping (c).

SUB-SECT 14—Injuries to Cattle etc

Killing etc
cattle.

1536 Every person is by statute (k) guilty of felony who unlawfully and maliciously kills, maims, or wounds any cattle (l)

The punishment is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour (m)

(c) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 39 The offence is triable at quarter sessions Nothing in this section affects the right of any person to recover by action damages for the injury so committed (ibid). Any person who injures or disfigures the obelisk known as Cleopatra's Needle, or any monument erected or to be erected on any of the Thames Embankments or other lands vested at the date of the Monuments (Metropolis) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c 29), in the Metropolitan Board of Works, or who posts any bill or placard, or who writes, cuts, prints, draws, or marks in any manner any word or character or any representation of any object on the obelisk or such monument, is liable to a penalty not exceeding £5, recoverable on summary conviction (Monuments (Metropolis) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict c 29), s 4)

(k) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 40

(l) The word "cattle" is not defined in the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97) Under a repealed statute (9 Geo 1, c 22) it was held to include horses mares, and colts (R v Paty (1770), 2 East, P C 1074), geldings (R v Mott (1783), 2 East, P C 1075), pigs (R v Chapple (1804), Russ & Ry 77), and asses (R v Whitney (1824), 1 Mood O C 3) For the purposes of the Dogs Act, 1906 (6 Edw 7, c 32), the word "cattle" is defined as including horses, mules, asses, sheep, goats, and swine (ibid, s 7) The indictment should state the species of cattle injured, "certain cattle" is not sufficient (R v Chalkley (1813), Russ. & Ry 258) See also title ANIMALS, Vol I, p 369

(m) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 97), s 40, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s 1. In R. v. Woodward (1796), 2 East, P C 653, on an indictment for killing two sheep, it was held that the property in them might be laid in the agister, but quære whether in an indictment under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), it is necessary to allege to whom the property in part belongs (see R. v. Neuboult (1872), 12 Cox, O C. 148, O C. R.), a charge of administering poison to a number of horses is established if the evidence shows that some of the poison was given to each of the horses (R v Mogg (1830), 4 O & P 364). A person who unlawfully and maliciously sets fire to a cow-house while a cow is in it, whereby the cow is burned to death, is guilty of "killing" the cow (R. v. Haughton (1838), 5 O. & P. 559), "maiming" implies permanent injury (R v Jeans (1844), 1 Cas. & Kir. 539, R v Owens (1828), 1 Mood. O. C. 205, where the offence was blinding a mare by pouring acid into its eye), but "wounding" may be of a temporary character (R. v. Haywood (1801), Russ & Ry. 16), setting on a dog to bite sheep is not "wounding" sheep (R. v. Hughes (1826), 2 O. & P 420) Wounding may be inflicted by the hand as well as by an instrument (R v. Bullock (1868), 11 Cox, O. C. 125, O. C. R.). It is apprehended that killing and maiming may likewise be done without an instrument Any person who unlawfully and maliciously kills, maims or wounds any dog, bird, beast, or other

SUB-SHOT 16.—*Injuries to Shipping*SHOT. 4.
Malicious
Damage to
Property.

1537. Everyone by statute (n) commits a felony who unlawfully and maliciously casts away or in anywise destroys any ship or vessel, whether complete or in an unfinished state (o)

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, with or without a whipping (p)

A person is by statute (q) guilty of a felony who unlawfully and maliciously by any overt act attempts to cast away or destroy any ship or vessel under such circumstances that if the offence were committed the offender would be guilty of felony ships.

Casting away

Attempting to cast away
ship.

The punishment for such an offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, a whipping (r)

animal not being cattle, but being either the subject of larceny at common law, or ordinarily kept in confinement, or for any domestic purpose, is liable to be tried summarily and fined or imprisoned, and on a second conviction to be imprisoned (ibid, s 41) A person does not commit this offence who acts in the bonâ fide belief that what he does is necessary to protect himself from injury (Hanway v Boulton (1830), 4 C & P 350), his premises from trespass (Daniel v Jones (1877), 2 C P D 351), or his master's property from injury (Miles v Hutchings, [1903] 2 K B 714) To constitute the offence it does not seem that the act charged must have been committed for the purpose of indulging a cruel disposition (see Miles v Hutchings, supra) A person may not kill a dog where less violent measures can be used for the attainment of a lawful object In Daniel v Jones, supra, a person who laid poisoned meat in an enclosed garden for the purpose of destroying and who thereby destroyed a dog which trespassed therein, was held not to have committed an offence under the section Such an act is, it would seem, however, an offence within the Poisoned Flesh Prohibition Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict c 115), s 2 In Smith v Williams (1892), 56 J P 840, it was held (on the authority of Daniel v Jones, supra) that a person is entitled to shoot domestic fowls trespassing upon his sown land, sed q. ante, see Miles v Hutchings, supra Any person who wilfully and unlawfully administers to or causes to be administered to or taken by any horse, cattle, or domestic animal any poisonous or injurious drug or substance is liable (unless some reasonable cause or excuse is shown on his behalf), on summary conviction, to a fine or imprisonment (Drugging of Animals Act, 1876 (39 Vict c 13), s 1), this Act does not apply to the owner, or person acting under authority of the owner of the horse, cattle, or other animal to which any drug or substance is administered (ibid, s 2), nor does the Act exempt a person from liability to any greater or other punishment under any other Act or law, so that he be not punished more than once for the same offence (ibid, s 3) See also title ANIMALS, Vol L, p 413

(n) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c 97), s. 42 As to setting fire to ships, see p 772, ante

(o) A ship is not cast away or destroyed which is only run aground or stranded on a rock and afterwards got off in such condition as to be easily refitted (R. v. De Londo (1765), 2 East, P. C. 1098). A small pleasure boat (eighteen feet long) is, it seems, a "ship or vessel" within this section (R. v. Bouyer (1831), 4 C & P 559)

(p) Ibid. Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. The same penalty is provided (s 43) where the destruction is with intent to prejudice the owner or underwriter (see p. 772, ante).

(q) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 44, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1 The offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(r) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 46

SECT 5

Malicious Damage to Property.

Damaging ship with intent to destroy etc

Altering signals with intent to endanger ship

1538 Everyone by statute (s) commits a felony who unlawfully and maliciously damages otherwise than by fire, gunpowder, or other explosive substance any ship or vessel, whether complete or in an unfinished state, with intent to destroy or render useless the same

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, a whipping (t)

Everyone by statute (a) commits a felony who unlawfully masks, alters, or removes any light or signal or unlawfully exhibits any false light or signal with intent to bring any ship, vessel, or boat into danger, or unlawfully and maliciously does anything tending to the immediate loss or destruction of any ship, vessel, or boat for which no punishment is otherwise provided in the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (b)

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, a whipping (c).

Cutting away buoys etc

1539 Everyone by statute (d) commits a felony who unlawfully and maliciously cuts away, casts adrift, removes, alters, defaces, sinks, or destroys or does any act with intent to cut away etc or in any other manner injures or conceals any boat, buoy, buoy rope, perch, or mark used or intended for the guidance of seamen or the purpose of navigation

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, with or without a whipping (e)

Destroying ship in distress.

1540 Everyone by statute (f) commits a felony who unlawfully and maliciously destroys any part of any ship or vessel in distress, or wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, or any goods, merchandise, or articles of any kind belonging to such ship or vessel

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour (g)

(s) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 48

(t) Ibid., Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1 This offence is triable at quarter sessions

(a) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 47

(b) 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97

(c) Ibid., s. 47, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1 This offence is not triable at quarter sessions

(d) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 48

(e) Ibid., Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1 The offence is triable at quarter sessions

(f) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 49

(g) Ibid., Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), s. 1 The offence is triable at quarter sessions Wilful damage to a ship or her stores or cargo by a seaman is also an offence under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 225 (t)

SUB-SECT. 16.—Threats to Burn etc House.

SECT. 5

Malicious
Damage to Property.Sending
letter threatening to burn
house etc.

1541. Any person by statute (h) is guilty of felony who sends, delivers, or utters, or directly or indirectly causes to be received, knowing the contents thereof, any letter or writing threatening to burn or destroy any house, barn, or other building, or any rick or stack of grain, hay, or straw or other agricultural produce, or any grain, hay, or straw or other agricultural produce in or under any building, or any ship or vessel, or to kill, maim, or wound any cattle.

The punishment for this offence is penal servitude for not more than ten nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, with or without a whipping (i)

SUB SECT 17 — Miscellaneous

1542 Everyone is by statute (h) guilty of a misdemeanour who unlawfully and maliciously commits to or on any real or personal property (l) whatsoever any damage, injury, or spoil to an amount exceeding £5 (m) for which no punishment is specifically provided by the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (n)

Malicious
damage to amount exceeding £5.

The punishment is imprisonment for two years with or without hard labour, or, if the offence be committed between 9 p m and 6 a m, penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour (o)

(h) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 60. The wording of this section makes the case of R v Hull (1861), 5 Cox, C C 233, inapplicable now as an authority. It is for the jury to say, looking both at the letter itself and the situation of the parties, whether a letter contains a threat (R v Tyler (1835), 1 Mood C C 428, R v Carruthers (1844), 1 Cox, C C 138). But the judge may hold that there is no evidence of a threat to go to the jury (R v Carruthers, supra).

(i) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 70, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. This offence is triable at quarter sessions.

(k) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 51.

(l) The words real or personal property, mean corporeal, tangible, and visible property, they do not apply to incorporeal rights, such as a right of herbage (Laws v Eltringham (1881), 8 Q B D 283), nor do they apply to products growing upon realty but not part of the realty itself, e.g. mushrooms (Gardner v Mansbridge (1887), 19 Q B D 217) but they apply to grass (Gayford v Chouler, [1898] 1 Q B 316).

(m) Where several articles are damaged it is not necessary to allege in the indictment the value of each, but only that the amount of damage exceeds £5 (R v Thoman (1871), 12 Cox, C C 54, C C R.)

(n) 24 & 25 Vict c 97.

(o) Ibid, s 51, Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict c 69), s 1. The offence is triable at quarter sessions. If the damage does not amount to £5 and is committed either wilfully or maliciously, the offender may be fined summarily and fined or imprisoned, in addition to being required to make compensation as assessed by the justice (not exceeding £5) (ibid, s 52). A trespass on short grass in the winter, made in the course of playing a game, has been held not to be wilful (Eley v Lytle (1885), 50 J P 308), but trespass in long grass after warning, and coupled with a refusal to turn back, has been held to be both wilful and malicious (Gayford v Chouler, [1898] 1 Q B 316). It is not necessary to constitute an offence under the section that the act should be both wilful and malicious, it is sufficient that it should be either one or the other (see Gardner v Mansbridge, supra, per SMITH, J, Roper v Knott (1898), 19 Cox, C C 69,

SECT. 8

Malicious
Damage to Property.

Making gunpowder
with intent to commit felony.

1543 Any person by statute (p) commits a misdemeanour who makes or manufactures, or knowingly has possession of, any gunpowder or other explosive substance, or any dangerous or noxious thing, or any machine, engine, instrument or thing with intent thereby to commit or enable another person to commit, any of the felonies specified in the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (q).

The punishment for this offence is imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour, and if the offender is a male under sixteen, a whipping (r)

SUB SECT 18 — Proceedings under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861

ACCESSORIES

1544 In the case of every felony punishable under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (s), every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact, is punishable in the same manner as the principal in the first degree, and every accessory after the fact is liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour (t)

Aiding and abetting

1545 Any person who aids, abets, counsels, or procures the commission of any misdemeanour punishable under the Act may be proceeded against, indicted and punished as a principal offender (a)

Venue in Admiralty cases

1546 In any indictment for any offence under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (b), committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, or for being an accessory to such an offence, the venue in the margin of the indictment must be the same as if the offence had been committed in the place where the accused was apprehended or is in custody, and the offence must be averred to have been committed "on the high seas" (c)

Hamilton v Bone (1888), 16 Cox, C C 437) Therefore, in the case of any such offence, if property has been wilfully damaged, though not maliciously, the offence has been committed. Thus a milkman commits an offence under this section who fraudulently damages milk by diluting it with water with the intention of increasing the quantity of milk and putting the surplus money into his own pocket (Roper v Anott (1898), 19 Cox, C C 69). The court in this case refused to follow Hall v Richardson (1889), 51 J P 345, where it had been held that a milkman who after accidentally spilling some milk had diluted the remainder to make up the full quantity, in his master's supposed interest, was not guilty of wilfully or maliciously damaging the remainder, see also Hamilton v Bone, supra, Denny v Thwaites (1876), 2 Ex D 21. A person who wilfully or maliciously commits any damage to any real or personal property, where the damage does not exceed £5, and where no punishment is provided by the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), is punishable on summary conviction (ibid., ss 52, 53).

(p) Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97), s 54

(q) 24 & 25 Vict. c 97

(r) Ibid., s 54. Power is given to a justice upon reasonable cause assigned upon oath to issue a warrant for the search of certain specified places where the same may be suspected to be made, kept, or carried (ibid., s 55). The offence is triable at quarter sessions

(s) 24 & 25 Vict c. 97

(t) Ibid., s. 56. As to principals and accessories, see p 247, ante

(a) Ibid.

(b) 24 & 25 Vict c 97

(c) Ibid., s. 72. As to the Admiralty jurisdiction, see p 273, ante.

1547 Any person convicted of any indictable misdemeanour, punishable under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (d), may, in addition to or in lieu of the punishment authorised thereunder, be fined and required to enter into his own recognisances; and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour

SECT. 5.
Malicious
Damage to Property.

Power to fine etc.

In the case of a felony he may be required to enter into his own recognisance and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace in addition to any punishment authorised thereunder, but no person may be imprisoned under this clause for not finding sureties for more than one year (e).

SECT. 6 —Offences relating to Game.

1548 Certain statutory offences, punishable on indictment, have been created with regard to taking or killing game, hares, rabbits, and other wild animals, and with regard to trespassing in pursuit of game (f)

Poaching etc.

(d) 24 & 25 Vict c 97

(e) Ibid, s 73 As to whipping of offenders, see ibid, s 75, and p 411, ante. When a person convicted of any offence punishable upon summary conviction by virtue of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 97) has paid the sum adjudged to be paid together with the costs under such conviction, or has received a remission of such penalty from the Crown or has suffered imprisonment for nonpayment of the imprisonment awarded in the first instance, he is to be released from all further or other proceedings for the same cause (ibid, s. 67), see Greaves, Criminal Law Consolidation Acts, 2nd ed, 71 As to apprehension without warrant under the Act, see p 303, ante As to search warrants in the case of offences under the Act, see p 301, ante

(f) See Night Poaching Act, 1828 (9 Geo 4, c 64), Night Poaching Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict c 29), Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 96), ss 12—17 These offences are dealt with under title GAME, see also title ANIMALS, Vol I, p 371

CROPS AND GROWING PRODUCE.

See AGRICULTURE , LANDLORD AND TENANT , SALE OF LAND.

CROWN LANDS.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Contents of Volume IX

		PAGE
	Introductory Essay	1
ccccxiv	Portrait of a Lady	9
ccccxv	The Fall of Maung San	18
ccccxvi	The Death of Snarley Bob	29
ccccxvii	The Heart of the Wood	35
ccccxviii	The Chameleon	46
ccccxix	The King is Dead, Long Live the King	60
ccccxx	The King's Last Sailing	67
ccccxxi	When the Door Opened—— ?	73
ccccxxii	The Story of the Piebald Horse	81
ccccxxiii	The Skipper's Bible	90
ccccxxiv	The Grey Frock	101
ccccxxv	A Liberal Education	111
ccccxxvi	The Monkey's Paw	115
ccccxxvii	An Odd Freak	126
ccccxxviii	Charlwood with a Number	137
ccccxxix	Joie-de-Loup	145
ccccxxx	The Roll-Call of the Reef	154
ccccxxxi	Old Æson	169
ccccxxxii	The Small People	173
ccccxxxiii	" They that walk in Darkness	177
ccccxxxiv	An Idyll of London	200
ccccxxxv	The Kindness of the Celestial	213
ccccxxxvi	The Hero of Waterloo	222
ccccxxxvii	Desert Air	227
ccccxxxviii	The Judgment of Paris	239
ccccxxxix	The Little Brown 'Bus	247
ccccxl	Inside-Out	250

		PAGE
CCCCXLI	The Saloon Passenger	E W Hornung . . . 256
CCCCXLII	The Stolen Bacillus	. H G Wells . . . 269
CCCCXLIII	The Magic Shop	. " . . . 275
CCCCXLIV	A Portrait	. John Galsworthy . . . 285
CCCCXLV	A Woman	. " " . . . 298
CCCCXLVI	A Strolling Player	R Murray Gilchrist . . . 302
CCCCXLVII	The Gaffer's Masterpiece	" " . . . 309
CCCCXLVIII	Accessory before the Fact	Algernon Blackwood . . . 313
CCCCXLIX	Saint-Pé	Hubert Crackanthorpe . . . 319
CCCCCL	A Midnight Bridal	. . Hallwell Sutcliffe . . . 322
CCCCCLI	Escape	. . Dorothea Conyers . . . 339
CCCCCLII	Bill's Shore Job	. . A J Dawson . . . 350
CCCCCLIII	The Little Town	J D Beresford . . . 355
CCCCCLIV	The Man who was Blind	Edwin Pugh . . . 361
CCCCCLV	The Yarn of Happy Jack	John Masefield . . . 373
CCCCCLVI	Three—Four—Five!	W B Maxwell . . . 377
CCCCCLVII	The Rocker	. Oliver Onions . . . 388
CCCCCLVIII	The King of the Baboons	Perceval Gibbon . . . 398
CCCCCLIX	The Passing of the Flagship	. Major W P Drury . . . 407
CCCCCLX	Narky	. Sax Rohmer . . . 415

LIST OF PLATES

	Frontispiece
H G Wells . . . . .	Facing page 16
Jerome K Jerome . . . . .	" " 36
Mrs W K Clifford . . . . .	" " 56
H A Vachell . . . . .	" " 68
Bart Kennedy . . . . .	" " 80
Sarah Grand . . . . .	" " 96
Eden Phillpotts . . . . .	" " 112
Anthony Hope . . . . .	" " 128
W W Jacobs . . . . .	" " 160
Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch . . . . .	" " 184
Israel Zangwill . . . . .	" " 208
Beatrice Harraden . . . . .	" " 232
R S Hichens . . . . .	" " 288
John Galsworthy . . . . .	" " . . .

---

The English Story-Tellers

---

The 'Nineties and the New Century

OF the work of the English short-story writers of the generation represented in this volume—the first of the authors was born in 1859, the latest in 1888—it can assuredly be said that it well upholds the standard both in invention in the story that is told and in the artistry that is evidenced in the telling. The generation is one that is of special interest in that it may be said to be that which represents, speaking broadly, work produced during the opening years of the twentieth century. Some of the writers, it is true, had already established their reputations in the “wonderful ‘nineties” of last century, when “The Yellow Book” and other publications were giving a fillip to the art of the short story, but some of those whose work is represented in this instalment of the thousand of the best short stories of the world, were still at school when the present century began. Their work in the short story, in its range and in its artistry, will be found as variously attractive and as pleasing as that of their predecessors.

The duality of the work of Jerome Klapka Jerome (b. 1859)—the humorist who could indulge in the farcical narrative of “Three Men in a Boat,” and the sentimentalist who could devise the play of “The Passing of the Third Floor Back”—is well shown in the tender romance of “Portrait of a Lady.” Jerome K. Jerome
With its touch of whimsical surprise at the revelation of the portrait’s original, a revelation which is yet, we feel, perfectly natural, the story is a particularly successful example of the contrast between the musings of the sentimentalist and the reality in which those musings take their rise. “The Fall of Maung San,” one of the “Palace Tales” of Harold Fielding-Hall (1859–1917), is a striking example of the way in which some men who have carried on the work of the Empire in distant parts, have been gifted with the power of depicting for stay-at-homes the psychology of the peoples among whom they have dwelt. We find here that something of the magic of the Arabian Nights seems actually to have been experienced by the writer who had closely studied the people of Burma, and who gave us, in "The Soul of a People" and other books, works of lasting value and of fascinating interest

As an intimate character-study there is something peculiarly impressive about the old shepherd as he is revealed in his wife's simple narrative of "The Death of Snarley Bob" by a writer who won distinction as professor of philosophy as well as writer of remarkable short stories. His volume, "Mad Shepherds," from which this story is taken, is a strikingly original and individual work. In

L. P. Jacks this gem of seemingly artless narration, Professor Lawrence Pearsall Jacks (b 1860) fixes the old shepherd in our memory as a fine type of the strong, self-reliant man, whose life and religion have become so inextricably blent that he passes away in something of an ecstasy to go to the help of another Shepherd. We proceed from a philosophical observer's revelation of the unsophisticated to the record of a victim

Mrs. W. K. Clifford of sophistication in Mrs W. K. Clifford's strange account of what went on "In the Heart of the Wood." Here a successful novelist, a skilled and critical delineator of modern life, develops in a strikingly unconventional fashion the tragedy that overcomes a couple who have defied the conventions and figured in the divorce court.

Horace Annesley Vachell (b 1861), traveller, novelist, and dramatist, has proved particularly successful in the presentation of character with a touch of oddity, and in "The Chameleon," the

H. A. Vachell qualities of which he had given evidence, now in an account of life on the Pacific slope, now in a novel such as "Quinneys," are shown to capital advantage. The central figure of the story is indeed a most engaging scamp, an adventurer with whom it is impossible not to sympathise in the successive stages of his most variegated career, while the happy trick by which he justifies his name is a thoroughly ingenious and ticklesome device. If the story fails in any particular it is only in so far as it leaves the reader wondering whether the man of so many name-colours really did settle down with

Mary Coleridge his friend or only break out anew after an interval. Mary Coleridge (1861-1907) affords a striking contrast with "The King is Dead, Long Live the King," a story which possesses the simple directness of a fairy-tale, though marked by touches of a quiet cynicism. It is the death of a king, too, that inspired

Bart Kennedy Bart Kennedy (b 1861) to his vivid realisation of "The King's Last Sailing," the passing of the pyre-ship bearing the body of the Viking Smerd, with its touch of romance. A writer who had won popularity by his realistic rendering in words of some of the sordid aspects of modern life proved in this story capable of visualising, and making his readers visualise, a striking episode from a legendary past.

"When the Door Opened—?" by Sarah Grand (b 1861), is a remarkable example of what may be summed up as the story without an end—the story that is which holds the reader entranced up to a certain point, and there breaks off, leaving him puzzled by a perennial note of interrogation as to what happened next. The story which follows is by a writer who showed himself not only a naturalist with great gifts of literary expression but also a charming master of fanciful romance and a gifted exponent of the art of the short story. "The Story of a Piebald Horse," by Sarah Grand

W H Hudson (b 1862), is one of the impressions of South American life in which the gifted naturalist has shown himself no less acute an observer of men than of the birds and other creatures of the wild of which he has written so revealingly in various volumes. Though Eden Phillpotts (b 1862) needed for his greatest efforts the full canvas of the novel, on which could be indicated the broad background of Dartmoor, in how excellent a fashion he could make use of the smaller space of the fiction "kit-cat," is capitally exemplified in "The Skipper's Bible," where a tragic tale of the sea is rendered with great vigour

THE quiet humour of Sir Anthony Hope Hawkins (b 1863), the smiling recognition of human weakness shown in many of his stories of contemporary life, are well illustrated by "The Grey Frock," where the vanity of woman and the egotism of man are played off cleverly against each other with a touch of kindly cynicism, while that neat mastery of the give-and-take of social talk which made "The Dolly Dialogues" one of the successes of its decade in the realms of light literature, is well represented in "A Liberal Education," a happy example of the delightful inconsequence of the lady whose dialogues made her famous

How thin is the partition that divides humour from tragedy may well be instanced in the work of W W Jacobs (b 1863), one of the chief masters of the humorous short story of his time—the story in which drollery of character, situation, and dialogue are employed in combination to most diverting ends, he yet proved himself, in "The Monkey's Paw," also able to write in the authentic tragic vein within the compass of the short story, to bring the eerie within the sphere of the solidities of Suburbia. In "An Odd Freak" the same writer is on ground that he had earlier made peculiarly his own. Among writers of the short story who won instant popularity in the 'nineties was Arthur Morrison (b 1863), in whose "Tales of Mean Streets" some of the sordid aspects of London life were revealed with great skill. That the writer could touch another note no less skilfully is well shown by "Charlwood with a Number," the story by which he is here represented. It is a pleasant study of a zealous amateur astronomer who seeks to make his daily life run equably as the course of the stars which he observes by way of constant hobby

As writer of exciting novels of adventure with qualities that gripped and held the willing reader, Max Pemberton (b 1863) has enjoyed considerable popularity, and his gifts as narrator have been well shown in the art of the short story also. "Joie-de-Loup" is an admirably rendered tale of the lost child, from an unaccustomed angle—that of the child itself—dimly remembering, and but half-consciously fumbling after, something of an unrecapturable past. Then, derelict in Paris, a chord of subconscious memory is struck, and the boy makes, he knows not why, for the church where his mother had worshipped—where she is at the moment worshipping

POET, critic, and novelist, it was as revealer of the life of the Cornish coast places both of his own time and of the past, that "Q" (Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch, b 1863) early won admiration. His consummate skill in the artistry of the short story is well illustrated in the three examples here given. "Roll-Call of the Reef" has those qualities which might well convert it into a veritable legend of the coast with which it deals. (It may be compared, for contrast, with Major W. P. Drury's "The Passing of the Flagship," one of the later stories of this volume.) "Old Æson" is a clever example of the serio-comic, and "The Small People" a poignant presentation of the problem of country hopes choked and faded in the city air.

Israel Zangwill (b 1864) is a skilful practitioner of the art of short-story writing, and his volume of tales entitled, "They That Walk in Darkness," is marked not only by powerful realisation in the opening story of all that is meant by the affliction of blindness, but also throughout by fine appreciation of the form and content of the short story. The title-story of that collection by which he is here represented is extremely impressive in the way in which it reveals at once the character of the clever lad suddenly doomed to loss of sight, and that of the loving mother ready to catch at any straw of hope in the vain hope of a cure for him. Something of the same theme is subjected to very different treatment in Edwin Pugh's "The Man Who Was Blind" which appears later in this volume. Another kind of solitariness, that which may fall upon an individual dwelling in a crowded city, is the theme cleverly presented in "An Idyll of London," by Beatrice Harraden (b 1864). In it a lonely old man who earns a precarious living by copying pictures at the National Gallery, finds something of loving sympathy in his last hours from a young girl who is also lonely amid the crowd.

A more cheerful note is that struck by Barry Pain (b 1867), whose work has been largely rendered in short stories of a humorous turn. In "The Kindness of the Celestial" he tells of a whimsical schoolboy who sets out to win by ostentatious kindness a master who is ever too ready to reprimand him.

Among the novelists of his time, who were not less successful as short-story writers, Bernard Capes (1864–1918) was notable, especially with his "Historical Vignettes," which rendered the true atmosphere of history in a series of pleasantly invented stories. "The Hero of Waterloo" is a capital instance, it might be a tender reminiscence of the later years of George III., recovered from some contemporary memoir. Another writer who may be regarded as scarcely less brilliant as a short-story writer than as a novelist, is Robert Hichens (b 1864), whose "Desert Air" shows how the very air which a man breathes, the environment in which he finds himself, may transform his nature from that which it has hitherto appeared to be to something entirely the reverse. It is a study in the relation of environment to psychology which is, as it was designed to be, eerily impressive.

Robert
Hichens

Leonard Merrick's (b 1864) stories of Paris life, whether in the form of the full-length novel or within the exacting limits of the short story, are marked by consummate skill in the telling, and have gained for him a high position in the regard of his fellow-craftsmen. In "The Judgment of Paris" he is peculiarly successful in giving at once the romantic atmosphere in which the two Parisian actors are willing to submit to the judgment of their fellow-citizens as to which is the better actor, and in compelling belief in the way in which that judgment is gained. A full story, it reads and remains in the memory, compact, complete, and satisfying as a well-told anecdote.

Leonard
Merrick

A HIGH place among the writers who have found the main source of their inspiration in the highways and byways of London, is occupied by Pett Ridge (b 1864), and more particularly among those who have humorously interpreted that which they have observed. "The Little Brown 'Bus" is but an account of a short 'bus journey in the East End of London, yet is the journey so neatly rendered in words that the reader feels as though he himself had done the trip through dockland in company with the free-and-easy sailor who makes himself the dominating figure of the 'bus-load of passengers. Quite of another kind is the trip that we take with "The Saloon Passenger," in the story by E. W. Hornung (b 1866), a novelist of strong and varied gifts. Here the journey is from Britain to the Antipodes, and the passenger is a murderer who on setting out thinks himself free until the end of the voyage at least. Signals from a passing ship leave him in doubt as to what his captain may have learnt, and the man's thoughts and feelings, so markedly different from the easy manners which he has to maintain towards all on board, are effectively and convincingly rendered.

Pett
Ridge

E. W.
Hornung

Herbert George Wells (b 1866) has displayed versatility alike in the manner and the matter of his fiction. As novelist he turned from excursions into a realm in which science and fancy combined to produce marvels with an astonishing verisimilitude, to almost uncannily realistic renderings of contemporary character and psychology. In the art of the short story he displayed something of the same mastery. The two examples of his art which are included in this collection well represent his gifts as a narrator. In "The Stolen Bacillus" we are made to feel horror at the idea of the Anarchist's theft of a tube of cholera bacilli, and yet to delight in the farcical pursuit, and to laugh at the ridiculous dénouement. In "The Magic Shop" we find ourselves thoroughly under the spell of the gifted story-teller.

H. G. Wells

NOVELIST and dramatist of great distinction, John Galsworthy (b 1867) is also an able exponent of the short story. His ability as a delineator of character is strikingly exhibited in "A Portrait," an amazingly successful example of the art of presenting an individual through the medium of words, and one that may incidentally be regarded as a striking reply to much of the sneering criticism directed against the "Victorians." His dramatic episode of "A Woman" is sharply, unforgettably vignetted. As interpreter of the tragedy and comedy discernible to an acute observer among the folks of the Derbyshire Peakland district, R. Murray Gilchrist (1868-1917) wrote capitably both in novels and in short stories. His vivid human qualities are well displayed here in "A Strolling Player" and "The Gaffer's Masterpiece," both tense with restrained emotion, in the one instance that of a lonely bereaved couple, and in the other, that of a simple old countryman whose lovingly-produced "masterpiece" is wantonly destroyed.

Algernon Blackwood (b 1869) is an approved master of the weird and the wonderful, and especially of such as may be revealed by excursions over the borderland of ordinary psychology. Mr Wells won much of his earlier fame by the rendering of marvels of scientific materialisation, but Mr Blackwood has sought to penetrate and display mental mysteries. The skill with which he can do so is well illustrated in the strange story of "Accessory Before the Fact," with its uncomfortable trespassing of one man upon another's personality. Hubert Crackanthorpe (1870-96), within his short life, won prompt recognition as one of the notable writers of the closing decade of the nineteenth century. In a volume of "Vignettes" he gave evidence of excellent craftsmanship in the art of the short story, and in "Saint-Pé," by which he is here represented, we have a characteristic piece of his careful work in the presentation of a shameless old French beggar. Striking is the contrast between the careful etching shown in "Saint-Pé" and the broad effect produced in "A Midnight Bridal" by Halliwell Sutcliffe.

Halliwell Sutcliffe (b 1870) The romantic novelist of the Yorkshire moors is also narrator of gripping short stories, and this tale of a strangely-arranged wedding to avert a family curse is an engaging example of his art, vivid in its portrayal of the proud Scots family forced by fate to an unbecomingly unconventional proceeding, and arresting in its sharp succession of remarkable, but seemingly inevitable happenings. From romance of the eighteenth century, "Escape," by Dorothea Conyers (b 1871), brings us to the present day, and the problem that faces every perpetrator of a crime against the laws of the land in which he lives—that of evading the consequences of his crime Crime and its detection have been much utilised by short-story writers, though only occasionally have they been used greatly In this clever story the author is concerned with the criminal's almost frantic mental agitation over his escape Elaborately he "covers up his tracks" and has practically escaped when, believing himself discovered, he commits suicide, and only thus betrays himself An entertaining story is told by A J Dawson (b 1872) in "Bill's Shore Job" wherein we find that the genteel A B, though he has awakened the interest of the daughter of his ship's owner, finds the call of the sea stronger than that of possible romance

A J
Dawson

ALLEGORY, which is a somewhat uncommon note with later short-story writers, is employed by J D Beresford (b 1873) in his account of "The Little Town" wherein he tells how he found a strange place of entertainment named Kosmos, where the master of the puppets moved them about in a way that seemed to the spectators to be without beginning or end or purpose Though his best work has been done in the full-sized novel Mr Beresford in such stories as this shows himself well capable of effecting his purpose within the more constricted limits of the short story Writer of interesting novels in which London life and character have played an important part, Edwin Pugh (b 1874) is a skilled master of narrative art, and his success in the short-story form is well indicated in the carefully rendered account of "The Man Who Was Blind" Mr Zangwill, in the story of his which has already been commented on, has told the story of the blind Jewish lad who hails "the healer" as he falls dead In Mr Pugh's story we have a similar theme with something like a reversal of the dénouement Both writers have been able to imagine themselves into the conditions of their subjects, the one with something of the sombre intensity of hopelessness, the other with the sympathy which demands "a happy ending"

J D Beresford

Edwin
Pugh

Although it is as poet that John Masefield (b 1875) has won his widest fame, he had before doing so gained cordial appreciation as a writer of short stories of the sea as well as of sea ballads, and with "A Tarpaulin Muster" and other volumes had won a position among leading describers of the romance and reality of life on the ocean wave In "The Yarn of Happy Jack," taken from the volume named, he gives through the lips of a Norwegian sailor a story that combines fairyland and a simple moral in a fashion that is reminiscent of that great master of story-telling, the Danish Hans Andersen Son of M E Braddon, one of the most popular novelists of her time, W B Maxwell (b 1876) has himself taken a high place among writers of fiction of the succeeding generation by his careful considerative novels of modern life As a short-story writer he is here well represented by "Three—Four—Five!" a delightful account of the origin of a Suburban

John Masefield

W B
Maxwell

family feud in the great "Sale" of a big drapery establishment It is a heartily entertaining essay in social satire

In "The Rocker" Oliver Onions gives a wonderful impression of the group about an old farm kitchen—the children playing about

Oliver Onions

the aged aunt knitting by the fireside, and the gipsy chair-mender and her babe The old aunt is the central figure, and it is her romance that is delicately, allusively suggested, thanks to the vision of the gipsy It is a rarely dainty and touching piece of the romance of life unfulfilled, and well represents the work of a writer whose novels and stories are all marked by a distinctive literary quality Although he has also written notable

Perceval Gibbon

novels, it is more especially as a short-story writer that Perceval Gibbon (b 1879) has won distinction, and from the publication of "Vrouw Grobelaar's Leading Cases" has continuously exercised the art of the short story with happy results His "The King of the Baboons" is a very interesting tale of up-country Boer life, though the struggle between the settlers and the creatures of the wild has an uncannily suggestive hint of the missing link of which much was heard in the days when the Darwinian theory was matter of everyday discussion The "spectre ship" seems to belong to the old days of "the wooden walls," galleons, and sea rovers, but in "The Passing of the Flagship" Major W. P Drury gives us a new rendering of the idea in these modern times of iron ships and electric light, and as has been suggested it will be found interesting to compare his account of the vision that appeared before Private Pagett of the Marines with "Q's" "Roll-Call of the Reef" earlier in the volume

Sax Rohmer

Among latter-day writers who, in the short story, have ingeniously exploited crime, both in the dramatic and humorous veins, Sax Rohmer has proved one of the most successful, and a representative example of his humorous work is the story of "Narky" here given The ingenuous way in which the would-be burglar of a pawnbroker's premises seeks to fascinate the pawnbroker's daughter, and the ingenious way in which she manages so that he shall be hoist with his own petard, combine to make a thoroughly diverting story of Cockney low life.

W. J.

PORTRAIT OF A LADY

MY work pressed upon me, but the louder it challenged me—such is the heart of the timid fighter—the less stomach I felt for the contest I wrestled with it in my study, only to be driven to my books I walked out to meet it in the streets, only to seek shelter from it in music-hall or theatre Thereupon it waxed importunate and overbearing, till the shadow of it darkened all my doings The thought of it sat beside me at the table, and spoilt my appetite The memory of it followed me abroad, and stood between me and my friends, so that all talk died upon my lips, and I moved among men as one ghost-ridden

Then the throbbing town, with its thousand distracting voices, grew maddening to me I felt the need of converse with solitude, that master and teacher of all the arts, and I bethought me of the Yorkshire Wolds, where a man may walk all day, meeting no human creature, hearing no voice but the curlew's cry, where, lying prone upon the sweet grass, he may feel the pulsation of the earth, travelling its eleven hundred miles a minute through the æther So one morning I bundled many things, some needful, more needless, into a bag, hurrying lest somebody or something should happen to stay me, and that night I lay in a small northern town, that stands upon the borders of smokedom at the gate of the great moors, and at seven the next morning I took my seat beside a one-eyed carrier, behind an ancient piebald mare The one-eyed carrier cracked his whip, the piebald horse jogged forward, the nineteenth century, with its turmoil, fell away behind us, the distant hills, creeping nearer, swallowed us up, and we became but a moving speck upon the face of the quiet earth

Late in the afternoon we arrived at a village, the memory of which had been growing in my mind It lies in the triangle formed by the sloping walls of three great fells, and not even the telegraph wire has reached it yet, to murmur to it whispers of the restless world—or had not at the time of which I write Nought disturbs it save, once a day, the one-eyed carrier—if he and his piebald mare have not yet laid their ancient bones to rest—who, passing through, leaves a few letters and parcels to be called for by the people of the scattered hill-farms round about It is the meeting-place of two noisy brooks Through the sleepy days and the hushed nights, one hears them ever chattering to themselves as children playing alone some game of make-believe. Coming from their far-off homes among the hills, they mingle their waters here, and journey on in company, and then their converse is more serious, as becomes those who have joined hands and are moving onward towards life together. Later they reach sad, weary towns, black beneath a never-lifted pall of smoke, where day and night the clang of iron drowns all human voices, where the children play with ashes, where the men and women have dull, patient faces, and so on, muddy and stained, to the deep sea that ceaselessly calls to them. Here, however, their waters are fresh and clear, and their passing makes the only stir that the valley has ever known. Surely, of all peaceful places, this was the one where a tired worker might find strength.

My one-eyed friend had suggested I should seek lodgings at the house of one Mistress Cholmondley, a widow lady, who resided with her only daughter in the whitewashed cottage that is the last house in the village, if you take the road that leads over Coll Fell.

"Tha' can see th' house from here, by reason o' its standing so high above t'others," said the carrier, pointing with his whip. "It's theer or nowhere, aw'm thinking, for folks don't often coom seeking lodgings in these parts."

The tiny dwelling, half smothered in June roses, looked idyllic, and, after a lunch of bread and cheese at the little inn, I made my way to it by the path that passes through the churchyard. I had conjured up the vision of a stout, pleasant, comfort-radiating woman, assisted by some bright, fresh girl, whose rosy cheeks and sunburnt hands would help me banish from my mind all clogging recollections of the town, and hopeful, I pushed back the half-opened door and entered.

The cottage was furnished with a taste that surprised me, but in themselves my hosts disappointed me. My bustling, comely housewife turned out a wizened, bleary-eyed dame. All day long she dozed in her big chair, or crouched with shrivelled hands spread out before the fire. My dream of winsome maidenhood vanished before the reality of a weary-looking, sharp-featured woman of between forty and fifty. Perhaps there had been a time when the listless eyes had sparkled with roguish merriment, when the shrivelled, tight-drawn lips had pouted temptingly, but spinsterhood does not sweeten the juices of a woman, and strong country air, though, like old ale, it is good when taken occasionally, dulls the brain if lived upon. A narrow, uninteresting woman I found her, troubled with a shyness that sat ludicrously upon her age, and that yet failed to save her from the landlady's customary failing of loquacity concerning "better days," together with an irritating, if harmless, affectation of youthfulness

All other details were, however, most satisfactory, and at the window commanding the road that leads through the valley towards the distant world, I settled down to face my work

But the spirit of industry, once driven forth, returns with coy steps I wrote for perhaps an hour, and then throwing down my halting pen, I looked about the room, seeking distraction. A Chippendale bookcase stood against the wall and I strolled over to it. The key was in the lock, and opening its glass doors, I examined the well-filled shelves. They held a curious collection—miscellanies with quaint, glazed bindings, novels, and poems, whose authors I had never heard of, old magazines long dead, their very names forgotten, "keepsakes" and annuals, redolent of an age of vastly pretty sentiments and lavender-coloured silks. On the top shelf, however, was a volume of Keats, wedged between a number of the Evangelical Rambler and Young's Night Thoughts, and standing on tip-toe, I sought to draw it from its place. The book was jammed so tightly that my efforts brought two or three others tumbling about me, covering me with a cloud of fine dust, and to my feet there fell, with a rattle of glass and metal, a small miniature painting, framed in black wood.

I picked it up, and, taking it to the window, examined it. It was the picture of a young girl, dressed in the fashion of thirty years ago—I mean thirty years ago then. I fear it must be nearer fifty, speaking as from now—when our grandmothers wore corkscrew curls, and low-cut bodices that one wonders how they kept from slipping down. The face was beautiful, not merely with the conventional beauty of tiresome regularity and impossible colouring such as one finds in all miniatures, but with soul behind the soft deep eyes. As I gazed, the sweet lips seemed to laugh at me, and yet there lurked a sadness in the smile, as though the artist, in some rare moment, had seen the coming shadow of life across the sunshine of the face. Even my small knowledge of Art told me that the work was clever, and I wondered why it should have lain so long neglected, when as a mere ornament it was valuable. It must have been placed in the bookcase years ago by some one, and forgotten.

I replaced it among its dusty companions, and sat down once more to my work. But between me and the fading light came the face of the miniature, and would not be banished. Wherever I turned it looked out at me from the shadows I am not naturally fanciful, and the work I was engaged upon, the writing of a farcical comedy, was not of the kind to excite the dreamy side of a man's nature I grew angry with myself, and made a further effort to fix my mind upon the paper in front of me But my thoughts refused to return from their wanderings. Once, glancing back over my shoulder, I could have sworn I saw the original of the picture sitting in the big chintz-covered chair in the far corner It was dressed in a faded lilac frock, trimmed with some old lace, and I could not help noticing the beauty of the folded hands, though in the portrait only the head and shoulders had been drawn

Next morning I had forgotten the incident, but with the lighting of the lamp the memory of it awoke within me, and my interest grew so strong that again I took the miniature from its hiding-place and looked at it

And then the knowledge suddenly came to me that I knew the face Where had I seen her, and when? I had met her and spoken to her The picture smiled at me, as if rallying me on my forgetfulness I put it back upon its shelf, and sat racking my brains, trying to recollect, we had met somewhere—in the country—a long time ago, and had talked of commonplace things To the vision of her clung the scent of roses and the murmuring voices of haymakers Why had I never seen her again? Why had she passed so completely out of my mind?

My landlady entered to lay my supper, and I questioned her, assuming a careless tone Reason with or laugh at myself as I would, this shadowy memory was becoming a romance to me It was as though I were talking of some loved, dead friend, even to speak of whom to commonplace people was a sacrilege I did not want the woman to question me in return

"Oh, yes," answered my landlady Ladies had often lodged with her Sometimes people stayed the whole summer, wandering about the woods and fells, but to her thinking the great hills were lonesome. Some of her lodgers had been young ladies, but she could not remember any of them having impressed her with their beauty But then it was said women were never a judge of other women They had come and gone Few had ever returned, and fresh faces drove out the old "You have been letting lodgings for a long time?" I asked "I suppose it could be fifteen—twenty years ago that strangers to you lived in this room?"

"Longer than that," she said quietly, dropping for the moment all affectation. "We came here from the farm when my father died.

He had had losses, and there was but little left That is twenty-seven years ago now "

I hastened to close the conversation, fearing long-winded recollections of " better days " I have heard such so often from one landlady and another I had not learnt much Who was the original of the miniature, how it came to be lying forgotten in the dusty bookcase were still mysteries , and with a strange perversity I could not have explained to myself, I shrank from putting a direct question

So two days more passed by My work took gradually a firmer grip upon my mind, and the face of the miniature visited me less often But in the evening of the third day, which was a Sunday, a curious thing happened

I was returning from a stroll, and dusk was falling as I reached the cottage I had been thinking of my farce, and I was laughing to myself at a situation that seemed to me comical, when, passing the window of my room, I saw looking out the sweet, fair face that had become so familiar to me It stood close to the latticed panes, a slim, girlish figure, clad in the old-fashioned lilac-coloured frock in which I had imagined it on the first night of my arrival, the beautiful hands clasped across the breast, as then they had been folded on the lap Her eyes were gazing down the road that passes through the village and goes south , but they seemed to be dreaming, not seeing, and the sadness in them struck upon one almost as a cry I was close to the window, but the hedge screened me, and I remained watching, until, after a minute I suppose, though it appeared longer, the figure drew back into the darkness of the room and disappeared

I entered, but the room was empty I called, but no one answered The uncomfortable suggestion took hold of me that I must be growing a little crazy All that had gone before I could explain to myself as a mere train of thought, but this time it had come to me suddenly—uninvited, while my thoughts had been busy elsewhere This thing had appeared not to my brain but to my senses I am not a believer in ghosts, but I am in the hallucinations of a weak mind, and my own explanation was in consequence not very satisfactory to myself

I tried to dismiss the incident, but it would not leave me , and later that same evening, something else occurred that fixed it still clearer in my thoughts I had taken out two or three books at random with which to amuse myself, and turning over the leaves of one of them, a volume of verses, by some obscure poet, I found its sentimental passages much scored and commented upon in pencil, as was common fifty years ago—as may be common now, for your Fleet Street cynic has not altered the world and its ways to quite the extent that he imagines

One poem in particular had evidently appealed greatly to the reader's sympathies. It was the old, old story of the gallant who woos and rides away, leaving the maiden to weep. The poetry was poor, and at another time its conventionality would have excited only my ridicule. But, reading it in conjunction with the quaint, naïve notes scattered about its margins, I felt no inclination to jeer. These hackneyed stories that we laugh at are deep profundities to the many who find in them some shadow of their own sorrows, and she—for it was a woman's handwriting—to whom this book belonged had loved its trite verses, because in them she had read her own heart. This, I told myself, was her story also, a common enough story in life as in literature, but novel to those who live it.

There was no reason for my connecting her with the original of the miniature, except perhaps a subtle relationship between the thin nervous handwriting and the mobile features, yet I felt instinctively they were one and the same, and that I was tracing, link by link, the history of my forgotten friend.

I felt urged to probe further, and next morning, while my landlady was clearing away my breakfast things, I fenced round the subject once again. "By the way," I said, "while I think of it, if I leave any books or papers here behind me, send them on at once. I have a knack of doing that sort of thing. I suppose," I added, "your lodgers often do leave some of their belongings behind them."

It sounded to myself a clumsy ruse. I wondered if she would suspect what was behind it.

"Not often," she answered, "never, that I can remember, except in the case of one poor lady, who died here."

I glanced up quickly. "In this room?" I asked.

My landlady seemed troubled at my tone. "Well, not exactly in this very room. We carried her upstairs, but she died immediately. She was dying when she came here. I should not have taken her in had I known. So many people are prejudiced against a house where death has occurred, as if there were any where it had not. It was not quite fair to us."

I did not speak for a while, and the rattle of the plates and knives continued undisturbed.

"What did she leave here?" I asked at length

"Oh, just a few books and photographs, and such-like small things that people bring with them to lodgings," was the reply "Her people promised to send for them, but they never did, and I suppose I forgot them They were not of any value"

The woman turned as she was leaving the room "It won't drive you away, sir, I hope, what I have told you," she said "It all happened a long while ago"

"Of course not," I answered "It interested me, that was all" And the woman went out, closing the door behind her

So here was the explanation, if I chose to accept it I sat long that morning, wondering to myself whether things I had learnt to laugh at could be after all realities And a day or two afterwards I made a discovery that confirmed all my vague surmises

Rummaging through this same dusty bookcase, I found in one of the ill-fitting drawers, beneath a heap of torn and tumbled books, a diary, belonging to the 'fifties, stuffed with many letters and shapeless flowers, pressed between stained pages, and there—for the writer of stories, tempted by human documents, is weak—in faded ink, brown and withered like the flowers, I read the story I already knew

Such a very old story it was, and so conventional He was an artist—was ever story of this type written where the hero was not an artist? They had been children together, loving each other without knowing it, till one day it was revealed to them Here is the entry

"May 18th I do not know what to say, or how to begin Chris loves me I have been praying to God to make me worthy of him, and dancing round the room in my bare feet for fear of waking them below He kissed my hands and clasped them round his neck, saying they were beautiful as the hands of a goddess, and he knelt and kissed them again. I am holding them before me and kissing them myself I am glad they are so beautiful O God, why are you so good to me? Help me to be a true wife to him Help me that I may never give him an instant's pain! Oh, that I had more power of loving, that I might love him better,"—and thus foolish thoughts for many pages, but foolish thoughts of the kind that has kept this worn old world, hanging for so many ages in space, from turning sour

Later, in February, there is another entry that carries on the story

"Chris left this morning He put a little packet into my hands at the last moment, saying it was the most precious thing he possessed, and that when I looked at it I was to think of him who loved it Of course I guessed what it was, but I ~~did not~~ open it till I was alone in my room It is the picture of myself that he has been so secret about, but oh, so beautiful I wonder if I am really as beautiful as this But I wish he had not made me look so sad I am kissing the little lips I love them, because he loved to kiss them O sweetheart! it will be long before you kiss them again Of course, it was right for him to go, and I am glad he has been able to manage it He could not study properly in this quiet country place, and now he will be able to go to Paris and Rome and he will be great Even the stupid people here see how clever he is But, oh, it will be so long before I see him again, my love! my king!"

With each letter that comes from him, similar foolish rhapsodies are written down, but these letters of his, I gather, as I turn the pages, grow after a while colder and fewer, and a chill fear that dare not be penned creeps in among the words

"March 12th Six weeks and no letter from Chris, and oh dear! I am so hungry for one, for the last I have almost kissed to pieces I suppose he will write more often when he gets to London He is working hard, I know, and it is selfish of me to expect him to write more often, but I would sit up all night for a week rather than miss writing to him I suppose men are not like that O God, help me—help me, whatever happens! How foolish I am to-night! He was always careless I will punish him for it when he comes back, but not very much" Truly enough a conventional story

Letters do come from him after that, but apparently they are less and less satisfactory, for the diary grows angry and bitter, and the faded writing is blotted at times with tears Then towards the end of another year there comes this entry, written in a hand of strange neatness and precision

"It is all over now I am glad it is finished I have written to him, giving him up I have told him I have ceased to care for him, and that it is better we should both be free It is best that way He would have had to ask me to release him, and that would have given him pain He was always gentle Now he will be able to marry her with an easy conscience, and he need never know what I have suffered She is more fitted for him than I am I hope he will be happy I think I have done the right thing"

A few lines follow, left blank, and then the writing is resumed, but in a stronger, more vehement hand. "Why do I lie to myself? I hate her! I would kill her if I could. I hope she will make him wretched, and that he will come to hate her as I do, and that she will die! Why did I let them persuade me to send that lying letter? He will show it to her, and she will see through it and laugh at me. I could have held him to his promise, he could not have got out of it.

Roll

John Jerome

"What do I care about dignity, and womanliness, and right, and all the rest of the canting words! I want him. I want his kisses, and his arms about me. He is mine! He loved me once! I have only given him up because I thought it a fine thing to play the saint. It is only an acted lie. I would rather be evil, and he loved me. Why do I deceive myself? I want him. I care for nothing else at the bottom of my heart—his love, his kisses!" And towards the end "My God, what am I saying? Have I no shame, no strength? O God, help me!"

And there the diary closes.

I looked among the letters, lying between the pages of the book. Most of them were signed simply "Chris" or "Christopher." But one gave his name in full, and it was a name I know well as that of a famous man, whose hand I have often shaken. I thought of his hard-featured, handsome wife, and of his great chill place, half house, half exhibition, in Kensington, filled constantly with its smart, chattering set, among whom he seemed always to be the uninvited guest, of his weary face and bitter tongue. And thinking thus, there rose up before me the sweet, sad face of the woman of the miniature, and, meeting her eyes, as she smiled at me from out of the shadows, I looked at her my wonder.

I took the miniature from its shelf. There would be no harm now in learning her name. So I stood with it in my hand till a little later my landlady entered to lay the cloth.

"I tumbled this out of your bookcase," I said, "in reaching down some books. It is some one I know—some one I have met, but I cannot think where. Do you know who it is?"

The woman took it from my hand, and a faint flush crossed her withered face. "I had lost it," she answered. "I never thought of looking there. It's a portrait of myself, painted years ago, by a friend."

I looked from her to the miniature, as she stood among the shadows, with the lamplight falling on her face, and saw her perhaps for the first time.

"How stupid of me," I answered. "Yes, I see the likeness now."

HAROLD FIELDING-HALL
1859-1917

THE FALL OF MAUNG SAN

"THE chief Minister wants to see your Majesty," said Maung San

"Very well," said the King, "tell him to come to the audience at twelve o'clock"

"But he says it is an urgent and a private matter, your Majesty"

"Humph!" said the King. He was engaged eating mangoes with his chief Queen. He had only got as far as number fifteen, and he did not like being disturbed. "Can't he wait?"

"He says the matter cannot possibly wait"

The King rose with a resigned air

"There is no peace in this Palace. Always there is business. One cannot even eat half a mango without being disturbed. Bring him to the fountain room"

Maung San went out, and the King washed his hands and lips carefully out of a golden ewer held by a maid of honour

"What do you suppose he wants to see you for in such a hurry?" asked the chief Queen

"Can't say," answered the King, drying his fingers on a silk napkin. "But very likely there is no money in the treasury. Diamonds are so expensive." Here he glanced at a diamond wreath the Queen wore in her hair. "I daresay the cook can't get any money to buy us dinner"

The Queen laughed, and the King went out

He found the Minister in the fountain room alone. Maung San stood by the door, discreetly out of earshot

"Now," said the King, when the Minister had finished his obeisances, "what is this all about?"

"It is a serious matter, your Majesty," said the Minister.

"A rebellion?" asked the King

The Minister raised his hands in deprecation. "A rebellion, when all the people love your Majesty above even their own fathers? Such a thing is incredible"

"Then a disaster on the frontier?"

"Your Majesty has such able officers that a disaster is impossible. The army is even now annexing vast regions to the Empire."

"Then what is it?" said the King.

"It is about your Majesty's younger brother," answered the Minister.

The King was relieved. "Ah, indeed," he said, sitting back more comfortably. "About a Prince. Which Prince?"

"The Kawlin Prince, your Majesty."

"To be sure, the Kawlin Prince. And a girl, I suppose. Who is it now? Last time it was a secretary's daughter. Probably this time it is a Minister's wife."

The chief Minister shook his head. "Much worse than that, your Majesty."

"Not one of the Queens!" ejaculated the King, agitated.

"Worse even than that, your Majesty," and the old man wagged his head sorrowfully.

"Worse than that?" shouted the King. "Great pagodas, what do you mean? Is he going to clope with his aunt, or with the centre tower of the Palace, or with the Incomparable Pagoda? Who is it?"

"She is a gravedigger's daughter," replied the Minister.

The King leant back aghast. "Just say that again, will you?" he stammered.

"She is a gravedigger's daughter, your Majesty. She lives with her father, near Mandalay Hill, where the cemetery is. She is very beautiful, more beautiful, they say, than any lady in the Palace. All the city has heard of her. For weeks past our young men have gone to watch and see her draw water from the well in the evening. The city raves about her."

The King meditated for a moment. "Clearly this is an impossible thing," he said, "a gravedigger's daughter! None of my race could so demean himself. To make our family akin to a gravedigger's family, one of hereditary slaves! No, it is quite incredible. You have been deceived."

But the Minister was not to be so browbeaten. "Alas, it is too true, your Majesty. Your brother, the Prince, has been watched. Thrice has he gone to the well on following evenings. He shows himself quite openly there. I have heard that he intends to carry her off."

"When?" asked the King.

" Soon, your Majesty "

" He must be prevented I will arrest him," said the King Then he leant back and tapped the arm of his golden chair " But no, after all, it is impossible Have you seen the girl ? "

" No, your Majesty "

" But they say she is very beautiful "

" So they say," answered the Minister

" What do they say she is like ? "

" She is tall, your Majesty "

The King nodded

" And slender "

" They should be slender," added the King

" And has long hair "

" Curly ? " asked the King with a frown

" No, your Majesty, they say it is straight, and falls far below her knees As dark as night they call it Her eyes are large and dark too, and her brows are low and straight "

" That sounds well," said the King " What colour is she ? "

" She is dark, your Majesty Her skin is dark and soft and very lustrous, shining like satin The young men like that They say that girls with dark skins——"

" It is quite true," murmured the King absently

" But she is a gravedigger's daughter," said his Minister sharply

" Ah, ah," said the King, rousing up " Oh, of course, yes, a gravedigger's daughter Totally impossible I shudder to think of it "

The Minister said he shuddered too

Maung San wondered why the room shook so much

" Is it public yet ? " asked the King

" No, your Majesty But one or two have recognised him at the well They will not tell "

" Let us be careful," said the King, " and not do anything hurriedly " He meditated again for a time " You don't suppose the Prince will do anything to-day ? " he asked at last

" I think not," answered the Minister

" Nor to-morrow ? "

" Not for a day or two probably," answered the Minister

" Then we have a little time You see, it would not do to be premature To take sudden action would create almost as much scandal as if it was all true Let us hope it is false I will try and detain the Prince at the Palace during the evenings Do you keep a watch upon the girl and report "

" The King's commands shall be obeyed," said the Minister

" And," added the King as the Minister was leaving, " just one thing Do you think the girl can really be so beautiful ? "

" It seems impossible," said the Minister

" There are so many beautiful women in the Palace," added the King , " if she is more beautiful than they, she is indeed a wonder I should like to be certain "

" I might go and see her and report to your Majesty," suggested the Minister doubtfully

" Do so," said the King " I would like to know If she is as beautiful as is reported, she is more dangerous than a conflagration. We must guard our young men Could you report, say, to-morrow ? "

" I will do my best," said the Minister

That evening and the next there was added to the spectators at the well an old man soberly clad He did not join any of the groups there, but remained hidden behind a tree He seemed to be enjoying himself, nevertheless, for he watched the people with interest Two days later the King had his report

" You say she is only fairly good-looking," asked the King

" That is all, your Majesty A good-looking country girl "

" How about the eyes ? "

" They are but medium-sized "

" And her figure ? "

" Stumpy," said the Minister, " thickset like village girls "

" Oh ! " said the King

" Her hair," continued the Minister, " is curly and short, and her hands are big "

" And her skin ? "

" It is fair and rather dull-coloured "

The King pondered " It is somewhat remarkable that the young men should run after a damsel like that, isn't it ? " he said

" Well," admitted the Minister, " she is a little pretty, no doubt But it is a whim Really she cannot compare with any of the ladies of the Court "

" You say, however," said the King, " that the Prince is smitten with her "

"It is so, your Majesty," answered the Minister

"And he does still go to the well?"

"He still goes, your Majesty. Possibly he may be bewitched. If I might suggest, it would be as well to send for the Prince and warn him severely not to go again. He is disgracing himself."

"Do you think he would obey?" said the King.

"All people obey your Majesty," answered the courteous Minister.

"But, in case of doubt, the Prince might be banished for a time. Indeed, that would, no doubt, be the best, as he is bewitched."

"I will consider it," said the King.

Now the King was a wise man, and when the Minister had left him he considered deeply. "I should like to know," he said to himself, "how it is that, while all other people find the girl a marvel of beauty, my Minister finds her plain. Also, why he is so anxious to have the Prince banished. If she is so plain, why the anxiety?" The more the King considered the more it seemed as if there was something he did not understand behind it all. "Perhaps the old man saw the wrong girl," he thought. "No, that explanation would not do. Perhaps the Prince bribed him to say she was plain. No, that wouldn't do either, for the Minister wanted the Prince banished. There was some mystery."

"Well," thought the King, "there is but one way. I will go and look for myself. There are no eyes like one's own for seeing." He looked in one of the mirrors and smiled. Yes, his eyes were clear enough—those of a young man still. Fifty Queens told him so every day, but, after all, a mirror is more truthful than any number of Queens.

That evening the King slipped quietly out of the Palace. It was given out as usual that he had a toothache and was not to be disturbed. Outside, by the monastery, he found his faithful attendant Maung San and two ponies. The King mounted one and they rode off.

It was not far to the gravediggers' quarter, and the King and his attendant soon arrived there. They were, of course, quietly dressed, so as to attract no attention.

"We will tie up our ponies in that grove," said the King.

So they rode up to the grove, but when they came there they discovered that they were not the first arrivals. Two other ponies were tethered there, ponies with handsome saddles and trappings.

"This won't do," said the King, "we must try another place."

But in the next grove it was the same, there were two ponies also tethered, very fine ponies. The King looked at them curiously. "This is remarkable," he said.

They rode on to a third grove, which was luckily untenanted. Here they left their ponies in care of a schoolboy, whom they called from a neighbouring monastery, and walked on towards the well. It was nearly sunset when they arrived.

"Be careful," said the King, "I do not want to be seen."

They took up their position behind the fragments of a small pagoda that had fallen down in an earthquake. It was conveniently situated, not too near the well, so that others would be likely to use it, but near enough to the path to enable them to see very clearly who passed.

"Have you seen this girl?" asked the King.

"I have, your Majesty," replied the attendant, smiling.

"Then you can point her out to me when she comes," said the King.

"She cannot be mistaken," said the attendant.

"So beautiful as that?" said the King.

Maung San laughed.

Presently the girl came down the path. The sun was just setting, and a crimson glow lit up all the open way. It gave to her a grace and a glory greater than had ever been hers. She seemed to the King a dream of love passing across the world.

The King gasped. His head peered from behind the pagoda, his eyes followed her as she went. "O Lord!" said the King.

When she came to the well she was hidden by the crowd of girls there drawing water, but still the King peered.

"Your Majesty's head," suggested the attendant.

"What?" asked the King angrily.

"It might be seen, and I thought——"

"You are right," said the King, drawing it in.

"She really is beautiful," he said presently to the attendant.

"She is, your Majesty."

"More beautiful than any of the ladies in the Palace," continued the King enthusiastically.

Maung San preserved a judicious silence.

"If she were dressed up properly," added the King, "she would be marvellous—a real Queen."

"But she is a gravedigger's daughter," suggested the attendant.

"Alas! so she is," sighed the King.

The girls at the well laughed and talked Their babble came up to where the King sat waiting for the gravedigger's daughter to return.

" Did you notice her hair ? " asked the King

" I did, your Majesty "

" No curl about that, I think ? "

" None," replied the attendant

" I wish I had that old Minister here," muttered the King " He ought to be beheaded "

" Your Majesty ! "

" What ? "

" That old Minister You wished he were here Well, he is here, I think "

" How ? " demanded the King, aghast

" Here Behind that tree over there," replied the attendant, nodding to a big mango across the path " If that wasn't his old grey head sticking out when the girl went by I am greatly mistaken "

The King was perturbed

" Did he see me, do you think ? "

" I do not think so," said the attendant " But I can easily call him "

" On no account whatever," said the King, sitting down

The sun set in great splendour across the far-off hills, the heavens lit into wonders of blue and green and crimson, dim shadows began to gather under the trees

" That girl is a long time," said the King

" I beg your Majesty's pardon," said the attendant

" What ? " said the King

" There is not only the Minister here, but some one else too "

" Who ? "

" One of the Princes, I think There, by the monastery gate."

The King looked out

" It seems to be he," said the King

The Prince walked slowly along the path, followed by one of his men He did not seem to be afraid of being recognised, possibly he did not by now care very much if he was Over his shoulder he consulted with his man

The King crouched back behind the pagoda wall

" I tell you I am sure it was he," said the Prince angrily " I saw his stupid old grey head. What do you suppose he has come for ? "

"To spy on your Highness," suggested the follower

"To spy on the girl, more like," said the Prince "Oh, those old men! I tell you——"

The Prince broke off suddenly

"And there was some one else, too."

"Who?" asked the follower

"Well, I am not sure," said the Prince, "but I saw some one loafing along, and I am sure I knew his walk. Another Minister, I guess. Shocking old men!"

"Here is the girl coming," said the follower.

The Prince moved off the path and came very near where the King was hiding. Fortunately there was a low brick wall between them.

"Don't breathe," whispered the King to Maung San.

The girl came up the path, her jar upon her head, swinging along proudly. The evening was very hot and she had been bathing at the well. Her hair hung behind her in a great long mass, coming below her hips, and the wet garment clung to her limbs. She was superb. Beneath the thin cloth the Prince marked the undulations of her figure, the curves of her bosom, the grace and liveliness of her movements.

"You are fifty times a Queen," he murmured as she passed.

The King, crouching behind the wall, could see nothing.

"Well," said the Prince, "let us be off now and make arrangements. What time would be the best?"

"I should suggest midnight," said the follower.

"What! and give those old Ministers time to snatch her off before! No fear. In an hour."

"It will hardly be dark," suggested his follower.

"So much the better," said the Prince. "I do not want to run any risk."

The King rose from his seat on the ground and peered out after the girl. But he was too late, she was gone. Then he turned round and looked at Maung San.

"What is to be done?" he said.

"The Prince will carry her off in an hour," said Maung San.

"The Prince must not carry her off at all," said the King.

"Shall I go for assistance?" asked Maung San.

The King pondered.

"No! it would be too late. Go at once to the headman and tell him that a high officer is waiting here with orders to take the girl away. The headman and the girl and her father must be brought here now. I will wait for you "

" What official shall I say ? " asked Maung San

" You can say the chief Minister," replied the King " It cannot hurt his reputation, anyhow "

" When we get her what are we to do with her, your Majesty ? " asked Maung San curiously

" I will consider that while you are away," said the King severely

The King sat down to consider The light was waning now, and the stars were coming out The girls grew fewer and fewer until the path was almost deserted From the monastery near by the gongs began to ring

" It is a difficult business," said the King to himself " She is far too pretty to hurt "

Then he considered more and more deeply A thought seemed to enter his head to be dismissed with decision The Queens would go mad Fifty mad Queens " No ! it could not be done," he muttered sadly, " even though I am King "

The dusk grew deeper The path was deserted It must be nearly an hour since Maung San went away, and the King grew anxious He peered out over the wall At last he saw them coming

" Where is the girl's father ? " asked the King

" We could not find him," answered Maung San, " and this headman has given no end of trouble He wouldn't believe me I nearly had to kill him Fortunately a man came up who knew me "

" He shall be executed to-morrow," said the King

The headman threw himself upon the ground " Mercy, mercy," he said

" Now come on," said the King , " you go in front with the girl I will come behind her Do not try to run away," he added to her

" I won't," said the girl

" By the by," said the King aside to Maung San, " that man in the village knew you Did he know me ? "

" He knew you were the chief Minister," replied Maung San

" Oh ! all right," said the King

Then they started First Maung San, then the girl, then the King with his eyes glued upon her

The King turned a moment to say to the headman, " You'll be executed to-morrow," and they went on The ponies were still in the grove, and they went in that direction first

"Don't be frightened," the King said to the girl "We won't hurt you Only do not try to run away"

There was a tremendous outbreak in the village behind, men shouting, women shrieking

"Where is he?" a voice cried, and there was a babel of replies. The King glanced at Maung San and they hurried on They did not go down the path but across a field towards a plantation They were, however, too late A horseman galloping down the path saw them and gave a yell They were pursued In a moment they were overtaken and surrounded

The Prince jumped down from his pony and came up to them

"You wicked man," he said, addressing his elder brother, "you wanted my girl I saw you near the well this evening Who are you, anyhow?"

The King did not answer, and the Prince went up and peered into his face

"Oh, good Lord!" he said, recoiling

The King was a trifle embarrassed "If you sent away your men it would be better," he said

"Go away," roared the Prince "Go right home Don't stay a moment, or——" But his men had fled

"You see," said the King scornfully to the Prince, "what your wicked doings have obliged me to You were about to take this girl, the gravedigger's daughter, as your mistress Think of the scandal I had to save you from, and so——"

"You ran away with her yourself It was very good of you," murmured the Prince

"I was about to send her right away from here, with Maung San," said the King

"With Maung San?" asked the Prince

"With me?"

"With you," said the King to Maung San

"I am deeply grateful," said the Prince

"So am I," said Maung San.

"You both should be," said the King

"You will take her," said the King to Maung San, "to your house in the city, and thence to the steamer One sails for Lower Burma to-morrow morning You will see her to the frontier I will send you money to your house to give her It is a pity her father is not with her "

" We will try to get along without him," said Maung San

" We will," said the girl

" Then you will return and report "

" Of course, your Majesty," said Maung San

" And if you ever return," said the King to the girl, " you will be executed What is that clattering ? "

And indeed there was a clattering A man was galloping down upon them fast, followed by two others He rode recklessly

" Now who should this be ? " said the King

The horseman rode up to them and then leapt from his pony to seize the girl

" That girl is mine," said he

" No," said the King , " on the contrary, she's mine "

" Or mine," said the Prince

" I think mine," said Maung San meditatively

The girl said nothing , she smiled

The newcomer, angry at this opposition, came pressing forward

" Who are you ? " he said

" I am the Prince," said the Prince

" And I am the King "

" And you are the Minister," added Maung San

The Minister fell flat upon his face

" I came," he said, " to take away the girl so that the Prince should be saved There was no time to consult your Majesty," said he

" Certainly, I understand," said the King with a smile

" But His Majesty was before you," said the Prince

" There was no time to consult you," said the King, echoing the Minister's words

The King and the Prince and the Minister went home together to the Palace Maung San escorted the girl to his own house in the city.

Among the fashionable arrivals at Prome about ten days later were a wealthy Mandalay merchant and his most beautiful wife He gave out that he had come down to trade in elephants He seemed to have plenty of money, and some even declared that he was of consequence, for they had seen him in the Palace, they thought His name was Maung San As to his wife, she was the daughter of a country farmer. They were a great success wherever they went.

THE DEATH OF SNARLEY BOB

"HE'D a rough tongue, sir, but he'd a good 'eart," said the widow of Snarley Bob. "Oh, sir, but he were a wonderful man, were my master. I never knowed one like him—no, nor never 'eard o' one. I didn't think on it while he were living, but now he's gone I know what I've lost. That clever! Why, he often used to say to me, 'Polly, there ain't a bit of blessed owt as I couldn't do, if I tried.' And it were true, sir. And him nothing but a shepherd all his life, and never earned more'n eighteen shillin' a week takin' it all the year round. And us wi' a family of thirteen children, without buryin' one on 'em, and all married and doin' well. And only one fault, sir, and that not so bad as it is in some. He would have his drop of drink—that is, whenever he could get it. Not that he spent his wages on it, except now and then after the children was growed up. But you see, sir, he was that amusin' in his talk, and folks used to treat him

"Well, sir, it was last Saturday fortnight, as I was tellin' you, he come home for the last time. I can see 'im now, just as he come staggerin' in at that door. I thought when I saw him that he'd had a drop o' drink, though he'd not been 'avin' any for a long time. So I sez to myself, 'I'd better make 'im a cup o' tea,' and I begins puttin' the kettle on the fire. 'What are you doin'?' he sez. 'I'm goin' to give you a cup o' tea,' I sez, 'it'll do yer good.' 'No, it won't,' he sez, 'I've done wi' cups o' tea in this world.' 'Why,' I sez, 'what rubbish! 'Ere, sit yer down, and let me pull yer boots off.' 'You can pull 'em off,' he sez, 'but ye'll never see me put 'em on again.'

"I could see by this that it wasn't drink, besides I couldn't smell any. So I gets 'im into his chair and begins pullin' his boots off. 'What makes you talk like that?' I sez. 'You knows as you was ever so much better last night. When you've had yer medicine you'll be all right.' He said nowt for a time, but just sat, tremblin' and shiverin' in his chair. So I sez, 'Hadn't you better 'ave the doctor?' 'It's no good,' he sez, 'I'm come 'ome for the last time. It'll be good-bye this time, missis ' 'Not it,' I sez, 'you've got many years to live yet Why, wot's to make yer die?' 'It's my 'eart,' he sez, 'it's all flip-floppin' about inside me, and gurglin' like a stuck pig It's wore out, and I keep gettin' that faint' 'Oh,' I sez, 'cheer up, when you've 'ad a cup o' tea you'll feel better', but I'd hardly got the words out o' my mouth before he were gone in a dead faint

"We got 'im to bed between the three on us, and, my word, it were a job gettin' 'im up them narrer stairs! As soon as we'd made 'im comfortable, he sez to me, 'Wot I told yer's comin' to-night, Polly They've been a-callin' on me all day I see 'em and 'ear 'em, too Loud as loud Plain as plain' 'Who's been callin' yer?' I sez 'The messengers o' death,' he sez, 'and they're in this room, four on 'em, now I can 'ear 'em movin' and talkin' to one another' 'Oh,' I sez, 'it's all fancy What you 'ear is me and Mrs Rowe You lie quiet and go to sleep, and you'll be better in the mornin'' He only shook his 'ead and said, 'I can 'ear 'em'

"Well, I suppose it was about 'alf a' hour after this when Mrs Rowe sez to me, 'He looks like goin' to sleep now, Mrs Dellanow, so I think I'll go 'ome and get my master 'is supper', and she was just goin' down the stairs when all of a sudden he starts up in bed and sez, 'Do you 'ear that whistle blowin'' 'No,' I sez, 'you've been dreamin' There isn't nobody whistlin' at this time o' night' 'Yes,' he sez, 'there is, and it blowed three times There's thousands and thousands of sheep, and a tall shepherd whistlin' to his dog But he's got no dog, and it's me he's whistlin' for'

"Now, sir, you must understand that my 'usband when he was with the sheep used to work his dog wi' whistlin instead of shoutin' to it as most shepherds do You can see his whistle hangin' on that nail—that's where he hung it 'isself for twenty-five years You see, he was kind o' superstitious and used to say it was bad luck to keep yer whistle in yer poçket when you went to bed So he always hung it on that nail, the last thing at night

"'Why,' I sez, tryin' to humour 'im, 'it's his dog he's whistlin' for, not you His dog's somewhere where you can't see it He doesn't want you You lie back again, and go to sleep' 'No, no,' sez he, 'there's no dog, and the sheep's runnin' everywhere, thousands on 'em It's me he's whistlin' for, and we must whistle back to say I'm comin' Fetch it down from the nail, Polly There he is again! He's the tallest shepherd I ever saw He's one of them four that was in the room just now Whistle back, Polly, and then it'll be all right' And so he kep' on, again and again

"Mrs Rowe, who'd come into the room, said to me, 'If I was you, Mrs Dellanow, I'd fetch the whistle and blow it It'll quiet 'im, and then p'raps he'll go to sleep'

"You can understand, sir, that I was that upset I didn't know what I was doing But when he kep' on callin' and beseechin' I thought I'd better do as Mrs Rowe recommended So I went down and took the whistle from that nail—the same where you see it hangin' now When I got back I couldn't somehow bring myself to do it, so I gives it to 'im to blow 'isself But, oh dear, to see the poor thing trying to put it to his mouth it a'most broke my heart So I took it from 'im, and blowed it myself three times as he wanted me To think o' me standin' by my own 'usband's dyin'-bed and blowin' a whistle!

"When I'd done, he says, 'That's all right, he knows I'm comin' now But it'll take a long time to gather all them sheep'

"For a bit he was quite still, and both me and Mrs Rowe sat watchin', when, all of a sudden, he starts up again and sez, 'Listen, he's goin' to blow again' Well, sir, I dare say you won't believe what I'm going to tell yer, but it's as true as I'm standin' 'ere He'd hardly got the words out of his mouth when I hears a whistle blown three times—leastways I thought I did—as it might be coming from the top of that 'ill you see over there There weren't no other sounds, for it was as still a night as could be But there was some one whistling, and Mrs Rowe 'eard it too If you don't believe me, you can ask her I nearly dropped on the floor, and I knew from that minute that my 'usband was going to die

"You see, sir, my 'usband was never what you might call a religious man He were more of a readin' man, my 'usband was—papers and books and all sorts o' things—more'n was good for 'im, I often used to say You can see a lot on 'em on that little shelf If it hadn't been that they kep' 'im out o' the Nag's Head I'd ha' burned some on 'em, that I would, and I often told 'im so He knowed a wonderful lot about the stars, my 'usband did Why, he'd often sit in his chair outside that door, smokin' his pipe and watchin' 'em for hours together

"One day there was a great man came down to give a lecture on the stars in C——, and a gentleman as knowed my 'usband's tastes paid his fare and gave 'im a ticket for the lecture When he came 'ome he was that excited I thought he'd go out o' his mind He seemed as though he could think of nothing else for weeks, and it wasn't till he began to ha' bad luck wi' the ewes as he was able to shake it off He was allus lookin' in the paper to see if the gentleman as give the lecture was comin' again His name was Sir Robert Ball I dare say you've heard on 'im

" He used to spend all his Sundays readin' about stars No, sir, he 'adn't been inside the church for years ' Church is for folks as knows nowt about the stars,' he used to say ' Sir Robert Ball's my parson ' One night when he was sittin' outside the door, I sez, ' Why don't you come in and get yer supper ? It's getting cold ' ' Let it get cold,' he sez, ' I'm not comin' in till the moon's riz It's as good as a drop o' drink to see it '

" P'raps he told yer all about that time when he was took up wi' spiritualism He'd met a man in the public-'ouse who'd 'eard his talk and put 'im up to it They got 'im to go to a meetin' i' the next village, and made 'im believe as he was a medium Well, there never was such goin's-on as we 'ad wi' 'im for months He'd sit up 'alf the night, bumpin' the table and tan-rannin' wi' an old bucket till I was a'most scared out o' my life But that winter he was nearly carried off wi' the New Mony, and when he got better he said he wasn't goin' to touch the spirits no more ' There's summat in it,' he sez, ' but there's more in the stars ' And from that day I never 'eard 'im so much as talk about spirits, and you may be sure I didn't remind 'im on 'em

" You must ha' often 'eard 'im talk about the stars, sir Well, I suppose them things makes no difference to a' eddicated gentleman like you But poor folks, I sez, has no business to meddle wi' 'em All about worlds and worlds floatin' on nothin' till you got fair lost Folks as find them things out ought to keep 'em quiet, that's wot I sez Why, I've 'eard 'im talk till I was that mazed that I couldn't 'a said my prayers, no, not if I'd tried ever so

" Yes, sir, it were a strange thing that when my 'usband come to die his mind seemed to hang on his whistle more'n a'most anything else He kep' talkin' about it all night, and sayin' the tall shepherd was answerin' back, though I never 'eard nothin' myself, save that one time I told yer of.

“ ‘It’s queer he don’t talk about the stars,’ sez Mrs Rowe to me ‘He will do before he’s done, you see if he doesn’t,’ I sez

“ Well, about three o’clock I see a change in his face and knowed as the end wasn’t far off So I puts my arm round his old neck, and I sez, ‘Bob, my dear, are you prepared to meet your Maker?’ ‘Oh! I’m all right,’ he sez quite sensible, ‘don’t you bother your head about that’ ‘Don’t you think you’d better let me send for the parson?’ I sez ‘No,’ he sez, ‘but you could send for Sir Robert Ball—if you only knew where to find him’ ‘But,’ I sez, ‘wouldn’t you like somebody to pray with yer?’ Sir Robert Ball’s no good for that ‘He’s as good as anybody else,’ he sez ‘Besides, what’s the use of prayin’ now? It’s all over’ ‘It might do yer good,’ I sez ‘It’s too late,’ he sez, ‘and I don’t want it It isn’t no Maker I’m goin’ to—I’m goin’ to the stars’ ‘Oh,’ I sez, ‘you’re dreamin’ again’ ‘No, I’m not,’ he sez ‘Didn’t I tell yer they’d been a-callin’ on me all day? I don’t mean the stars, but them as lives in ’em’

“ No, sir, he wasn’t wanderin’ then ‘I wish the children was ’ere,’ he sez, ‘but you couldn’t get ’em all in this little room My eye, what a lot we’ve ’ad! And all livin’ And there’s Tom got seven of ’is own’ And a lot more like that, but I was so upset and cryin’ that I can’t remember half on it

“ About four o’clock he seemed to rally a bit and asked me to put my arm round him and lift him up So I raises him, like, on the pillow and gives him a sup o’ water ‘What day o’ the week is it?’ he sez ‘Sunday mornin’,’ I sez ‘That’s my day for the stars,’ he sez, and a smile come over his face, as were beautiful to see . No, sir, he weren’t a smilin’ man, as a rule—he allus got too much on his mind—and a lot o’ pain to bear too, sir Oh, dear me! Well, as I was a-sayin’, he were as glad as glad when he heard it were Sunday ‘What’s o’clock?’ he sez ‘Just struck four by the church clock,’ I sez ‘Then the dawn must be breakin’,’ he sez, ‘look out o’ the winder, there’s a good lass, and tell me if the sky’s clear, and if you can see the mornin’ star in the south-east’ So I goes to the winder and tells him as how the sky were clear and the mornin’ star shinin’ wonderful ‘Ah, she’s a beauty,’ he sez, ‘and as bright as she were millions o’ years ago!’

“ After a bit he sez, ‘Take yer arm off, Polly, and lay me on my right side’ When me and Mrs Rowe ’ad turned ’im round he sez, ‘You can fetch the old Bible and read a bit if you like’ ‘What shall

I read?' I sez, when Mrs Rowe had fetched it, for I wouldn't leave 'im for a minute. 'Read about the Woman in Adultery,' he sez 'Oh,' I sez, 'that'll do you no good You don't want to 'ear about them things now' 'Yes,' he sez, 'I do It's the best bit in the book But if you can't find it, the Box o' Hountment'll do as well' 'What can he mean?' I sez 'He means about them two women as come to our Lord,' sez Mrs Rowe ''Ere, I'll find 'em' So I give the Bible to Mrs Rowe and lets her read both of the bits he wanted

"While Mrs Rowe was readin' he lay as still as still, but his eyes were that bright it a'most scared me to see 'em When she'd done, he said never a word, but lay on 'is side, wi' 'is 'ead turned a bit round, starin' at the window 'I'm sure he sees summat,' sez Mrs Rowe to me 'I wonder wot it is,' I sez 'P'raps it's our Lord come to fetch 'im,' she sez 'I've 'eard o' such things'

"He must ha' lay like that for ten minutes, breathin' big breaths as though he were goin' to sleep Then I sees 'is lips movin', and I 'ad to bend my 'ead down to 'ear what he were sayin' 'He's a-blowin' again It's the tall shepherd—'im as wrote on the ground—and he's got no dog, and 'is sheep's scatterin' It's me he wants Fetch the old whistle, Polly, and blow back I want 'im to know I'm comin''

"He kep' repeatin' it, till 'is breath went I got Mrs Rowe to blow the whistle, but he didn't 'ear it, and it made no difference And so, poor thing, he just gave one big sigh and he were gone."

THE HEART OF THE WOOD

I

IT was all the mother's fault, every one said that, but in London people are forgotten so quickly that three months after the divorce no one said anything. Yet even for the mother there were extenuating circumstances. Nina was beautiful, and naturally Lady Leabridge thought she might do better than marry an actor. Ackersley was a gentleman, had been in the Hussars—a crack regiment, but couldn't afford to keep it up, chucked it, and went on the stage. He was extremely good-looking, and had a curiously magnetic manner. All the town went to see him, and agreed that he couldn't act a bit, but he was delightful to listen to and to look at, or to invite to Sunday luncheons and late evening parties. Women fell in love with him in rows, but never dreamt of wanting to marry him, or of expecting him to marry them. And it was obvious that matrimony was the last thing he contemplated till he met Nina Leabridge.

She was a tall white-faced girl of twenty, with a beautiful mouth, strange blue eyes, and quantities of dark hair with a crink in it. Her mouth seemed made for smiles, and her eyes for tragedy. The combination haunted Ackersley for three days, then he saw her again—at Lady Dolche's, on Sunday, at tea-time. He thought afterwards that he must have known she was coming, for he looked across the tea-table at the Louis-Seize clock on the mantelpiece—it said twenty to five. He waited impatiently for the quarter, as the minute-hand pointed to it the door opened and she entered. The rest followed. At the end of a fortnight they were engaged on the quiet, for the girl knew her mother so did Ackersley, though he had only had the pleasure of her acquaintance for a week.

Lady Leabridge grasped the situation as soon as she gained an uninterrupted view of it, but she said nothing and was much too clever to appear suspicious. She contrived to let Ackersley know, in quite a casual way, that Nina had expensive habits and not a penny of her own. This had no effect. She explained to Nina, also in quite a casual way—or she hoped so—that actors were nobodies, and that, no matter how fascinating Ackersley might be, men in his profession were never faithful long to any one woman. Nina explained that time had changed the social position of the actor, and that many somebodies were on the stage. Then, being a fool, though a sweet one, she added, vehemently, "As for his not being faithful, why, mother! what matters is to be loved with all the heart and soul of the man you love, and whether it lasts for a long time or a short time, it is a woman's crown, and a glorious one, even if it is followed by a martyrdom."

Lady Leabridge laughed, and told her that this was poetic rubbish. But she saw that the matter was serious, so she developed symptoms of something, she was not quite certain what, that served as an excuse to carry her girl off to Homburg. There, without any scruple, and with the help of her maid, she pocketed the letters and telegrams on both sides, and wrote Ackersley a few lines, in which she said that her daughter had confided in her, and begged her to put an end to the foolish entanglement. Nina, she added, was full of charming dreams, of which he had been one—she had had many. Ackersley was furious, and having just one set belief regarding women, cursed Nina with all his heart—as he did himself later. But his passion for her developed into something that swept him off his feet, and made him almost incoherent, so that his manager wondered if he were taking to drink, and whether the understudy could be trusted with his part if he failed to turn up any evening.

At Homburg Lady Leabridge added dangerous symptoms to her unknown complaint and threatened to die. She managed to be pathetic, yet not to keep her bed, declared that she felt stifled indoors, and went out in a bath-chair. Nina stood or walked by the chair, looking more beautiful than ever, the other sex wandered by, and at the end of a fortnight—even Lady Leabridge never knew how it was managed—she was engaged to a dyspeptic Marquis of forty-nine. A special licence made everything safe, at St. James's, Piccadilly, the morning after their return to England. The hurry was accounted for by the fact that Lord Barkston had arranged to start on a yachting tour, which was adroitly turned into a honeymoon.

Ackersley threw up his engagement and went to Alaska. When he returned he took a London theatre, posed as an actor-manager, and ran a piece that every one said was rubbish, but went in crowds to see, since he kept the leading part for himself. When he had made enough money, he suddenly reappeared in London drawing-rooms, and hunted round them for Nina. He soon met her, older by two years, bored, miserable, desperate. The inevitable explanation followed. He counted his gains, studied a Continental Bradshaw, flew about in hansoms, and even went to tea with women—who found him more adorable than ever. But it was a significant thing that, though Lord Barkston went out of his way to show him civilities, Ackersley never once entered the house in Grosvenor Gardens—all his interviews with Nina occurred elsewhere. "There are some things even a scoundrel doesn't do, unless he is a cad as well," he thought, as he walked away from the door one afternoon.

Russ. 1

Lucy Clifford

(Mrs. Clifford)

A month later London was edified with the news of an elopement, and Lord Barkston was seeking his revenge with Sir Francis Jeune.

Ackersley married her as soon as the decree was made absolute. He considered it a concession to the people who couldn't stick to each other without taking oaths and signing names, but there was nothing he wouldn't have done for Nina. And, after all, a woman likes to have her marriage lines, even if they only come from a Registrar's Office, and she is described as divorced in them. After the marriage they disappeared completely, wandered about the earth under another name, and felt, for the first year or two at any rate, as if they had filched the ground on which they walked from heaven, and established a squatter's right to it.

II

Five years later it occurred to Algernon Gill—thirty-four and in the Treasury—that it would be amusing to buy a bit of land and build a red brick cottage on it. The difficulty was to find a place. Some one told him of Cheverley, on the Rickmansworth line, less than an hour from London, no residents to worry him, nice village, an inn that had good stabling, woods and low hills beyond. But he forgot all about it, till one afternoon he drove past the Baker Street Station. He pulled up, and two minutes later was on the platform. The train started in a quarter of an hour.

A spot of blackness, to Finchley Road, then the greenness of the country-side, past Pinner and some places of which he could not even see the names, and on with a rush to Cheverley. A quiet little station, that looked as if it had been dropped out of a dream from which the two or three people who were visible had hardly awakened. Gill stood outside and hesitated To the right was a green lane—possibly the short way to the village half a mile beyond, to the left a winding road, evidently the long way No flys, a jogging cart some way off, coming nearer, but that was all, save the rising distance He felt a little puzzled, then bethought him that a whisky and soda would be the right thing There was a refreshment-room at the station, he wheeled round and entered it A long, bare counter at one end, at the other, seated by a marble table, an old man, with a violin-case and harp in a green baize bag set down beside him While the young lady was getting the whisky, the jogging cart from the distance arrived Some one entered and went up to the fiddler

"Sorry to be late Are you ready?"

"Quite ready, sir" The musician struggled to his feeble feet Gill put down his whisky, a vision of boyhood rose before his eyes He turned and saw Ackersley The two men looked at each other for a moment half in doubt, then each stretched out a hand

"By Jove!"—the old magnetic quality came into the voice—"this is luck, never thought to see you again How did you get here?"

"How did you?" Gill asked, when he had explained himself, "and where are you?"

"Three miles off, isolated little place, thirty acres, mostly wood Come and see it? The trap's here——" Ackersley stopped and coughed

Gill saw him plainly as they went out to the open, and was startled "You are ill, old chap," he said "What's the matter?"

"Not much at the present moment The devil has been hacking at me, but I shall be even with him soon"

He laughed, and Gill felt that if a dozen women had run away with him they would have been justified The trap—it might have belonged to a grocer in its better days—was shabby, the cob a roarer, the harness a thing of knots and patches

"Not much to look at, is it?" Ackersley said "Now then, Liggins!" The fiddler scrambled up to the back seat, Ackersley handed him the harp and fiddle, took the reins, and so they started along the country road "I never thought to set eyes on you again," he said, almost affectionately—Gill of course was beside him—"it cheers me no end"

" But——" Gill hesitated , he was afraid to ask questions " You are not alone here ? "

" Oh no, half-a-dozen fellows staying with me just now—a rummy set," Ackersley added, after a moment's hesitation " God's leavings, as we are I meant to write to you as soon as I had the nerve I haven't much left—or anything else "

Gill noticed that the cuff of his coat was shabby, he looked different altogether from the man of former days " Hard up ? " he asked remembering that Ackersley had put the same question to him ten years before, and carelessly lent him a couple of hundred that saved him from bankruptcy

" On the contrary, in that one particular the devil has been good to me He put me on to the deep levels—I dipped into them during a slump, and bounded out during a boom " They went on in silence for a few minutes The ground was rising, the landscape asserting itself Presently Ackersley spoke again " You must stay the night," he said " I should like to show you the place "

" Is it much farther ? " They had driven a couple of miles by this time

" It's there " Ackersley pointed to the wooded side of the hill " The house is on a little clearing in the midst , you can't see it from the road " They turned a corner , the wood looked older and thicker In its midst, from a high mast, floated a gay little flag " I did that," he said, with a defiant chuckle , " it's in the heart of the wood—stands well up, doesn't it ? We sling a lamp to the top every night , it glimmers on the country for miles round fine theatrical effect of its sort ? "

" What on earth do you want with a theatrical effect here ? "

" There's nothing like one for blunting the edge, and helping you through—prevents the real thing from having it all its own way "

" I don't understand "

" You will some day—if you ever go through the mill Should have thought, though, that you could understand, even now, that life is sometimes too bare and grim to face unless it is decked with a few emotional effects That's where the teaching of the theatre comes in—it suggests dodges we all put into practice at some time or other without knowing the meaning of them "

" Why don't you go back to the theatre ? " Gill asked " You would have a splendid——" He looked at him, and the rest of the sentence died away on his lips They were silent for a minute , then, with a jerk at the reins, Ackersley went on—

“ I have had enough of every show but my own , the one I am planning up there, I mean You must come into it I have been wondering how to get up a big enough company The servants are the supers, and Liggin is the orchestra ” He looked over his shoulder “ Liggin, we must show Mr Gill our waxworks ” He turned and explained “ Mr and Mrs Septimus Liggin—fine name, isn’t it ?—were in charge of the place when we found it It had been shut up for ten years Liggin fiddles, or plays the harpsichord, at dances for miles round, and pursued his profession from there When the harp was preferred he used to carry it to the entertainment on his back—till we set up this carriage—didn’t you, Liggin ? ”

The old man nodded in a half-idiotic manner “ Had to, sir, except when the violin would do ”

“ Fiddle, say fiddle, Liggin, not violin Long way to carry it, wasn’t it, from Cheverley Hall ? ” He turned to Gill again “ The place is as big as a suburban villa, and it’s called Cheverley Hall It’s not bad, though Mrs Liggin didn’t like being left alone before we came, so she beguiled her leisure by making wax flowers Liggin brought back glass shades from Pinner to put over them, and took them to a fair, when he heard of one, to be raffled for—the unsold decorate the staircase ”

“ But, Ackersley, how did you find the place ? ”

“ Beckersley,” Ackersley corrected in an undertone “ We moved a letter on in the alphabet and called ourselves Beckersley , it saved the trouble of changing the Barkston initials on the hair-brushes We came by chance,” he went on, “ strolled past the gates, saw a board up—thirty acres, house going to ruin, grounds overgrown, executors anxious to get rid of it We bought it right out—freehold—no one to interfere, no neighbours, only Liggin and his wife They stayed on , son came back from Egypt with a blind eye and a game leg , daughter in service at Harrow, got stone deaf, had to give it up We kept on the lot ”

“ Do you know any one in the neighbourhood ? ”

“ Only the doctor, a decent chap He settled here because there wasn’t much to do, and it is his habit to get drunk from Saturday night to Monday morning in the seclusion of his home They are too pious in the village to have their broken bones set on the Sabbath or their lives saved They make an exception for their souls, but that's another matter "

" You seem to be a lively lot "

" We are," Ackersley answered viciously, and flourished the whip over the cob " You are right—we are This is the beginning of the ground " He pointed to a rabbit fence, in good condition, high, newly painted, and with barbed wire on the top " We put that ghastly stuff on it for fear the Bank Holiday maker should want to get in and look round But I always regret that it keeps out the tramp—he is generally a bit sick and sorry, and wants to creep in I shall make it up to him "

III

At the gate a lame man with a patch over one eye limped forward " Take the cart," Ackersley said, getting down , " we are going to the wood " He made a sign to Gill, and led the way slowly, as if the exertion tired him The trees were high and close, great beeches and oaks and lindens that interlaced , beneath them was a trailing tangled undergrowth of bracken and blackberry, ground ivy and foxglove, of anything that grew wild and in the shade Through it, here and there, were narrow tracks

" It's like a primeval forest," Gill said, as he followed " But you must have made these paths Why, how did these get here ? " he exclaimed, in astonishment, for, in the thick of the wood, tall white lilies and standard rose-trees stood up clear and firm above the mass of wilderness at their feet

" We stuck them in—Nina and I " Ackersley put his back against the moss-grown trunk of a tree and faced his friend The withered leaves of a bygone winter and the rank growths of summer scrunched under his feet. It was the first time he had mentioned her name

Gill gathered courage " Where is she ? " he asked

" Here " Ackersley jerked his head backwards " Beneath the flag by day and the lamp by night I told you it was a theatrical effect "

" You mean——"

" I mean that she's dead "

Gill went a step forward and put out his hand, but Ackersley only faced him defiantly

"It doesn't matter," he said, with a short laugh, "she got drunk most nights during the last year or two"

"Great God!" Gill was horrified, but in some sort of cynical fashion Ackersley was amused

"I never understood how she got it after we came here Odd thing, isn't it?" he said callously, "if a woman chucks over her claim to one virtue she'll often have a shy at all the others without turning a hair" He stopped, but only for a moment "It was splendid," he went on, "for the first two years Then one day, at Triberg, going up to the waterfall—you know, the confounded thing they illuminate at night—she came face to face with an old harriidan she had known formerly, who stared her straight in the face, gathered her skirts, and passed on" He turned and went a few steps forward, then stood still again, looking at Gill "Strange, wasn't it? It woke her up, I suppose, she was never the same woman afterwards If I hadn't appeared she would have gone on with Barkston, whom she hated, to the end of her days, a pattern of virtue, lived to be seventy, perhaps, and become as worldly as the worst of them But, with me—though she loved me," his voice trembled for a moment—"because she had broken loose from an infamous bond that the Church and the devil between them had cemented, she was never satisfied, after she realised that she was outside the pale The fangs of respectability had fastened themselves so firmly into her soul that it was death to pull them out And that accounts for the degradation of most women"

"But when you came here?"

"It began the year before, she died the year after—and she is there"

"You might have put her in consecrated ground"

"Packed her among mouldering corpses, with the worms carrying messages between them—no, thank you Besides, the Church wouldn't marry us Why should it bury us? She loved this wood in her best hours—and she is here in the heart of it"

"And the village people, the doctor and parson, for instance—"

"The doctor is a pal of mine, his brother, a little attorney living at Rickmansworth, does my legal business, the village people are three miles off But I needn't give you details, they are neatly dovetailed"

"And you live here alone?"

"Oh no. There are half-a-dozen men I picked out of the gutter —drunken sots who had gone under—God's leavings They are waiting to finish themselves off till I am through, and they have drunk to our last meeting here in the wood, as they let me down to her Excellent, isn't it? Planning it amuses me immensely, though when it comes off I shall not even hear the chunk of their glasses "

" You are mad, Ackersley "

" Say Beckersley Not a soul here knows my real name, or ever will " He stopped for a moment and his voice changed " I may be mad, but I'm pretty miserable, and nearly played out," he said " It's only the theatrical side of the business that helps me And I've done for myself, as she did, and I'm going out by the same gate—I want to be lost with her through all eternity in the heart of the wood, as for a little while we were once lost in the heart of the world "

" You have played the fool with your life, poor chap "

" A wild game, but worth playing, for I have had the best love of a woman," Ackersley said, with the smile that made Gill love him " You must come and see my guests They get drunk occasionally still, when they can outwit me or bribe Liggins Sometimes we have a wild orgy together We will to-night—the Rickmansworth whisky is poison, but that is part of it "

" Does Lady Leabridge know anything——"

" No," Ackersley answered fiercely, " and never will I wish I could see her strung up She did it all when she married Nina to Barkston But what it comes to is this, that there is nothing so safe, or, take it altogether, so successful, as your well-conducted middle class British home, presided over by the City-going father, and the wife-of-your-bosom-mother-of-your-children sort of woman, no aspirations beyond a tolerable table, decent dress, and a month in the country or Switzerland once a year, no schemes beyond placing the boys out, seeing the girls marry men like their fathers, or getting into the professions open for women These people are the backbone of the country's prosperity and morality, they are a part of the constitution, just as roast beef is, or the morning paper and the pantomime at Christmas But, come—I'm not going to take you there to-day——" He looked towards the dark masses of the wood " There's nothing to see, not even the conventional mound I want to show you the house, and to-night we'll get as drunk as lords "

" I won't," Gill burst out " The whole thing is horrible I'm going back to town There's a train at 6 20 I shall walk down and catch it I can't stand any more of this "

" Nonsense ! man , it's a way through—that's all that most of us find in the long-run "

But Gill caught the 6 20 train

IV

The telegram came four months later , it was the only intimation he had of the end " Mr Beckersley's funeral is at two o'clock You are expected "

It was nearly half-past one when he reached Cheverley No one met him, and he was glad of it The walk did him good A short, grey man, with a curt, decisive manner, was standing at the gate

" Mr Gill ? I was Mr Beckersley legal adviser—my brother was his doctor," he added " I fear they have gone to the wood, but no doubt they will wait for us " He led the way, as two months before Ackersley had done, but now the blackberry time was over, the leaves were falling, the bracken was brown, the north wind stirring among the high branches Quite suddenly, deep in the wood, they came to an open grave A little apart, half-a-dozen men, old, most of them bleary-eyed and curiously forlorn-looking, huddled as close together as the vegetation would let them, helplessly waiting Liggins was there with his harp By him stood a woman holding a little stand of wax flowers, but no glass shade covered them When Gill came in sight, Liggins moved his harp to the head of the grave , the lame man with the black patch over his eye went to the foot, carrying a basket that held some bottles of champagne and a dozen glasses A few yards ahead was the mast lying among the underwood, its little flag torn by a bramble Four men in black, business-like and inscrutable, waited by a plain coffin, on which there was no name, nothing to identify it A red-faced man came forward, and in a hushed voice greeted Gill

" I was our eccentric friend's doctor," he explained , then, turning to the four men in black, and giving a comprehensive nod round, he said, " We can go on now " The bleary-eyed mourners straightened themselves, and drew near, stumbling a little over the uneven, difficult ground Liggins's fingers wandered to his harp, and slow and uncertain the notes of " Old Lang Syne " came from the strings The lame man poured out the champagne, and offered a glass to Gill, who shook his head, but the rest each took one and waited with it untouched "I feel sure," the doctor said deferentially to Gill, "it would hurt our friend if he could know that any of us refused to carry out his strange idea He wanted us to drink to their last meeting" Gill hesitated, then reached out his hand

"Give me some," he said, "I'll drink to it" The coffin was slowly lifted from the ground and lowered into the grave The bleary-eyed men gathered closer, putting the glasses to their tremulous lips and craning their necks to see the last of it Gill stood aloof till they fell back and helplessly waited again, holding their empty glasses Liggin's notes sped out louder and clearer on the desolate air, till Mrs Liggin made a sign to stop him

"I want to put this in with him," she said, coming forward "It's the best I ever made, and he did so much for us" She stooped over the grave, holding the wax flowers, reached down as far into it as possible, and dropped them The sound of the little thud, as they reached the bottom, went through Gill The four men began to throw in the earth The lawyer gave the doctor a sign, who in turn gave one to the strange guests, and straggling, shambling, and silent they followed him away through the trees, and disappeared Liggin picked up the green baize covering of his harp, his son gathered the glasses and bottles together, the woman tightened a woollen shawl across her chest, and they, too, silently set out—presumably towards the house The lawyer and Gill remained watching the men at their work

"It is to be quite flat," the former said, "and the vegetation pulled across it The mast is to be taken to another part of the wood, and left lying there" When it was all done, he turned to Gill "You will come to the house?" he asked

"No I couldn't stand it Are those men going to live there still?"

"Till the end of the week Then they are provided for elsewhere The house is to be pulled down, and the site planted over till it becomes a part of the wood"

"And then?"

"The gates are to be locked for ten years At the end of that time the fence is to be taken away, and the ground given to the parish of Cheverley for ever But no bit of it must be enclosed again The squatter, who is the ancestor of the jerry-builder, is to be chased off it, but the gypsy is to be allowed to pitch his tent if he chooses, and the tramp to find a shelter if he can"

HORACE ANNESLEY VACHELL

B 1861

THE CHAMELEON

I MADE his acquaintance some ten years ago at the Hôtel Flaurent, Concarneau, Brittany. He introduced himself, I remember, at the table d'hôte, and entertained me with much lively small talk.

"My name," he said, with a delightful laugh, which disarmed formality, "is Green. Apelles Green, of California. Pray don't touch that ordinaire. It's rank poison. Try the cider. I'm really awfully glad to see you, and I told old Flaurent to give you a good room facing the sea, and away from the smells."

I expressed my thanks.

"Not at all. The sight of a compatriot and a brother craftsman warms the cockles of my heart. I saw Jean Baptiste snake out your easel. What? Only an amateur! So much the better. We shall not quarrel. Do I know the ropes? Well, I should smile. Flaurent swears by me. And Madame—I must introduce you to Madame—she is my particular friend."

I scanned him critically, but he met my glance frankly, an amused smile hovering upon his lips. His physiognomy, no less than his physique, indicated remarkable vitality. A round, brown, hairless face it was, redeemed from the commonplace by a pair of sparkling hazel eyes and a wide mouth filled with dazzling teeth. His hair, fine as silk, was auburn in colour, his small nose tip-tilted skyward, his jaw, a trifle heavy for so young a man, protruded, and his forehead was low and broad. Sitting at table, I could form no just estimate of his physical proportions, but I learned subsequently that he had posed for Cabral, the sculptor, and the admirable symmetry of his limbs had found permanent expression in a bronze Discus Thrower which had excited the enthusiastic admiration of "Tout Paris." I judged him to be some five-and-twenty years of age.

"Been here long?" I asked.

"Six months."

"Anything for the Salon?"

"Yes. A marine. Sky, sand, and sea. Figures are not my forte. I never had the patience to learn to draw really well."

We fell into art talk, and Apelles, under the influence of coffee and cigars, waxed confidential

"I wish you had come earlier," he said regretfully "I must leave Concarneau soon and look up a dealer in Paris I've half-a-dozen pot-boulers to dispose of, and it's folly selling 'em by proxy It may amuse you, but I've a queer gift of the gab I can screw fifty francs extra out of old Levy any day Not to put a fine point on it, I'm stone broke Not an obolus left! But Flaurent—God bless him—is my banker He thinks the world of me, does Flaurent Strange, isn't it?"

Soberly considering this question, I answer in the negative The personality of this gay Californian was irresistibly pleasing He had talent, which counts with the Latin race, good looks, which obtain recognition everywhere, and a twinkle in his left eye which commended itself to old and young Some Englishmen stopping at the hotel across the quay had christened him "Joyous Green" The adjective was happily chosen

"Un bon garçon," said Monsieur Flaurent to me, "il ira loin"

"No," cried a black-browed student from the "Beaux Arts" "No," he repeated in broken English, snapping his powerful, spatulate fingers, "you have great wrong He is a good fellow, yes, but he will not go far He is—how do you call it—l'eau de Seltz?"

"Charged with gas," I suggested

"Parfaitement, sparkling, you say He has the gift of colour, bien entendu, but his drawing—Ciel! He has no patience, he cannot work, work, work"

None the less, during the weeks we spent together I developed an amazing friendship for "Joyous Green" He was good enough to say that my liking was returned We fished together, walked together, and painted the same models The latter, I remarked, were susceptible to magnetism Indeed, wherever we went the eyes of the maidens rested boldly or shyly, as the case might be, upon Joyous Green

But the time came—all too soon—when Apelles and I bade each other good-bye His trip to Paris could be no longer postponed Standing upon the top of the diligence, he took an affecting leave In his hand was a modest grip-sack, by his side a battered paint-box of japanned tin His trunk, his easel, a crateful of canvases, and other impediments he entrusted to the care of Madame Flaurent I can recall the scene Francine, the chambermaid, in tears, Jean Baptiste staring stolidly at Apelles and muttering unintelligible nothings, Monsieur Flaurent gesticulating wildly, Madame waving a musk-scented pocket handkerchief and crying shrilly, "Bon voyage ! Bon voyage !"

Apelles descended from his perch, kissed Madame upon each red cheek, shook hands once more with Flaurent and myself—I detected tears in his eyes—and remounted

"Je reviendras," he sang, in the words of a chanson d'atelier, "mardi, je reviendras !"

The stout Breton driver cracked his whip, the horses sprang into their collars, and the diligence clattered noisily down the stone-paved street

"Un charmant jeune homme," murmured Monsieur Flaurent in my ear, as we re-entered the café, and I called for a couple of "bocks"
"Un charmant jeune homme !"

We sorely missed his pleasant face and cheery ways, but as the days sped by we wondered vaguely at his silence. We watched the mails, but no letter came from Apelles. He never returned to Concarneau.

His trunk was burst open in my presence, it contained a pair of sabots, a paint-stained coat, some frayed underlinen, several numbers of an art journal, and a broken revolver.

"Ce sacre Green," cried mine host between his set teeth. "C'est un voleur, voyez-vous, un voleur !"

"Mais charmant, tout de meme," sighed Madame.

"He owes me," shouted her husband, "seven hundred and fifty francs. Do you hear that, Madame Flaurent? Seven hundred and fifty francs, for board bills and cash advanced. Sapppppppppppristi !"

Three springs later I had the pleasure of meeting "Joyous" at Florence. He was accurately attired in fawn-coloured cashmere cloth. A camellia adorned the silken lapel of his frock-coat. Upon his well-shaped feet were pointed, patent-leather boots, upon his head a fashionable tall hat. He had grown a small moustache, the ends of which were carefully waxed. In other respects he was unchanged.

"Why, Green," I cried, "this can't be you?"

"Hush!" he whispered, laying his hand upon my arm. "Don't yell, dear boy, and don't call me Green. I am Green no longer. My salad days are over. I am Browne, with the final 'e,' if you please. Apelles Browne."

He winked The twinkle evoked the sunniest memories I saw once more the stone digue at Concarneau, the green surges of the mighty Atlantic, the white-coifed maidens, the gleaming stretches of wet sand, the brown-sailed fishing-smacks

"Do you still paint?" I asked

"Paint! pas si bête, mon vieux. I am private secretary to Mrs. Gideon T Boal, of Philadelphia"

"Boal's axle-grease?" I ejaculated

"Yes, my boy That blessed compound has limbered me up What do you think of this, and this, and this?"

He pointed significantly to the pear-shaped pearl in his tie, the camellia, the patent-leather boots, the lemon-coloured gloves

"You never met Boal? No He was a type I ran across him at Forges-les-Eaux He was taking the cure there, but it did him no good He passed in his checks and I found myself alone with the widow Five millions, old man, and no children Think of it I had painted the portrait of the dear departed, and the widow could not speak a word of French Finally, she offered me two thousand a year as private secretary I have been with her a little over a year, and—and——" He paused I waited for the inevitable confession, but it did not come He glanced quickly at my face and concluded his sentence, "and you must dine with us this very evening"

"I am hardly in condition," I began, "to—er——"

"Come as you are," he said, eagerly "Mrs Boal is not particular Bless you, you ought to have seen old Boal He took life easy in a flannel shirt And see here, my dear chap, the world does not seem to have wagged with you as it has with me I've got more money than I know how to spend Let me——"

"Stay," I said, holding up my hand "I am not a subject for charity And, Apelles, before we pick up the strands of our friendship, you must tell me why you changed your name"

"You suspicious old crank," he replied, lightly "You look at me as if I'd robbed a train However, I'll gratify your harmless curiosity at once Let's hunt a shade-tree"

We walked down the Cascine until we found an unoccupied seat As we strolled along, I noticed that my companion frequently raised his hat in response to bows and greetings

"You know all the world and his wife," I observed

"I'm in the swim," he answered, carelessly, "but between you and me these society people are a dull crowd But I'm awfully glad to see your picturesque old phiz again Some way you inspire confidence, and I want to unbosom myself "

We sat down presently and lighted a couple of cigars

" You have been in California ? " said Apelles, abruptly.

" Yes—many times "

" Did you ever meet the Rev Jerome White ? "

" The man who wrote Tertullian and his Times ? Yes "

" He was my father That astonishes you, eh ? Oh, yes, he had other children by another wife, but I was the eldest son, his Esau," he added emphatically

During our previous intercourse no bitter words had dropped from my friend's lips His greatest charm in my eyes had been an easy bonhomie, a " sweet reasonableness "—as Matthew Arnold would have it—which confronted alike good or ill-fortune with philosophical suavity

" I was a fairly good boy," continued Apelles, gloomily, " not a godly youth, of course, but straight as a string, and plastic as clay in the hands of the potter The old gentleman might have moulded me into a parson if he had gone to work the right way, but he lived, among his books, way back in the centuries, and my stepmother was a regular devil She sowed discord between us, and the governor had a hot temper Every week or so we would have a row, until the thing became monotonous One morning he dubbed me ' a son of Belial ' I told him, with a grin, not to revile himself That made him boil We had a frightful scenc, and I-- I was nineteen—threatened to leave his roof ' Go,' he said, pointing to the door, ' go, and disgrace my good name '

" ' I don't call White a good name,' I retorted, ' and from now on I propose to discard it '

" I left the house with a derisive laugh on my lips and shipped aboard a sailing-ship bound to Havre, around the Horn Before we were out of Golden Gate Bay I regretted my rashness, but it was too late The second mate asked me my name ' Green,' I said He eyed me curiously ' Green, is it,' he said, not unkindly ' Well, my lad, Green is a better name than Black ' "

Apelles laughed and slapped me on the shoulder

" And that's how I filched the name of Green," he added, resuming his natural manner " But I never liked the name It smacked of a youthful verdancy, and accordingly some two years ago I dropped it I am no longer Green, but brown I always was, and Browne, with the final 'e,' remember, I propose to remain "

" And your father ? " I asked

" When I landed at Havre I learned by chance that he was dead A little money came to me from his estate, but, like a fool, I spent it I was always, you know, un panier percé Then I drifted into Art, painted bon-bon boxes for a living You know all about it "

" And now," I said, slowly, " you propose to marry Mrs Boal "

" She proposes to marry me," he amended, " and why should I say her nay ? I tell you I'm not built for a poor man My appetite for all the good things of life is too large, and my morals—you see I am honest—too slim But it's easy, as dear Becky says, to be virtuous with ten thousand a year, and it must be easier still with an income of half a million I used to wonder why the deuce Boal had been permitted to accumulate his vast pile No one was the better off, not even his wife—poor woman—as long as he lived But his death emphasised the eternal fitness of things I could not hope to rake up a million dollars in a million years, but, by Jove, I can oil the wheels of a thousand lives with the proceeds of Boal's axle-grease I mean to keep the Recording Angel busy jotting down my credits in the ledger The poor little debits will soon be wiped out I daresay you thought I had treated the Flaurents scurvily So I did I intended to remit, but my marine was skied at the Salon, and the pot-boilers went for a song However, I paid the old dears in full a few months ago, and sent Madame a gold watch and chain Well, old man, I have confessed and cried mea culpa Is it all right ? "

" It is all right," I replied, and we shook hands

" And you will dine with us to-night at Doney's, hey ? "

" With pleasure "

I had expected to find in the person of Mrs Gideon T Boal the typical American parvenue—a large, loud-voiced, be-diamonded female I was agreeably surprised to meet a pretty little woman, a sugar-blonde, of genteel (I apologise for the word) bearing, with precise manners and a " prunes and prisms " voice Her chin and nose, faintly encarmined, were sharply moulded, and I learned from Apelles that she suffered from dyspepsia, and had passed her thirty-fourth birthday

During dinner " Joyous " was in high spirits, but the widow spoke seldom She watched Apelles out of the corner of her eye, and smiled approvingly at his quips The approaching marriage was discussed, and my friend made no secret of his change of name

"First White," he said, "then Green, now Browne I am a chameleon, by Jupiter, a chameleon I take my colour from my environment White in California, white with dust, white, too, of soul, a dear little innocent Then green, green as the pleasant vineyards of France, and here in sun-baked Italy, brown Brown as the eternal hills, brown as the faces of the contadini!"

"I must leave you two for five minutes," he observed, carelessly, after the coffee had been brought in "I promised to meet a man at the club Be sure and take your Lacto-Peptine, Alethea" The widow's name was Alethea "Fifteen grains, my love, in half a wineglassful of water"

"He has a beautiful figure," said Mrs Boal to me, "but he is very young"

"You, too, are young," I replied, bluntly

"No, I am no longer young, I don't feel young Nobody feels young who takes Lacto-Peptine Yes, thank you—fifteen grains Ten used to be sufficient, but I had to increase the dose"

"You and Apelles intend to live in Philadelphia?"

"No People are so unkind at home They will say he married me for my money"

"He is very lucky," I murmured, "very lucky indeed"

"Mr Boal," she observed, whimsically, "considered me a fool"

At the urgent request of this queerly assorted couple I consented to remain in Florence until after the wedding, and made thereby two discoveries, to wit Mrs Boal was childishly fond of society, and, further, a devout church member, a Presbyterian of the strictest sect.

"My disposition," said Apelles to me, "is changing for the worse This simple, pastoral diet of family prayers, tea-fights, and lawn-tennis palls on my jaded palate Alethea is as good as gold You mustn't think I'm kicking, the fact is, I've not got a kick left in me But—hang it all—the thought of measuring out that Lacto-Peptine three times a day, till death do us part, does make me squirm! There—pussy's out of the bag, and I feel better already!"

"My friend," I said, severely, "have you ever heard of the Doctrine of Compensation?"

"D—— the Doctrine of Compensation I say," he whispered, "let's run up to Paris, and take in the Folies Bergères, etc."

"Are you mad?"

"Saner than you, I'll be sworn"

He pressed my arm affectionately

"One little, harmless bust," he urged, "before the final catastrophe It will do us both good We shall return rejuvenated I can invent a thousand excuses—a million, if necessary Come, let us go, my feet are aching for the asphalt We will dine at Bignon's, sup at——"

"You are not mad, Apelles," I said angrily "You are a fool!"

"You won't come with me?"

"Certainly not"

"Then I shall go alone"

"If you do that, Apelles, if you trifle with the feelings of a loving woman, I shall call you knave as well as fool Confound it, man, have you no loyalty, no gratitude?"

"Come with me," he persisted "Come with me"

"No"

"Shake hands, you old curio I was only joking"

I held out my hand reluctantly Somehow, in my obtuse fashion, I failed to appreciate the jest A strange light gleamed in my friend's eyes In his hazel eyes some imp of unrest was dancing a fantastic pas seul, a measure set to the music of Bohemia, those magical cadences of no time, no country, which surely wooed the fancies of Sappho, Catullus, Murger, De Musset

We walked in silence the length of the Lung' Arno, and then parted for the night Apelles sought his club, and I my lodging, near the Mercato Vecchio During the greater portion of the day following I was busily employed collating a curious Latin manuscript at the monastery of the Certosa Returning to Florence late in the afternoon, I met a young Englishman

"Your friend Apelles," he said, laughing, "had better sacrifice to the gods that pear-shaped pearl of his His luck is too good to last"

"What do you mean?"

"Mean? Why, haven't you heard? He was playing baccarat at the club last night, and won fifteen thousand francs Fortune comes to him with both hands full"

As I mounted my steep staircase I questioned the truth of this story Mrs Boal regarded all forms of gambling, even progressive euchre for bon-bons, with Pharisaical horror Apelles cared little for card-playing He had often assured me that he disliked the winning of a friend's money, and to gratify the widow he had renounced whist Why—I asked myself—why this sudden indiscretion ?

As I unlocked the door of my modest apartment, sous les toits, I perceived a letter lying upon the floor I picked it up and opened it with sundry qualms

"Jacta est alea," it began "I leave Florence this afternoon for Paris, and ultimately Norway Indirectly you are responsible for this flight into Egypt Till you appeared on the scene I was satisfied with my condition I hugged my chains But the sight of your old velveteen coat suggested forbidden fruit I began to sigh for Liberty, with a large 'L,' and that cursed phial of Lacto-Peptine, which I packed around in my vest pocket, grew heavier each day I am awfully sorry for poor Alethea, but Capo di Monte will console her He measures forty-four inches round the chest The fact is she is a saint with an infirmity of stomach, I, alas, am a sinner Nous ne marchons pas dans le même chemin I made a winning last night which will keep my feet out of miry places —Ever thine,

APELLES

"P S—You know my idiosyncrasy, my chameleon-like habit. You will not, therefore, be surprised to learn that I have decided to drop the name Browne It reminds me painfully of Boal You can write me, care of the American Consul, Christiania, addressing Apelles Gray. Gray is a nice, neutral name, noncommittal, in harmony with northern skies, granite cliffs, seething, swirling waters, and salmon leaping in lonely pools Think kindly of me Vale"

I laid the letter down with a sigh Why had this fellow twice crept into my life and out of it? What subtle chord of sympathy connected us? Why did I feel so horribly, miserably lonely? To these and other questions I could find no answer

The widow took, weeping, to her bed Ariadne, lying lonely upon the strand of Naxos, shed no more acrid tears than she, but Don Giovanni Capo di Monte ultimately consoled her She is now a principessa with three children and a triple-chin I understand that Lacto-Peptine is not to be found in the princely medicine chest, and that Her Excellency enjoys superb health She attends mass regularly, she plays poker, she rides a bicycle to reduce her flesh, and dances the cotillon! Varium et mutabile semper femina!

. . . . .

Seven years later I was in London, at the Westminster Aquarium. My small affairs had prospered. I was no longer out of elbows, nor out of pocket. But apart from material prosperity I had been singularly unfortunate. I had married and within eighteen months buried a young wife. I still walked the world alone, without kith or kin, a solitary man.

As I strolled idly from tank to tank, my attention was riveted upon the name "Apelles," in flaring type. Unconsciously my mind reverted to "Joyous Green." I had written to him, care of the American Consul, but the letter had been returned to me. I had also made inquiries in Berlin, Paris, New York, and London, but my friend had disappeared.

"Who is Apelles?" I asked of a saleswoman.

"The Perfect Man," she replied, promptly. "He shows three times a day. Eleven to twelve. Three to four. Nine to ten. Go and see him."

"But who is he?"

"Nobody knows. He wears a mask. They say," she added, mysteriously, "that he's no end of a toff, a West-ender, a reg'ler swell! Let me sell you his picture. Only a 'bob'."

She pushed a photograph across the counter. I glanced at it, paid for it, and retired.

It was, indeed, Apelles. The face was hidden by the mask, but the rather coarse chin and magnificent throat were not to be mistaken. I consulted my watch—half-past eight—and scribbled a line upon a card.

"Give that to Apelles," I said to one of the Aquarium servants.

"Hapelles don't see nobody," he replied. "Thank ye, sir, I'll send in the card, but 'e don't see nobody."

He returned, however, grinning.

"Yer in luck, sir. Hapelles is hamiable. 'E'll see ycr in 'is dressink-room. Please to foller me."

I was ushered into a small room behind the big stage, and there, in white tights, with a cloak thrown across his broad shoulders and a cigar between his lips, sat "Joyous Green"!

But joyous no longer. His face was redder and coarser, his eyes had lost their brilliance, the expression of his features was morose and gloomy.

"So we meet again," he cried, with a mirthless laugh. "What a world it is!"

I stared at him for the moment speechless

"Behold the Perfect Man," he continued, "and take a cigar; they're perfect, too"

They were, in fact, perfectos of the most expensive brand

"What are you doing here?" I asked

"Putting my muscles to a new and original abuse I make thirty pounds a week Do you earn as much?"

"No"

"I thought not Scribbling is shockingly underpaid I've kept partial track of you in the magazines and elsewhere You preserve, my friend, the illusions but not the appearance of youth Your back is bowed, your hair is thin and grey Look at me"

He flung his cloak aside and sprang, theatrically, to his feet The light from two incandescent lamps fell full upon his superb body He had grown larger, more massive, but still retained that marvellous proportion of strength and grace, that admirable combination of bone, muscle, and sinew, which had inspired the "Discus Thrower," the masterpiece of Cabral

"I see a change," I said, coldly

"Well, am I not a creature of change, a chameleon? White, Green, Browne, Gray, and now Black Let me introduce myself to you Apelles Black, Professional Poser"

"Where have you been these seven long years?"

"I spent four of them in the Southern Seas I heard the waves breaking upon the coral reefs of Tahiti I saw the palm groves of Samoa, the volcanoes of Hawaii Then I wandered through Chili and Peru Finally, I met the enterprising Spinks, and he tempted me with his gold It is he who has exploited me as the Perfect Man I must face my audience in five minutes Will you wait and see me go through my tricks?"

"No," I replied, hurriedly "Not to-night"

"Ah, the difference between the perfect man and the imperfect soul is too offensively salient Good-night, mon cher, come and see me to-morrow at eight"

Accordingly, at eight I presented myself, determined to make one vigorous effort to rescue this brand from the burning Apelles was awaiting me His humour had changed He appeared five years younger

"I was blue last night," he admitted, "an ugly colour I saw a 1111

Horace Munckley Vachell

---

ghost It gibbered at me as I talked with you The ghost of what I might have been, eh? The coulisses harbour many such grisly phantoms! You evoked the spirit, but Spinks laid it with a cheque "

"Quit this cursed business," I said, with energy "Come to Paris with me and take up drawing again You are young, you have talent, the gift of colour, a trained sense of the beautiful All you need is two years under Bouguereau, two years, eight hours a day, of black and white "

"Very fine, mon vieux, but if I leave my dear Spinks I walk out of this a pauper "

"I have enough for two Live with me "

"You have the best heart, old fellow, the kindest in the world, but your brain is soft, too Your ideas are Utopian I am unstable as Reuben My grandmother was a Spanish Mexican, and I inherit from her a brown skin and a cursed habit of procrastination I can appreciate the better, but I choose the worse That, perhaps, is the unpardonable sin I have paved a whole section, six hundred and forty acres, in Hades with my good resolutions "

"But you can resist temptation," I said, warmly "You abandoned a cool five millions You——"

"The Lacto-Peptide did it," he interrupted, with a grimace "That and the Westminster Confession of Faith If I had gauged the true nature of that woman I might have married her The Italian has kicked the foolishness out of her, so I hear, but she would have ruled me, I suppose, with a rod of iron No, no, you must let me go to the devil in my own way, and at my own gait Perhaps," he added, slowly, "we had better not meet You are terribly upsetting, do you know it, with your cut and dried code of ethics, your sober, serious face Go your ways, mon vieux, and leave me to wallow in peace. We will crack one bottle for old sake's sake, and part! "

I argued with him for ten minutes, and lost my temper He rang a handbell and told the call-boy to send round some champagne

"I'll not drink with you," I cried, hotly, seizing my hat, "I despise you too much I could kick myself for wasting a thought upon you You are rotten, rotten to the core "

He listened in silence, but when I turned to leave he barred the way

"You are perfectly right," he said, coolly, "but I prefer to call myself names I can do the subject justice, you can't!

Good-night "

I hesitated Something in his face moved me profoundly

" I beg your pardon, Apelles You are nobody's enemy but your own I have no earthly right to reproach you Here is my address in Paris My offer to you remains open for six months As the Perfect Man I have no use for you, nor you for me, but as Apelles, the painter, I would welcome you as a brother—good-bye "

As soon as my work, a comparison of certain MSS in the library of the British Museum, was concluded, I determined to return to Paris London provoked my spleen Go where I would, the name " Apelles " stared me in the face The walls of the town were plastered with horrible advertisements The Perfect Man met me at every corner This shameful publicity angered me beyond measure " I must take some drastic medicine," I reflected, " I must see this poser before I go The sight of him, in public, will surely cure my absurd complaint "

But when I reached the Aquarium I learned, to my amazement, that Apelles had vanished None knew whither! I interviewed Mr Spinks, who foamed at the mouth with impotent rage, and denounced the Perfect Man in words which cannot be repeated

" Black! " he said, fiercely " Blackguard would be the better name "

" Does he owe you money? " I asked, coldly

" No, sir," replied the distinguished Spinks, " but he owes me gratitood He paid up his forfeit, all he had, I reckon, but what of it? He's fooled me out of thousands, yes, sir, thousands Why, I'd signed papers to take him to New York The women there would have gone crazy over his shape His abdominal muscles were as good as a gold mine! In a year, one year, he'd ha' become famous! "

" Infamous," I suggested

Mr Spinks stared and continued

" He's a fool, a d——d, ungrateful, senseless fool Oh Lord, oh Lord, what a fool he is! "

I returned to Paris, rejoicing. My good Babette, the wife of the concierge, greeted me effusively

" We have a new lodger," she cried, " a friend and compatriot of Monsieur."

" His name ? " I asked, idly

" C'est drôle," she replied, " but he has no name He told me to call him Monsieur Blanc ! "

The truth flashed upon me, and pushing Babette hastily aside, I rushed upstairs Apelles, with outstretched hands and smiling face, was standing at the door of my salon

" Yes," he said later, " I have taken you at your word I make no promises, no rash resolutions I have realised, to my shame, that I cannot stand alone, but I lean on you In my protean capacity I have rung change upon change I have travelled a weary road from White to Black Is it possible, I ask you, to retrace my steps ? "

" It is possible "

" I hope so I begin again to-morrow at Julian's For a name—even a dog must have a name—I shall adopt that of Blanc It suggests whitewash Blanc d'Espagne Honestly, I feel regenerate, but "—he sighed—" I know my weakness "

It is now September For eight months Apelles has worked like a horse Has he the staying qualities of that quadruped ? That is the question

MARY COLERIDGE

1861-1907

THE KING IS DEAD, LONG LIVE THE KING

IT was not very quiet in the room where the king lay dying. People were coming and going, rustling in and out with hushed footsteps, whispering eagerly to each other, and where a great many people are all busy making as little noise as possible, the result is apt to be a kind of bustle that weakened nerves can scarcely endure.

But what did that matter? The doctors said he could hear nothing now. He gave no sign that he could. Surely the sobs of his beautiful young wife, as she knelt by the bedside, must else have moved him.

For days the light had been carefully shaded. Now, in the hurry, confusion, and distress, no one remembered to draw the curtains close, so that the dim eyes might not be dazzled. But what did that matter? The doctors said he could see nothing now.

For days no one but his attendants had been allowed to come near him. Now the room was free for all who chose to enter. What did it matter? The doctors said he knew no one.

So he lay for a long time, one hand flung out upon the counterpane, as if in search of something. The queen took it softly in hers, but there was no answering pressure. At length the eyes and mouth closed, and the heart ceased to beat.

"How beautiful he looks!" they whispered one to another.

When the king came to himself it was all very still—wonderfully and delightfully still, as he thought, wonderfully and delightfully dark. It was a strange, unspeakable relief to him—he lay as if in heaven. The room was full of the scent of flowers, and the cool night air came pleasantly through an open window. A row of wax tapers burned with soft radiance at the foot of the bed on which he was lying, covered with a velvet pall, only his head and face exposed. Four or five men were keeping guard around him, but they had fallen fast asleep.

So deep was the feeling of content which he experienced that he was loth to stir Not till the great clock of the palace struck eleven did he so much as move Then he sat up with a shght laugh

He remembered how, when his mind was failing him, and he had rallied all his powers in one last passionate appeal against the injustice which was taking him away from the world just when the world most needed him, he had heard a voice saying " I will give thee yet one hour after death If, in that time, thou canst find three that desire thy life, live ! "

This was his hour, his hour that he had snatched away from death How much of it had he lost already ? He had been a good king , he had worked night and day for his subjects , he had nothing to fear, and he knew that it was very pleasant to live , how pleasant, he had never known before, for, to do him justice, he was not selfish , it was his unfinished work that he grieved about when the decree went forth against him Yet, as he passed out of the room where the watchers sat heavily sleeping, things were changed to him somehow The burning sense of injustice was gone Now that he came to think of it, he had done very little True that it was his utmost, but there were many better men in the world, and the world was large, very large it seemed to him now Everything had grown larger He loved his country and his home as well as ever, but in the night it had seemed as if they must perish with him, and now he knew that they were still unchanged

Outside the door he paused a moment, hesitating whither to go first Not to the queen The very thought of her grief unnerved him He would not see her till he could once more clasp her in his arms, and bid her weep tears of joy only because he was come again After all, he had but an hour to wait Before the castle clock struck twelve he would be back again in life, remembering these things only as a dream He sighed a little to think of it

" All that to do over again some day," he said, as he recalled his last moments.

Almost he turned again to the couch he had so lately left

" But I have never yet done anything through fear," said the king

And he smiled as he thought of the terms of the compact His city lay before him in the moonlight

" I could find three thousand as easily as three," he said "Are they not all my friends ? "

As he passed out of the gate, he saw a child sitting on the steps, crying bitterly

"What is the matter, little one?" said the sentinel on guard, stopping a moment

"Father and mother have gone to the castle, because the king's dead," sobbed the child, "and they've never come back again, and I'm so tired and so hungry! And I've had no supper, and my doll's broken Oh! I do wish the king were alive again!"

And she burst into a fresh storm of weeping It amused the king not a little

"So this is the first of my subjects that wants me back!" he said

He had no child of his own He would have liked to try and comfort the little maiden, but there were other calls upon him just then He was on his way to the house of his great friend, the man whom he loved more than all others A kind of malicious delight possessed him, as he pictured to himself the deep dejection he should find him in

"Poor Amyas!" he said "I know what I should be feeling in his place I am glad he was not taken I could not have borne his loss"

As he entered the courtyard of his friend's house, lights were being carried to and fro, horses were being saddled, an air of bustle and excitement pervaded the place Look where he might, he could not see the face he knew so well He entered at the open door His friend was not in the hall Room after room he vainly traversed—they were all empty A sudden horror took him Surely Amyas was not dead of grief?

He came at length to a small private apartment, in which they had spent many a happy, busy hour together, but his friend was not here either, though, to judge by appearances, he could only just have left it Books and papers were tumbled all about in strange confusion, and bits of broken glass strewed the floor

A little picture was lying on the ground The king picked it up, and recognised a miniature of himself, the frame of which had been broken in the fall He let it drop again, as if it had burnt him The fire was blazing brightly, and the fragments of a half-destroyed letter lay, unconsumed as yet, in the fender It was in his own writing He snatched it up, and saw it was the last he had written, containing the details of an elaborate scheme which he had much at heart He had only just thrown it back into the flames when two people entered the room, talking together, one a lady, the other a man, booted and spurred as though he came from a long distance

"Where is Amyas?" he asked

"Gone to proffer his services to the new king, of course," said the lady "We are, as you may think, in great anxiety He has none of the ridiculous notions of his predecessor, who, indeed, hated him cordially The very favour Amyas has hitherto enjoyed will stand in his way at the new court I only hope he may be in time to make his peace He can, with truth, say that he utterly disapproved of the foolish reforms which his late master was bent on making Of course, he was fond of him in a way, but we must think of ourselves, you know People in our position have no time for sentiment He started almost immediately after the king's death I am sending his retinue after him"

"Quite right," said the gentleman, whom the king now knew as one of his ambassadors "I shall follow him at once Between you and me, it is no bad thing for the country That poor boy had no notion of statesmanship He forced me to conclude a peace which would have been disastrous to all our best interests Happily, we shall have war directly now Promotions in the army would have been at a standstill if he had had his way"

The king did not stay to hear more

"I will go to my people," he said "They at least have no interest to make peace with my successor He will but take from them what I gave"

He heard the clock strike the first quarter as he went He was, indeed, a very remarkable king, for he knew his way to the poorest part of his dominions He had been there before, often and often, unknown to any one, and the misery which he had there beheld had sturred and steeled him to attempt what had never before been attempted

No one about the palace knew where he had caught the malignant fever which had carried him off He had a shrewd suspicion himself, and he went straight to that quarter

"Fevers won't hurt me now," he said laughing The houses were as wretched, the people looked as sickly and squalid as ever They were standing about in knots in the streets, late though it was, talking together about him His name was in every mouth The details of his illness, and the probable day of his funeral, seemed to interest them more than anything else

Five or six men were sitting drinking round a table in a disreputable-looking public-house, and he stopped to overhear their conversation

"And a good riddance, too!" said one of them, whom he knew well "What's the use of a king as never spends a farthing more than he can help? It gives no impetus to trade, it don't The new fellow's a very different sort We shall have fine doings soon "

"Aye!" struck in another, "a meddlesome, priggish sort of chap he was, always aworritting us about clean houses, and such like What right's he got to interfere, I'd like to know? "

"Down with all kings! says I," put in a third, "but if we're to have 'em, let 'em behave as sich I like a young fellow as isn't afraid of his missis, and knows port wine from sherry "

"Wanted to abolish capital punishment, he did!" cried a fourth "Thought he'd get more work out of the poor fellows in prison, I suppose? Depend on it, there's some reason like that at the bottom of it We ain't so very perticular about the lives of our subjects for nothing, we ain't," an expression of opinion in which all the rest heartily concurred The clock struck again as the king turned away, he felt as if a storm of abuse from some one he had always hated would be a precious balm just then He entered the state prison, and made for the condemned cell Capital punishment was not abolished yet, and in this particular instance he had certainly felt glad of it

The cell was tenanted only by a little haggard-looking man, who was writing busily on his knee The king had only seen him once before, and he looked at him curiously

Presently the gaoler entered, and with him the first councillor, a man whom his late master had greatly loved and esteemed The convict looked up quickly

"It was not to be till to-morrow," he said Then, as if afraid he had betrayed some cowardice, "but I am ready at any moment. May I ask you to give this paper to my wife? "

"The king is dead," said the first councillor gravely "You are reprieved His present majesty has other views. You will, in all probability, be set at large to-morrow."

"Dead?" said the man with a stunned look

"Dead!" said the first councillor, with the impressiveness of a whole board

The man stood up, passing his hand across his brow

"Sir," he said earnestly, "I respected him. For all he was a king, he treated me like a gentleman. He, too, had a young wife. Poor fellow, I wish he were alive, again!"

There were tears in the man's eyes as he spoke

The third quarter struck as the king left the prison. He felt unutterably humiliated. The pity of his foe was harder to bear than the scorn of his friends. He would rather have died a thousand deaths than owe his life to such a man. And yet, because he was himself noble, he could not but rejoice to find nobility in another. He said to himself sternly that it was not worth what he had gone through. He reviewed his position in no very self-complacent mood. The affection he had so confidently relied upon was but a dream. The people he was fain to work for were not ripe for their own improvement. A foolish little child, a generous enemy, these were his only friends. After all, was it worth while to live? Had he not better get back quietly and submit, making no further effort? He had learnt his lesson, he could "lie down in peace, and sleep, and take his rest." The eternal powers had justified themselves. What matter though every man had proved a liar? The bitterness had passed away, and he seemed to see clearly.

Thick clouds had gathered over the moon, and the cold struck through him. All at once a sense of loneliness that cannot be described rushed over him, and his heart sank. Was there really no one who cared—no one? He would have given anything at that moment for a look, a single word of real sympathy. He longed with sick longing for the assurance of love.

There were yet a few moments left. How had he borne to wait so long? This, at least, he was sure of, and this was all the world to him. He began to find comfort and consolation in the thought, he forgave—indeed he almost forgot—the rest. Yet he had fallen very low, for, as he stood at the door of his wife's room, he hesitated whether to go in. What if this, too, were an illusion? Had he not best go back before he knew?

"But I have never yet done anything through fear," said the king

His wife was sitting by the fire alone, her face hidden, her long hair falling round her like a veil At the first sight of her, a pang of self-reproach shot through him How could he ever have doubted ?

She was wearing a ring that he had given her—a ring she wore always, and the light sparkled and flashed from the jewel Except for this, there was nothing bright in the room

He ardently desired to comfort her He wondered why all her ladies had left her Surely one might have stayed with her on this first night of her bereavement ? She seemed to be lost in thought If she would only speak, or call his name ! But she was quite silent

A slight noise made the king start A secret door in the wall opened, the existence of which he had thought was known only to himself and his queen, and a man stood before her

She put her finger to her lips, as though to counsel silence, and then threw herself into his arms

“ You have come,” she said—“ Oh, I am so glad ! I had to hold his hand when he was dying I was frightened sitting here by myself I thought his ghost would come back, but he will never come back any more We may be happy always now,” and drawing the ring from her finger, she kissed it, weeping, and gave it to him

When midnight struck, the watchers wakened with a start, to find the king lying stark and stiff, as before, but a great change had come over his countenance

“ We must not let the queen see him again,” they said.

BART KENNEDY

B 1861

THE KING'S LAST SAILING

THE body of Smerd was sent forth in the blazing ship, and the wind swelled out the great sail that stood high up across the mast, as yet ungrasped by the fire. Water, wind, and flame surrounded the enshrouded king who had led his vikings to the battle and the spoiling across unknown heaving seas into strange lands. No more would come from Smerd the shout of the full throat as he led to the fight his wild, hard men. No more would his axe flash in the swing of death. For Smerd lay still.

It had come to pass that he had gone the way that all go. He had died as should die a Norse king—this hard, implacable, slaying Smerd! But a strange softness was in his face as he lay in the peace of death on the bale. Over his body the scald had chanted his deeds of glory. He had sung of the slaying of Or, whose might was as the might of a he-ot—Or, who had fallen before the death-swing of the axe of Smerd! And the song of the scald had told of the sacking of burgs, and the burnings. And through the song the king had lain with the calm of death on his face, his axe and spear and sword lying in stillness by him. And the sacred, hallowed rites of the dead had followed the song. And the wise women had muttered the magic runes. He had gone the way of the brave!

A blazing, wind-driven ship was bearing him now to his last end. The glow of the fire sank into the waters and rose up, filling the air. And the glow lit up the face of Smerd as he lay.

From the vikings standing on the shore there came a mighty shout. They could see from afar the face of the king as the glow dwelt upon it.

"It is well with him in Valhalla!" cried Thorold, the scald of the keen eyes—the wise one. "It is well with Smerd. He smiles! He smiles in the glow of the flame!"

A murmur went around and a wise woman made a sign.

"'Tis as the sea-rune said," she muttered.

"It is then the omen," said Thronn of the heavy sword to Thorold.

"It is," cried Thorold again, his voice swelling out into a chant.

"The sign has come Odin has welcomed Smerd Even now is the going of the feast in Valhalla The gods rise in the great hall to quaff their cups to the hero And the smile is on the face of the dead yonder as it goes out into the vastness The smile in the glow of the fire It is the sign It is the sign! It is well Go forth, O body of Smerd, to the wind, the water, the flame, the fire Mingle thou and be lost Meet thou the redness of the fire and the sweep and hurl of the wind Meet thou the waters, Smerd Thou handler of the crushing axe! Thou slayer of Lan! Thou hero whose soul the gods have acclaimed in Valhalla! Go forth, O king, in the blaze!"

Again the wise woman made a sign

"'Tis as the rune goes that Hild stitched in his shroud," she said to herself "And told I her the meaning of it, and the mystery of it Hild who is gone—who loved Smerd Hild who is gone!"

The vikings were again shouting mightily The sign had come! They stood around Thorold, the scald of the keen eyes—the wise one Long-haired, blue-eyed, great-limbed men clad in skins Wild-faced sons of the sea and the battle and the storm They held aloft their swords and axes and spears, and clashed them together as they shouted No more would their king lead them to the fight and the spoiling and the carouse No more would they follow him to the sacking and the burning No more would they see him striding in their front, whirling his axe He was gone But his going was the going of a hero He had fallen fighting—as a Norse king should fall How his axe had crashed and split and hewed! Around him had lain in heaps the men that had died from the smite of him! And then they had borne him away, and carried him hither, and sent his body on the ship yonder to its last end!

The vikings shouted and shouted Odin had welcomed Smerd! And even now the gods were acclaiming him in the feast in the great hall The sign had come He had smiled as he lay in the glow of the flame

At last they were silent They were standing and watching the flames from the ship as it was bearing swiftly out under the press of the great sail

"The fire touches not the sail," said Flann of the red hair to Thronn "And sails she as though Korl of the helm had her in his grasp She goes her way straight as a sword"

"It is so!" exclaimed Thronn.

H. pp.

Barthmann

"It is so!" echoed the vikings wonderingly

"Why is this?" asked Flann of Thorold, who was standing near.

Thorold bent down and shaded his eyes with his hand as he looked out across the water to the swift-going ship, which now was far off. The vikings looked at him questioningly. Thorold had the deep knowledge! He knew the meaning of things!

The wise woman who had made the sign was gone

"The wind blows the fire away to the side of the sail," said Thorold, at last, "and the helm seems to be still—as if it were held."

"It is strange that the helm should be still," said Flann. "Where is Godrül, the wise woman who made the sign of the hand? Look!"

The ship had suddenly turned from its straight course, and the great sail flapped and shook, and was for an instant still. For a moment the blaze of the fire seemed to die away

And the bow of the ship swung slowly round

Thorold was still bent down, watching—his hand shading his eyes. A deep silence was upon all Round and round came the ship. And there crept into the face of Thorold a look that no one could understand. He bent lower still—and then all at once he rose up, his face working with wonder.

"By Odin and all the gods!" he shouted. "Smerd has risen, and is himself steering the ship!"

The vikings suddenly thronged and crushed round him.

"Smerd——"

"Smerd has risen?"

"By the Hammer——"

"——has risen?"

"Smerd is——"

"He is standing even now beside the helm," shouted Thorold again.

"He is pulling it over. Canst thou not see him, Flann? Look, Thronn, look! Canst thou not see him? Look, ye vikings! Where is Godrül, the wise woman who made the sign?"

"She is gone," said Flann. "But Smerd is dead!"

"No!" exclaimed Thorold. "He has risen!" He pointed out to the ship. "He pulls over the helm slowly. He is weak. The sign in the glow of the fire was no sign. Smerd has risen! Let us out to him! Out to him, vikings!"

The vikings looked out in amaze across the waters. Something clad in white was pulling over the helm. They could faintly see it in the distance And the ship swung back again to its course The great sail filled and swelled out

And the flame of the fire again rose

The figure could not be seen as the ship bore along to the open It was hid from view by the width of the high stern that arched back

And now around the swift-moving ship was an immense, blood-coloured half-circle of light

The wind was growing and the sky was beginning to darken, and foam was coming on the crests of the waves The sea-birds were flying into the land A storm was at hand

"But surely was Smerd dead!" cried Flann to Thorold "I came up as he lay And after I saw his wounds His breast was pierced through, and the heart of him was rent I saw him with the life gone from him He was dead!"

"He is there, then," said Thorold, pointing "I saw him living He is there, steering the ship I saw him as the sail fell out of the wind And ye whose eyes are not my eyes saw something white at the helm Let us out to him!"

The vikings rushed to get a ship that was lying near into readiness to go out after the blazing ship that held Smerd, their king The sign that had come to them was no sign! He would lead them out again to the battle and the spoiling Again they would follow him, to sack and burn and slay Smerd lived Again they would see his axe whirling and gleaming Smerd lived! He was out in the ship yonder

"Think you that Smerd lives?" asked Flann of Swart of the flinging hammer, as they hauled strongly on a rope together

"Surely!" said Swart "Thorold, the scald of the keen eyes, saw him And saw I something white that moved What think you, Flann?"

"By Odin, I know not," said Flann "But I saw with my eyes the rent in the breast of him as he lay The heart of him was split He was dead By Odin he was dead, as I am alive now!"

"Mayhap there's a spell in it," said Swart "But he lives, surely Thorold saw him"

"I clove the skull of the one that stood near him as he lay!" cried Flann "Smerd was dead, and steers he now the ship of the blaze. He lives But I saw him dead"

"There's the wonder in it," said Ol of the strong arm "But Smerd lives!"

They had the ship all but ready They were about to push her out from the shore

"Ho! Thorold!" called out Flann suddenly "Why does Smerd go out from us? Why does he not turn the ship?"

All paused, and looked at Thorold, the wise one It was strange to the vikings that Smerd should go out from them! Why did he not turn the ship, as said Flann?

Thorold turned, and looked at the ship

"He bids us to follow him," he said "He has the meaning for it"

"It may be," said a voice behind them "But go ye not out"

It was Godrul, the wise woman, who had made the sign

"But I saw him!" cried Thorold

"Go ye not out," said Godrul "Let the body of Smerd go to its end Saw ye not the sign? Go ye not" And she turned and left the vikings

"But we saw him alive!" said Thionn

"He is dead," said Flann "Let us not go out An evil spell is being woven"

Thorold knew not what to think But he had surely seen Smerd at the helm There was some deep mystery in it How he could fathom it he knew not It was a strange happening

"Let us not go," said Flann

"No!" cried Thorold "Let us go! Let us heed not Godrul. Come! Why fear we an evil spell? Let us out to our king!"

And at his words the vikings shook out the sail of the ship they had got into readiness, and in a moment she was cutting through the waves that were now roughening up with the wind that was rising strong For a while they helped her speed with strokes from the long heavy oars But soon the oars were shipped inboard, for the strong breeze broke suddenly into a gale And the sky grew darker, and the swell of the waters rose mightily, and waves flew and dashed over the ship as she swirled along The wind now roared and swept, and the mast strained and groaned, but Korl of the helm held the ship full sail to the wind

They were gaining on the ship of the blaze!

"The ship goes wildly now," cried Thorold, as he watched "I see no one at the helm. And the sail is grasped by the fire and blazes full."

Nearer and nearer came the vikings through the wildness and stress of the storm

"By the Hammer of Thor!" shouted Thorold, from the bow of the ship "Smerd is dead! He sleeps his last sleep I see the stillness of his face through the flames But the riddle is read"

"And how is it read?" asked Flann, who stood near

"Hild, who loved him, is with him! Hild whom he took from the lord of the Far Island when he slew him"

"How got she in the ship?" cried Thronn and Ol and the vikings who had heard the words of Thorold

"I know not," said Thorold, in answer, "but she lies there with her arms round the body of Smerd The sign we were given was a true sign Hild steered the ship out from us She lies there, yonder I saw her as the wind drove back the flame"

The cry of a woman came through the storm

"It is her voice!" shouted Flann, "the voice of Hild Let us get to the ship!"

But they heard no more the voice through the storm

At last they were near to the ship But the end was upon it They could see but a mass of redness and flame, they could hear but the roar of the wind and the roar of the fire

"It is the end," said Flann

And suddenly the ship broke and sank—the ship that had borne out Hild and the body of Smerd

SARAH GRAND

B 1862

WHEN THE DOOR OPENED——?

WHAT curious glimpses of life one catches sometimes unawares, scenes that flash forth distinctly from the tangled mass of movement, the crowded details, the inextricable confusion of human affairs as they appear to the looker-on in a great city. Seen amidst all the turmoil, from a hansom cab, from the top of an omnibus, from the platform of an underground station in a train that stops for a minute, from the pavement in a carriage blocked in by the stream of traffic, by day and night, from out of the routine, the commonplace doings of people in the commonplace moods and phases which weave themselves into the weft of wholesome lives, they stand out to view, these intervals of intensity, the beginnings of episodes—tragic, heroic, amorous, abject, or the conclusions which mark the turning-point, the crisis of a life. If it be the beginning, how one aches to know what the end will be, and if it be the end, what would one not give for the first part! Yet, tantalising as these fragments are, they possess a charm which is not in the finished story, and are recollected with vivid interest long after many a tale, begun at the beginning and rounded to a satisfactory conclusion, has lapsed from the mind like a thing that is done with and forgotten.

For instance I was coming home alone late one night by train from a distant suburb, and happened to get into a carriage with three other people. One of them was a man about forty, with dark hair going grey, and a pleasant, clear-cut, well-disciplined face. The other two were husband and wife, the husband being a good deal older than the wife. There seemed to have been some disagreement between the pair before I got into the carriage, for the lady looked sulky and dejected, while the gentleman was a good deal ruffled. He spoke a word or two to the other passenger, however, in a way which showed that they were acquainted, and also, as it seemed to me, for the purpose of keeping up appearances. The lady, on the contrary, made no attempt to disguise her feelings, but sat silent and rigid, staring into the darkness, until the train stopped, when her husband grimly handed her out, and I was left alone with the third passenger

We watched the pair walk off together, and it was obvious that the quarrel recommenced before they had taken many steps. My solitary fellow-passenger sat opposite to me, and when the two had passed out of sight, our eyes met in an involuntary glance of intelligence, and he shrugged his shoulders slightly

"I should like to give that pair a piece of advice," slipped from me unawares

"Ah!" he said, sighing, "so should I, but it is an impossible thing to do in such cases"

"I suppose you are thinking that people know their own business best," I rejoined

"No, I am not," he answered. "The lookers-on see most of the game, you know. But, nevertheless, it is worse than useless to offer advice to a married pair—especially when they are both wrong-headed," he added. "But even right-headed people, with the best intentions, make terrible mistakes, and in their own cases, too, when they might be expected to know what they are about. Now, that man who was here just now watches his wife and keeps her shut up, or only allows her out under escort, as if he thought that she would certainly misconduct herself if ever she had an opportunity. The consequence is, she is growing to dislike and despise him, and he may drive her in the end to do the very thing he dreads and is guarding against. I cannot understand how a man can care to have a bond-slave, always under orders, for a wife. Personally, I prefer a free woman, and I should be sorry to think that liberty means licence in any but exceptional cases"

"But there, it seems to me, that a difficulty arises," I observed. "How is a man to tell which will prove an exceptional case?"

"Oh, I should think there is no difficulty about that," he answered. "Girls give indication of character early enough. And, at any rate, if they are not trustworthy, dogging them about won't make them so. I don't say, however, that a young and thoughtless girl should be cast entirely upon her own resources, only what she wants is a companion, not a keeper. However, as I said just now, the right ordering of married lives is a matter in which even the best-intentioned people may make mistakes. I married a girl somewhat younger than myself—about ten years—not that I think that makes any difference if people agree in their tastes. It so happened, however, that we did not agree. I am fond of a quiet life, with full leisure for art and literature, and dislike nothing so much as killing time in idle chatter at entertainments where one is not entertained. My wife, on the contrary, as I found out very soon after we were married, is positively bored by books and pictures, and is never so happy as when she is in the full whirl of the social maelstrom. Well, I thought the matter out, and the justice of the case seemed to me to demand that she should not require me to go into Society, and that I should not require her to stay at home. We were fond of each other, but I could not see why, on that account, either of us should have our life spoilt by being made to conform to the uncongenial tastes and habits of the other. Marriage must be a perfect institution when there is entire similarity of interests, but if there is not, I cannot see why people should be miserable. There is time enough for each of the pair to occupy themselves in their own way during the twenty-four hours, and meet often enough to be happy together as well. In fact, I don't know that it isn't the only chance of happiness in such a case for them to order their lives in that way. They keep in touch better by drifting apart and meeting again with minds refreshed and something to say to each other. So I let my wife go her way and I went mine, and the plan seemed to be answering capitally. There were times when she would have liked me to go out with her, and there were times when I should have been glad if she had stayed at home with me, and occasionally we conformed to one another's secret wishes in these respects, but I cannot say that the self-sacrifice was much of a success. There was one fancy-dress ball—a public affair—that she particularly wanted to go to, and I thought she half hinted that I should accompany her, if so, I did not take the hint, because I knew I should be bored.

"She went to that ball rather conspicuously well dressed in a silver-grey domino, lined with pale pink, and trimmed with white lace. Her fan was white ostrich feathers, and her mask was fringed with lace, which concealed her mouth. She had been quite excited about going, but when it came to the point, she didn't seem to be so very eager, after all. She was to be met by some friends at the ball. I said I would sit up for her, and she promised not to be late.

"After she had gone, I felt depressed somehow. I got a book and a cigar, but did not find either of them in the least absorbing.

My mind wandered when I tried to read, and I had to give it up at last, and just settled myself to smoke and think things out

"I began to wonder what my wife was doing at the ball, and if she had found her friends all right. Then it occurred to me that it would be very awkward if they did not meet by some mistake. All kinds of people go to these public balls, and manners are apt to be free-and-easy when masks are worn. My wife, even in her domino, gave the impression of youth and good looks. She might be subjected to some annoyance from the bounders who haunt such places. At that minute she might be dancing with some very undesirable partner. Had I done right to let her go alone? I threw my cigar into the fireplace and got up, but without any distinct idea. In fact, I stood for a little, as one does sometimes in a difficulty, with all thought suspended. Then I recollected a fancy dress I had had for a ball I went to before I met my wife. It was the black velvet costume of a Spanish Don of the period of Philip IV, the Velasquez period, a handsome dress copied from a picture, and well made. I had liked myself in it when I wore it, and I wondered what I had done with it—if it were among the costumes I used to paint from. I went to my studio, and there I found it in an old chest, and the mask I had worn along with it.

"It was still early in the night, why not dress and go to the ball also? My wife had taken the carriage, but there were some livery stables near, and I could easily get a brougham. I rang for my man, and sent him to fetch me one.

"The ball was in full swing when I arrived, but by great good luck almost the first person I saw was my wife. The silver-grey, pale pink, white lace and white ostrich-feather fan made an easily-distinguished costume, and I recognised her at once, and made my way through the crowd towards her. But as I approached, I realised that she could not possibly recognise me. She had never seen me in that dress, she probably didn't even know that I had it, yet, although I was walking straight up to her, and she saw that I was, she made no sign of objecting. Was it possible that she would let a strange man speak to her, and even encourage him to do so by her attitude? The horrible doubt shot such a pang through my heart that I determined to set it at rest for ever by making the experiment. Without waiting to ask myself whether it was a fair or an unfair thing to do, I addressed her in a feigned voice, familiarly

“ ‘I fancy that you are waiting for me,’ I said ‘Please say that you are’

“ ‘Well, I am waiting for something exciting to happen,’ she answered, also disguising her voice, and speaking with the easy assurance of one who is accustomed to such encounters, ‘for standing here alone is not lively’

“ For a moment the tawdry splendour of the scene was blotted out I could neither see nor hear I recovered myself, however, just as the band struck up, and asked her mechanically if I might have the pleasure of a dance

“ ‘I shall be delighted,’ she replied, taking my arm at once, and leading me, rather than waiting to be led, through the motley crew about us to the ball-room, in a free-and-easy way that filled me with consternation In her right mind, she had always seemed to be reserved with strangers, and I should never have imagined that a mask would have made such a difference

“ She danced with the abandonment of a ballet-girl, and when the music ceased, she asked me for ice and liqueur, and showed me the way to the refreshment room When she had had all she wanted, and it was a good deal, she took my arm again, and we began to walk about She seemed to know all the ins and outs of the place, which surprised me, for I didn’t suppose she had ever been there before I asked her, however “ ‘Have I ever been here before!’ she ejaculated ‘I should just think so! I come whenever I can’

“ ‘Do you tell your husband?’ I ventured.

“ ‘Oh, my husband!’ she exclaimed ‘But who told you that I had a husband, by the way?’

“ ‘I feel sure that a lady of your personal attractions and charms of manner cannot fail to have a husband,’ I answered

“ ‘Ah, courtier,’ she said ‘Heigho! What a difference there is between husbands and lovers! Aren’t women fools to marry if they can make love for a livelihood?’

“ She clasped her hands around my arm as she spoke, and looked up into my face alluringly Was this the true woman, I wondered, and was that other to whom I was accustomed only an actress earning her living? No, I could not believe it I argued with myself that the manner and sentiments were assumed with the dress, that they were part of the masquerade But she could not have done it so well without much experience, and she confessed that she came here often, which argued deceit, for I had never had a hint of it. Indeed, the reason she gave me for going that night was that she had never been to a mask ball. Oh, thrice accursed fool that I was to let her come alone! Yet perhaps it was just as well. I knew that she was frivolous, but had never suspected that she was fast. Indeed, I would have wagered my soul that she was to be trusted anywhere. She had taken me in finely, and it was just as well that I should know it. Doubtless my friends had known it all along, and pitied me for a blind, weak fool. But it was a shock, I can tell you, and I was in two minds the whole time. In the one I condemned her utterly, in the other I was trying to excuse her. Appearances were all against her certainly, but the habit of love and respect is not to be changed in a moment. And, after all, what had she done that could not be excused? She had talked in a vulgar way certainly, but I had not presumed upon it. If I had taken the slightest liberty, doubtless she would have resented it promptly. Would she?

"Her hand was resting on my arm. I hesitated a moment, then I took it and pressed it. To my horror, she laughed and returned the pressure.

" 'You are waking up, Don Sombre,' she said. 'I was beginning to fear that you were one of the doomed-to-the-dumps, you were so cold and dull. But the dumps don't last long when I'm about. I'll soon cheer you up, and put some life in you.'

"I felt a horrid emotion at these words, and it was some time before I could master my voice. I was a broken man, and longed to sit down and cry like a child. It was sorrow that had come upon me, not anger. One is not angry when there is no hope, one is crushed. And yet, although I knew there was no hope, I was like a gambler who must stake again. I determined to go a little further just to give her a last chance.

" 'You have cheered me to such good purpose that I do not feel inclined to part with you,' I said, 'but this crowd is distracting. Let us get out of it. I have a carriage waiting, will you come home with me?'

" 'Why, he's quite nervous,' she said, laughing. 'Now that is nice, for I could swear, Don Sombre, that you're not accustomed to "no" from a lady.'

" 'Why is it nice?' I asked.

“ ‘ Well, you wouldn’t be nervous if you were indifferent, you know,’ she said archly ‘ I can’t stand your cold-blooded creatures, who don’t care a button either way ’

“ ‘ Then I ought to please you,’ I answered grimly , ‘ for, as you rightly perceive, I do care greatly Will you come ? ’

“ She laughed again Good heavens ! Was that acquiescence ? I drew her towards the main entrance with the impetuosity of a young lover, and she did not demur She remarked that I seemed to be impatient, and impatient I was Every moment was an hour of pain now until the ghastly farce was over But I could not end it there and then It was too serious I must get her home I went down the street myself to fetch my hired brougham, so that my name might not be called out, and I told the man to go back before I returned to hand her in I was afraid of a scene in that public place if she suddenly discovered who I was, and it seemed an interminable time until we started We were clear of the crowd, and off at last, however, but for the first few minutes I sat beside her unable to utter a word, and she began to rally me again on the subject of my gloom Then she fell up against me, but whether because the carriage lurched or out of mere wantonness, I could not tell However, I put my arm round her and she did not object “ ‘ Where do you live ? ’ she asked, as we neared the house ‘ These streets are all alike, and I cannot tell in the least where I am ’

“ ‘ Well, we are there, at any rate,’ I answered, as the carriage stopped I handed her out, and opened the door with my latch-key The light was so low in the hall, I had to take her hand to lead her up to the drawing-room There all was darkness, but I had matches in my pocket, and lit the gas Then I turned to her She was giggling at something, but did not seem to see where she was “ ‘ Now, madam,’ I said sternly, ‘ we will unmask ’

“ In a moment she had taken hers off and slipped out of the domino

“ I gazed I gasped I fell into a chair For the woman before me was a perfect stranger—a creature with dyed hair, blackened eyelids, and painted cheeks—not the sort of person to be seen with anywhere if one valued one’s reputation , and yet I could have gone down on my knees and kissed the hem of her garment, so great was my relief I shall never forget it ! For the first few minutes I could think of nothing, do nothing, but just sit there gazing at her, and smiling idiotically She was flattered by my attitude, which she mustook for speechless admiration, and she stood still, posing in a theatrical manner, with an affectation of coyness, until I recovered myself

“ My first clear idea was that I must get rid of her , but how to do it without offering her any indignity ? I was casting about in my mind for a plausible excuse , but before anything occurred to me, a carriage stopped at the door below I heard a key turned in the lock, then the rustle of silk, and a light step on the staircase My wife had returned early as she had promised, and was coming straight up to the drawing-room Her hand was already on the handle of the door——”

He broke off at this point and looked out of the window The train had stopped, but we had not noticed it at the moment

“ Hello ! ” he exclaimed, “ this is my station ! ” and out he jumped, just as we were moving off again

I have never seen him since , I do not suppose that I ever shall , so I expect that all my life long I shall be tormented with conjectures as to what happened when the door opened.

Re 11

Samuelson

THE STORY OF A PIEBALD HORSE

THIS is all about a piebald. People there are like birds that come down in flocks, hop about chattering, gobble up their seed, then fly away, forgetting what they have swallowed. I love not to scatter grain for such as these. With you, friend, it is different. Others may laugh if they like at the old man of many stories, who puts all things into his copper memory. I can laugh, too, knowing that all things are ordered by destiny, otherwise I might sit down and cry.

The things I have seen! There was the piebald that died long ago, I could take you to the very spot where his bones used to be bleaching in the sun. There is a nettle growing on the spot. I saw it yesterday. What important things are these to remember and talk about! Bones of a dead horse and a nettle, a young bird that falls from its nest in the night and is found dead in the morning, puffballs blown about by the wind, a little lamb left behind by the flock bleating at night amongst the thorns and thistles, where only the fox or wild dog can hear it! Small matters are these, and our lives, what are they? And the people we have known, the men and women who have spoken to us and touched us with warm hands—the bright eyes and red lips! Can we cast these things like dead leaves on the fire? Can we lie down full of heaviness because of them, and sleep and rise in the morning without them? Ah, friend!

Let us to the story of the piebald. There was a cattle-marking at neighbour Sotelo's estancia, and out of a herd of three thousand head we had to part all the yearlings to be branded. After that, dinner and a dance. At sunrise we gathered, about thirty of us, all friends and neighbours, to do the work. Only with us came one person nobody knew. He joined us when we were on our way to the cattle, a young man, slender, well-formed, of pleasing countenance and dressed as few could dress in those days. His horse also shone with silver trappings. And what an animal! Many horses have I seen in this life, but never one with such a presence as this young stranger's piebald.

Arrived at the herd, we began to separate the young animals, the men riding in couples through the cattle, so that each calf when singled out could be driven by two horsemen, one on each side, to prevent it from doubling back. I happened to be mounted on a demon with a fiery mouth—there was no making him work, so I had to leave the parters and stand with little to do, watching the yearlings already parted, to keep them from returning to the herd.

Presently neighbour Chapaco rode up to me. He was a good-hearted man, well-spoken, half Indian and half Christian, but he also had another half, and that was devil.

"What! neighbour Lucero, are you riding on a donkey or a goat, that you remain here doing boy's work?"

I began telling him about my horse, but he did not listen, he was looking at the parters.

"Who is that young stranger?" he asked.

"I see him to-day," I replied, "and if I see him again to-morrow, then I shall have seen him twice."

"And in what country of which I have never heard did he learn cattle-parting?" said he.

"He rides," I answered, "like one presuming on a good horse. But he is safe, his fellow-worker has all the danger."

"I believe you," said Chapaco. "He charges furiously and hurls the heifer before his comrade, who has all the work to keep it from doubling, and all the danger, for at any moment his horse may go over it and fall. Thus our young stranger does knowingly, thinking that no one here will resent it. No, Lucero, he is presuming more on his long knife than on his good horse."

Even while he spoke, the two we were watching rode up to us. Chapaco saluted the young man, taking off his hat, and said—"Will you take me for a partner, friend?"

"Yes, why not, friend?" returned the other, and together the two rode back to the herd.

Now I shall watch them, said I to myself, to see what this Indian devil intends doing. Soon they came out of the herd driving a very small animal. Then I knew what was coming. "May your guardian angel be with you to avert a calamity, young stranger!" I exclaimed. Whip and spur those two came towards me like men riding a race and not parting cattle. Chapaco kept close to the calf, so that he had the advantage, for his horse was well trained. At length he got a little ahead, then, quick as lightning, he forced the calf round square before the other. The piebald struck it full in the middle, and fell because it had to fall. But Saints in Heaven! why did not the rider save himself? Those who were watching saw him throw up his feet to tread his horse's neck and leap away, nevertheless man, horse, and calf came down together. They ploughed the ground for some distance, so great had been their speed, and the man was under. When we picked him up he was senseless, the blood flowing from his mouth. Next morning, when the sun rose and God's light fell on the earth, he expired.

Of course there was no dancing that night. Some of the people, after eating, went away, others remained sitting about all night, talking in low tones, waiting for the end. A few of us were at his bedside watching his white face and closed eyes. He breathed, and that was all. When the sunlight came over the world he opened his eyes, and Sotelo asked him how he did. He took no notice, but presently his lips began to move, though they seemed to utter no sound. Sotelo bent his ear down to listen. "Where does she live?" he asked. He could not answer—he was dead.

"He seemed to be saying many things," Sotelo told us, "but I understood only this—'Tell her to forgive me. I was wrong. She loved him from the first. I was jealous, and hated him. Tell Elaria not to grieve—Anacleto will be good to her.' Alas! my friends, where shall I find his relations to deliver this dying message to them?"

The Alcalde came that day and made a list of the dead man's possessions, and bade Sotelo take charge of them till the relations could be found. Then, calling all the people together, he bade each person cut on his whip-handle and on the sheath of his knife the mark branded on the flank of the piebald, which was in shape like a horse-shoe with a cross inside, so that it might be shown to all strangers, and made known through the country until the dead man's relations should hear of it.

When a year had gone by, the Alcalde told Sotelo that, all inquiries having failed, he could now take the piebald and the silver trappings for himself. Sotelo would not listen to this, for he was a devout man and coveted no person's property, dead or alive. The horse and things, however, still remained in his charge.

Three years later I was one afternoon sitting with Sotelo, taking maté, when his herd of dun mares were driven up. They came galloping and neighing to the corral, and ahead of them, looking like a wild horse, was the piebald, for no person ever mounted him

"Never do I look on that horse," I remarked, "without remembering the fatal marking, when its master met his death"

"Now you speak of it," said he, "let me inform you that I am about to try a new plan That noble piebald and all those silver trappings hanging in my room are always reproaching my conscience Let us not forget the young stranger we put under ground I have had many masses said for his soul's repose, but that does not quite satisfy me Somewhere there is a place where he is not forgotten Hands there are, perhaps, that gather wild flowers to place them with lighted candles before the image of the Blessed Virgin, eyes there are that weep and watch for his coming You know how many travellers and cattle-drovers going to Buenos Ayres from the south call for refreshment at the pulperia I intend taking the piebald and tying him every day at the gate there No person calling will fail to notice the horse, and some day perhaps some traveller will recognise the brand on its flank and will be able to tell us what department and what estancia it comes from"

I did not believe anything would result from this, but said nothing, not wishing to discourage him

Next morning the piebald was tied up at the gate of the pulperia, at the roadside, only to be released again when night came, and this was repeated every day for a long time So fine an animal did not fail to attract the attention of all strangers passing that way, still several weeks went by and nothing was discovered At length, one evening, just when the sun was setting, there appeared a troop of cattle driven by eight men It had come a great distance, for the troop was a large one—about nine hundred head—and they moved slowly, like cattle that had been many days on the road Some of the men came in for refreshments, then the store-keeper noticed that one remained outside leaning on the gate

"What is the capatas doing that he remains outside?" said one of the men

"Evidently he has fallen in love with that piebald," said another, "for he cannot take his eyes off it"

At length the capatas, a young man of good presence, came in and sat down on a bench The others were talking and laughing about the strange things they had all been doing the day before, for they had been many days and nights on the road, only nodding a little in their saddles, and at length becoming delirious from want of sleep, they had begun to act like men that are half-crazed

"Enough of the delusions of yesterday," said the capatas, who had been silently listening to them, "but tell me, boys, am I in the same condition to-day?"

"Surely not!" they replied "Thanks to those horned devils being so tired and footsore, we all had some sleep last night"

"Very well, then," said he, "now you have finished eating and drinking, go back to the troop, but before you leave look well at that piebald tied at the gate He that is not a cattle-drover may ask, 'How can my eyes deceive me?' but I know that a crazy brain makes us see many strange things when the drowsy eyes can only be held open with the fingers"

The men did as they were told, and when they had looked well at the piebald, they all shouted out, "He has the brand of the estancia de Silva on his flank, and no counter-brand—claim the horse, capatas, for he is yours" And after that they rode away to the herd

"My friend," said the capatas to the store-keeper, "will you explain how you came possessed of this piebald horse?"

Then the other told him everything, even the dying words of the young stranger, for he knew all

The capatas bent down his head, and covering his face shed tears Then he said, "And you died thus, Torcuato, amongst strangers! From my heart I have forgiven you the wrong you did me Heaven rest your soul, Torcuato, I cannot forget that we were once brothers I, friend, am that Anacleto of whom he spoke with his last breath"

Sotelo was then sent for, and when he arrived and the pulperia was closed for the night, the capatas told his story, which I will give you in his own words, for I was also present to hear him This is what he told us

I was born on the southern frontier My parents died when I was very small, but Heaven had compassion on me and raised up one to shelter me in my orphanhood Don Loreto Silva took me to his estancia on the Sarandí, a stream half a day's journey from Tandil, towards the setting sun He treated me like one of his own children, and I took the name of Silva He had two other children, Torcuato, who was about the same age as myself, and his daughter, Elaria, who was younger He was a widower when he took charge of me, and died when I was still a youth After his death we moved to Tandil, where we had a house close to the little town, for we were all minors, and the property had been left to be equally divided between us when we should be of age. For four years we lived happily together, then when we were of age we preferred to keep the property undivided. I proposed that we should go and live on the estancia, but Torcuato would not consent, liking the place where we were living best. Finally, not being able to persuade him, I resolved to go and attend to the estancia myself. He said that I could please myself and that he should stay where he was with Elaria. It was only when I told Elaria of these things that I knew how much I loved her. She wept and implored me not to leave her.

"Why do you shed tears, Elaria?" I said, "is it because you love me? Know, then, that I also love you with all my heart, and if you will be mine, nothing can ever make us unhappy. Do not think that my absence at the estancia will deprive me of this feeling which has ever been growing up in me."

"I do love you, Anacleto," she replied, "and I have also known of your love for a long time. But there is something in my heart which I cannot impart to you, only I ask you, for the love you bear me, do not leave me, and do not ask me why I say this to you."

After this appeal I could not leave her, nor did I ask her to tell me her secret. Torcuato and I were friendly, but not as we had been before this difference. I had no evil thoughts of him, I loved him and was with him continually, but from the moment I announced to him that I had changed my mind about going to the estancia, and was silent when he demanded the reason, there was something in him which made it different between us. I could not open my heart to him about Elaria, and sometimes I thought that he also had a secret which he had no intention of sharing with me. This coldness did not, however, distress me very much, so great was the happiness I now experienced, knowing that I possessed Elaria's love. He was much away from the house, being fond of amusements, and he had also begun to gamble. About three months passed in this way, when one morning Torcuato, who was saddling his horse to go out, said, "Will you come with me, to-day, Anacleto?"

"I do not care to go," I answered.

"Look, Anacleto," said he, "once you were always ready to accompany me to a race or dance or cattle-marking. Why have you ceased to care for these things? Are you growing devout before your time, or does my company no longer please you?"

"It is best to tell him everything and have done with secrets," said I to myself, and so replied "Since you ask me, Torcuato, I will answer you frankly. It is true that I now take less pleasure than formerly in these pastimes, but you have not guessed the reason rightly."

"What then is this reason of which you speak?"

"Since you cannot guess it," I replied, "know that it is love."

"Love for whom?" he asked quickly, and turning very pale.

"Do you need ask? Elaria," I replied.

I had scarcely uttered the name before he turned on me full of rage.

"Elaria!" he exclaimed. "Do you dare tell me of love for Elaria! But you are only a blind fool, and do not know that I am going to marry her myself."

"Are you mad, Torcuato, to talk of marrying your sister?"

"She is no more my sister than you are my brother," he returned. "I," he continued, striking his breast passionately, "am the only child of my father, Loreto Silva. Elaria, whose mother died in giving her birth, was adopted by my parents. And because she is going to be my wife, I am willing that she should have a share of the property, but you, a miserable foundling, why were you lifted up so high? Was it not enough that you were clothed and fed till you came to man's estate? Not a hand's-breadth of the estancia land should be yours by right, and now you presume to speak of love for Elaria!"

My blood was on fire with so many insults, but I remembered all the benefits I had received from his father, and did not raise my hand against him. Without more words he left me. I then hastened to Elaria and told her what had passed.

"This," I said, "is the secret you would not impart to me. Why, when you knew these things, was I kept in ignorance?"

"Have pity on me, Anacleto," she replied, crying. "Did I not see that you two were no longer friends and brothers, and this without knowing of each other's love? I dared not open my lips to you or to him. It is always a woman's part to suffer in silence. God intended us to be poor, Anacleto, for we were both born of poor parents, and had this property never come to us, how happy we might have been!"

"Why do you say such things, Elaria? Since we love each other, we cannot be unhappy, rich or poor."

"Is it a little matter," she replied, "that Torcuato must be our bitter enemy? But you do not know everything. Before Torcuato's father died, he said he wished his son to marry me when we came of age. When he spoke about it we were sitting together by his bed."

"And what did you say, Elaria?" I asked, full of concern

"Torcuato promised to marry me I only covered my face, and was silent, for I loved you best even then, though I was almost a child, and my heart was filled with grief at his words After we came here, Torcuato reminded me of his father's words I answered that I did not wish to marry him, that he was only a brother to me Then he said that we were young and he could wait until I was of another mind This is all I have to say, but how shall we three live together any longer? I cannot bear to part from you, and every moment I tremble to think what may happen when you two are together"

"Fear nothing," I said "To-morrow morning you can go to spend a week at some friend's house in the town, then I will speak to Torcuato, and tell him that since we cannot live in peace together we must separate Even if he answers with insults I shall do nothing to grieve you, and if he refuses to listen to me, I shall send some person we both respect to arrange all things between us"

This satisfied her, but as evening approached she grew paler, and I knew she feared Torcuato's return He did not, however, come back that night Early next morning she was ready to leave It was an easy walk to the town, but the dew was heavy on the grass, and I saddled a horse for her to ride I had just lifted her to the saddle when Torcuato appeared He came at great speed, and throwing himself off his horse, advanced to us Elaria trembled and seemed ready to sink upon the earth to hide herself like a partridge that has seen the hawk I prepared myself for insults and perhaps violence He never looked at me, he only spoke to her

"Elaria," he said, "something has happened—something that obliges me to leave this house and neighbourhood at once Remember when I am away that my father, who cherished you and enriched you with his bounty, and who also cherished and enriched this ingrate, spoke to us from his dying bed and made me promise to marry you Think what his love was, do not forget that his last wish is sacred, and that Anacleto has acted a base, treacherous part in trying to steal you from me He was lifted out of the mire to be my brother and equal in everything except this He has got a third part of my inheritance—let that satisfy him, your own heart, Elaria, will tell you that a marriage with him would be a crime before God and man Look not for my return to-morrow nor for many days But if you two begin to laugh at my father's dying wishes, look for me, for then I shall not delay to come back to you, Elaria, and to you, Anacleto I have spoken"

He then mounted his horse and rode away. Very soon we learned the cause of his sudden departure. He had quarrelled over his cards and in a struggle that followed had stabbed his adversary to the heart. He had fled to escape the penalty. We did not believe that he would remain long absent, for Torcuato was very young, well off, and much liked, and this was, moreover, his first offence against the law. But time went on and he did not return, nor did any message from him reach us, and we at last concluded that he had left the country. Only now after four years have I accidentally discovered his fate through seeing his piebald horse.

After he had been absent over a year, I asked Elaria to become my wife. "We cannot marry till Torcuato returns," she said. "For if we take the property that ought to have been all his, and at the same time disobey his father's dying wish, we shall be doing an evil thing. Let us take care of the property till he returns to receive it all back from us, then, Anacleto, we shall be free to marry."

I consented, for she was more to me than lands and cattle. I put the estancia in order and, leaving a trustworthy person in charge of everything, I invested my money in fat bullocks to resell in Buenos Ayres, and in this business I have been employed ever since. From the estancia I have taken nothing, and now it must all come back to us—his inheritance and ours. This is a bitter thing and will give Elaria great grief.

Thus ended Anacleto's story, and when he had finished speaking and still seemed greatly troubled in his mind, Sotelo said to him, "Friend, let me advise you what to do. You will now shortly be married to the woman you love and probably some day a son will be born to you. Let him be named Torcuato, and let Torcuato's inheritance be kept for him. And if God gives you no son, remember what was done for you and for the girl you are going to marry, when you were orphans and friendless, and look out for some unhappy child in the same condition, to protect and enrich him as you were enriched."

"You have spoken well," said Anacleto. "I will report your words to Elaria, and whatever she wishes done that will I do."

So ends my story, friend. The cattle-drover left us that night and we saw no more of him. Only before going he gave the piebald and the silver trappings to Sotelo. Six months after his visit, Sotelo also received a letter from him to say that his marriage with Elaria had taken place; and the letter was accompanied with a present of seven cream-coloured horses with black manes and hoofs.

EDEN PHILLPOTTS

B. 1862

THE SKIPPER'S BIBLE

"IT'S like this 'ere the poor beggar's goin' to his death without no sort of sky-piloting whatsoever I looks after his body, feeds him 'andsome, but his soul—Lord knows that ain't in my line," said Dick Ferris, the mate of the Flying Fish

"No, nor yet in anybody's line aboard this ship," answered the carpenter

The Flying Fish was an ungodly vessel From her Yankee captain, Joseph Greenleaf, to Richard Ferris, an Englishman—from her cook to her cabin-boy, her ethical strength was low

The ship bowled briskly through the Caribbean Sea, bound for Kingston, Jamaica She carried cargo and a few passengers, to one of whom the words spoken by Ferris had reference He was a negro "decker," and a man of some importance, judging from the fact that a special erection of boards had been raised round him But the circumstances of capital crime alone raised Black Neil to his present eminence He now approached the end of his voyage and his earthly pilgrimage together A fellow-Ethiopian's blood was upon his head, sentence of death had been passed, and the gallows waited for him at Kingston

Nobody paid the doomed man much attention excepting Dick Ferris He, however, took lively interest in Black Neil, listened to the recital of his misdeeds, and considered the extent of his punishment very unreasonable

"It's like this 'ere," Dick explained to his friends, "I don't say as how he didn't kill a man He did, an' you or me 'ud done the same in his place His wife ran away with another nigger, and he laid wait and put daylight through him Quite right too"

"I spoke to him yesterday," remarked the carpenter "I said, 'You're a mortal bad lot, Neil, there's no denyin' of it', and he said, 'Dat's so, massa' Then I said, 'They'll hang you, old man, sure as eggs is eggs; and why shouldn't they?' And he says, 'Yes, sar, dat's so I's gwine to my 'count' "

"It's his future state as bothers him," declared Dick Ferris "Quite natural too We may think he ain't done much harm—leastways I do—but the law says he has, so he'll die with a sin on his soul An' you bet they'll take the judge's word for it in the next world, not a nigger's Anyways, it's 'ard he can't have no sky-piloting, 'cause he's a man, though black "

"You won't worry your head about niggers when you've seen a bit more of 'em, Britisher," sneered a misshapen seaman with a hairy head like a bull and a deformed leg

"Maybe not, but they're a blamed sight better'n some whites 'Tain't everybody as kills a fellow-creature's hanged, John Droop," answered Dick sharply

It happened that Mr Droop's past was open to criticism at one or two points, so the mate's remark restored peace and made the other seamen laugh

Then Ferris strolled forward to see Black Neil

The negro was sitting in his temporary cabin on deck—sitting chained with heavy irons, his elbows on his knees, his head down between his hands

"Well, how goes it? Did you have the grub cook sent along?" asked Dick, lighting his pipe

"Yes, tank you, massa Plenty good grub, sar, but I don't want nuffin' to eat much "

"No Sky-piloting is what you hankers arter, boy Natural enough too But blame me if there's a drop of that tap aboard. Have a whiff? "

"Tank you, massa, don't want no 'bacco now "

Black Neil shook his head and looked out over the blue waters with great, sunken eyes He was an elderly negro, deep wrinkles already furrowed his face, and his wool had begun to grow grey

"It's berry bad, sar, feelin' you's all wrong wid Gor A'mighty I's damn bad lot, what nebber learnt no prayers nor nuffin', and now I gib de world to hear a minister speak up for me, or any udder gem'man what could "

"Jus' so, jus' so," answered Dick Then he sucked his pipe and was silent

Presently Neil spoke again

"I'm a 'complished man, sar, in my way I can read plenty If you got de Word now, or de book ob hymn songs, seen' dar's no minister nor gem'man what can pray, I might do 'long wid dem "

" Ain't no good books here, my son , devil a one of 'em An' you can read ! Well, that beats anything There's no man on this 'ere craft can read 'cept you an' me, an' the skipper an' the cook "

" Hab dey got good books, sar ? "

" Not them , leastways only navigation an' charts There ain't no sky-piloting in charts, I judge Lord ! it's 'ard Can't you manage a bit of a pray nohow ? You'd feel easier like if you could "

The negro only shook his head again

" I no pray widdout somefin to start me off, sar "

" Well, keep up your pecker, anyhow I'll look around Maybe the deckers knows a hymn, or summat of the sort, among 'em But you did ought to havetaken your last cruise in another ship forsartin "

Then he rolled off to see if the Flying Fish contained any shred or scrap of spiritual food for Black Neil

When the members of the crew found that their first mate extended such sympathy to the condemned negro, they too, for the most part, showed a fragment of humanity in their treatment of him Men who would have kicked a black from before them, like dirt, under ordinary circumstances, felt that Black Neil's peculiar position entitled him to a little respect Moreover, they considered his punishment was altogether excessive He suffered for an action most of them deemed praiseworthy Fellow-negroes, also, would peep over the partition which screened the culprit If the black warder who guarded him was out of the way, they handed him bananas, sugar-cane, and like luxuries When the attendant sat in his place they would simply roll their brown eyes and express pious hopes that their brother had made his peace " wid de Lord "

But that was just what Black Neil had failed to do, and was terribly anxious to do, and could see no possibility of doing Superstitious to the heart's core, and in a measure fatalistic also, death had now become a familiar idea, and its terrors were quite dwarfed and dimmed by the more terrific certainty of what awaited him beyond He took his judge's word for it that he was but a lost man , and now, with frantic desire, he yearned for some outlet to his penitence, for some religious channel through which even he might crawl within earshot of his outraged Maker Heaven seemed blind and dumb to the poor wretch But when Ferris left him, the memory of an old tune fell like a wakened echo on Black Neil's ear. He could not recall the words of the song, he only recollected that they were religious and treated of a golden shore. The air was better than nothing, and he lifted up his voice and whined the melody again and again to himself until his guard ordered him to be silent.

That night Dick Ferris recounted his recent conversation to an interested group.

"I told him," he said, in conclusion, "how to my knowledge there weren't no such thing as a Bible aboard this craft, nor yet a Prayer-book neither."

"Yes, there is, Mr Ferris," piped the cabin-boy.

"Eh? Don't say you've got one, Sprig?"

"No, I ain't, but see this eye," and he pointed to a big black bruise on his cheek, "that came along of a Bible. The boss have got one."

"The old man!" exclaimed two or three men in wildest surprise.

"He have. I was tidyin' his cabin, round, puttin' things ship-shape, and he sees me hanging on to the shelf over his bunk, dustin' of it. There was a book atop with a polished black cover, and I picked it up to clean it. Then he says, 'Take your dirty paws off the Word o' God, boy, and stop messin' round and get out of here.' So I ups and says, meanin' no sauce, 'I was cleanin' of the book, sir, as is a inch in dust and dirt.' Then he lathered me proper for answering."

Nobody appeared much interested in Sprig's personal experience, but the fact that Mr Greenleaf possessed a Bible called for a good deal of more or less profane comment.

"Who'll ask for the loan of it?" inquired Ferris.

Not a man answered, and he spoke again.

"I would, an' chance it, but it's useless. He hates me worse than poison, 'cause I'm the only Englishman aboard. He's been a damned beast to me since I sailed. I reckon you'd get it, Bell, if any on us could."

Bell, the carpenter already mentioned, was considered to be the captain's favourite—a position he denied. This man scratched his head and grumbled, and did not take kindly to the enterprise. The general sense of the meeting went against him, however, and he prepared to depart.

"Tell the skipper it's for the nigger forward as is goin' to be hung.

He can't refuse sky-piloting even to a nigger in that fix," concluded Ferris

"He will," said the cook of the Flying Fish "Mark my words; he'll tell Bell to go to hell"

Pretty soon Bell returned baffled

"He says he ain't disposed to lend the Word of God to a black-guard black man And he also says we're to sheer off from Neil for the future If he sees a hand alongside him again, the cap'n says that hand will hear from him direct," explained the carpenter

"There's a blasted swine!" burst out Dick

"It shows how a man may have a Bible, and yet never behave so as to let other folks guess it," commented Bell

They were lost in speculation as to how the skipper ever came to possess a Bible at all Then the men separated, and Ferris went away His muddy brains were on fire with the wickedness of the skipper He had a rooted conviction that the Bible would make all the difference to Black Neil's position, if not in this world, at any rate in the next, he was firmly convinced, therefore, that Providence had placed this Bible on board for the negro's especial benefit No matter had ever stirred his faculties so deeply, he could not get the subject out of his head, and the more he reflected upon it, the stronger grew his determination to secure the book for Neil at all costs None took the skipper's refusal to heart as he did, indeed, their first indignation blunted, his comrades laughed at him for being in such anxiety about so trifling a business But Dick would not regard the subject as trifling; it appeared to him that tremendous issues were involved. He was new to intercourse with the negroes, and their interests and welfare seemed perfectly serious concerns to him He debated with himself through long moonlit watches, and his thoughts kept him awake in his bunk Personally he had never pretended to religion, but the sight of a sinner—friendless and comfortless on the brink of the grave—the spectacle of a fellow-man separated by a few days only from death—woke strange forces in the heart of Dick Ferris and set his mental machinery working more briskly than ever it had worked before He knew what a "call" meant, because a friend of his had once received a "call," and joined the Salvation Army upon the strength of it And now an overwhelming impression grew strong and stronger within him, which notion finally dominated the man and pointed to action

Black Neil, Dick told himself, must have the skipper's Bible, and

Providence had evidently marked him out as a means by which the soul-saving book should reach its destination. Eternal life for a perishing creature lurked in his captain's cabin, the mate of the Flying Fish determined to secure it. If physical force became necessary, then he would fight. The fact that such a course was mutiny and would be punished as such, did not particularly appeal to him, indeed, the consequences of his pending action failed to weigh with him until too late. "After all," he reflected, "the man's a reasonable being. Like enough he'll hand over the book and make no splutter. If he don't—well, he's been spoilin' for a smack at me these two voyages, now he shall have it. Sure enough, it's a queer twist to get in the brain-pan of a seafarin' man, all over a blessed nigger too, that nobody takes no count on, but there it is, red hot, and can't be smothered."

That night Dick knocked at the captain's door, was told to come in, and entered to find a very unexpected picture. The skipper lay upon his bunk smoking, and actually reading his Bible!

"What do you want?" he asked shortly, glancing up.

The other, from sheer amazement, clean forgot the elaborate remarks with which he had come prepared. He stood silent, irresolute, open-mouthed, gazing upon this wonder before him.

"What do you want, you gaping fool?" inquired Mr. Greenleaf once more.

Then Dick found his tongue.

"That, guv'ner," he answered, pointing to the open book.

The captain laughed, and then swore.

"This ship's grown mighty religious of late, seems to me. You're the second's come on the same wild-goose chase. What the fury's the matter with you?"

"'Tain't for myself. I don't waht no Bibles," answered Ferris.

"It's like this 'ere, that cove that's going to be hanged at Kingston's gettin' blamed low and down in the mouth. He's off his feed and takin' on pitiful—'cause why? 'Cause he ain't got no sky-piloting. You've got a Bible, and he can read, so he says, therefore, I reckoned to ask you to lend it out to him. I'll go bail he won't do no harm to it."

"Oh, you reckoned that, did you? Well, I reckon you'd best munda your own bloody business in future, and not waste no more time fooling round that black sweep. I don't lend no Bible of mine to him or any one. Ain't I reading it myself? Get out of this sharp. And I'll say more than that if any one of you come around again."

He went on reading, but Ferris stood his ground, and twisted his hat about in his hands

"Why don't you clear? Ain't the skipper's own cabin private from you devils?"

"Well, it's like this 'ere," answered Dick very slowly "Sometimes a man finds he ain't 'is own boss no more I ain't I feels a kind o' call sayin' how Black Neil must have that Bible o' yourn You see, blacks is now calculated to have souls, same as whites, and his soul's in a proper darned fix, owin' to it's havin' no religion whatsoever That book 'ud make a powerful sight of difference—just all the difference between aloft and below maybe So I asks of you respectful to lend it to Black Neil"

"I'll see him damned first!"

"Then I guess I'll take it, skipper"

The two men looked at one another silently, and Ferris licked his great hands and rubbed them together in preparation For a moment the only sound in the cabin was the rasping of his rough palms Then Greenleaf spoke

"Go right ahead then, take it, or try to I've wanted to see what you were worth with your British gas and bounce Go right ahead I'll thrash you here, and then have you flogged on deck, and then——"

"Best arrange that later, boss"

There was not much room in the captain's cabin for two big men to settle a quarrel by force of arms With such a confined area the battle promised to be short and decisive, and so it proved

Dick grabbed the Bible, and Greenleaf hit him in the face, whereupon Dick dropped the book and turned his attention to his superior officer Both men were soon struggling upon the floor, first one uppermost, then the other The American was tall and very active, but Dick's bulk and weight told in that narrow ring He propped him again and again, for the skipper could not escape Greenleaf dropped frequently to avoid punishment, and Dick always waited for him to rise Both got well warmed and freely sprinkled with blood But Ferris was the straighter hitter, and Greenleaf's right eye soon had the shutters up Then, as they rose from a fall, with Dick under, the skipper, aware that he had more than met his match in such close quarters, lifted his hand over his head and snatched a revolver which hung upon the cabin wall He was quick, but hardly quicker than

Re all

from Friends

the other Ferris dashed in, and, with all his weight behind the blow, hit Mr Greenleaf full and fair upon the forehead as he fired One man went down in a limp, senseless heap in the corner of his cabin, the other felt a stab of pain in his shoulder, and then saw a sudden stream of blood trickling down his arm into his hand He picked up the Bible, and staggered out into the alley-way

A crowd had collected there upon sound of the shot, and Dick pushed through them, explaining as he went

"He've hit me somewheres in the shoulder, an' I've killed him Best go in an' get him on his bunk an' do what's possible "

Then, leaving a dotted line of red splashes on the deck, he went forward with his prize, and handed the Bible to Black Neil The negro clasped the book with rejoicings, and was little concerned to know what had taken place

"Read, boy, read like hell!" said Dick "Stick to it, there's a chance yet if you only hold on like grim death I've knocked him silly, but he may come round It's the skipper's own He don't understand no blessed Bibles, else he'd a' fought fair an' not fired on me But he pretty nigh missed, whereas I didn't You just buckle to it, an' read for all you're worth I've 'eard tell the second half is reckoned to be the best, and if Greenleaf's dead, you can keep the bally book till we get to port "

Then Ferris went to the galley to see after himself and secure the cook's aid

Fortunately for Dick, his shoulder had sustained but trifling injuries The skipper's bullet did little more than touch him, inflicting in its progress a superficial wound While the cook washed his injury and bound it up, Ferris asked after Mr Greenleaf.

"How's the old man?" he said

"Bad, seemingly There's nothing broke as I can find, and he's breathing pretty free, but he ain't come to his senses yet Reckon you've dented in his skull somewhere That's death, mind you "

"Guess there'll be another to go along with Neil at Kingston, then," said Ferris

Then the hours fled by, and the entire ship's company grew more and more anxious to learn how their captain prospered Sailors are but Job's comforters at best, and Dick heard enough before the dawn of the next day to depress him considerably.

" You was right in a sense, having a ' call,' like, to do it," explained Bell, who had a nice command of language and a luminous way of putting problems, " but the Law don't take no heed of a ' call ' What you've done is to mutiny, and steal the skipper's property, and maybe murder him Time will show If he dies, it is murder, if he lives, it's merely assault with intent to murder, and you'll get penal servitude for life "

" All for a nigger too," grumbled the cook

" For his soul," said Dick apologetically " I don't care nothing much for Neil, but his soul was in the scale, in a manner of speakin' Now he's sucking at the Book like a child at its mother's bosom, so who knows if he mayn't just wriggle into the right place by the skin of his teeth ? "

" Why are you so blamed sure niggers have any souls ? " inquired John Droop " Whar you gwine to draw any line betwixt us and them if they have souls ? "

" Don't you be too cocksure, my beauty, anyhow," answered the mate " If a drunken, dirty-hearted, mean, lopsided lout like you've got a working soul—then, I guess, there's a chance for everybody and every colour, monkeys included "

" When men like Richard Ferris takes to preachin' aboard the Flying Fish, after knocking in the skull bones of the skipper, then it's werry gratifyin' and werry conwincing, no doubt," retorted John<sup>8</sup>

But the skipper was not dead He recovered consciousness about two hours after the battle, and it happened that the cook was with him at the time

" The fus' thing he says, mighty faint in his throat, is, ' Whar'd I hit Ferris ? ' Then I says, ' You scratched his shoulder, sir, that's all ' Then he grunted and put his hand to his head, and says, ' I know whar he hit me ' After that he told me to make the cabin dark and clear out, but I stuck on, knowing as how he should have food, and I made him bite and drink a bit, owing to him being too feeble to refuse But he swore forcible and various I reckon he's turned the corner "

The cook was right, for within two days the skipper had his chair brought upon deck and presently appeared himself with a face every colour of the rainbow He sat and smoked, saying no word to anybody Then a strange thing occurred, for Mr Greenleaf suddenly arose, walked stuffily and lamely across the ship, and disappeared behind the partition which hid Black Neil The negro, absorbed in his book, heard and heeded nothing He conned the Bible at morning, noon, and night Already he had won consolation from the Word

"How are you going on, nig?" asked Greenleaf suddenly

"Berry nice, massa," answered Black Neil Then he looked up and saw who was speaking, and trembled as he clung to the Bible

"Lebe de precious Word, sar I'se getting straight wid de Lord fast now De Word get me into hebbin if you lebe him a little more Dey hang me up and I no care nuffin', 'cause I'se gwine to de golden shore So lebe de precious Word along wid me, massa"

"Goin' to the golden shore by way of the—— Wal, I guess many better'n you been hung I'll leave it on one condition If ever you makes that port, you must put in a word for this ship Just a remark in a gen'ral sort of way—needn't mention no names—only let on how the Flying Fish ain't all she might be Carn't do no harm I didn't lend that book kinder easy, but now you've got it, you can keep your fins on it till we get to Kingston And here's a bit o' lead pencil Just mark a notion here and ther as seems sort o' best to you"

Mr Greenleaf flung down a stump of pencil, and went off without further speech He had heard and believed a superstition that the dying or doomed have strange powers of inspiration extended to them, and he suspected that his Bible would greatly benefit from attention at Black Neil's hands His mind had been busy during recent hours, and his reflection had brought him to a somewhat unexpected conclusion

The men talked over this mystery of their skipper's continued silence

"He's nursin' it, mate, to keep it bilin-hot for you in port," said Bell to Dick Ferris

"Not a shade of doubt, he's lyn' low and lettin' it just fester in him He's breakin' his heart to flog you afore all hands, only he knows he ain't got strength to do you justice yet," declared the cook

The grand mystery kept all brains busy, and the great question none could answer. Why had not Greenleaf put Ferris in irons?

Upon the following day the skipper resumed his duties, and soon afterwards the Flying Fish sailed into Kingston Harbour Nothing out of the common occurred at that port There were rumours and whisperings, but Joseph Greenleaf took no official or definite move in the matter of his mate Work went on as usual, the vessel was unloaded and filled again, Black Neil went joyfully to gaol upon learning that every benefit of clergy there awaited him during the few remaining days of his existence

" 'Twould break the poor fool's heart if he had a respite now," said Bell " He's just spoiling for his dance in the air "

About a week afterwards, at dawn of a golden morning, the Flying Fish sailed again, and, as she slipped away to sea, Dick stood for a moment at the stern, in the little house where Neil had lived, and looked out at the shining town and a black speck that fluttered from a flagstaff Then he found he was not alone

" What you starin' at ? " asked somebody standing by him It was the captain who spoke, and these were the first words which had passed between him and his mate, save upon ship matters, since their struggle

" I'm a-lookin' at that black flag over the prison, cap'n They've strung him up to-day He's gone—poor devil ! "

" We had some difference, if I remember, touching that nigger ? " said Greenleaf coolly

" We had It's like this 'ere I'm awful sorry I smashed you up so bad, but you didn't ought to have shot, though I takes it right down manly of you to 'ave kept your mouth shut, an' I humbly thanks you "

" Best thing to do when you've made a all-fired fool of yourself "

" It weren't no ordinary case like I felt 'called,' and stronger than a cargo of lions Sky-piloting was the only useful thing for a man in his fix , so I had to go for it "

" He said how if he gets aloft 'twill be through that Bible of mine So I reckoned, seeing there's room for improvement on this ship in a few particulars, to make a bargain with him If he gets there, I gave him the tip to put in a word for the Flying Fish, not mentioning no names, but just free an' general Smart—eh ? "

" Terrible smart, sure enough "

" And—and—you and me'd better shake, I reckon Then tell the boys to pull this shanty down again. It's done its work "

ANTHONY HOPE
(SIR ANTHONY HOPE HAWKING)
B. 1863

THE GREY FROCK

THE rights and wrongs of the matter are perhaps a little obscure, and it is possible to take his side as well as hers. Or perhaps there is really no question of sides at all—no need to condemn anybody, only another instance of the difficulty people have in understanding one another's point of view. But here, with a few lines added by way of introduction, are the facts as related in her obviously candid and sincere narrative.

Miss Winifred Petheram's father had an income from landed estate of about five thousand a year, and spent, say, six or thereabouts, his manor house was old and beautiful, the gardens delightful, the stables handsome and handsomely maintained, the housekeeping liberal, hospitable, almost lavish. Mr Petheram had three sons and four daughters, but the sons were still young, and not the cause of any great expense. Mrs Petheram was a quiet body, the two girls in the schoolroom were no serious matter, in fact, apart from the horses, Mildred and Winifred were, in a pecuniary point of view, the most serious burden on the family purse. For both were pretty girls, gay and fond of society, given to paying frequent visits in town and country, and in consequence needing many frocks and a considerable supply of downright hard cash. But everybody was very comfortable, only it was understood that at a period generally referred to as "some day" there would be very little for anybody except the eldest son. "Some day" meant, of course, when Mr Petheram reluctantly died, and thereby brought his family into less favourable worldly circumstances.

From this brief summary of the family's position the duty of Mildred and Winifred (and, in due course of time, of the two girls in the schoolroom also) stands forth salient and unmistakable. Mildred performed it promptly at the age of nineteen years. He was the second son of a baronet, and his elder brother was sickly and unmarried, but, like a wise young man, he took no chances, went on the Stock Exchange, and became exceedingly well-to-do in an exceedingly brief space of time—something, in fact, "came off" in South Africa, and when that happens ordinary limits of time and probability are suspended So with Mildred all was very well , and it was odds that one of the boys would be provided for by his brother-in-law Winifred had just as good chances—nay, better , for her sensitive face and wondering eyes had an attraction that Mildred's self-possessed good looks could not exert But Winifred shilly-shallied (it was her father's confidential after-dinner word) till she was twenty-one, then refused Sir Barton Amesbury (in itself a step of doubtful sanity, as was generally observed), and engaged herself to Harold Jackson, who made two hundred a year and had no prospects except the doubtful one of maintaining his income at that level—unless, that is, he turned out a genius, when it was even betting whether a mansion or the workhouse awaited him , for that depends on the variety of genius Having taken this amazing course, Winifred was resolute and radiantly happy , her relatives, after the necessary amount of argument, shrugged their shoulders—the very inadequate ultima ratio to which a softening civilisation seems to have reduced relatives in such cases “ I can manage two hundred a year for her while I live,” said Mr Petheram, wiping his brow and then dusting his boots , he was just back from his ride “ After that——”

“ The insurance, my dear ? ” Mrs Petheram suggested But her husband shook his head , that little discrepancy above noted, between five and six thousand a year, had before this caused the insurance to be a very badly broken reed

Harold Jackson—for in him the explanation of Winifred's action must be sought—was tall, good-looking, ready of speech, and decidedly agreeable There was no aggressiveness about him, and his quiet manners repelled any suspicion of bumptiousness But it cannot be denied that to him Winifred's action did not seem extraordinary , he himself accounted for this by saying that she, like himself, was an Idealist, the boys by saying that he was “ stuck-up,” Mr Petheram by a fretful exclamation that in all worldly matters he was as blind as a new-born puppy Whatever the truth of these respective theories, he was as convinced that Winifred had chosen for her own happiness as that she had given him his And in this she most fully agreed. Of course, then, all the shrugging of shoulders in the universe could not affect the radiant contentment of the lovers, nor could it avert the swift passage of months which soon brought the wedding-day in sight, and made preparations for it urgent and indispensable

Married couples, even though they have only a precarious four hundred a year, must live somewhere—no idealism is independent of a roof, on the contrary, it centres round the home, so Harold said, and the word "home" seemed already sacred to Winifred as her glance answered his. It was the happiest day of her life when she put on her dainty new costume of delicate grey, took her parasol and gloves, matched to a shade with her gown, and mounted into the smart dog-cart which Jennie, the new chestnut mare, was to draw to the station. A letter had come from Harold to say that, after long search, he had found a house which would suit them, and was only just a trifle more expensive than the maximum sum they had decided to give for rent. Winifred knew that the delicate grey became her well, and that Harold would think her looking very pretty, and she was going to see her home and his. Her face was bright as she kissed her father and jumped down from the dog-cart, but he sighed when she had left him, and his brow was wrinkled as he drove Jennie back. He felt himself growing rather old, "some day" did not seem quite as remote as it used, and pretty Winnie—well, there was no use in crying over it now. Wilful girls must have their way, and it was not his fault that confounded agitators had played the deuce with the landed interest. The matter passed from his thoughts as he began to notice how satisfactorily Jennie moved.

Winifred's lover met her in London, and found her eyes still bright from the reveries of her journey. To-day was a gala day—they drove off in a hansom to a smart restaurant in Piccadilly, joking about their extravagance. Everything was perfect to Winifred, except (a small exception, surely!) that Harold failed to praise, seemed almost not to notice, the grey costume, it must have been that he looked at her face only!

"It's not a large house, you know," he said at lunch, smiling at her over a glass of Graves. "Well, I shan't be wanting to get away from you," she answered, smiling. "Not very far, Harold!"

"Are your people still abusing me?"

He put the question with a laugh.

"They never abused you, only me." Then came the irrepressible question. "Do you like my new frock? I put it on on purpose—for the house, you know."

"Our home!" he murmured, rather sentimentally, it must be confessed. The question about the frock he did not answer, he was thinking of the home. Winifred was momentarily grateful to a stout lady at the next table, who put up her glass, looked at the frock, and with a nod of approval called her companion's attention to it. This was while Harold paid the bill.

Then they took another cab, and headed north—through Berkeley Square, where Winifred would have liked, but did not expect, to stop, and so up to Oxford Street. Here they bore considerably to the east, then plunged north again and drove through one or two long streets. Harold, who had made the journey before, paid no heed to the route, but talked freely of the delightful hours which they were to enjoy together, of books to read and thoughts to think, and of an intimate sympathy which, near as they were already to one another, the home and the home life alone could enable them fully to realise. Winifred listened, but far down in her mind now was another question, hardly easier to stifle than that about the frock. "Where are we going to?" would have been its naked form, but she yielded no more to her impulse than to look about her and mark and wonder. At last they turned by a sharp twist from a long narrow street into a short narrower street, where a waggon by the curbstone forced the cab to a walk, and shrill boys were playing an unintelligible noisy game.

"What queer places we pass through!" she cried with a laugh, as she laid her hand on his arm and turned her face to his.

"Pass through! We're at home," he answered, returning her laugh. "At home, Winnie!" He pointed at a house on the right-hand side, and, immediately after, the cab stopped. Winifred got out, holding her skirt back from contact with the wheel. Harold, in his eagerness to ring the door bell, had forgotten to render her this service. She stood on the pavement for a moment looking about her. One of the boys cried "Crikey, there's a swell!" and she liked the boy for it. Then she turned to the house. "It wants a lick of paint," said Harold cheerfully, as he rang the bell again.

"It certainly does," she admitted, looking up at the dirty walls.

An old woman opened the door, she might be said, by way of metaphor, to need the same process as the walls. A very narrow passage was disclosed behind her.

"Welcome!" said Harold, giving Winifred his hand and then presenting her to the old woman. "This is my future wife," he explained. "We've come to look at the house. But we won't bother you, Mrs. Blidgett, we'd rather run over it by ourselves. We shall enjoy that, sha'n't we, Winnie?"

Winnie's answer was a little scream and a hasty clutch at her gown, a pail of dirty water, standing in the passage, had threatened ruin, she recoiled violently from this peril against the opposite wall and drew away again, silently exhibiting a long trail of dark dust on her new grey frock Harold laughed as he led the way into a small square room that opened from the passage

"That's the parlour," said the old woman, wiping her arms with her apron "You can find your way upstairs, nothing's locked" And with this remark she withdrew by a steep staircase leading underground

"She's the caretaker," Harold explained

"She doesn't seem to have taken much care," observed Winifred, still indignant about her gown and holding it round her closely as drapery clings to an antique statue

Miss Petheram's account of the house, its actual dimensions, accommodation, and characteristics, has always been very vague, and since she refused information as to its number in the street, verification of these details has remained impossible Perhaps it was a reasonably capacious, although doubtless not extensive, dwelling, perhaps, again, it was a confined and well-nigh stifling den She remembered two things—first, its all-pervading dirt, secondly, the remarkable quality which (as she alleged) distinguished its atmosphere She thought there were seven "enclosures," this term being arrived at (after discussion) as a compromise between "rooms" and "pens", and she knew that the windows of each of these enclosures were commanded by the windows of several other apparently similar and very neighbouring enclosures Beyond this she could give no account of her first half-hour in the house, her exact recollections began when she was left alone in the enclosure on the first floor, which Harold asserted to be the drawing-room, Harold himself having gone downstairs to seek the old woman and elicit from her some information as to what were and what were not tenant's fixtures in the said enclosure "You can look about you," he remarked cheerfully, as he left her, "and make up your mind where you're going to have your favourite seat Then you shall tell me, and I shall have the picture of you sitting there in my mind" He pointed to a wooden chair, the only one then in the room "Experiment with that chair," he added, laughing "I won't be long, darling"

Mechanically, without considering things which she obviously ought to have considered, Winifred sank into the designated seat, laid her parasol on a small table, and leant her elbows on the same piece of furniture as she held her face between her gloved hands The atmosphere again asserted its peculiar quality, she rose for a moment and opened the windows, fresh air was gained at the expense of spoilt gloves, and was weighted with the drawbacks of a baby's cries and an inquisitive woman's stare from over the way Shutting the window again, she returned to her chair—the symbol of what was to be her favourite seat in days to come, her chosen corner in the house which had been the subject of so many talks and so many dreams There were a great many flies in the room, the noise of adjacent humanity in street and houses was miscellaneous and penetrating, the air was very close And this house was rather more expensive than their calculation had allowed They had immensely enjoyed making those calculations down there in the country, under the old yew hedge and in sight of the flower-beds beneath the library window She remembered the day they did it There was a cricket match in the meadow Mildred and her husband brought the drag over, and Sir Barton came in his tandem It was almost too hot in the sun, but simply delightful in the shade She and Harold had had great fun over mapping out their four hundred a year and proving how much might be done with it—at least compared with anything they could want when once they had the great thing that they wanted

The vision vanished, she was back in the dirty little room again, she caught up her parasol, a streak across the dust marked where it had lain on the table, she sprang up and twisted her frock round, craning her neck back, ah, that she had reconnoitred that chair! She looked at her gloves, then with a cry of horror she dived for her handkerchief, put it to her lips, and scrubbed her cheeks, the handkerchief came away soiled, dingy, almost black This last outrage overcame her, the parasol dropped on the floor, she rested her arms on the table and laid her face on them, and she burst into sobs, just as she used to do in childhood when her brothers crumpled a clean frock or somebody spoke to her roughly And between her sobs she cried, almost loudly, very bitterly "Oh, it's too mean and dirty and horrid!"

Harold had stolen softly upstairs, meaning to surprise the girl he loved, perhaps to let a snatched kiss be her first knowledge of his return He flushed red, and his lips set sternly, he walked across the room to her with a heavy tread She looked up, saw him, and knew that her exclamation had been overheard "What in the world is the matter?" he asked in a tone of cold surprise

It was very absurd—she couldn't stop crying, and from amid her weeping nothing more reasonable, nothing more adequate, nothing less trivial would come than confused murmurs of "My frock, Harold!" "My parasol!" "Oh, my face, my gloves!" He smiled con-temptuously "Don't you see?" she exclaimed, exhibiting the gloves and parasol

"See what? Are you crying because the room's dirty?" He paused and then added, "I'm sorry you think it mean and horrid Very sorry, Winifred"

Offence was deep and bitter in his voice, he looked at her with a sort of disgust She stopped sobbing and regarded him with a gaze in which fright and expectation seemed mingled, as though there were a great peril, and just one thing that might narrowly avert it But his eyes were very hard She dried her tears, and then forlornly scrubbed her cheeks again He watched her with hostile curiosity, appearing to think her a very strange spectacle Presently he spoke "I thought you loved me Oh, I daresay you thought so too till I came into competition with your new frock I beg pardon—I must add your gloves and your parasol As for the house, it's no doubt mean and horrid, we were going to be poor, you see" He laughed scornfully, as he added, "You might even have had to do a little dusting yourself now and then! Horrible!"

"I just sat there and looked at him" That was Winifred's own account of her behaviour It is not very explicit and leaves room for much conjecture as to what her look said or tried to say But whatever the message was he did not read it He was engrossed in his own indignation, readier to hurt than to understand, full of his own wrong, of the mistake he had made, of her extraordinary want of love, of courage, of the high soul Very likely all this was a natural enough state of mind for him to be in Justice admits his provocation, the triviality of her spoken excuses gave his anger only too fine an opportunity He easily persuaded himself that here was a revelation of the real woman, a flash of light that showed her true nature, showing, too, the folly of his delusion about her Against all this her look and what it asked for had very little chance, and she could find no words that did not aggravate her offence

"This is really rather a ludicrous scene," he went on "Is there any use in prolonging it?" He waited for her to speak, but she was still tongue-tied "The caretaker needn't be distressed by seeing the awful effects of her omission to dust the room, but if you're composed enough, we might as well go" He looked round the room "You'll be glad to be out of this," he ended

"I know what you must think of me," she burst out, "but—but you don't understand—you don't see——"

"No doubt I'm stupid, but I confess I don't. At least there's only one thing I see." He bowed and waved his hand towards the door. "Shall we go?" he asked.

She led the way downstairs, her skirt again held close and raised clear of her ankles, her care for it was not lost on Harold as he followed her, for she heard him laugh with an obtrusive bitterness that made his mirth a taunt. The old caretaker waited for them in the passage.

"When'll you be coming, sir?" she asked.

"I don't know. It's not certain we shall come," said he. "The lady is not much taken with the house."

"Ah, well!" sighed the old woman resignedly.

For an account of their drive back to the station materials are, again, sadly wanting. "He hardly said a word, and I did nothing but try to get my face clean and my gloves presentable," was Winifred's history of their journey. But she remembered—or chose to relate—a little more of what passed while they waited for the train on the platform at Euston. He left her for a few minutes on the pretext of smoking a cigarette, and she saw him walking up and down apparently in thought. Then he came back and sat down beside her. His manner was grave now, to judge by his recorded words, perhaps it was even a little pompous, but when may young men be pompous, if not at such crises as these?

"It's no use pretending that nothing has happened, Winifred," he said. "That would be the hollowest pretence, not worthy, I think, of either of us. Perhaps we had better take some time to consider our course and—er—our relations to one another."

"You don't want to marry me now?" she asked simply.

"I want to do what is best for our happiness," he replied. "We cannot forget what has happened to-day."

"I know you would never forget it," she said.

He did not contradict her, he looked first at his watch, then along the platform for the approach of her train. To admit that he might forget it was impossible to him, in such a case of forgetfulness would be a negation of his principles and a slur on his perception. It would also be such a triumph over his vanity and his pride as it did not lie in him to achieve, such a forgiveness as his faults and virtues combined to put beyond the power of his nature. She looked at him, and "I smiled," she said, not seeming herself to know why she had smiled, but conscious that, in the midst of her woe, some subtly amusing thought about him had come into her mind. She had never been amused at him before, so she, too, was getting some glimmer of a revelation out of the day's experience—not the awful blaze of light that had flashed on Harold's eyes, but a dim ray, just enough to give cause to that puzzled smile for which she could not explicitly account

So they parted, and for persons who have followed the affair at all closely it is hardly necessary to add that they never came together again. This issue was obvious, and Winifred seems to have made up her mind to it that very same evening, for she called her mother into her room (as the good lady passed on the way to bed) and looked up from the task of brushing the grey frock which she had spread out on the sofa

"I don't think I shall marry Mr Jackson now, mother," she said

Mrs Petheram looked at her daughter and at her daughter's gown

"You'd better tell me more about it to-morrow. You look tired to-night, dear," she replied

But Winifred never told her any more—in the first place, because the family was too delighted with the fact to care one straw about how it had come to pass, and, in the second place, on the more important ground that the thing was really too small, too trivial, and too absurd to bear telling—at least to the family. To me, for some reason or other, Winifred did tell it, or some of it—enough, anyhow, to enable me, with the help of a few touches of imagination, to conjecture how it occurred

"Don't you think it was very absurd?" she asked at the end of her story. We were sitting by the yew hedge, near the library windows, looking across the flower-beds to the meadow, it was a beautiful day, and the old place was charming. "Because," she added, "I did love him, you know, and it seems a small thing to separate about, doesn't it?"

"If he had behaved differently——" I began

"I don't see how he could be expected to," she murmured

"You expected him to," I said firmly. She turned to me with an appearance of interest, as though I might be able to interpret to her something that had been causing her puzzle. "Or you wouldn't have looked at him as you say you did—or smiled at him, as you admit you did. But you were wrong to expect him to, because he's not that kind of man."

"What kind of man?"

"The kind of man to catch you in his arms, smother you in kisses (allow me the old phrase), tell you that he understood all you felt, knew all you were giving up, realised the great thing you were doing for him "

Winifred was listening I went on with my imaginary scene of romantic fervour " That when he contrasted that mean little place with the beauties you were accustomed to, with the beauties which were right and proper for you, when he saw your daintiness soiled by that dust, that gown whose hem he would willingly——"

" He needn't say quite as much as that," interrupted Winifred, smiling a little

" Well, or words to that effect," said I " That when he did all this and saw all this, you know, he loved you more, and knew that you loved him more than he had dared to dream, with a deeper love, a love that gave up for him all that you loved next best and second only to him , that after seeing your tears he would never doubt again that you would face all trials and all troubles with him at your side— Don't you think if he'd said something of that kind, accompanying his words with the appropriate actions——" I paused

" Well ? " asked Winifred

" Don't you think you might have been living in that horrid little house now, instead of being about to contract an alliance with Sir Barton Amesbury ? "

" How do you know I shall do that ? " she cried

" It needs," I observed modestly, " little skill to discern the approach of the inevitable " I looked at her thoughtful face and at her eyes , they had their old look of wondering in them " Don't you think that if he'd treated the situation in that way——? " I asked.

" Perhaps," she said softly " But he wouldn't think of all that. He was such an Idealist "

I really do not know why she applied that term to him at that moment, except that he used to apply it to himself at many moments But since it seemed to her to explain his conduct, there is no need to quarrel with the epithet

" And I hope," said I, " that the grey frock wasn't irretrievably ruined ? "

" I've never worn it again," she murmured.

So I suppose it was ruined—unless she has some other reason. But she would be right to treat it differently from other frocks , it must mean a good deal to her, although it failed to mean anything except its own pretty self to Mr Jackson.

A LIBERAL EDUCATION

ANTHONY HOPE

"THERE'S ingratitude for you ! " Miss Dolly Foster exclaimed suddenly

" Where ? " I asked, rousing myself from meditation

She pointed at a young man who had just passed where we sat. He was dressed very smartly, and was walking with a lady attired in the height of fashion

" I made that man," said Dolly, " and now he cuts me dead before the whole of the Row ! It's atrocious ! Why, but for me, do you suppose he'd be at this moment engaged to three thousand a year and—and the plainest girl in London ? "

" Not that," I pleaded , " think of——"

" Well, very plain, anyhow I was quite ready to bow to him I almost did "

" In fact you did ? "

" I didn't I declare I didn't "

" Oh, well, you didn't then It only looked like it "

" I met him," said Miss Dolly, " three years ago At that time he was—oh, quite unpresentable He was everything he shouldn't be He was a teetotaler, you know, and he didn't smoke, and he was always going to concerts Oh, and he wore his hair long, and his trousers short, and his hat on the back of his head And his umbrella——"

" Where did he wear that ? "

" He carried that, Mr Carter Don't be silly ! Carried it unrolled, you know, and generally a paper parcel in the other hand , and he had spectacles too "

" He has certainly changed outwardly at least "

" Yes, I know , well, I did that I took him in hand, and I just taught him, and now—— ! "

" Yes, I know that But how did you teach him ? Give him Saturday evening lectures, or what ? "

" Oh, every-evening lectures, and most-morning walks And I taught him to dance, and I broke his wretched fiddle with my own hands ! ”

“ What very arbitrary distinctions you draw ”

“ I don’t know what you mean I do like a man to be smart, anyhow Don’t you, Mr Carter ? You’re not so smart as you might be Now, shall I take you in hand ? ” And she smiled upon me

“ Let’s hear your method What did you do to him ? ”

“ To Phil Meadows ? Oh, nothing I just slipped in a remark here and there, whenever he talked nonsense I used to speak just at the right time, you know ”

“ But how had your words such influence, Miss Foster ? ”

“ Oh, well, you know, Mr Carter, I made it a condition that he should do just what I wanted in little things like that Did he think I was going to walk about with a man carrying a brown-paper parcel—as if he had been to the shop for a pound of tea ? ”

“ Still, I don’t see why he should alter all his—— ”

“ Oh, you are stupid ! Of course, he liked me, you know ”

“ Oh, did he ? I see ”

“ You seem to think that very funny ”

“ Not that he did—but that, apparently, he doesn’t ”

“ Well, you got out of that rather neatly—for you No, he doesn’t now You see, he misunderstood my motive He thought—well, I do believe he thought I cared for him, you know Of course I didn’t ”

“ Not a bit ? ”

“ Just as a friend—and a pupil, you know And when he’d had his hair cut and bought a frock-coat (fancy ! he’d never had one !), he looked quite nice He has nice eyes Did you notice them ? ”

“ Lord, no ! ”

“ Well, you’re so unobservant ”

“ Oh, not always I’ve observed that your—— ”

“ Please don’t ! It’s no use, is it ? ”

I looked very unhappy There is an understanding that I am very unhappy since Miss Foster’s engagement to the Earl of Mickleham was announced

“ What was I saying before—before you—you know—oh, about Phil Meadows, of course I did like him very much, you know, or I shouldn’t have taken all that trouble. Why, his own mother thanked me ! ”

11. pp6

Anthony Hope

"I have no more to say," said I

"But she wrote me a horrid letter afterwards."

"You're so very elliptical"

"So very what, Mr Carter?"

"You leave so much out, I mean After what?"

"Why, after I sent him away Didn't I tell you? Oh, we had the most awful scene He raved, Mr Carter He called me the most horrid names, and——"

"Tore his hair?"

"It wasn't long enough to get hold of," she tittered "But don't laugh It was really dreadful And so unjust! And then, next day, when I thought it was comfortably over, you know, he came back, and—and apologised, and called himself the most awful names, and—well, that was really worse"

"What did the fellow complain of?" I asked in wondering tones

"Oh, he said I'd destroyed his faith in women, you know, and that I'd led him on, and that I was—well, he was very rude indeed And he went on writing me letters like that for a whole year! It made me quite uncomfortable"

"But he didn't go back to short trousers and a fiddle, did he?" I asked anxiously

"Oh, no But he forgot all he owed me, and he told me that his heart was dead, and that he should never love any one again"

"But he's going to marry that girl"

"Oh, he doesn't care about her," said Miss Dolly reassuringly. "It's the money, you know He hadn't a farthing of his own Now he'll be set up for life"

"And it's all due to you!" said I admiringly

"Well, it is really"

"I don't call her such a bad-looking girl though" (I hadn't seen her face)

"Mr Carter! She's hideous!"

I dropped that subject

"And now," said Miss Dolly again, "he cuts me dead!"

"It is the height of ingratitude Why, to love you was a liberal education!"

"Yes, wasn't it? How nicely you put that 'A liberal education!' I shall tell Archie" (Archie is Lord Mickleham).

"What, about Phil Meadows?"

" Goodness me, no, Mr Carter Just what you said, you know "

" But why not tell Mickleham about Phil Meadows ? " I urged
" It's all to your credit, you know "

" Yes, I know, but men are so foolish You see, Archie thinks——"

" Of course he does "

" You might let me finish "

" Archie thinks you were never in love before "

" Yes, he does Well, of course, I wasn't in love with Phil——"

" Not a little bit ? "

" Oh, well——"

" Nor with any one else ? "

Miss Dolly prodded the path with her parasol

" Nor with any one else ? " I asked again

Miss Dolly looked for an instant in my direction.

" Nor with any one else ? " said I

Miss Dolly looked straight in front of her

" Nor with——" I began

" Hullo, old chappie, where did you spring from ? "

" Why, Archie ! " cried Miss Dolly

" Oh, how are you, Mickleham, old man ? Take this seat , I'm just off—just off Yes, I was, upon my honour—got to meet a man at the club Good-bye, Miss Foster Jove ! I'm late ! "

And as I went I heard Miss Dolly say, " I thought you were never coming, Archie dear ! " Well, she didn't think he was coming just then. No more did I.

W. W. JACOBS

B. 1868

THE MONKEY'S PAW

I

WITHOUT the night was cold and wet, but in the small parlour of Laburnam Villa the blinds were drawn and the fire burned brightly. Father and son were at chess, the former, who possessed ideas about the game involving radical changes, putting his king into such sharp and unnecessary perils that it even provoked comment from the white-haired old lady knitting placidly by the fire.

"Hark at the wind," said Mr. White, who, having seen a fatal mistake after it was too late, was amiably desirous of preventing his son from seeing it.

"I'm listening," said the latter, grimly surveying the board as he stretched out his hand. "Check."

"I should hardly think that he'd come to-night," said his father, with his hand poised over the board.

"Mate," replied the son.

"That's the worst of living so far out," bawled Mr. White, with sudden and unlooked-for violence, "of all the beastly, slushy, out-of-the-way places to live in, this is the worst. Pathway's a bog, and the road's a torrent. I don't know what people are thinking about. I suppose because only two houses in the road are let, they think it doesn't matter."

"Never mind, dear," said his wife soothingly, "perhaps you'll win the next one."

Mr. White looked up sharply, just in time to intercept a knowing glance between mother and son. The words died away on his lips, and he hid a guilty grin in his thin grey beard.

"There he is," said Herbert White, as the gate banged to loudly and heavy footsteps came toward the door.

The old man rose with hospitable haste, and opening the door, was heard condoling with the new arrival. The new arrival also condoled with himself, so that Mrs White said, "Tut, tut!" and coughed gently as her husband entered the room, followed by a tall, burly man, beady of eye and rubicund of visage

"Sergeant-Major Morris," he said, introducing him.

The sergeant-major shook hands, and taking the proffered seat by the fire, watched contentedly while his host got out whisky and tumblers and stood a small copper kettle on the fire

At the third glass his eyes got brighter, and he began to talk, the little family circle regarding with eager interest this visitor from distant parts, as he squared his broad shoulders in the chair and spoke of wild scenes and doughty deeds, of wars and plagues and strange peoples

"Twenty-one years of it," said Mr White, nodding at his wife and son "When he went away he was a slip of a youth in the warehouse Now look at him"

"He don't look to have taken much harm," said Mrs White politely

"I'd like to go to India myself," said the old man, "just to look round a bit, you know"

"Better where you are," said the sergeant-major, shaking his head He put down the empty glass, and sighing softly, shook it again

"I should like to see those old temples and fakirs and jugglers," said the old man "What was that you started telling me the other day about a monkey's paw or something, Morris?"

"Nothing," said the soldier hastily "Leastways nothing worth hearing"

"Monkey's paw?" said Mrs White curiously

"Well, it's just a bit of what you might call magic, perhaps," said the sergeant-major, off-handedly

His three listeners leaned forward eagerly The visitor absent-mindedly put his empty glass to his lips and then set it down again His host filled it for him

"To look at," said the sergeant-major, fumbling in his pocket, "it's just an ordinary little paw, dried to a mummy"

He took something out of his pocket and proffered it Mrs White drew back with a grimace, but her son, taking it, examined it curiously

"And what is there special about it?" inquired Mr White as he took it from his son, and having examined it, placed it upon the table

"It had a spell put on it by an old fakir," said the sergeant-major, "a very holy man. He wanted to show that fate ruled people's lives, and that those who interfered with it did so to their sorrow. He put a spell on it so that three separate men could each have three wishes from it."

His manner was so impressive that his hearers were conscious that their light laughter jarred somewhat.

"Well, why don't you have three, sir?" said Herbert White cleverly.

The soldier regarded him in the way that middle age is wont to regard presumptuous youth. "I have," he said quietly, and his blotchy face whitened.

"And did you really have the three wishes granted?" asked Mrs. White.

"I did," said the sergeant-major, and his glass tapped against his strong teeth.

"And has anybody else wished?" persisted the old lady.

"The first man had his three wishes. Yes," was the reply, "I don't know what the first two were, but the third was for death. That's how I got the paw."

His tones were so grave that a hush fell upon the group.

"If you've had your three wishes, it's no good to you now, then, Morris," said the old man at last. "What do you keep it for?"

The soldier shook his head. "Fancy, I suppose," he said slowly. "I did have some idea of selling it, but I don't think I will. It has caused enough mischief already. Besides, people won't buy. They think it's a fairy tale, some of them, and those who do think anything of it want to try it first and pay me afterward."

"If you could have another three wishes," said the old man, eyeing him keenly, "would you have them?"

"I don't know," said the other. "I don't know."

He took the paw, and dangling it between his forefinger and thumb, suddenly threw it upon the fire. White, with a slight cry, stooped down and snatched it off.

"Better let it burn," said the soldier solemnly.

"If you don't want it, Morris," said the other, "give it to me."

"I won't," said his friend doggedly. "I threw it on the fire."

If you keep it, don't blame me for what happens. Pitch it on the fire again like a sensible man "

The other shook his head and examined his new possession closely. " How do you do it ? " he inquired

" Hold it up in your right hand and wish aloud," said the sergeant-major, " but I warn you of the consequences "

" Sounds like the Arabian Nights," said Mrs White, as she rose and began to set the supper " Don't you think you might wish for four pairs of hands for me ? "

Her husband drew the talisman from his pocket, and then all three burst into laughter as the sergeant-major, with a look of alarm on his face, caught him by the arm

" If you must wish," he said gruffly, " wish for something sensible "

Mr White dropped it back in his pocket, and placing chairs, motioned his friend to the table In the business of supper the talisman was partly forgotten, and afterward the three sat listening in an enthralled fashion to a second instalment of the soldier's adventures in India

" If the tale about the monkey's paw is not more truthful than those he has been telling us," said Herbert, as the door closed behind their guest, just in time for him to catch the last train, " we shan't make much out of it "

" Did you give him anything for it, father ? " inquired Mrs White, regarding her husband closely

" A trifle," said he, colouring slightly " He didn't want it, but I made him take it And he pressed me again to throw it away "

" Likely," said Herbert, with pretended horror " Why, we're going to be rich and famous and happy Wish to be an emperor, father, to begin with , then you can't be henpecked "

He darted round the table, pursued by the maligned Mrs White armed with an antimacassar

Mr White took the paw from his pocket and eyed it dubiously " I don't know what to wish for, and that's a fact," he said slowly " It seems to me I've got all I want "

" If you only cleared the house, you'd be quite happy, wouldn't you ? " said Herbert, with his hand on his shoulder. " Well, wish for two hundred pounds, then ; that'll just do it."

His father, smiling shamefacedly at his own credulity, held up the talisman, as his son, with a solemn face, somewhat marred by a wink at his mother, sat down at the piano and struck a few impressive chords

"I wish for two hundred pounds," said the old man distinctly

A fine crash from the piano greeted the words, interrupted by a shuddering cry from the old man. His wife and son ran toward him

"It moved," he cried, with a glance of disgust at the object as it lay on the floor. "As I wished, it twisted in my hand like a snake"

"Well, I don't see the money," said his son as he picked it up and placed it on the table, "and I bet I never shall"

"It must have been your fancy, father," said his wife, regarding him anxiously

He shook his head. "Never mind, though, there's no harm done, but it gave me a shock all the same"

They sat down by the fire again while the two men finished their pipes. Outside, the wind was higher than ever, and the old man started nervously at the sound of a door banging upstairs. A silence unusual and depressing settled upon all three, which lasted until the old couple rose to retire for the night

"I expect you'll find the cash tied up in a big bag in the middle of your bed," said Herbert, as he bade them good-night, "and something horrible squatting up on top of the wardrobe watching you as you pocket your ill-gotten gains"

He sat alone in the darkness, gazing at the dying fire, and seeing faces in it. The last face was so horrible and so simian that he gazed at it in amazement. It got so vivid that, with a little uneasy laugh, he felt on the table for a glass containing a little water to throw over it. His hand grasped the monkey's paw, and with a little shiver he wiped his hand on his coat and went up to bed

II

In the brightness of the wintry sun next morning as it streamed over the breakfast table he laughed at his fears. There was an air of prosaic wholesomeness about the room which it had lacked on the previous night, and the dirty, shrivelled little paw was pitched on the sideboard with a carelessness which betokened no great belief in its virtues

"I suppose all old soldiers are the same," said Mrs. White. "The idea of our listening to such nonsense! How could wishes be granted in these days? And if they could, how could two hundred pounds hurt you, father?"

"Might drop on his head from the sky," said the frivolous Herbert.

"Morris said the things happened so naturally," said his father, "that you might if you so wished attribute it to coincidence."

"Well, don't break into the money before I come back," said Herbert as he rose from the table. "I'm afraid it'll turn you into a mean, avaricious man, and we shall have to disown you."

His mother laughed, and following him to the door, watched him down the road, and returning to the breakfast table, was very happy at the expense of her husband's credulity. All of which did not prevent her from scurrying to the door at the postman's knock, nor prevent her from referring somewhat shortly to retired sergeant-majors of bibulous habits when she found that the post brought a tailor's bill.

"Herbert will have some more of his funny remarks, I expect, when he comes home," she said, as they sat at dinner.

"I dare say," said Mr. White, pouring himself out some beer, "but for all that, the thing moved in my hand, that I'll swear to."

"You thought it did," said the old lady soothingly.

"I say it did," replied the other. "There was no thought about it, I had just— What's the matter?"

His wife made no reply. She was watching the mysterious movements of a man outside, who, peering in an undecided fashion at the house, appeared to be trying to make up his mind to enter. In mental connection with the two hundred pounds, she noticed that the stranger was well dressed, and wore a silk hat of glossy newness. Three times he paused at the gate, and then walked on again. The fourth time he stood with his hand upon it, and then with sudden resolution flung it open and walked up the path. Mrs. White at the same moment placed her hands behind her, and hurriedly unfastening the strings of her apron, put that useful article of apparel beneath the cushion of her chair.

She brought the stranger, who seemed ill at ease, into the room. He gazed at her furtively, and listened in a preoccupied fashion as the old lady apologised for the appearance of the room, and her husband's coat, a garment which he usually reserved for the garden. She then waited as patiently as her sex would permit, for him to broach his business, but he was at first strangely silent.

"I—was asked to call," he said at last, and stooped and picked a piece of cotton from his trousers "I come from 'Maw and Meggins' "

The old lady started "Is anything the matter?" she asked breathlessly "Has anything happened to Herbert? What is it? What is it?"

Her husband interposed "There, there, mother," he said hastily "Sit down, and don't jump to conclusions You've not brought bad news, I'm sure, sir", and he eyed the other wistfully.

"I'm sorry——" began the visitor

"Is he hurt?" demanded the mother wildly

The visitor bowed in assent "Badly hurt," he said quietly, "but he is not in any pain."

"Oh, thank God!" said the old woman, clasping her hands "Thank God for that! Thank——"

She broke off suddenly as the sinister meaning of the assurance dawned upon her and she saw the awful confirmation of her fears in the other's averted face She caught her breath, and turning to her slower-witted husband, laid her trembling old hand upon his There was a long silence

"He was caught in the machinery," said the visitor at length in a low voice

"Caught in the machinery," repeated Mr White in a dazed fashion, "yes"

He sat staring blankly out at the window, and taking his wife's hand between his own, pressed it as he had been wont to do in their old courting days nearly forty years before

"He was the only one left to us," he said, turning gently to the visitor "It is hard"

The other coughed, and rising, walked slowly to the window "The firm wished me to convey their sincere sympathy with you in your great loss," he said, without looking round "I beg that you will understand I am only their servant and merely obeying orders"

There was no reply, the old woman's face was white, her eyes staring, and her breath inaudible, on the husband's face was a look such as his friend the sergeant might have carried into his first action

"I was to say that Maw and Meggins disclaim all responsibility," continued the other. "They admit no liability at all, but in consideration of your son's services, they wish to present you with a certain sum as compensation "

Mr White dropped his wife's hand, and rising to his feet, gazed with a look of horror at his visitor His dry lips shaped the words, " How much ? "

" Two hundred pounds," was the answer

Unconscious of his wife's shriek, the old man smiled faintly, put out his hands like a sightless man, and dropped, a senseless heap, to the floor

III

In the huge new cemetery, some two miles distant, the old people buried their dead, and came back to a house steeped in shadow and silence It was all over so quickly that at first they could hardly realise it, and remained in a state of expectation as though of something else to happen—something else which was to lighten this load, too heavy for old hearts to bear

But the days passed, and expectation gave place to resignation—the hopeless resignation of the old, sometimes mis-called apathy Sometimes they hardly exchanged a word, for now they had nothing to talk about, and their days were long to weariness

It was about a week after that the old man, waking suddenly in the night, stretched out his hand and found himself alone The room was in darkness, and the sound of subdued weeping came from the window He raised himself in bed and listened

" Come back," he said tenderly " You will be cold "

" It is colder for my son," said the old woman, and wept afresh

The sound of her sobs died away on his ears The bed was warm, and his eyes heavy with sleep He dozed fitfully, and then slept until a sudden wild cry from his wife awoke him with a start

" The paw ! " she cried wildly " The monkey's paw ! "

He started up in alarm " Where ? Where is it ? What's the matter ? "

She came stumbling across the room toward him " I want it," she said quietly " You've not destroyed it ? "

" It's in the parlour, on the bracket," he replied, marvelling " Why ? "

She cried and laughed together, and bending over, kissed his cheek.

"I only just thought of it," she said hysterically "Why didn't I think of it before? Why didn't you think of it?"

"Think of what?" he questioned

"The other two wishes," she replied rapidly. "We've only had one"

"Was not that enough?" he demanded fiercely

"No," she cried triumphantly, "we'll have one more Go down and get it quickly, and wish our boy alive again"

The man sat up in bed and flung the bedclothes from his quaking limbs "Good God, you are mad!" he cried, aghast

"Get it," she panted, "get it quickly, and wish—— Oh, my boy, my boy!"

Her husband struck a match and lit the candle "Get back to bed," he said unsteadily "You don't know what you are saying"

"We had the first wish granted," said the old woman feverishly, "why not the second?"

"A coincidence," stammered the old man

"Go and get it and wish," cried his wife, quivering with excitement

The old man turned and regarded her, and his voice shook "He has been dead ten days, and besides he—I would not tell you else, but—I could only recognise him by his clothing If he was too terrible for you to see then, how now?"

"Bring him back," cried the old woman, and dragged him toward the door "Do you think I fear the child I have nursed?"

He went down in the darkness, and felt his way to the parlour, and then to the mantelpiece The talisman was in its place, and a horrible fear that the unspoken wish might bring his mutilated son before him ere he could escape from the room seized upon him, and he caught his breath as he found that he had lost the direction of the door His brow cold with sweat, he felt his way round the table, and groped along the wall until he found himself in the small passage with the unwholesome thing in his hand

Even his wife's face seemed changed as he entered the room It was white and expectant, and to his fears seemed to have an unnatural look upon it He was afraid of her

"Wish!" she cried, in a strong voice

"It is foolish and wicked," he faltered

"Wish!" repeated his wife

He raised his hand "I wish my son alive again."

The talisman fell to the floor, and he regarded it fearfully. Then he sank trembling into a chair as the old woman, with burning eyes, walked to the window and raised the blind.

He sat until he was chilled with the cold, glancing occasionally at the figure of the old woman peering through the window. The candle-end, which had burned below the rim of the china candlestick, was throwing pulsating shadows on the ceiling and walls, until, with a flicker larger than the rest, it expired. The old man, with an unspeakable sense of relief at the failure of the talisman, crept back to his bed, and a minute or two afterward the old woman came silently and apathetically beside him.

Neither spoke, but lay silently listening to the ticking of the clock. A stair creaked, and a squeaky mouse scurried noisily through the wall. The darkness was oppressive, and after lying for some time screwing up his courage, he took the box of matches, and striking one, went downstairs for a candle.

At the foot of the stairs the match went out, and he paused to strike another, and at the same moment a knock, so quiet and stealthy as to be scarcely audible, sounded on the front door.

The matches fell from his hand and spilled in the passage. He stood motionless, his breath suspended until the knock was repeated. Then he turned and fled swiftly back to his room, and closed the door behind him. A third knock sounded through the house.

"What's that?" cried the old woman, starting up.

"A rat," said the old man in shaking tones—"a rat. It passed me on the stairs."

His wife sat up in bed listening. A loud knock resounded through the house.

"It's Herbert!" she screamed. "It's Herbert!"

She ran to the door, but her husband was before her, and catching her by the arm, held her tightly.

"What are you going to do?" he whispered hoarsely.

"It's my boy, it's Herbert!" she cried, struggling mechanically. "I forgot it was two miles away. What are you holding me for? Let go. I must open the door."

"For God's sake don't let it in," cried the old man, trembling.

"You're afraid of your own son," she cried, struggling. "Let me go. I'm coming, Herbert, I'm coming."

There was another knock, and another. The old woman with a sudden wrench broke free and ran from the room. Her husband followed to the landing, and called after her appealingly as she hurried downstairs. He heard the chain rattle back and the bottom bolt drawn slowly and stiffly from the socket. Then the old woman's voice, strained and panting

"The bolt," she cried loudly "Come down. I can't reach it."

But her husband was on his hands and knees groping wildly on the floor in search of the paw. If he could only find it before the thing outside got in. A perfect fusillade of knocks reverberated through the house, and he heard the scraping of a chair as his wife put it down in the passage against the door. He heard the creaking of the bolt as it came slowly back, and at the same moment he found the monkey's paw, and frantically breathed his third and last wish.

The knocking ceased suddenly, although the echoes of it were still in the house. He heard the chair drawn back, and the door opened. A cold wind rushed up the staircase, and a long loud wail of disappointment and misery from his wife gave him courage to run down to her side, and then to the gate beyond. The street lamp flickering opposite shone on a quiet and deserted road.

.

AN ODD FREAK

W W. JACOBS

"SPEAKING o' money," said the night-watchman, thoughtfully, as he selected an empty soap-box on the wharf for a seat, "the whole world would be different if we all 'ad more of it. It would be a brighter and a 'appier place for everybody."

He broke off to open a small brass tobacco-box and place a little quid of tobacco tenderly into a pouch in his left cheek, critically observing at the same time the efforts of a somewhat large steamer to get alongside the next wharf without blocking up more than three-parts of the river. He watched it as though the entire operation depended upon his attention, and, the steamer fast, he turned his eyes back again and resumed his theme.

"Of course it's the being short that sharpens people," he admitted thoughtfully, "the sharpest man I ever knew never 'ad a ha'penny in 'is pocket, and the ways 'e had o' getting other chaps to pay for 'is beer would ha' made 'is fortin at the law if 'e'd only 'ad the eddication. Playful little chap 'e was. I've seen men wot didn't know 'im stand 'im a pot o' beer and then foller 'im up the road to see 'im knock down a policeman as 'e'd promised. They'd foller 'im to the fust policeman 'e met, an' then 'e'd point them out and say they were goin' to half kill 'im, an' the policeman 'ud just stroll up an' ask 'em wot they were 'anging about for, but I never 'eard of a chap telling 'im. They used to go away struck all of a 'eap. He died in the accident ward of the London Horsepittle, poor chap."

He shook his head thoughtfully, and ignoring the statement of the watchman at the next wharf that it was a fine evening, shifted his quid and laughed rumblingly.

"The funniest way o' raising the wind I ever 'eard of," he said, in explanation, "was one that 'appened about fifteen years ago. I'd just taken my discharge as A B from the North Star, trading between here and the Australian ports, and the men wot the thing 'appened to was shipmates o' mine, although on'y firemen."

" I know it's a true story, becoss I was in it a little bit myself, and the other part I 'ad from all of 'em, and besides, they didn't see anything funny in it at all, or anything out of the way. It seemed to them quite a easy way o' making money, and I dessay if it 'ad come off all right I should have thought so too.

" In about a week arter we was paid off at the Albert Docks these chaps was all cleaned out, and they was all in despair, with a thirst wot wasn't half quenched and a spree wot was on'y in a manner o' speaking just begun, and at the end of that time they came round to a room wot I 'ad, to see wot could be done. There was four of 'em in all—old Sam Small, Ginger Dick, Peter Russet, and a orphan nevy of Sam's whose father and mother was dead. The mother 'ad been 'alf nigger an' 'alf Malay when she was living, and Sam was always pertickler careful to point out that his nevy took arter 'er. It was enough to make the pore woman turn in 'er grave to say so, but Sam used to say that 'e owed it to 'is brother to explain.

" ' Wot's to be done ? ' ses Peter Russet, arter they'd all said wot miserable chaps they was, an' 'ow badly sailor-men was paid. ' We're all going to sign on in the Land's End, but she doesn't sail for a fortnight, wot's to be done in the meantime for to live ? '

" ' There's your watch, Peter,' ses old Sam, dreamy-like, ' and there's Ginger's ring. It's a good job you kep' that ring, Ginger. We're all in the same boat, mates, an' I on'y wish as I'd got something for the general good. It's 'aving an orphan nevy wot's kep' me pore '.

" ' Stow it,' ses the nevy, short-like.

" ' Everything's agin us,' ses old Sam. ' There's them four green parrots I brought from Brazil, all dead '.

" ' So are my two monkeys,' ses Peter Russet, shaking 'is 'ead, ' they used to sleep with me, too '.

" They all shook their 'eads then, and Russet took Sam up very sharp for saying that p'r'aps if he 'adn't slep' with the monkeys they wouldn't ha' died. He said if Sam knew more about monkeys than wot 'e did, why didn't 'e put 'is money in them instead o' green parrots wot pulled their feathers out and died of cold.

" ' Talking about monkeys,' ses Ginger Dick, interrupting old Sam suddenly, ' wot about young Beauty here ? '

" ' Well, wot about him ? ' ses the nevy, in a nasty sort o' way.

" ' W'y, 'e's worth forty monkeys an' millions o' green parrots,' ses Ginger, starting up, ' an' here 'e is a-wasting of 'is opportunities, going about dressed like a Christian Open your mouth, Beauty, and stick your tongue out and roll your eyes a bit '

" ' W'y not leave well alone, Ginger ? ' ses Russet , and I thought so too Young Beauty was quite enough for me without that

" ' Ter 'blige me,' ses Ginger anxiously, ' just make yourself as ugly as wot you can, Beauty '

" ' Leave 'im alone,' ses old Sam, as his nevy snarled at 'em. ' You ain't everybody's money yourself, Ginger '

" ' I tell you, mates,' ses Ginger, speaking very slow and solemn, ' there's a fortin in 'im I was lookin' at 'im just now, trying to think who 'e reminded me of At fust I thought it was that big stuffed monkey we saw at Melbourne, then I suddenly remembered it was a wild man of Borneo I see when I was a kid up in Sunderland When I say 'e was a 'andsome, good-'arted looking gentleman alongside o' you, Beauty, do you begin to get my meaning ? '

" ' Wot's the idea, Ginger ? ' ses Sam, getting up to lend me and Russet a 'and with 'is nevy

" ' My idea is this,' ses Ginger ' take 'is cloes off 'im and dress 'im up in that there winderblind, or something o' the kind , tie 'im up with a bit o' line, and take 'im round to Ted Reddish in the 'Ighway and sell 'im for a 'undred quid as a wild man of Borneo '

" ' Wot ? ' screams Beauty, in an awful voice ' Let go, Peter , let go, d'ye hear ? '

" ' 'Old your noise, Beauty, while your elders is speaking,' ses 'is uncle, and I could see 'e was struck with the idea.

" ' You jest try dressing me up in a winderblind,' ses his nevy, half-crying with rage

" ' Listen to reason, Beauty,' ses Ginger , ' you'll 'ave your share of the tin , it'll only be for a day or two, and then when we've cleared out you can make your escape, and there'll be twenty-five pounds for each of us '

" ' 'Ow do you make that out, Ginger ? ' ses Sam, in a cold voice.

" ' Fours into a 'undered,' ses Ginger

" ' Ho,' ses Sam, ' Ho, indeed. I wasn't aweer that 'e was your nevy, Ginger '

" ' Share and share alike,' ses Russet ' It's a very good plan o' yours, Ginger '

" Ginger holds 'is 'ead up and looks at 'im 'ard

" ' I thought o' the plan,' 'e ses, speaking very slow and deliberate.

Russell

A handwritten signature in cursive script, which appears to read "W. W. Jacobs". The signature is written in black ink and is positioned above the printed name.

( W W Jacobs )

'Sam's 'is uncle, and 'e's the wld man Threes into a 'undered go——'

" 'You needn't bother your fat 'ead adding up sums, Ginger,' ses Russet, very polite 'I'm going to 'ave my share, else I'll split to Ted Reddish'

"None of 'em said a word about me two of 'em was sitting on my bed, Ginger was using a 'ankerchief o' mine wot 'e found in the fireplace, and Peter Russet 'ad 'ad a drink out o' the jug on my wash-stand, and yet they never even mentioned me That's firemen all over, and that's 'ow it is they get themselves so disliked

"It took 'em best part of an 'our to talk round young Beauty, an' the langwidge they see fit to use made me thankful to think that the parrots didn't live to larn it

"You never saw anything like Beauty when they 'ad finished with 'im If 'e was bad in 'is cloes, 'e was a perfect horror without 'em Ginger Dick faked 'im up beautiful, but there was no pleasing 'im Fust he found fault with the winder-blind, which 'e said didn't fit, then 'e grumbled about going bare-foot, then 'e wanted somethink to 'ide 'is legs, which was natural considering the shape of 'em Ginger Dick nearly lost 'is temper with 'im, and it was all old Sam could do to stop himself from casting 'im off for ever He was finished at last, and arter Peter Russet 'ad slipped downstairs and found a bit o' broken clothes-prop in the yard, and 'e'd been shown 'ow to lean on it and make a noise, Ginger said as 'ow if Ted Reddish got 'im for a 'undered pounds 'e'd get 'im a bargain

" 'We must 'ave a cab,' ses old Sam

" 'Cab?' ses Ginger 'What for?'

" 'We should 'ave half Wapping following us,' ses Sam 'Go out and put your ring up, Ginger, and fetch a cab'

"Ginger started grumbling, but he went, and presently came back with the cab and the money, and they all went downstairs leading the wld man by a bit o' line They only met one party coming up, and 'e seemed to remember somethink 'e'd forgotten wot ought to be fetched at once

"Ginger went out fust and opened the cab-door, and then stood there waiting becos at the last moment the wld man said the winder-blind was slipping down They got 'im out at last, but before 'e could get in the cab was going up the road at ten miles an hour, with Ginger 'anging on to the door calling to it to stop

" It came back at about a mile an' a 'alf an hour, an' the remarks of the cabman was eggstrordnary Even when he got back 'e wouldn't start till 'e'd got double fare paid in advance , but they got in at last and drove off

" There was a fine scene at Ted Reddish's door Ginger said that if there was a bit of a struggle it would be a good advertisement for Ted Reddish, and they might p'r'aps get more than a 'undered, and all the three of 'em could do, they couldn't get the wild man out o' that cab, and the cabman was hopping about 'arf crazy Every now and then they'd get the wild man 'arf out, and then he'd get in agin and snarl 'E didn't seem to know when to leave off, and Ginger and the others got almost as sick of it as the cabman It must ha' taken two years' wear out o' that cab, but they got 'im out at last, and Reddish's door being open to see what the row was about, they went straight in

" ' Wot's all this ? ' ses Reddish, who was a tall, thin man, with a dark moustache

" ' It's a wild man o' Borneo,' ses Ginger, panting , ' we caught 'im in a forest in Brazil, an' we've come 'ere to give you the fust offer '

" Ted Reddish was so surprised 'e couldn't speak at fust The wild man seemed to take 'is breath away, and 'e looked in a 'elpless kind o' way at 'is wife, who'd just come down She was a nice-lookin' woman, fat, with a lot o' yaller hair, and she smiled at 'em as though she'd known 'em all their lives

" ' Come into the parlour,' she ses, kindly, just as Ted was beginning to get 'is breath

" They followed 'em in, and the wild man was just going to make hisself comfortable in a easy-chair, when Ginger give 'im a look, an' 'e curled up on the 'earthrug instead

" ' 'E ain't a very fine specimen,' ses Ted Reddish, at last

" ' It's the red side-whiskers I don't like,' ses his wife ' Besides, who ever 'eard of a wild man in a collar an' necktie ? '

" ' You've got hold o' the wrong one,' ses Ted Reddish, afore Ginger Dick could speak up for hisself

" ' Oh, I beg your pardin,' ses Mrs Reddish to Ginger, very polite ' I thought it was funny a wild man should be wearing a collar It's my mistake That's the wild man, I s'pose, on the 'earthrug ? '

" ' That's 'im, mum,' ses old Sam, very short.

" ' He don't look wild enough,' ses Reddish.

" 'No, 'e's much too tame,' ses 'is wife, shaking her yaller curls

" The chaps all looked at each other then, and the wild man began to think it was time he did somethink, and the nearest thing 'andy being Ginger's leg, 'e put 'is teeth into it. Anybody might ha' thought Ginger was the wild man then, the way 'e went on, and Mrs Reddish said that even if he so far forgot hussell as to use sich langwidg afore 'er, 'e oughtn't to before a poor 'eathen animal

" 'How much do you want for 'im?' ses Ted Reddish, arter Ginger 'ad got 'is leg away, and taken it to the winder to look at it

" 'One 'undered pounds,' ses old Sam

" Ted Reddish looked at 'is wife, and they both larfed as though they'd never leave orf

" 'Why, the market price o' the best wild men is only thirty shillings,' ses Reddish, wiping 'is eyes. 'I'll give you a pound for 'im'

" Old Sam looked at Russet, and Russet looked at Ginger, and then they all larfed

" 'Well, there's no getting over you, I can see that,' ses Reddish, at last. 'Is he strong?'

" 'Strong? Strong ain't the word for it,' ses Sam

" 'Bring 'im to the back and let 'im 'ave a wrestle with one o' the brown bears, Ted,' ses 'is wife

" ' 'E'd kill it,' ses old Sam, hastily

" 'Never mind,' ses Reddish, getting up, 'brown bears is cheap enough'

" They all got up then, none of 'em knowing wot to do, except the wild man, that is, and he got 'is arms tight round the leg o' the table

" 'Well,' ses Ginger, 'we'll be pleased for 'im to wrestle with the bear, but we must 'ave the 'undered quid fust, in case 'e injures 'issell a little'

" Ted Reddish looked 'ard at 'im, and then he looked at 'is wife agin

" 'I'll just go outside and talk it over with the missus,' he ses, at last, and they both got up and went out

" 'It's all right,' ses old Sam, winking at Ginger

" 'Fair cop,' ses Ginger, who was still rubbing his leg. 'I told you it would be, but there's no need for Beauty to overdo it. He nearly 'ad a bit out o' my leg'

" 'A'right,' ses the wild man, shifting along the 'earthrug to where Peter was sitting, 'but it don't do for me to be too tame. You 'eard wot she said.'

“ ‘How are you feeling, old man?’ ses Peter, in a kind voice, as ‘e tucked ‘is legs away under ‘is chair

“ ‘Gurr,’ ses the wild man, going on all fours to the back of the chair, ‘gur—wug—wug——’

“ ‘Don’t play the fool, Beauty,’ ses Peter, with a uneasy smile, as he twisted ‘is ‘ead round ‘Call ‘im off, Sam’

“ ‘Gurr,’ ses the wild man, sniffing at ‘is legs, ‘gurr’

“ ‘Easy on, Beauty, it’s no good biting ‘im till they come back,’ ses old Sam

“ ‘I won’t be bit at all,’ ses Russet, very sharp, ‘mund that, Sam It’s my belief Beauty’s gone mad’

“ ‘Hush,’ ses Ginger, and they ‘eard Ted Reddish and ‘is wife coming back They came in and sat down agin, and after Ted ‘ad ‘ad another good look at the wild man and prodded ‘im all over an’ looked at ‘is teeth, he spoke up and said they’d decided to give a ‘undered pun for ‘im at the end o’ three days if ‘e suited

“ ‘I s’pose,’ ses Sam, looking at the others, ‘that we could ‘ave a bit of it now to go on with?’

“ ‘It’s agin our way of doing business,’ ses Ted Reddish ‘If it ‘ud been a lion or a tiger we could, but wild men we never do’

“ ‘The thing is,’ ses Mrs Reddish, as the wild man started on Russet’s leg and was pulled off by Sam and Ginger, ‘where to put ‘im’

“ ‘Why not put ‘im in with the black leopard?’ ses her ‘usband

“ ‘There’s plenty o’ room in his cage,’ says ‘is wife, thoughtfully, ‘and it ‘ud be company for ‘im too’

“ ‘I don’t think the wild man ‘ud like that,’ said Ginger

“ ‘I’m sartain sure ‘e wouldn’t,’ says old Sam, shaking ‘is ‘ead

“ ‘Well, we must put ‘im in a cage by hisself, I s’pose,’ ses Reddish, ‘but we can’t be put to much expense I’m sure the money we spent in cat’s meat for the last wild man we ‘ad was awful’

“ ‘Don’t you spend too much money on cat’s meat for ‘im,’ ses Sam, ‘‘e’d very likely leave it Bringing ‘im ‘ome, we used to give ‘im the same as we ‘ad ourselves, and he got on all right’

“ ‘It’s a wonder you didn’t kill ‘im,’ ses Reddish, severely ‘He’ll be fed very different ‘ere, I can tell you You won’t know ‘im at the end o’ three days’

“ ‘Don’t change ‘im too sudden,’ ses Ginger, keeping ‘is ‘ead turned away from the wild man, wot was trying to catch ‘is eye ‘Cook ‘is food at fust, ‘cos ‘e’s been used to it.’

" ' I know wot to give 'im,' ses Reddish, offhandedly ' I ain't been in the line twenty-seven years for nothink Bring 'im out to the back, an' I'll put 'im in 'is new 'ome ' "

" They all got up and, taking no notice of the wild man's whispers, follered Ted Reddish and 'is wife out to the back, where all the wild beasts in the world seemed to 'ave collected to roar out to each other what a beastly place it was

" ' I'm going to put 'im in " 'Appy Cottage " for a time,' says Reddish , ' lend a hand 'ere, William,' he says, beckoning to one of 'is men

" ' Is that " 'Appy Cottage " ? ' ses old Sam, sniffing, as they got up to a nasty, empty cage with a chain and staple in the wall

" Ted Reddish said it was

" ' Wot makes you call it that ? ' ses Sam

" Reddish didn't seem to 'ear 'im, and it took all Ginger's coaxing to get Beauty to go in

" ' It's on'y for a day or two,' he whispers

" ' But 'ow am I to escape when you've got the brass ? ' ses the wild man

" ' We'll look arter that,' ses Ginger, who 'adn't got the least idea

" The wild man 'ad a little show for the last time, jst to impress Ted Reddish, an' it was pretty to see the way William 'andled 'im The look on the wild man's face showed as 'ow it was a revelashun to 'im Then 'is three mates took a last look at 'im and went off

" For the fust day Sam felt uneasy about 'im, and used to tell us tales about 'is dead brother which made us think Beauty was lucky to take arter 'is mother , but it wore off, and the next night, in the ' Admiral Cochrane,' 'e put 'is 'ead on Ginger's shoulder, and wep' for 'appiness as 'e spoke of 'is nevy's home at ' 'Appy Cottage ' "

" On the third day Sam was for going round in the morning for the money, but Ginger said it wasn't advisable to show any 'aste , so they left it to the evening, and Peter Russet wrote Sam a letter signed ' Barnum,' offering 'im two 'undered for the wild man, in case Ted Reddish should want to beat 'em down They all 'ad a drink before they went in, and was smilng with good temper to sich an extent that they 'ad to wait a minute to get their faces straight afore going in

" ' Come in,' ses Reddish, and they follered 'im into the parler, where Mrs Reddish was sitting in a armchair shaking 'er 'ead and looking at the carpet very sorrowful

" ' I was afraid you'd come,' she ses, in a low voice

" ' So was I,' ses Reddish

" ' What for ? ' ses old Sam It didn't look much like money, and 'e felt cross

" ' We've 'ad a loss,' ses Mrs Reddish She touched 'erself, and then they see she was all in black, and that Ted Reddish was wearing a black tie and a bit o' crape round 'is arm.

" ' Sorry to 'ear it, mum,' ses old Sam

" ' It was very sudden, too,' ses Mrs Reddish, wiping 'er eyes

" ' That's better than laying long,' ses Peter Russet, comforting like

" Ginger Dick gives a cough ' Twenty-five pounds was wot 'e'd come for , not to 'ear this sort o' talk '

" ' We've been in the wild-beast line seven-an'-twenty years,' ses Mrs Reddish, ' and it's the fust time anythink of this sort 'as 'appened.'

" ' 'Ealthy family, I s'pose,' ses Sam, staring

" ' Tell 'im, Ted,' ses Mrs Reddish, in a 'usky whisper.

" ' No, you,' ses Ted

" ' It's your place,' ses Mrs Reddish

" ' A woman can break it better,' ses 'er 'usband.

" ' Tell us wot ? ' ses Ginger, very snappish

" Ted Reddish cleared 'is throat

" ' It wasn't our fault,' he ses, slowly, while Mrs Reddish began to cry agin , ' gin'rally speakin', animals is afraid o' wld men, and night before last, as the wild man wot you left on approval didn't seem to like " 'Appy Cottage," we took 'im out an' put 'im in with the tiger '

" ' Put him in with the WOT ? ' ses the unfort'nit man's uncle, jumping off 'is chair

" ' The tiger,' ses Reddish ' We 'eard something in the night, but we thought they was only 'aving a little bit of a tiff, lke In the morning I went down with a bit o' cold meat for the wild man, and I thought at first he'd escaped , but looking a little bit closer——'

" ' Don't, Ted,' ses 'is wife ' I can't bear it '

" ' Do you mean to tell me that the tiger 'as eat 'im ? ' screams old Sam

" ' Most of 'im,' ses Ted Reddish , ' but 'e couldn't ha' been much of a wld man to let a tiger get the better of 'im I must say I was surprised '

" ' We both was,' ses Mrs Reddish, wiping 'er eyes.

"You might ha' 'eard a pin drop, old Sam's eyes was large and staring, Peter Russet was sucking 'is teeth, an' Ginger was wondering wot the law would say to it—if it 'eard of it

" 'It's an unfortunit thing for all parties,' ses Ted Reddish, at last, getting up and standing on the 'earthrug " ' 'Orrible,' ses Sam, 'uskily ' You ought to ha' known better than to put 'im in with a tiger Wot could you expect? W'y, it was a mad thing to do '

" 'Crool thing,' ses Peter Russet

" 'You don't know the bisness properly,' ses Ginger, 'that's about wot it is W'y, I should ha' known better than that '

" 'Well, it's no good making a fuss about it,' ses Reddish 'It was only a wild man arter all, and he'd ha' died anyway, cos 'e wouldn't eat the raw meat we gave 'im, and 'is pan o' water was scarcely touched He'd ha' starved himself anyhow I'm sorry, as I said before, but I must be off, I've got an appointment down at the docks '

"He moved towards the door, Ginger Dick gave Russet a nudge and whispered something, and Russet passed it on to Sam

" 'What about the 'undered quid?' ses pore Beauty's uncle, catching 'old o' Reddish as 'e passed 'im

" 'Eh?' ses Reddish, surprised—'Oh, that's off '

" 'Ho!' says Sam 'Ho! is it? We want a 'undered quid off of you, an' wot's more, we mean to 'ave it '

" 'But the tiger's ate 'im,' says Mrs Reddish, explaining

" 'I know that,' ses Sam, sharply 'But 'e was our wild man, and we want to be paid for 'im You should ha' been more careful We'll give you five minutes, and if the money ain't paid by that time, we'll go straight off to the police-station '

" 'Well, go,' ses Ted Reddish

"Sam got up, very stern, and looked at Ginger.

" 'You'll be runed if we do,' ses Ginger

" 'All right,' ses Ted Reddish, comfortably

" 'I'm not sure they can't 'ang you,' ses Russet

" 'I ain't sure either,' says Reddish, 'and I'd like to know 'ow the law stands, in case it 'appens agin '

" 'Come on, Sam,' ses Ginger, 'come straight to the police-station '

"He got up, and moved towards the door Ted Reddish didn't move a muscle, but Mrs Reddish flopped on her knees and caught old Sam round the legs, and 'eld him so's 'e couldn't move

" ' Spare 'im,' she ses, crying

" ' Lea' go o' my legs, mum,' ses Sam

" ' Come on, Sam,' ses Ginger , ' come to the police '

" Old Sam made a desperit effort, and Mrs Reddish called 'im a crool monster, and let go and 'id 'er face on 'er husband's shoulder as they all moved out of the parlour, larfing like a mad thing with hysterics

" They moved off slowly, not knowing wot to do, as, of course, they knew they daren't go to the police about it Ginger Dick's temper was awful , but Peter Russet said they mustn't give up all 'ope—he'd write to Ted Reddish and tell 'im as a friend wot a danger 'e was in Old Sam didn't say anything, the loss of his nevy and twenty-five pounds at the same time being almost more than 'is 'art could bear, and in a slow, melancholy fashion they walked back to old Sam's lodgings

" ' Well, what the blazes is up now ? ' ses Ginger Dick, as they turned the corner

" There was three or four 'undered people standing in front of the 'ouse, and women's 'eads out of all the winders screaming their 'ardest for the police, and as they got closer they 'eard a incessant knocking It took 'em nearly five minutes to force their way through the crowd, and then they nearly went crazy as they saw the wild man with 'alf the winder-blind missing, but otherwise well and 'arty, standing on the step and giving rat-a-tat-tats at the door for all 'e was worth

" They never got to know the rights of it, Beauty getting so excited every time they asked 'im 'ow he got on that they 'ad to give it up But they began to 'ave a sort of idea at last that Ted Reddish 'ad been 'aving a game with 'em, and that Mrs Reddish was worse than wot 'e was "

CHARLWOOD WITH A NUMBER

MR ROBERT CHARLWOOD'S house was the curiosity of its neighbourhood. It was a comfortable and well-conditioned house enough, standing in ground of its own, topmost on the hill of a high London suburb. But Mr Charlwood had crowned the house (and consequently the hill) with curious superstructures, square, pointed, domed, ribbed, zinc-covered, pierced with apertures of weird design, structures some of which, it was reported, had been observed, in the twilight and dark of clear evenings, to shift and turn about on their axes, by the operation of no visible agency. Also there was a strange and contorted construction, like a pile of vast canisters, which clung irregularly to one side of the house, and was alleged to be a covered staircase leading from Mr Charlwood's study to the roof. All of which prodigies were explained by the simple fact that Mr Charlwood was an astronomer.

It might be said—it was said, in fact—that Mr Charlwood was not so much a great as a persistent astronomer, I have heard it more than hinted, indeed, that he was not a great astronomer at all. Such rumours as these never disturbed him, however, because he never heard them, for he was an astronomical hermit. A more than middle-aged, quite well-to-do, and not particularly ascetic hermit, but a hermit nevertheless. He wrote and printed a great many capital letters after his name, of which few people could guess the precise significance. These letters cost him a good number of guineas a year, for they were the initials of all sorts of societies, membership in which was strictly confined to any gentlemen who would pay the subscriptions. Some came quite reasonable, considering the number of letters, and the dearest were only five guineas per annum. I heard of one, indeed, which gave you four initials for a guinea, but this was a very common affair, and I believe Mr Charlwood's letters of honour averaged out at fourteen and ninepence apiece, taking one with another, a far more respectable price, though not at all excessive.

He was the author of many contributions to the chief scientific journals, their inability to print which—for reasons they carelessly left unexplained—caused great regret to the editors, and his lecture explaining eclipses, before the Parson's Green Debating Society, greatly stirred that learned body On one occasion a daily newspaper had actually printed a letter from him giving the time and particulars of the appearances of a curious light in the sky, thought possibly to have been a manifestation of the Aurora Borealis, and there is every reason to believe that the same newspaper would also have published his account of his observation, through his large telescope, of an extraordinary ascending flight of meteors, if he had sent it, and he would undoubtedly have sent it but for a certain misgiving ensuing on his descent from the observatory and his reception of a report that the kitchen chimney had been on fire "It's a mercy the fire-engines haven't been here, sir," his housekeeper said, "the sparks were enough to bring 'em five miles"

It was to the management of this Mrs Page, his housekeeper, that Mr Charlwood owed the equable regularity of his life He was wholly unconscious of the debt, and by years of use and habit he had grown to regard his household as a sort of unchanging, pre-ordained Planetary System Mrs Page, the cook, the two housemaids, and the parlourmaid were all elderly and long-established servants, and so was the gardener and odd-man They revolved decorously and punctually about himself, the sun of the system, the resulting phenomena of shaving-water, breakfast, lunch, tea, dinner, dusting, fire-lighting, and lawn-mowing occurring with the exact and mechanical precision of the tides, the seasons, and the phases of the moon There was an occasional eclipse, in the form of a chimney-sweeping or spring cleaning, and the kitchenmaid and the boot-boy came and went and changed erratically, but Mr Charlwood saw little of them, and regarded them merely as irresponsible comets, with irregular orbits, striking in from outer space and away again, with no material disturbance to the solid planets about him So he went his unchanging way, sleeping, rising, shaving, eating, reading, writing, astronomising, all to the tick of the clock, and one day and the next were as like as two full moons Mrs Page, visibly and invisibly, inspired and regulated the system throughout, and the smallest change in the exact order of the daily round would have affected Mr Charlwood much as an astral catastrophe would have affected the tables in the Nautical Almanac For many years, however, Mrs Page saw that nothing so offensive as change of the smallest sort occurred in the Charlwood system

But at last things began to go wrong suddenly Mr Charlwood descended to the bathroom one morning, and there found the wrong

soap There was nothing to complain of in the soap itself—indeed, it was a cake of the same kind that had always occupied the soap-dish in his bedroom wash-stand—but it was not the sort of soap that ancient custom had sanctified for Mr Charlwood's bathroom use That was in a square cake, and this was oval That was white, and this was pink, moreover, the smell was altogether different Mr Charlwood did not discover the anomaly till he was in the bath, and it was too late to complain, and after he was dressed it slipped his memory till he beheld the same soap in the same place the next morning It was annoying and distressing, but he somehow forgot it again At any rate he forgot it till lunch, when the claret reminded him It was cold—it positively chilled the teeth, and if one thing had been more regular than another in Mr Charlwood's house, it was the temperature of Mr Charlwood's claret He reproved the parlour-maid, and sent it away, but his lunch was wholly ruined

Mrs Page presented herself after lunch, and apologised She had been in the habit of seeing to the proper warming of the claret, it seemed, but to-day something had distracted her attention, and she had forgotten it Mr Charlwood sat indignant, but far more amazed It was as though the Pole Star had "forgotten" its correct place at the tip of the Little Bear's tail Cold claret—it seemed an impossibility, yet here it was And at dinner that evening it came up—how do you think? Hot, sir, literally hot, parboiled! The whole thing was an outrage on the laws of nature But even worse was to follow When he demanded Mrs Page, he was told that she had just "stepped out" The chief planet of the system had just "stepped out" of its orbit—had gone swirling off into space in flat defiance of the law of gravitation! Mr Charlwood bounced angrily into his study, and there found—no matches on the mantelpiece!

When he could consider these abnormalities with some degree of calmness, it seemed clear enough that something must be wrong with Mrs Page, and yet it could scarcely be her health, or she would not have gone out He resolved to demand an explanation in the morning

In the morning, however, she forestalled him by asking for a few days' leave She got the question out—very anxiously and gulpily, it is true—before he had time to open his inquiries, and, having heard it, he was dumb for half a minute, losing all hold of his ideas Imagine asking Jupiter to give an indefinite holiday to his largest moon!

When he found his voice, it was a voice of scandalised protest

"Mrs Page!" he said, "Mrs Page! Really I don't understand this extraordinary state of things. What do you mean by it?"

Mrs Page's mouth screwed down at the corners, and her eyes—rather red and heavy, he noticed now—grew pleading and watery. "I—I don't like to ask you, sir," said Mrs Page, "and I've put it off as long as I could, but I must ask you to let me go now. I'll see the cook, and——"

"But what, Mrs Page—why—what is the reason of this extraordinary—this—in short, Mrs Page, what is your explanation?"

"Well, sir, I didn't want to mention it, not wishing to trouble you, as you didn't know, but it's my mother."

"Your mother, Mrs Page?"

"Yes, sir." Mrs Page, tearful of eye, spoke with an air of meek apology for having been born of woman.

Mr Charlwood's surprise was complete. Mrs Page was certainly as old as himself, and his mother was no more than a recollection of childhood. There was something difficult to believe—something vaguely ridiculous—about Mrs Page's tardy retention of a mother.

"Then, what is it, Mrs Page? Why must you go because of your—your mother?"

"She's an invalid, sir, and—got nobody to look after her for the present, and I—I—oh, I don't know what I shall do!" And here Mrs Page broke down wholly and dabbed her red eyes with a fistful of wet pocket-handkerchief.

Mr Charlwood regarded his housekeeper with blank astonishment. She was exhibiting phenomena altogether foreign to his experience of planets. He asked more questions, and so the tale came out disconnectedly in sobs and jerks.

Mrs Page's mother had been left a widow only a little earlier than Mrs Page herself. Of late years she had become bedridden with spine trouble, and, to the worse of that, was nearly blind. Mrs Page had taken lodgings for her, and a woman had been paid to give her attention, but now the small savings of mother and daughter had at length given out, and the attendant was gone, and it was Mrs Page's present care to move her mother to cheaper lodgings, if such could be found, and in some way to attempt the impossible in the way of providing attendance on her. This must be the work of a few days, and Mrs Page humbly and tearfully, but with more insistence than she had ever dared to use to her employer before, protested that she really must go.

So much Mr Charlwood gathered from Mrs Page's faltering apologetics, but she said nothing of the weeks of deepening apprehension which had preceded the crisis, while the last few sovereigns, feebly reinforced by the last month's wages, had been melting fast, nor of the sleepless, sore-eyed nights given to helpless scheming of hopeless expedients. And Mr Charlwood was not the man to figure them in his imagination, for, in truth, that was not a quality wherewith he was vastly endowed. So he replied with dignified asperity

"Have you considered, Mrs Page," he said, "what—ah—extreme difficulty and inconvenience, and, in fact, positive annoyance, your absence would cause to the—to me?"

Yes, it seemed that Mrs Page had considered this, and was very sorry. But she had made arrangements to mitigate the inconvenience as far as possible, and—in short, she really must go. Mr Charlwood's amazement increased, he began to realise that his housekeeper was insisting—was growing firm—dictatorial. This was disconcerting—even alarming. Mr Charlwood suddenly grew aware that a vast deal more of his habitual well-being than he could risk depended wholly on his housekeeper, he positively could not afford to offend her. What was to be done?

The sooner this nuisance was got rid of the better. He reflected that when a similar difficulty arose in a matter of astronomy—when one planet of a system was observed to be distracted from its proper orbit by the influence of some unknown object outside the system, every astronomer turned his telescope in the direction of the unknown object in the hope of seeing it. It was all he had to guide him, and time was precious. He pushed his chair back and rose.

"Very well, Mrs Page," he said. "Get your bonnet at once. I will come with you and see this mother of yours!"

Mrs Page's red eyes opened wide. Hers was the amazement now. She stammered the beginnings of protest and then was silent. Could it be that Mr Charlwood doubted her word?

"I will see this mother of yours, Mrs Page!" he repeated. Mrs Page left the room with something of a woebegone flounce.

At the foot of the hill, where the houses stood smaller and thicker, a street led out of the main road, and another street led out of that. The end of this street was in another, wherein, if you turned to the right, you proceeded to I don't know where, and if you turned to the left, you could get no farther, because the street ended in a blind wall At the end little house, next the blind wall, in a back room up the one flight of stairs, Mrs Page's old mother lay pallid and helpless and all but blind on a clean little bed on an iron bedstead with thin and staggering legs So Mr Charlwood and his housekeeper found her half an hour after their morning conversation Most things in the room were difficult to distinguish at first, for the blind was drawn, but the white of the bed was distinct enough, and on that another white—the old woman's face, hard and sharp and shocking, with eyes all but closed by lids that trembled unceasingly

"Is that you, Martha?" came a querulous voice from the bed "A nice time to leave me here like this, I must say, and not a soul to do a thing for me!"

Mrs Page bent and kissed the drawn face, quickly whispering something in which Mr Charlwood could distinguish nothing but his own name The twist of pain that abode ever on the grey face deepened at the words, and the old woman made what seemed a great effort to sit up, ending in a short groan

"And pray," came the sharp voice again, "pray, may I ask why Mr Charlwood is so good as to pay me this uninvited visit?"

Mrs Page stooped again and murmured some agonised entreaty, but the helpless woman in the bed went on

"I cannot pretend that the time is convenient," she said "And I hope it is not at your request, Martha Mr Charlwood is surely aware that the temporary circumstances which have induced you to accept a position in his household, and which have made it convenient for me to occupy these very inadequate lodgings, are not such as would warrant any attitude of patronage on his part"

Mrs Page left the bed-head and returned to Mr Charlwood by the door, pleading in whispers "Please go, sir," she begged "She doesn't know, she doesn't understand—I've never told her quite how things are, and she's been used to something different, pray forgive her, Mr Charlwood, and—and don't stay You see it's true I must do something, though I don't know what Please leave me with her"

Mr Charlwood found himself on the stairs, with some confused consciousness of a novel insignificance He had been ordered out of the room by his own housekeeper, and had meekly obeyed her His dignity being so far abused, it would suffer no more if he sat on the stairs to think it over, so he sat and tried But through all he was oppressed by the memory of that grey-white face, with the trembling eyelids, that lay in the little room behind him He had put himself in a false position, that was clear And it would never do to part with Mrs Page—that would mean a dislocation of the domestic system beyond the horror of dreams But what could be done? He was unaccustomed to difficulties of this sort Could any astronomical analogy help him? When the outer planet Uranus was observed to be disturbed in its orbit by something still beyond it, that something was straightway included in the community of the planets and given its proper place and name in the Solar System Perhaps there might be a hint in that And—really, he was oddly impressed by that white face with the near-closed eyes Furthermore, he must no longer submit to the dictation of his housekeeper, he must retrieve his dignity and reassert his authority As to that he was resolved

He rose straightway and knocked at the door of the bedroom The door opened a little way, and Mrs Page's face appeared

"Just come here, if you please, Mrs Page," said Mr Charlwood, with firm authority, "and shut the door behind you"

Mrs Page complied, fearful and pleading of eye as ever

"I cannot waste more time waiting here, Mrs Page"

"N-no, sir"

"Therefore you will be so good as take certain instructions before I go, instructions which I must insist on your carrying out without delaying longer here Now as to the second spare bedroom, next your own, I wish a fire to be lighted there instantly, to air the room"

"Yes, sir—but won't you please tell——"

"I'll tell nobody but you, Mrs Page, and I expect you to see that my orders are obeyed Next, now, I wish you to take a note, which I will write, to Dr Greig"

"Y-yes, sir"

"In pursuance of instructions conveyed in that note, Dr Greig will send a trained nurse up to the house, who will stay there, and whom I shall expect you to accommodate suitably Also he will send here an invalid carriage, with attendants, which you must meet, and see without fail that your mother is placed in it with every care You understand—with every care"

"My mother, sir? O Mr Charlwood, you—don't—don't mean——"

"I mean, Mrs Page, that you are not to have the leave you applied for, to attend to your mother I refuse it, utterly I require your attendance at my house, and in order that you shall have no excuse for leaving it, your mother is to occupy the room which I have requested you to have aired at once That is all, Mrs Page, except that I shall be glad of pen and ink, if I am to write the note to Dr Greig "

" O Mr Charlwood—Mr Charlwood, I shall pray for you night and day ! "

" I shall need it—I shall need it, Mrs Page, if my claret is to be frozen and boiled alternately, and the wrong soap put in the bath-room, while you are running about visiting your mother ! "

" And oh, sir, after what she said, too——"

" Said ? What she said ? She never spoke to me, Mrs Page, as you must know And as to anything she may have said to you, do you suppose I should listen, or should remember it if I heard it ? Really, Mrs Page—really, you—ah—now where is that pen and ink ? "

That day the Charlwood system was worse disturbed than ever, and every orbit was irregular No stellar system can endure the sudden introduction of two new planets and a frequent comet—Dr Greig was surprisingly like a comet—without some temporary disturbance of its arrangements So that Mr Charlwood found the observatory a welcome refuge from the turmoil, and went there early He went there early, looked up, and saw a marvel For there in the heavens stood and twinkled a new star—a star where no star had been before Truly indeed it was a new star—one of those stars that open out suddenly in the vastness above and there remain to puzzle the learned

If I were an astronomer like Mr Charlwood I would offer you some theory of these new stars , as it is, I can only tell you the facts of this, Mr Charlwood's one scientific discovery

Of course other astronomers saw the star too, that night, and carefully noted its exact position , but it was Mr Charlwood who got his letter into the newspapers first—he took a cab to all the offices and himself dropped a report at each—and so they called the star after him It was strictly called Charlwood with a number which I cannot tell you, being no astronomer, but generally it was Charlwood, simply , and it was Mr Charlwood's joy to know that he had not lived in vain

Mrs Page's mother died not very long after her removal, and the nurse went away And now I believe even Mr Charlwood himself has been dead some time , but his star twinkles steadily in the place where it first added its tiny light to the sparkling sky.

JOIE-DE-LOUP: THE STORY OF A CARAVAN

THE men came for Père Galillée almost as soon as the sun was up, and Joie-de-Loup, quaking upon a bed of straw, heard question and answer and all their angry argument. Others, too, came from neighbouring caravans and stood half-dressed about the father of the acrobats. La Souris was there, and Margot in a shawl of tinsel, and Pantalone in boots and breeches, and Lulu, so clever upon the tight-wire, and all together, in sacks and rags, and even in their gold and spangles, they implored pity for Père Galillée.

"What has he done, monsieur, that you treat him thus?"

"Is not the land free that any man may use it?"

"Twenty years, I remember, we have pitched a tent on this field and none ousted us. What new law drives poor people out?"

"He is here, Père Galillée, and all the world knows he is an honest man. What does the law want with him, monsieur?"

"To the devil with the justice which takes the bread out of an old man's mouth! I am old and he is young, sergeant. Take me, if you please."

But Detolda, who mimicked the bass at the opera when the cabaret permitted him to mimic any one at all, cried angrily

"I go to the President, monsieur! I appeal to the justice of my countryman!"

There were two sergents-de-ville by Père Galillée's caravan, and they laughed good-humouredly at the angry singer.

"Let the President know that you are coming and he will send you some soap, friend. You others go away while you can. We do not want caravans at Vincennes. We have enough wild beasts already."

They turned to Père Galillée and asked if he were ready. It had begun to snow, and the open fields of St Gervais were white and wet already in the morning sun. Joie-de-Loup, shivering with cold, could remember no parallel to this in all the six years he had followed Père Galillée and learned to call him father True, he was but ten years old, and "ten years old" is little given to deduction Joie-de-Loup, fearing that the men were about to take Père Galillée to some distant country, but more especially discerning in their silver lace and other insignia the badges of that "law" which the caravan named a terror, lay low in his bed of straw and covered his ears with the crisp blades It was better not to see, he said, he could remember a very distant day when night and a gentle hand were the end of all things, of joy and tears and trouble But that was long ago It was rare now for him to recall it, and the faces of the distant years were forgotten

The sergents-de-ville took Père Galillée to the Bureau of Police, and old Nanette went with him, lumping upon her crutches "We have starved together and slaved together, and now we will go to prison together," said she The grave courtesy of the gendarmes, their proffered assistance alike she despised "I am old and I am lame, but I can walk as fast as a sergent-de-ville, and more uprightly," said she, and with other sharp witticisms provoked the officers La Souris, however, wept bitterly, and Margot, in her shawl of tinsel, asked vainly what every one thought of Paris now It remained for Detolda, the bass, to console them, and this he did with the promise of a triumph at the opera and an interview with the President—all to be speedily accomplished after a visit to the dram-shop

Joie-de-Loup crept out of his hiding-place when a neighbouring clock was striking eleven, and, according to his habit, he began to turn somersaults and to walk to and fro upon his hands, practising those exercises which won him bread from the shabby circus He was very hungry, but some one, he said, would give him breakfast presently The waste ground beyond the Boulevard Davoust, where the caravans were halted, looked almost picturesque in its mantle of crisp snow and its border of whitened trees Paris herself, that city which had been the jugglers' Mecca for so many weeks of promise, lay beyond the barrier, a medley of spires and roofs and towering buildings and looming snow-grey sky Hither, from Boissy, had Père Galillée driven last night to reap the Christmas harvest at the feasting city's gate "We shall fill our pockets there, my children," said he, "and then for the hills and the sunshine Let each one do his best that Paris may applaud him It is cold here—my own Bayonne is far away, but we shall return as the swallow to the South, we shall return and our hearts will be light "

The jugglers believed him, and their hearts were light as he bade them to be. Even Pantalone, mimic most melancholy, was heard to say that they buried you for nothing if you died of starvation in Paris. La Souris furbished up her spangles and talked sagely of rich Americans and other guileless travellers. Detolda sang all day in a strident voice which passion and absinthe reduced at eventide to the echo of a whisper. It remained for Joie-de-Loup to stand apart and ask what this Paris might mean to him, this city of all the fables, this goal of a jongleur's life. More bread, perhaps, and yet more work? A bed to sleep in sometimes, if it were but a bed of rags. And other children to see, and houses to peep into, and shops to stand before—and, it might be, a little kindness if the booth were filled. Ah! these dreams, that a sergent-de-ville should destroy them so utterly with a harsh word and a sheet of paper! Père Galilée was in prison next morning, and the troupe was scattered as chaff to the wind.

The child was not sure of it at first when he quitted his bed and went from caravan to caravan, a beggar of bread and the tidings. Detolda also had gone away—to the tavern as usual—and La Souris's tears were dried up. Indeed, that bewitching servetta was determined already to offer her services to the Café de la Gloire in the Rue de Belleville, and began to trim a hat for that very purpose. A few of the clowns and the stable-boys loitered about the smaller caravans, but indolently, as those who lacked a master. The half-starved horses, of whom none thought, came readily to Joie-de-Loup's call and rubbed their noses in his cold hand. They seemed to say, "We understand, we, too, are forgotten." Everywhere the débâcle was supreme, so that even the great tent remained unpacked and old Galilée's tiger had been denied the sunlight.

Joie-de-Loup went from group to group asking such questions as a child will and receiving such answers as impatience dictates. La Souris, anxious to finish a hat which would captivate the impresario of the neighbouring café, sent him about his business sharply, and all that the spangled angel condescended to say left him but little wiser in the end. "I don't know and I don't care!" exclaimed the bewitching one peevishly, "he may come to-day and he may come to-morrow, and he may never come at all, and whether he comes or stays it's all the same to me. I'm sick of your Père Galilée and your

'houp-la' and all the rest of it with two dozen in the front benches, and I'm going to be a lady. Now, you run off about your business and don't try my temper—for the good God knows what I won't do when I'm provoked."

Joie-de-Loup ran off, for La Souris had a heavy hand, and, finding old Pantalone with a glass of beer and a roll of bread, he asked where Mother Nanette had gone and what kept the father of the circus. To which the melancholy pantaloon replied that the law was as uncertain as life itself, and that all things and all men must ultimately perish—"wherefore," he asked, "why laugh when the end is tears!" To which he added the clear explanation that time would tell, and that nothing was real, as witness Detolda, who declared himself in his ballad to be a troubadour, while in reality he was nothing but a wine-vat. "You say you are hungry, my child—very well, think that you have eaten, and when forty, fifty years have passed you will not care whether you starved or ate to-day. I know, and I am an old man. The world kicks me, but the stage teaches me where to put the pads on."

He ate the last crust with the words and drained the bottle to the dregs. Joie-de-Loup, watching him with hungry eyes, and appraising no philosophy except that of hot coffee and good bread, went on to the others and began to speak again of Père Galillée and of old Mother Nanette, who had forgotten his breakfast. The men heard him sympathetically, but their own wallets were empty and they did not know when they would eat again. "Go and turn somersaults for the people of Paris, and you will get sous," they said, "you are clever, Joie-de-Loup, and may feed us all. Why do you idle about here when we are hungry?"

The more brutal among them drove him out with straps, and he, understanding little of it all except that he was hungry and that old Nanette had forgotten him, went out toward the barrier and entered the great city, there to throw a childish glove to fortune. It was mid-day by this time, upon the eve of Christmas, and the barrier was blocked by the carts of those who carried their goods to the greater markets. Such a press of people Joie-de-Loup had never seen before. The heaped-up vegetables, the sacks of flour, the poultry, the eggs upon the carts, would feed all the peoples of the earth, he thought. And he who was so small, who needed so little, went starving in the midst of such a harvest. Joie-de-Loup could not make anything of that Hard as the life of the show had been, it always gave him bread But these passers-by, they did not seem to know that he lived

He pushed his way into the throng and began to cry as he had been taught, " I am Joie-de-Loup, the friend of Columbine," and after that he did the tricks he had been taught, turning somersaults upon his hands or walking upon them, or bending his body in strange contortions But none heeded him, none threw a sou, while many cursed him, and a burly farmer sent him headlong with a kick

Joie-de-Loup began to think that Père Galillée was right after all when he had said, " It is I who give you bread , without me you are sheep for the shearing, children of the barns, starvelings ! "

Had Père Galillée been here, all would be well, he imagined The people listened to him and threw sous , but Joie-de-Loup they would not listen to , and they drove him out with blows, while a sergent-de-ville, who crossed the road with cane uplifted, sent the lad flying at all the speed of his little legs towards the Place de la République and the heart of Paris

He was very hungry , but the chase warmed him, and the sights he saw contributed to a child's wonder and delight For nearly six years now he had been the servant of Galillée and the circus Hours of freedom he had not known nor days of liberty It is true that the eve of Christmas always found the caravans at the gate of Paris , but hitherto the little acrobat had been left behind at Neuilly or Boissy St Leger, or in some neighbouring hamlet His triumphs were reserved for the village fêtes in the smaller towns, or the courtyards of the wayside hostelrys " Paris is for the great artists," old Père Galillée had said , " some day, my child, you shall have Paris at your feet , but not yet—not yet " If La Souris and Margot and the melancholy Pantalone laughed aside when these lofty sentiments were uttered, Joie-de-Loup understood none of them For him the father of the troupe was lord and king, infallible, all-wise There had been, he knew, years of his life which Père Galillée had not guided He wondered sometimes how he found bread in those days , nor could memory help him to understand how he managed to live until he fell in with the caravan Indeed, his mind played strange tricks with him, so that there were epochs in his life which he remembered very clearly and others which were entirely forgotten And he always worked backward in his recollections from these great days, when his cleverness won so much applause, to less glorious hours, when he was little more than the scullion of the troupe, the back for every rod, the ear for every oath. From such lesser hours, still working backward, he could recall one unforgotten night, which he thought must surely have been the first in all his life. For in this picture of the past, his brain showed him a dark road and a wood behind it, and a fire whose ebbing light shone red amid the trees. He heard again the laughter of women in the wood, the deep voices of men, the baying of a watch-dog. He stood at the fireside, and oddly-dressed figures came out of ghostly caravans, while a young girl stooped to kiss his forehead. And then oblivion. The mind carried him on that backward path no farther. All else was blurred in the mists of a past greatly remote. If there were nights when he beheld another figure in his sleep, he could neither focus nor name it. And yet its presence haunted him, and he welcomed it, though whence it came he knew not, and memory would not tell. Often in the years of the nomad's life the striving mind would ask of those about him if a woman had brought him to the wood, but they answered that he had come alone, a waif gathered by the roadside. And Père Galillée would tell no more. He discouraged such talk.

Joie-de-Loup asked these questions again while his fleeting steps carried him yet farther into the enveloping city. The noisy waggons, the cabs driven headlong, the soldiers at their drill, the shops dressed for the fête, made for him a wonder-picture surpassing all imagination. Here were countless people and they were richer than Père Galillée. That was a fact with which his mind could not grapple. If these wealthy folk coming out of the splendid houses could set up shops and drive such carriages, surely they could spare a little loaf for Joie-de-Loup. Very hungry by this time, and craving for food, he stood before a baker's shop and feasted his eyes upon the well-browned bread. With such a loaf as that one at which he pointed a child's finger, with such a loaf and a draught of milk—it might be hot milk, Joie-de-Loup said—he would ask for nothing more until evening came and Mother Nanette returned to prepare his supper. Ah, that was the puzzle of it, that Madame Nanette should have forgotten Joie-de-Loup! Sometimes in his walk he asked himself if he would ever see any of the circus people again. It began to be plain to him, he knew not by what argument of circumstance, that another link in the chain of his life had snapped that morning. He would not have admitted so much to any one, for a miracle alone, he thought, could separate him from Père Galillée. But as he followed the busy boulevard—on, he cared not whither—the old pages were being blotted out one by one, the old habits forgotten so quickly, that at last in a great square, unlike anything the pilgrimage had shown him, Joie-de-Loup ceased to run, and knew that once in his life, at least, he had stood on that very spot before

It was the Place de la République, in the busy hour of the day, and it reflected all the Christmas activity that Paris can show. There were many soldiers marching in and out of the great barracks at the corner of the Rue de la Douane, while groups of impatient pedestrians found shelter beneath the porticos of shops and theatres. Blinding flakes were whirled by the wintry blast, but Joie-de-Loup stood unconscious of them. For him the picture was entrancing beyond any in his memory. Just to behold the whirling life, to hear the trumpets, to see the cabmen crack their whips—surely any one might come to Paris for that alone. And the arc-lamps glowing in the looming mists, the hurrying throngs, the shops, the houses! Joie-de-Loup could have seen nothing like it, and yet, standing at the cross-roads in a maze of doubt and wonder, he knew that there had been a day far back in the years when that very square typified a city for him, and he had clung to an outstretched hand which led him hither and thither among the carriages and the people. The truth affrighted him. He awoke as from a spell, and darting beneath the horses' heads, now running, now stooping, now saying that surely he would never see Père Gahllée again, he reached the Rue de Turbigo and left that whirlpool of life behind him.

The memory of children is unstable and capricious, it takes and leaves apparently at hazard, safeguarding this scene to reject that, giving import to things of no importance, allowing to be forgotten, throwing back into oblivion, the scenes that the years would gladly recall. Joie-de-Loup knew that he had crossed the Place de la République many times in a remote life. He knew that this very Rue de Turbigo, down which he went with timid steps, had played some part in a forgotten day, and yet he could add nothing to the bare recognition. All that he did henceforth was done upon an impulse. The shops, the cafés, the distant view of an open space, and a church which dominated it, hurried him onward as to some sure haven. Knowing little of the wonder which his mind wrought, he began to see at length that impulse carried him, not to any shop or house, but to the church itself, whose arches his brain was rebuilding, the figures in whose windows he thought that he could fill in No longer irresolute, directed as by an unseen hand, Joie-de-Loup crossed the busy street and entered the church of St Eustache

It was the eve of Christmas, and many had gathered for the afternoon service in that edifice which fashion and the opéra bouffe alike had learned to patronise Here, cheek-by-jowl with chorus-girls, were great dames from the west—the Faubourg St Germain rubbing shoulders with the Boulevard St Martin, and both the victims of the clacking cocher's tongue without Women whose sables had cost eight hundred pounds condescended to kneel side by side with the work-girls whose clothes were far from being worth eight hundred sous When Joie-de-Loup entered the church the high altar was ablaze with lights, and all the pomp and splendour of a gorgeous ritual helped him to awe Golden-robed priests moved majestically in that splendid sanctuary Clouds of sweet-smelling incense floated upward to the angels above the choir He heard enthralling music—those voices which yesterday had won applause from the galleries of the theatre—he beheld the twinkling lamps, the gated chapels, the pictured mysteries, the kneeling worshippers And this scene he knew, this, beyond all, memory gave back to him How often had he come to this very place in the years of the forgotten life, how often had he come here before fate drove him out to the woods and the reddening fire and the nomad's caravan It might even be that he had gone from this very door straight to Mother Nanette and the silver spangles And yet he did not think so The figure of the dream intervened between him and the truth, he knew not how

He had entered the church at a venture, awed by a pompous beadle who waved a wand as though he were about to do a conjuring trick While obsequious officials showed the great dames to their chairs, none came forward to welcome Joie-de-Loup or to offer him their sanctimonious hospitality Perchance, had he been less sure of his goal, the portly beadle would have made a capture and Joie-de-Loup been sent to the snows again But instinct led him now with unyielding hand Regardless of the whispered reproof, the quick steps behind him, the turning heads, he halted not in nave or aisle, but, passing down the whole length of the church, he entered that chapel by the choir to which the figure beckoned him, and kneeling there he uttered a name which had not passed his lips for six long years.

"Susanne!" he cried, so loudly that many turned to stare at him, "where is Susanne?"

A woman rose at the words and stood for a little while holding to the rail of the chair before her. Beadles, consulting in whispers at the chapel gate, advanced together to lead Joie-de-Loup away, but the woman was before them, and without a cry or a word she thrust her hand into that of the child and hurried from the church. Joie-de-Loup knew not why he went with her, or how it was that she wished to take him from the warmth and the light, but impulse said, "Go," and his feet did not refuse him. In the street, where the snow fell and the carriages were waiting and the great throngs hurried on, the woman stooped to cover the child with her furs and to draw him closer to her.

"René!" she cried at last. "Oh, my God! it is René!"

He did not answer her, but waited as one awakened from a trance of sleep while her footman called the carriage and set him upon the soft cushions and wrapped warm rugs about him. "Ten years old" had no brains for this, nor could he reason with it. All that was happening to him, the journey, the soft words, the warmth, the tenderness, all these things were the gift of the angels floating on the clouds of incense in the church he had left. And yet the figure was real. He had seen it so often, had asked for it so many days. And now it was there beside him, he could see the tears in the woman's eyes, could feel her soft hand in his own—her lips pressed to his as though never would they release them. She ceased not to call him "René, my child, my darling!"

Joie-de-Loup, silent for many minutes, turned to her at last and answered—"Mother!" And in that word the missing years were given back to him, and he knew that he lived in the days before the wood

. . . . .

Old Père Gallée, his hat full of crowns, made a great feast that night, and ministered generously to the children who had mourned him.

"Let us eat and drink," said he, "for a great artist is given back to the world."

SIR ARTHUR QUILLER-COUCH ("Q")

B 1868

THE ROLL-CALL OF THE REEF

"YES, sir," said my host the quarryman, reaching down the relics from their hook in the wall over the chimney-piece, "they've hung here all my time, and most of my father's. The women won't touch 'em, they're afraid of the story. So here they'll dangle, and gather dust and smoke, till another tenant comes and tosses 'em out o' doors for rubbish. Whew! 'tis coarse weather."

He went to the door, opened it, and stood studying the gale that beat upon his cottage front, straight from the Manacle Reef. The rain drove past him into the kitchen, aslant like threads of gold silk in the shine of the wreck-wood fire. Meanwhile, by the same fire-light, I examined the relics on my knee. The metal of each was tarnished out of knowledge. But the trumpet was evidently an old cavalry trumpet, and the threads of its parti-coloured sling, though frayed and dusty, still hung together. Around the side-drum, beneath its cracked brown varnish, I could hardly trace a royal coat-of-arms and a legend running—Per Mare per Terram—the motto of the Marines. Its parchment, though coloured and scented with wood-smoke, was limp and mildewed, and I began to tighten up the straps—under which the drum-sticks had been loosely thrust—with the idle purpose of trying if some music might be got out of the old drum yet.

But as I turned it on my knee, I found the drum attached to the trumpet-sling by a curious barrel-shaped padlock, and paused to examine this. The body of the lock was composed of half-a-dozen brass rings, set accurately edge to edge, and, rubbing the brass with my thumb, I saw that each of the six had a series of letters engraved around it.

I knew the trick of it, I thought. Here was one of those word padlocks, once so common, only to be opened by getting the rings to spell a certain word, which the dealer confides to you.

My host shut and barred the door, and came back to the hearth

" 'Twas just such a wind—east by south—that brought in what you've got between your hands Back in the year 'nine, it was, my father has told me the tale a score o' times You're twisting round the rings, I see But you'll never guess the word Parson Kendall, he made the word, and locked down a couple o' ghosts in their graves with it, and when his time came, he went to his own grave and took the word with him "

" Whose ghosts, Matthew ? "

" You want the story, I see, sir My father could tell it better than I can He was a young man in the year 'nine, unmarried at the time, and living in this very cottage, just as I be That's how he came to get mixed up with the tale "

He took a chair, lit a short pipe, and went on, with his eyes fixed on the dancing violet flames

" Yes, he'd ha' been about thirty years old in January of the year 'nine The storm got up in the night o' the twenty-first o' that month My father was dressed and out long before daylight, he never was one to 'bide in bed, let be that the gale by this time was pretty near lifting the thatch over his head Besides which, he'd fenced a small 'taty-patch that winter, down by Lowland Point, and he wanted to see if it stood the night's work He took the path across Gunner's Meadow—where they buried most of the bodies afterwards The wind was right in his teeth at the time, and once on the way (he's told me this often) a great strip of oreweed came flying through the darkness and fetched him a slap on the cheek like a cold hand But he made shift pretty well till he got to Lowland, and then had to drop upon hands and knees and crawl, digging his fingers every now and then into the shingle to hold on, for he declared to me that the stones, some of them as big as a man's head, kept rolling and driving past till it seemed the whole foreshore was moving westward under him The fence was gone, of course, not a stick left to show where it stood, so that, when first he came to the place, he thought he must have missed his bearings My father, sir, was a very religious man, and if he reckoned the end of the world was at hand—there in the great wind and night, among the moving stones—you may believe he was certain of it when he heard a gun fired, and, with the same, saw a flame shoot up out of the darkness to windward, making a sudden fierce light in all the place about All he could find to think or say was, ' The Second Coming—The Second Coming ! The Bridegroom cometh, and the wicked He will toss like a ball into a large country ! ' and being already upon his knees, he just bowed his head and 'bided, saying this over and over

" But by'm-by, between two squalls, he made bold to lift his head and look, and then by the light—a bluish colour 'twas—he saw all the coast clear away to Manacle Point, and off the Manacles, in the thick of the weather, a sloop-of-war with top-gallants housed driving stern foremost towards the reef. It was she, of course, that was burning the flare. My father could see the white streak and the ports of her quite plain as she rose to it, a little outside the breakers, and he guessed easy enough that her captain had just managed to wear ship, and was trying to force her nose to the sea with the help of her small bower anchor and the scrap or two of canvas that hadn't yet been blown out of her. But while he looked, she fell off, giving her broad-side to it foot by foot, and drifting back on the breakers around Carn dû and the Varses. The rocks lie so thick thereabouts, that 'twas a toss up which she struck first, at any rate, my father couldn't tell at the time, for just then the flare died down and went out

" Well, sir, he turned then in the dark and started back for Coverack to cry the dismal tidings—though well knowing ship and crew to be past any hope, and as he turned, the wind lifted him and tossed him forward 'like a ball,' as he'd been saying, and homeward along the foreshore. As you know, 'tis ugly work, even by daylight, picking your way among the stones there, and my father was prettily knocked about at first in the dark. But by this 'twas nearer seven than six o'clock, and the day spreading. By the time he reached North Corner, a man could see to read print, hows'ever he looked neither out to sea nor towards Coverack, but headed straight for the first cottage—the same that stands above North Corner to-day. A man named Billy Ede lived there then, and when my father burst into the kitchen bawling, 'Wreck ! wreck !' he saw Billy Ede's wife, Ann, standing there in her clogs, with a shawl thrown over her head, and her clothes wringing wet

" 'Save the chap !' says Billy Ede's wife, Ann. 'What d'ee mean by crying stale fish at that rate ?'

" 'But 'tis a wreck, I tell 'ee. I've a-zeed 'n !'

" 'Why, so 'tis,' says she, 'and I've a-zeed 'n too, and so has every one with an eye in his head.'

“ And with that she pointed straight over my father’s shoulder, and he turned , and there, close under Dolor Point, at the end of Coverack town, he saw another wreck washing, and the point black with people, like emmets, running to and fro in the morning light. While he stood staring at her, he heard a trumpet sounded on board, the notes coming in little jerks, like a bird rising against the wind , but faintly, of course, because of the distance and the gale blowing—though this had dropped a little “ ‘ She’s a transport,’ said Billy Ede’s wife, Ann, ‘ and full of horse soldiers, fine long men. When she struck they must ha’ pitched the hosses over first to lighten the ship, for a score of dead hosses had washed in afore I left, half an hour back. An’ three or four soldiers too—fine long corpses in white breeches and jackets of blue and gold. I held the lantern to one. Such a straight young man.’

“ My father asked her about the trumpeting

“ ‘ That’s the queerest bit of all. She was burnin’ a light when me an’ my man joined the crowd down there. All her masts had gone , whether they carried away, or were cut away to ease her, I don’t rightly know. Anyway, there she lay ’pon the rocks with her decks bare. Her keelson was broke under her and her bottom sagged and stove, and she had just settled down like a sitting hen—just the leastest list to starboard , but a man could stand there easy. They had rigged up ropes across her, from bulwark to bulwark, an’ beside these the men were mustered, holding on like grim death whenever the sea made a clean breach over them, an’ standing up like heroes as soon as it passed. The captain an’ the officers were clinging to the rail of the quarter-deck, all in their golden uniforms, waiting for the end as if ’twas King George they expected. There was no way to help, for she lay right beyond cast of line, though our folk tried it fifty times. And beside them clung a trumpeter, a whacking big man, an’ between the heavy seas he would lift his trumpet with one hand, and blow a call , and every time he blew, the men gave a cheer. There (she says)—hark ’ee now—there he goes agen ! But you won’t hear no cheering any more, for few are left to cheer, and their voices weak. Bitter cold the wind is, and I reckon it numbs their grip o’ the ropes , for they were dropping off fast with every sea when my man sent me home to get his breakfast. Another wreck, you say ? Well, there’s no hope for the tender dears, if ’tis the Manacles. You’d better run down and help yonder , though ’tis little help any man can give Not one came in alive while I was there The tide's flowing, an' she won't hold together another hour, they say'

" Well, sure enough, the end was coming fast when my father got down to the point Six men had been cast up alive, or just breathing—a seaman and five troopers The seaman was the only one that had breath to speak , and while they were carrying him into the town, the word went round that the ship's name was the Despatch, transport, homeward bound from Corunna, with a detachment of the 7th Hussars, that had been fighting out there with Sir John Moore The seas had rolled her farther over by this time, and given her decks a pretty sharp slope , but a dozen men still held on, seven by the ropes near the ship's waist, a couple near the break of the poop, and three on the quarter-deck Of these three my father made out one to be the skipper , close by him clung an officer in full regimentals—his name, they heard after, was Captain Duncanfield , and last came the tall trumpeter , and if you'll believe me, the fellow was making shift there, at the very last, to blow ' God save the King ' What's more, he got to ' Send us victorious ' before an extra big sea came bursting across and washed them off the deck—every man but one of the pair beneath the poop—and he dropped his hold before the next wave , being stunned, I reckon The others went out of sight at once , but the trumpeter—being, as I said, a powerful man as well as a tough swimmer—rose like a duck, rode out a couple of breakers, and came in on the crest of the third The folks looked to see him broke like an egg at their very feet , but when the smother cleared, there he was, lying face downward on a ledge below them , and one of the men that happened to have a rope round him—I forget the fellow's name, if I ever heard it—jumped down and grabbed him by the ankle as he began to slip back Before the next big sea, the pair were hauled high enough to be out of harm, and another heave brought them up to grass Quick work, but master trumpeter wasn't quite dead , nothing worse than a cracked head and three staved ribs In twenty minutes or so they had him in bed, with the doctor to tend him

" Now was the time—nothing being left alive upon the transport—for my father to tell of the sloop he'd seen driving upon the Manacles And when he got a hearing, though the most were set upon salvage, and believed a wreck in the hand, so to say, to be worth half-a-dozen they couldn't see, a good few volunteered to start off with him and have a look They crossed Lowland Point, no ship to be seen on the Manacles, nor anywhere upon the sea One or two was for calling my father a liar 'Wait till we come to Dean Point,' said he Sure enough on the far side of Dean Point they found the sloop's main-mast washing about with half-a-dozen men lashed to it, men in red jackets, every mother's son drowned and staring, and a little farther on, just under the Dean, three or four bodies cast up on the shore, one of them a small drummer-boy, side-drum and all, and, near by, part of a ship's gig, with H M S Primrose cut on the sternboard From this point on, the shore was littered thick with wreckage and dead bodies—the most of them Marines in uniform, and in Godrevy Cove, in particular, a heap of furniture from the captain's cabin, and amongst it a water-tight box, not much damaged, and full of papers, by which, when it came to be examined next day, the wreck was easily made out to be the Primrose, of eighteen guns, outward bound from Portsmouth, with a fleet of transports for the Spanish War, thirty sail, I've heard, but I've never heard what became of them Being handled by merchant skippers, no doubt they rode out the gale, and reached the Tagus safe and sound Not but what the captain of the Primrose (Mein was his name) did quite right to try and club-haul his vessel when he found himself under the land, only he never ought to have got there, if he took proper soundings But it's easy talking

"The Primrose, sir, was a handsome vessel—for her size, one of the handsomest in the King's service—and newly fitted out at Plymouth Dock So the boys had brave pickings from her in the way of brass-work, ship's instruments, and the like, let alone some barrels of stores not much spoiled They loaded themselves with as much as they could carry, and started for home, meaning to make a second journey before the preventive men got wind of their doings, and came to spoil the fun But as my father was passing back under the Dean, he happened to take a look over his shoulder at the bodies there 'Hullo!' says he, and dropped his gear, 'I do believe there's a leg moving!' and running fore, he stooped over the small drummer-boy that I told you about The poor little chap was lying there, with his face a mass of bruises, and his eyes closed—but he had shifted one leg an inch or two, and was still breathing So my father pulled out a knife, and cut him free from his drum—that was lashed on to him with a double turn of Manilla rope—and took him up and carried him along here, to this very room that we're sitting in He lost a good deal by this, for when he went back to fetch the bundle he'd dropped, the preventive men had got hold of it, and were thick as thieves along the foreshore, so that 'twas only by paying one or two to look the other way that he picked up anything worth carrying off—which you'll allow to be hard, seeing that he was the first man to give news of the wreck

"Well, the inquiry was held, of course, and my father gave evidence, and for the rest they had to trust to the sloop's papers, for not a soul was saved besides the drummer-boy, and he was raving in a fever, brought on by the cold and the fright. And the seaman and the five troopers gave evidence about the loss of the Despatch. The tall trumpeter, too, whose ribs were healing, came forward and kissed the Book, but somehow his head had been hurt in coming ashore, and he talked foolish-like, and 'twas easy seen he would never be a proper man again. The others were taken up to Plymouth, and so went their ways, but the trumpeter stayed on in Coverack, and King George, finding he was fit for nothing, sent him down a trifle of a pension after a while—enough to keep him in board and lodging, with a bit of tobacco over

"Now the first time that this man—William Tallifer he called himself—met with the drummer-boy, was about a fortnight after the little chap had bettered enough to be allowed a short walk out of doors, which he took, if you please, in full regimentals. There never was a soldier so proud of his dress. His own suit had shrunk a brave bit with the salt water, but into ordinary frock an' corduroys he declared he would not get, not if he had to go naked the rest of his life, so my father—being a good-natured man, and handy with the needle—turned to and repaired damages with a piece or two of scarlet cloth cut from the jacket of one of the drowned Marines. Well, the poor little chap chanced to be standing, in this rig-out, down by the gate of Gunner's Meadow, where they had buried two score and over of his comrades. The morning was a fine one, early in March month, and along came the cracked trumpeter, likewise taking a stroll

"'Hullo!' says he, 'good mornin'! And what might you be doin' here?'

"'I was a-wishin',' says the boy, 'I had a pair o' drum-sticks. Our lads were buried yonder without so much as a drum tapped or a musket fired, and that's not Christian burial for British soldiers.'

Fitch & Try

Mr. P. H. - Church
—

“ ‘ Phut ! ’ says the trumpeter, and spat on the ground , ‘ a parcel of Marines ! ’

“ The boy eyed him a second or so, and answered up ‘ If I’d a tab of turf handy, I’d bung it at your mouth, you greasy cavalryman, and learn you to speak respectful of your betters The Marines are the handiest body o’ men in the service ’

“ The trumpeter looked down on him from the height of six foot two, and asked ‘ Did they die well ? ’

“ ‘ They died very well There was a lot of running to and fro at first, and some of the men began to cry, and a few to strip off their clothes But when the ship fell off for the last time, Captain Mein turned and said something to Major Griffiths, the commanding officer on board, and the Major called out to me to beat to quarters It might have been for a wedding, he sang it out so cheerful We’d had word already that ‘twas to be parade order , and the men fell in as trim and decent as if they were going to church One or two even tried to shave at the last moment The Major wore his medals One of the seamen, seeing I had work to keep the drum steady—the sling being a bit loose for me, and the wind what you remember—lashed it tight with a piece of rope , and that saved my life afterwards, a drum being as good as a cork until it’s stove I kept beating away until every man was on deck , and then the Major formed them up and told them to die like British soldiers, and the chaplain read a prayer or two—the boys standin’ all the while like rocks, each man’s courage keeping up the others’ The chaplain was in the middle of a prayer when she struck In ten minutes she was gone That was how they died, cavalryman ’

“ ‘ And that was very well done, drummer of the Marines What’s your name ? ’

“ ‘ John Christian ’

“ ‘ Mine’s William George Tallifer, trumpeter of the 7th Light Dragoons—the Queen’s Own I played “ God save the King ” while our men were drowning Captain Duncanfield told me to sound a call or two, to put them in heart , but that matter of “ God save the King ” was a notion of my own I won’t say anything to hurt the feelings of a Marine, even if he’s not much over five foot tall , but the Queen’s Own Hussars is a tearin’ fine regiment As between horse and foot, ‘tis a question o’ which gets the chance All the way from Sahagun to Corunna ‘twas we that took and gave the knocks—at Mayorga and Rueda, and Bennyventy' (The reason, sir, I can speak the names so pat, is that my father learnt 'em by heart afterwards from the trumpeter, who was always talking about Mayorga and Rueda and Bennyventy) 'We made the rear-guard, under General Paget, and drove the Frnch every time, and all the infantry did was to sit about in wine-shops till we whipped 'em out, an' steal an' straggle an' play the tomfool in general And when it came to a stand-up fight at Corunna, 'twas the horse, or the best part of it, that had to stay sea-sick aboard the transports, an' watch the infantry in the thick o' the caper Very well they behaved too, 'specially the 4th Regiment, an' the 42nd Highlanders, an' the Dirty Half-Hundred Oh, ay, they're decent regiments, all three But the Queen's Own Hussars is a tearin' fine regiment So you played on your drum when the ship was goin' down? Drummer John Christian, I'll have to get you a new pair o' drum-sticks for that'

"Well, sir, it appears that the very next day the trumpeter marched into Helston, and got a carpenter there to turn him a pair of box-wood drumsticks for the boy And this was the beginning of one of the most curious friendships you ever heard tell of Nothing delighted the pair more than to borrow a boat off my father and pull out to the rocks where the Primrose and the Despatch had struck and sunk, and on still days 'twas pretty to hear them out there off the Manacles, the drummer playing his tattoo—for they always took their music with them—and the trumpeter practising calls, and making his trumpet speak like an angel But if the weather turned roughish, they'd be walking together and talking, leastwise, the youngster listened while the other discoursed about Sir John's campaign in Spain and Portugal, telling how each little skirmish befell, and of Sir John himself, and General Baird, and General Paget, and Colonel Vivian, his own commanding officer, and what kind of men they were, and of the last bloody stand-up at Corunna, and so forth, as if neither could have enough

"But all this had to come to an end in the late summer, for the boy, John Christian, being now well and strong again, must go up to Plymouth to report himself 'Twas his own wish (for I believe King George had forgotten all about him), but his friend wouldn't hold him back As for the trumpeter, my father had made an arrangement to take him on as lodger as soon as the boy left, and on the morning fixed for the start, he was up at the door here by five o'clock, with his trumpet slung by his side, and all the rest of his belongings in a small valise. A Monday morning it was, and after breakfast he had fixed to walk with the boy some way on the road towards Helston, where the coach started. My father left them at breakfast together, and went out to meat the pig, and do a few odd morning jobs of that sort. When he came back, the boy was still at table, and the trumpeter standing here by the chimney-place with the drum and trumpet in his hands, hitched together just as they be at this moment.

“ ‘ Look at this,’ he says to my father, showing him the lock, ‘ I picked it up off a starving brass-worker in Lisbon, and it is not one of your common locks that one word of six letters will open at any time. There’s janus in this lock, for you’ve only to make the rings spell any six-letter word you please and snap down the lock upon that, and never a soul can open it—not the maker, even—until somebody comes along that knows the word you snapped it on. Now, Johnny here’s goin’, and he leaves his drum behind him, for though he can make pretty music on it, the parchment sags in wet weather, by reason of the sea-water getting at it, an’ if he carries it to Plymouth, they’ll only condemn it and give him another. And, as for me, I shan’t have the heart to put lip to the trumpet any more when Johnny’s gone. So we’ve chosen a word together, and locked ‘em together upon that, and, by your leave, I’ll hang ‘em here together on the hook over your fireplace. Maybe Johnny’ll come back, maybe not. Maybe, if he comes, I’ll be dead an’ gone, an’ he’ll take ‘em apart an’ try their music for old sake’s sake. But if he never comes, nobody can separate ‘em, for nobody beside knows the word. And if you marry and have sons, you can tell ‘em that here are tied together the souls of Johnny Christian, drummer of the Marines, and William George Tallifer, once trumpeter of the Queen’s Own Hussars. Amen.’ ”

“ With that he hung the two instruments ‘pon the hook there, and the boy stood up and thanked my father and shook hands, and the pair went forth of the door, towards Helston.

“ Somewhere on the road they took leave of one another; but nobody saw the parting, nor heard what was said between them. About three in the afternoon the trumpeter came walking back over the hill, and by the time my father came home from the fishing the cottage was tidied up, and the tea ready, and the whole place shining like a new pin. From that time for five years he lodged here with my father, looking after the house and tilling the garden. And all the while he was steadily failing, the hurt in his head spreading, in a manner, to his limbs. My father watched the feebleness growing on him, but said nothing. And from first to last neither spake a word about the drummer, John Christian, nor did any letter reach them, nor word of his doings.

"The rest of the tale you'm free to believe, sir, or not, as you please. It stands upon my father's words, and he always declared he was ready to kiss the Book upon it, before judge and jury. He said, too, that he never had the wit to make up such a yarn; and he defied any one to explain about the lock, in particular, by any other tale. But you shall judge for yourself.

"My father said that about three o'clock in the morning, April fourteenth, of the year 'fourteen, he and William Tallifer were sitting here, just as you and I, sir, are sitting now. My father had put on his clothes a few minutes before, and was mending his speller by the light of the horn lantern, meaning to set off before daylight to haul the trammel. The trumpeter hadn't been to bed at all. Towards the last he mostly spent his nights (and his days too) dozing in the elbow-chair where you sit at this minute. He was dozing then (my father said) with his chin dropped forward on his chest, when a knock sounded upon the door, and the door opened, and in walked an upright young man in scarlet regimentals.

"He had grown a brave bit, and his face was the colour of wood-ashes, but it was the drummer John Christian. Only his uniform was different from the one he used to wear, and the figures "38" shone in brass upon his collar.

"The drummer walked past my father as if he never saw him, and stood by the elbow-chair and said

" 'Trumpeter, trumpeter, are you one with me?'

"And the trumpeter just lifted the lids of his eyes, and answered, 'How should I not be one with you, drummer Johnny—Johnny boy? If you come, I count while you march, I mark time until the discharge comes.'

" 'The discharge has come to-night,' said the drummer, 'and the word is Corunna no longer.' And stepping to the chimney-place he unhooked the drum and trumpet, and began to twist the brass rings of the lock, spelling the word aloud, so—C-O-R-U-N-A. When he had fixed the last letter, the padlock opened in his hand.

“ ‘ Did you know, trumpeter, that, when I came to Plymouth, they put me into a line regiment ? ’

“ ‘ The 38th is a good regiment,’ answered the old Hussar, still in his dull voice , ‘ I went back with them from Sahagun to Corunna At Corunna they stood in General Fraser’s division, on the right They behaved well ’

“ ‘ But I’d fain see the Marryns again,’ says the drummer, handing him the trumpet , ‘ and you, you shall call once more for the Queen’s Own Matthew,’ he says, suddenly, turning on my father—and when he turned, my father saw for the first time that his scarlet jacket had a round hole by the breast-bone, and that the blood was welling there—’ Matthew, we shall want your boat ’

“ Then my father rose on his legs like a man in a dream, while they two slung on, the one his drum, and t’other his trumpet He took the lantern and went quaking before them down to the shore, and they breathed heavily behind him , and they stepped into his boat, and my father pushed off

“ ‘ Row you first for Dolor Point,’ says the drummer So my father rowed them out past the white houses of Coverack to Dolor Point, and there, at a word, lay on his oars And the trumpeter, William Talhfer, put his trumpet to his mouth and sounded the Revell The music of it was like rivers running

“ ‘ They will follow,’ said the drummer ‘ Matthew, pull you now for the Manacles ’

“ So my father pulled for the Manacles, and came to an easy close outside Carn dû And the drummer took his sticks and beat a tattoo, there by the edge of the reef , and the music of it was like a rolling chariot

“ ‘ That will do,’ says he, breaking off , ‘ they will follow Pull now for the shore under Gunner’s Meadow ’

“ Then my father pulled for the shore, and ran his boat in under Gunner’s Meadow And they stepped out, all three, and walked up to the meadow By the gate the drummer halted, and began his tattoo again, looking out towards the darkness over the sea

“ And while the drum beat, and my father held his breath, there came up out of the sea and the darkness a troop of many men, horse and foot, and formed up among the graves , and others rose out of the graves and formed up—drowned Marines with bleached faces, and pale Hussars, riding their horses, all lean and shadowy There was no clatter of hoofs or accoutrements, my father said, but a soft sound all the while like the beating of a bird's wing, and a black shadow lying like a pool about the feet of all. The drummer stood upon a little knoll just inside the gate, and beside him the tall trumpeter, with hand on hip, watching them gather, and behind them both my father, clinging to the gate. When no more came, the drummer stopped playing, and said, 'Call the roll.'

"Then the trumpeter stepped towards the end man of the rank and called, 'Troop-Sergeant-Major Thomas Irons!' and the man answered in a thin voice, 'Here!'

" 'Troop-Sergeant-Major Thomas Irons, how is it with you?'

"The man answered, 'How should it be with me? When I was young, I betrayed a girl, and when I was grown, I betrayed a friend, and for these things I must pay. But I died as a man ought. God save the King!'

"The trumpeter called to the next man, 'Trooper Henry Buckingham!' and the next man answered, 'Here!'

" 'Trooper Henry Buckingham, how is it with you?'

" 'How should it be with me? I was a drunkard, and I stole, and in Lugo, in a wine-shop, I killed a man. But I died as a man should. God save the King!'

"So the trumpeter went down the line, and when he had finished, the drummer took it up, hailing the dead Marines in their order. Each man answered to his name, and each man ended with 'God save the King!'. When all were hailed, the drummer stepped back to his mound, and called

" 'It is well. You are content, and we are content to join you. Wait, now, a little while.'

"With this he turned and ordered my father to pick up the lantern and lead the way back. As my father picked it up, he heard the ranks of dead men cheer and call, 'God save the King!' all together, and saw them waver and fade back into the dark, like a breath fading off a pane.

"But when they came back here to the kitchen, and my father set the lantern down, it seemed they'd both forgot about him. For the drummer turned in the lantern light—and my father could see the blood still welling out of the hole in his breast—and took the trumpet-sling from around the other's neck, and locked drum and trumpet together again, choosing the letters on the lock very carefully

While he did this he said

“ ‘ The word is no more Corunna, but Bayonne As you left out an “ n ” in Corunna, so must I leave out an “ n ” in Bayonne ’ And before snapping the padlock, he spelt out the word slowly— ‘ B-A-Y-O-N-E ’ After that, he used no more speech, but turned and hung the two instruments back on the hook, and then took the trumpeter by the arm , and the pair walked out into the darkness, glancing neither to right nor left

“ My father was on the point of following, when he heard a sort of sigh behind him , and there, sitting in the elbow-chair, was the very trumpeter he had just seen walk out by the door ! If my father’s heart jumped before, you may believe it jumped quicker now But, after a bit, he went up to the man asleep in the chair and put a hand upon him It was the trumpeter in flesh and blood that he touched , but though the flesh was warm, the trumpeter was dead

“ Well, sir, they buried him three days after , and at first my father was minded to say nothing about his dream (as he thought it) But the day after the funeral, he met Parson Kendall coming from Helston market , and the parson called out ‘ Have’ee heard the news the coach brought down this mornin’ ? ’ ‘ What news ? ’ says my father ‘ Why, that peace is agreed upon ’ ‘ None too soon,’ says my father ‘ Not soon enough for our poor lads at Bayonne,’ the parson answered ‘ Bayonne ! ’ cries my father, with a jump ‘ Why, yes ’, and the parson told him all about a great sally the French had made on the night of 13th April ‘ Do you happen to know if the 38th Regiment was engaged ? ’ my father asked ‘ Come, now,’ said Parson Kendall, ‘ I didn’t know you was so well up in the campaign But as it happens, I do know that the 38th was engaged, for ‘twas they that held a cottage and stopped the French advance ’

“ Still my father held his tongue , and when, a week later, he walked into Helston and bought a Mercury off the Sherborne rider, and got the landlord of the ‘ Angel ’ to spell out the list of killed and wounded, sure enough, there among the killed was Drummer John Christian of the 38th Foot

“ After this, there was nothing for a religious man but to make a clean breast. So my father went up to Parson Kendall and told the whole story The parson listened, and put a question or two, and then asked

“ ‘ Have you tried to open the lock since that night ? ’

“ ‘ I han’t dared to touch it,’ says my father

“ ‘ Then come along and try ’ When the parson came to the cottage here, he took the things off the hook and tried the lock ‘ Did he say “ Bayonne ” ? The word has seven letters ’

“ ‘ Not if you spell it with one “ n ” as he did,’ says my father

“ The parson spelt it out—B-A-Y-O-N-E ‘ Whew ! ’ says he, for the lock had fallen open in his hand

“ He stood considering it a moment, and then he says, ‘ I tell you what I shouldn’t blab this all round the parish if I was you You won’t get no credit for truth-telling, and a miracle’s wasted on a set of fools But if you like, I’ll shut down the lock again upon a holy word that no one but me shall know, and neither drummer nor trumpeter, dead nor alive, shall frighten the secret out of me ’

“ ‘ I wish to gracious you would, parson,’ said my father

“ The parson chose the holy word there and then, and shut the lock back upon it, and hung the drum and trumpet back in their place He is gone long since, taking the word with him And till the lock is broken by force, nobody will ever separate those twain ”

OLD ÆSON

SIR ARTHUR QUILLER-COUCH ("Q")

JUDGE between me and my guest, the stranger within my gates, the man whom in his extremity I clothed and fed

I remember well the time of his coming, for it happened at the end of five days and five nights during which the year passed from strength to age, in the interval between the swallow's departure and the redwing's coming, when the tortoise in my garden crept into his winter quarters, and the equinox was on us, with an east wind that parched the blood in the trees, so that their leaves for once knew no gradations of red and yellow, but turned at a stroke to brown, and crackled like tin-foil

At five o'clock in the morning of the sixth day I looked out. The wind still whistled across the sky, but now without the obstruction of any cloud. Full in front of my window Sirius flashed with a whiteness that pierced the eye. A little to the right, the whole constellation of Orion was suspended clear over a wedge-like gap in the coast, wherein the sea could be guessed rather than seen. And, travelling yet further, the eye fell on two brilliant lights, the one set high above the other—the one steady and a fiery red, the other yellow and blazing intermittently—the one Aldebaran, the other revolving on the lighthouse top, fifteen miles away.

Half-way up the east, the moon, now in her last quarter and decrepit, climbed with the dawn close at her heels. And at this hour they brought in the Stranger, asking if my pleasure were to give him clothing and hospitality.

Nobody knew whence he came—except that it was from the wind and the night—seeing that he spoke in a strange tongue, moaning and making a sound like the twittering of birds in a chimney. But his journey must have been long and painful, for his legs bent under him, and he could not stand when they lifted him. So, finding it useless to question him for the time, I learnt from the servants all they had to tell—namely, that they had come upon him, but a few minutes before, lying on his face within my grounds, without staff or scrip, bareheaded, spent, and crying feebly for succour in his foreign tongue, and that in pity they had carried him in and brought him to me

Now for the look of this man, he seemed a century old, being bald, extremely wrinkled, with wide hollows where the teeth should be, and the flesh hanging loose and flaccid on his cheek-bones, and what colour he had could have come only from exposure to that bitter night. But his eyes chiefly spoke of his extreme age. They were blue and deep, and filled with the wisdom of years, and when he turned them in my direction they appeared to look through me, beyond me, and back upon centuries of sorrow and the slow endurance of man, as if his immediate misfortune were but an inconsiderable item in a long list. They frightened me. Perhaps they conveyed a warning of that which I was to endure at their owner's hands. From compassion, I ordered the servants to take him to my wife, with word that I wished her to set food before him, and see that it passed his lips.

So much I did for this Stranger. Now learn how he rewarded me.

He has taken my youth from me, and the most of my substance, and the love of my wife.

From the hour when he tasted food in my house, he sat there without hint of going. Whether from design, or because age and his sufferings had really palsied him, he came back tediously to life and warmth, nor for many days professed himself able to stand erect. Meanwhile he lived on the best of our hospitality. My wife tended him, and my servants ran at his bidding, for he managed early to make them understand scraps of his language, though slow in acquiring ours—I believe out of calculation, lest some one should inquire his business (which was a mystery) or hint at his departure. I myself often visited the room he had appropriated, and would sit for an hour watching those fathomless eyes while I tried to make head or tail of his discourse. When we were alone, my wife and I used to speculate at times on his probable profession. Was he a merchant?—an aged mariner?—a tinker, tailor, beggarman, thief? We could never decide, and he never disclosed.

Then the awakening came. I sat one day in the chair beside his, wondering as usual I had felt heavy of late, with a soreness and languor in my bones, as if a dead weight hung continually on my shoulders, and another rested on my heart. A warmer colour in the Stranger's cheek caught my attention, and I bent forward, peering under the pendulous lids. His eyes were livelier and less profound. The melancholy was passing from them as breath fades off a pane of glass. He was growing younger. Starting up, I ran across the room, to the mirror.

There were two white hairs in my forelock, and, at the corner of either eye, half a dozen radiating lines. I was an old man.

Turning, I regarded the Stranger. He sat phlegmatic as an Indian idol, and in my fancy I felt the young blood draining from my own heart, and saw it mantling in his cheeks. Minute by minute I watched the slow miracle—the old man beautified. As buds unfold, he put on a lovely youthfulness, and, drop by drop, left me winter.

I hurried from the room, and seeking my wife, laid the case before her. "This is a ghoul," I said, "that we harbour—he is sucking my best blood, and the household is clean bewitched." She laid aside the book in which she read, and laughed at me. Now my wife was well-looking, and her eyes were the light of my soul. Consider, then, how I felt as she laughed, taking the Stranger's part against me. When I left her it was with a new suspicion in my heart. "How shall it be," I thought, "if after stealing my youth, he go on to take the one thing that is better?"

In my room, day by day, I brooded upon this—hating my own alteration, and fearing worse. With the Stranger there was no longer any disguise. His head blossomed in curls, white teeth filled the hollows of his mouth, the pits in his cheek were heaped full with roses, glowing under a transparent skin. It was Æson renewed and thankless, and he sat on, devouring my substance.

Now, having probed my weakness, and being satisfied that I no longer dared to turn him out, he, who had half-imposed his native tongue upon us, constraining the household to a hideous jargon, the bastard growth of two languages, condescended to jerk us back rudely into our own speech once more, mastering it with a readiness that proved his former dissimulation, and using it henceforward as the sole vehicle of his wishes. On his past life he remained silent, but took occasion to confide in me that he proposed embracing a military career, as soon as he should tire of the shelter of my roof.

And I groaned in my chamber , for that which I feared had come to pass He was making open love to my wife And the eyes with which he looked at her, and the lips with which he coaxed her, had been mine , and I was an old man Judge now between me and this guest

One morning I went to my wife , for the burden was past bearing, and I must satisfy myself I found her tending the plants on her window-ledge , and when she turned, I saw that years had not taken from her comeliness one jot And I was old

So I taxed her on the matter of this Stranger, saying this and that, and how I had cause to believe he loved her

" That is beyond doubt," she answered, and smiled

" By my head, I believe his fancy is returned ! " I blurted out

And her smile grew radiant, as, looking me in the face, she answered, " By my soul, husband, it is "

Then I went from her, down into my garden, where the day grew hot and the flowers were beginning to droop I stared upon them and could find no solution to the problem that worked in my heart And then I glanced up, eastward, to the sun above the privet-hedge, and saw him coming across the flower-beds, treading them down in wantonness He came with a light step and a smile, and I waited for him, leaning heavily on my stick

" Give me your watch ! " he called out, as he drew near

" Why should I give you my watch ? " I asked, while something worked in my throat

" Because I wish it , because it is gold , because you are too old and won't want it much longer "

" Take it," I cried, pulling the watch out and thrusting it into his hand " Take it—you who have taken all that is better ! Strip me, spoil me——"

A soft laugh sounded above, and I turned My wife was looking down on us from the window, and her eyes were both moist and glad

" Pardon me," she said, " it is you who are spoiling the child "

THE SMALL PEOPLE

SIR ARTHUR QUILLER-ROUCH ("Q")

To a Lady who had asked for a Fairy Tale

YOU thought it natural, my dear lady, to lay this command on me at the dance last night. We had parted, two months ago, in London, and we met, unexpectedly and to music, in this corner of the land where (they say) the piskies still keep. And certainly, when I led you out upon the balcony (that you might not see the new moon through glass and lose a lucky month), it was not hard to picture the Small People at their play on the turf and among the dim flower-beds below us. But, as a matter of fact, they are dead, these Small People. They were the long-lived but not immortal spirits of the folk who inhabited Cornwall many thousands of years back—far beyond Christ's birth. They were "poor innocents," not good enough for heaven, yet too good for the eternal fires, and when they first came, were of ordinary stature. But after Christ's birth they began to grow smaller and smaller, and at length turned into emmets and vanished from the earth.

The last I heard of them was a sad and serious little history, very different from the old legends. Part of it I was told by a hospital surgeon, of all people in the world. Part I learnt by looking at your beautiful gown last night, as you leant on the balcony-rail. You remember how heavy the dew was, and that I fetched a shawl for your shoulders. You did not wrap it so tightly round but that four marguerites in gold embroidery showed on the front of your bodice, and these come into the tale, the remainder of which I was taught this morning before breakfast, down among the cairns by the sea where the Small People's Gardens still remain—sheltered spots of green, with here and there some ferns and cliff-pinks left. For me they are libraries where sometimes I read for a whole summer's day, and, with the help of the hospital surgeon, I bring you from them a story about your ball-gown which is perfectly true.

Twenty years ago—before the fairies had dwindled into ants, and when wayfarers were still used to turn their coats inside out, after nightfall, for fear of being "pisky-led"—there lived, down at the village, a girl who knew all the secrets of the Small People's Gardens. Where you and I discover sea-pinks only, and hear only the wash of the waves, she would go on midsummer nights and find flowers of every colour spread, and hundreds of little lights moving among them, and fountains and waterfalls, and swarms of small ladies and gentlemen, dressed in green and gold, walking and sporting among them, or reposing on the turf and telling stories to the most ravishing soft music. This was as much as she would relate, but it is certain that the piskies were friends of hers. For, in spite of her nightly wanderings, her housework was always well and cleanly done before other girls were dressed—the morning milk fresh in the dairy, the step sanded, the fire lit, and the scalding-pans warming over it. And as for her needlework, it was a wonder.

Some said she was a changeling, others that she had found the four-leaved clover or the fairy ointment, and rubbed her eyes with it. But it was her own secret, for whenever the people tried to follow her to the "Gardens," whir! whir! whir! buzzed in their ears, as if a flight of bees were passing, and every limb would feel as if stuck full of pins and pinched with tweezers, and they were rolled over and over, their tongues tied as if with cords, and at last, as soon as they could manage, they would pick themselves up and hobble home for their lives.

Well, the history—which, I must remind you, is a true one—goes on to say that in time the girl grew ambitious, or fell in love (I cannot remember which), and went to London. In any case it must have been a strong call that took her, for there are no fairies in London. I regret that my researches do not allow me to tell you how the Small People at home took her departure, but we will suppose that it grieved them deeply. Nor can I say precisely how the girl fared for many years. I think her fortune contained both joy and sorrow for a while, and I suspect that many passages of her life would be sadly out of place in this story, even if they could be hunted out. Indeed, fairy-tales have to omit so much nowadays, and therefore seem so antiquated, that one marvels how they could ever have been in fashion.

But you may take it as sure that in the end this girl met with more sorrow than joy, for when next she comes into sight it is in London streets and she is in rags. Moreover, though she wears a flush on her cheeks, above the wrinkles, it does not come of health or high spirits, but perhaps from the fact that in the twenty years' interval she has seen millions of men and women, but not one single fairy

In those latter days I met her many times She passed under your windows shortly before dawn on the night that you gave your dance, early in the season You saw her, I think ?—a woman who staggered a little, and had some words with the policeman at the corner but, after all, a staggering woman in London is no such memorable sight All day long she was seeking work, work, work, and after dark she sought forgetfulness She found the one, in small quantities, and out of it she managed to buy the other, now and then, over the counter But she had long given up looking for the fairies The lights along the Embankment had ceased to remind her of those in the Small People's Gardens, nor did the noise bursting from music-hall doors as she passed recall the old sounds, and as for the scents, there were plenty in London, but none resembling that of the garden which you might smell a mile out at sea

I told you that her needlework had been a marvel when she lived down at the village Curiously enough, this was the one gift of the fairies that stayed by her, and it remained as wonderful as ever Her most frequent employer was a flat-footed Jew with a large, fleshy face, and because she had a name for honesty, she was not seldom entrusted with costly pieces of stuff, and allowed to carry them home to turn into ball-dresses under the roof through the gaps of which, as she stitched, she could see the night pass from purple to black, and from black to the lilac of daybreak There, with a hundred pounds' worth of silk and lace on her knee, she would sit and work a dozen hours to earn as many pence With fingers weary and—— But you know Hood's song, and no doubt have taken it to heart a dozen times

It came to this, however, that one evening, when she had not eaten for forty hours, her employer gave her a piece of embroidery to work against time The fact is, my dear lady, that you are very particular about having your commissions executed to the hour, and your dress-makers are anxious to oblige, knowing that you never squabble over the price To be sure, you have never heard of the flat-footed Jew man—how should you ? And we may believe that your dressmakers knew just as little of the poor woman who had used to be the friend of the Small People But the truth remains that, in the press of your many pleasures, you were pardonably twenty-four hours late in ordering the gown in which you were to appear an angel

Ah, madam ! will it comfort you to hear that you were the one to reconcile the Small People with that poor sister of yours who had left them, twenty years before, and wanted them so sorely ? The hospital doctor gave her complaint a long name, and I gather that it has a place by itself in books of pathology But the woman's tale was that, after she had been stitching through the long night, the dawn came through the roof and found her with four marguerites still left to be embroidered in gold on the pieces of satin that lay in her lap She threaded her needle afresh, rubbed her weary eyes, and began—when, lo ! a miracle

Instead of one hand, there were four at work—four hands, four needles, four lines of thread The four marguerites were all being embroidered at the same time ! The piskies had forgiven, had remembered her at last, after these many years, and were coming to her help, as of old Ah, madam, the tears of thankfulness that ran from her hot eyes and fell upon those golden marguerites of yours !

Of course her eyes were disordered There was only one flower, really There was only one embroidered in the morning, when they found her sobbing, with your bodice still in her lap, and took her to the hospital, and that is why the dressmakers failed to keep faith with you for once, and made you so angry

Dear lady, the piskies are not easily summoned in these days.

"THEY THAT WALK IN DARKNESS"

I

IT was not till she had fasted every Monday and Thursday for a twelvemonth, that Zillah's long yearning for a child was gratified. She gave birth—O more than fair-dealing God!—to a boy.

Jossel, who had years ago abandoned the hope of an heir to pray for his soul, was as delighted as he was astonished. His wife had kept him in ignorance of the fasts by which she was appealing to Heaven, and when of a Monday or Thursday evening on his return from his boot factory in Bethnal Green he had sat down to his dinner in Dalston, no suspicion had crossed his mind that it was Zillah's breakfast. He himself was a prosaic person, incapable of imagining such spontaneities of religion, though he kept every fast which it behoves an orthodox Jew to endure who makes no speciality of sainthood. There was a touch of the fantastic in Zillah's character which he had only appreciated in its manifestation as girlish liveliness, and which Zillah knew would find no response from him in its religious expression.

Not that her spiritual innovations were original inventions. From some pious old crone, after whom (as she could read Hebrew) a cluster of neighbouring dames repeated what they could catch of the New Year prayers in the women's synagogue, Zillah had learned that certain holy men were accustomed to afflict their souls on Mondays and Thursdays. From her unsuspecting husband himself she had further elicited that these days were marked out from the ordinary, even for the man of the world, by a special prayer dubbed "the long 'He be merciful'". Surely on Mondays and Thursdays, then, He would indeed be merciful. To make sure of His goodwill she continued to be unmerciful to herself long after it became certain that her prayer had been granted.

II

Now Zillah and Jossel lived in happy ignorance of most things, especially of their ignorance. The manufacture of boots and all that appertained thereto, the synagogue and religion, misunderstood reminiscences of early days in Russia, the doings and misdoings of a petty social circle, and such particular narrowness with general muddle as is produced by stumbling through a Sabbath paper and a Sunday paper—these were the main items in their intellectual inventory. Separate Zillah from her husband and she became even poorer, for she could not read at all.

Yet they prospered. The pavements of the East End resounded with their hob-nailed boots, and even in many a West End drawing-room their patent-leather shoes creaked. But they themselves had no wish to stand in such shoes, the dingy perspectives of Dalston villadom limited their ambition, already sufficiently gratified by migration from Whitechapel. The profits went to enlarge their factory and to buy houses, a favourite form of investment in their set. Zillah could cook fish to perfection, both fried and stewed, and the latter variety both sweet and sour. Nothing, in fine, had been wanting to their happiness—save a son, heir and mourner.

When he came at last, little that religion or superstition could do for him was left undone. An amulet on the bedpost scared off Lilith, Adam's first wife, who, perhaps because she missed being the mother of the human race, hankers after babes and sucklings. The initiation into the Abrahamic covenant was graced by a pious godfather with pendent ear-locks, and in the ceremony of the Redemption of the First-Born the five silver shekels to the priest were supplemented by golden sovereigns for the poor. Nor, though Zillah spoke the passable English of her circle, did she fail to rock her Brum's cradle to the old "Yiddish" nursery songs.

Sleep, my birdie, shut your eyes,
O sleep, my little one,
Too soon from cradle you'll arise
To work that must be done

Almonds and raisins you shall sell,
And holy scrolls shall write,
So sleep, dear child, sleep sound and well,
Your future beckons bright

---

"THEY THAT WALK IN DARKNESS" 179

---

Brum shall learn of ancient days,
And love good folk of this,
So sleep, dear babe, your mother prays,
And God will send you bliss

Alas, that with all this, Brum should have grown up a weakling, sickly and anaemic, with a look that in the child of poorer parents would have said starvation

III

Yet through all the vicissitudes of his infantile career, Zillah's faith in his survival never faltered. He was emphatically a child from Heaven, and Providence would surely not fly in its own face. Jossel, not being aware of this, had a burden of perpetual solicitude, which Zillah often itched to lighten. Only, not having done so at first, she found it more and more difficult to confess her negotiation with the celestial powers. She went as near as she dared.

"If the Highest One has sent us a son after so many years," she said in the "Yiddish" which was still natural to her for intimate domestic discussion, "He will not take him away again."

"As well say," Jossel replied gloomily, "that because He has sent us luck and blessing after all these years, He may not take away our prosperity."

"Hush! don't beshrew the child!" And Zillah spat out carefully. She was tremulously afraid of words of ill-omen and of the Evil Eye, against which, she felt vaguely, even Heaven's protection was not potent. Secretly she became more and more convinced that some woman, envious of all this "luck and blessing," was withering Brum with her Evil Eye. And certainly the poor child was peaking and pining away. "Marasmus," a physician had once murmured, wondering that so well-dressed a child should appear so ill-nourished. "Take him to the seaside often, and feed him well," was the universal cry of the doctors, and so Zillah often deserted her husband for a kosher boarding-house at Brighton or Ramsgate, where the food was voluminous, and where Brum wrote schoolboy verses to the strange, fascinating sea.

For there were compensations in the premature flowering of his intellect. Even other mothers gradually came round to admitting that he was a prodigy. The black eyes seemed to burn in the white face as they looked out on the palpitating universe, or devoured every and any scrap of print ! A pity they had so soon to be dulled behind spectacles But Zillah found consolation in the thought that the glasses would go well with the high black waistcoat and white tie of the British Rabbi He had been given to her by Heaven, and to Heaven must be returned Besides, that might divert it from any more sinister methods of taking him back

In his twelfth year Brum began to have more trouble with his eyes, and renewed his early acquaintance with the drab ante-rooms of eye hospitals that led, at the long-expected ting-ting of the doctor's bell, into a delectable chamber of quaint instruments But it was not till he was on the point of Bar-Mitzvah (confirmation at thirteen) that the blow fell Unwarned explicitly by any physician, Brum went blind

" Oh, mother," was his first anguished cry, " I shall never be able to read again "

IV

The prepared festivities added ironic complications to the horror After Brum should have read in the Law from the synagogue platform, there was to have been a reception at the house Brum himself had written out the invitations with conscious grammar " Present their compliments to Mr and Mrs Solomon and shall be glad to see them " (not you, as was the fashion of their set) It was after writing out so many notes in a fine schoolboy hand, that Brum began to be conscious of thickening blurs and dancing specks and colours Now that the blind boy was crouching in hopeless misery by the glowing fire, where he had so often recklessly pored over books in the delicious dusk, there was no one handy to write out the countermands As yet the wretched parents had kept the catastrophe secret, as though it reflected on themselves And by every post the Confirmation presents came pouring in

Brum refused even to feel these shining objects He had hoped to have a majority of books, but now the preponderance of watches, rings, and pen-knives, left him apathetic To his parents each present brought a fresh feeling of dishonesty

" We must let them know," they kept saying But the tiny difficulty of writing to so many prevented action.

" Perhaps he'll be all right by Sabbath," Zillah persisted frenziedly She clung to the faith that this was but a cloud , for that the glory of the Confirmation of a future Rabbi could be so dimmed would argue an incomprehensible Providence Brum's performance was to be so splendid—he was to recite not only his own portion of the Law but the entire Sabbath Sedrah (section)

"He will never be all right," said Jossel, who, in the utter breakdown of Zillah, had for the first time made the round of the doctors with Brum "None of the physicians, not even the most expensive, hold out any hope And the dearest of all said the case puzzled him. It was like the blindness that often breaks out in Russia after the great fasts, and specially affects delicate children "

"Yes, I remember," said Zillah , " but that was only among the Christians "

"We have so many Christian customs nowadays," said Jossel grimly , and he thought of the pestilent heretic in his own synagogue who advocated that ladies should be added to the choir

"Then what shall we do about the people ? " moaned Zillah, wringing her hands in temporary discouragement

"You can advertise in the Jewish papers," came suddenly from the brooding Brum He had a flash of pleasure in the thought of composing something that would be published

"Yes, then everybody will read it on the Friday," said Jossel eagerly

Then Brum remembered that he would not be among the readers, and despair reconquered him But Zillah was shaking her head

"Yes, but if we tell people not to come, and then when Brum opens his eyes on the Sabbath morning, he can see to read the Sedrah——"

"But I don't want to see to read the Sedrah," said the boy petulantly , " I know it all by heart "

"My blessed boy ! " cried Zillah

"There's nothing wonderful," said the boy , " even if you read the Scroll, there are no vowels nor musical signs "

"But do you feel strong enough to do it all ? " said the father anxiously

"God will give him strength," put in the mother " And he will make his speech, too, won't you, my Brum ? "

The blind face kindled Yes, he would give his learned address He had saved his father the expense of hiring one, and had departed in original rhetorical ways from the conventional methods of expressing filial gratitude to the parents who had brought him to manhood

And was this eloquence to remain entombed in his own breast ?

His courageous resolution lightened the gloom His parents opened parcels they had not had the heart to touch They brought him his new suit, they placed the high hat of manhood on his head, and told him how fine and tall he looked , they wrapped the new silk prayingshawl round his shoulders

" Are the stripes blue or black ? " he asked

" Blue—a beautiful blue," said Jossel, striving to steady his voice

" It feels very nice," said Brum, smoothing the silk wistfully
" Yes, I can almost feel the blue "

Later on, when his father, a little brightened, had gone off to the exigent boot factory, Brum even asked to see the presents The blind retain these visual phrases

Zillah described them to him one by one as he handled them
When it came to the books it dawned on her that she could not tell him the titles

" They have such beautiful pictures," she gushed evasively
The boy burst into tears

" Yes, but I shall never be able to read them," he sobbed.

" Yes, you will "

" No, I won't "

" Then I'll read them to you," she cried, with sudden resolution.

" But you can't read "

" I can learn "

" But you will be so long I ought to have taught you myself.
And now it is too late ! "

v

In order to ensure perfection, and prevent stage fright, so to speak, it had been arranged that Brum should rehearse his reading of the Sedrah on Friday in the synagogue itself, at an hour when it was free from worshippers This rehearsal, his mother thought, was now all the more necessary to screw up Brum's confidence, but the father argued that as all places were now alike to the blind boy, the prominence of a public platform and a large staring audience could no longer unnerve him

" But he will feel them there ! " Zillah protested

" But since they are not there on the Friday—— ? "

"All the more reason Since he cannot see that they are not there, he can fancy they are there On Saturday he will be quite used to them "

But when Jossel, yielding, brought Brum to the synagogue appointment, the fusty old Beadle who was faithfully in attendance held up his hands in holy and secular horror at the blasphemy and the blindness respectively

"A blind man may not read the Law to the congregation!" he explained

"No?" said Jossel

"Why not?" asked Brum sharply

"Because it stands that the Law shall be read And a blind man cannot read He can only recite "

"But I know every word of it," protested Brum

The Beadle shook his head "But suppose you make a mistake? Shall the congregation hear a word or a syllable that God did not write? It would be playing into Satan's hands "

"I shall say every word as God wrote it Give me a trial "

But the fusty Beadle's piety was invincible He was highly sympathetic toward the human affliction, but he refused to open the Ark and produce the Scroll

"I'll let the Chazan (cantor) know he must read to-morrow, as usual," he said conclusively

Jossel went home, sighing, but silenced Zillah, however, was not so easily subdued "But my Brum will read it as truly as an angel," she cried, pressing the boy's head to her breast "And suppose he does make a mistake! Haven't I heard the congregation correct Winkelstein scores of times?"

"Hush!" said Jossel, "you talk like an Epicurean Satan makes us all err at times, but we must not play into his hands The Din (judgment) is that only those who see may read the Law to the congregation "

"Brum will read it much better than that snuffling old Winkelstein "

"Sha! Enough! The Din is the Din!"

"It was never meant to stop my poor Brum from——"

"The Din is the Din It won't let you dance on its head or chop wood on its back Besides, the synagogue refuses, so make an end "

" I will make an end I'll have Minyan (congregation) here, in our own house "

" What ! " and the poor man stared in amaze " Always she falls from heaven with a new idea ! "

" Brum shall not be disappointed " And she gave the silent boy a passionate hug

" But we have no Scroll of the Law," Brum said, speaking at last, and to the point

" Ah, that's you all over, Zillah," cried Jossel, relieved " Loud drumming in front and no soldiers behind ! "

" We can borrow a Scroll," said Zillah

Jossel gasped again " But the iniquity is just the same," he said

" As if Brum made mistakes ! "

" If you were a Rabbi, the congregation would baptize itself ! " Jossel quoted

Zillah writhed under the proverb " It isn't as if you went to the Rabbi, you took the word of the Beadle "

" He is a learned man "

Zillah donned her bonnet and shawl

" Where are you going ? "

" To the minister "

Jossel shrugged his shoulders, but did not stop her

The minister, one of the new school of Rabbis who preach sermons in English and dress like Christian clergymen, as befitted the dignity of Dalston villadom, was taken aback by the ritual problem, so new and so tragic His acquaintance with the vast casuistic literature of his race was of the shallowest " No doubt the Beadle is right," he observed profoundly

" He cannot be right, he doesn't know my Brum "

Worn out by Zillah's persistency, the minister suggested going to the Beadle's together Aware of the Beadle's prodigious lore, he had too much regard for his own position to risk congregational odium by flying in the face of an exhumable Din

At the Beadle's, the Din was duly unearthed from worm-eaten folios, but Zillah remaining unappeased, further searching of these Rabbinic scriptures revealed a possible compromise

If the portion the boy recited was read over again by a reader, not blind, so that the first congregational reading did not count, it might perhaps be permitted.

11610

Paul Zangwill

It would be, of course, too tedious to treat the whole Sadrak thus, but if Brum were content to recite his own particular seventh thereof, he should be summoned to the Rostrum

So Zillah returned to Jossel, sufficiently triumphant.

VI

"Abraham, the son of Jossel, shall stand"

In obedience to the Cantor's summons, the blind boy, in his high hat and silken praying-shawl with the blue stripes, rose, and guided by his father's hand ascended the platform amid the emotion of the synagogue. His brave boyish treble, pursuing its faultless way, thrilled the listeners to tears, and inflamed Zillah's breast, as she craned down from the gallery, with the mad hope that the miracle had happened, after all.

The house-gathering afterward savoured of the gruesome convivality of a funeral assemblage. But the praises of Brum, especially after his great speech, were sung more honestly than those of the buried, than whom the white-faced, dull-eyed boy, cut off from the gaily-coloured spectacle in the sunlit room, was a more tragic figure.

But Zillah, in her fineries and forced smiles, offered the most tragic image of all. Every congratulation was a rose-wreathed dagger, every eulogy of Brum's eloquence a reminder of the Rabbi God had thrown away in him.

VII

Amid the endless babble of suggestions made to her for Brum's cure, one—repeated several times by different persons—hooked itself to her distracted brain. Germany! There was a great eye-doctor in Germany who could do anything and everything. Yes, she would go to Germany.

This resolution, at which Jossel shrugged his shoulders in despairing scepticism, was received with rapture by Brum. How he had longed to see foreign countries, to pass over that shining sea which whispered and beckoned so at Brighton and Ramsgate! He almost forgot he would not see Germany, unless the eye-doctor were a miracle-monger indeed.

But he was doomed to a double disappointment, for instead of his going to Germany, Germany came to him, so to speak, in the shape of the specialist's annual visit to London, and the great man had nothing soothing to say, only a compassionate head to shake, with ominous warnings to make the best of a bad job and fatten up the poor boy

Nor did Zillah's attempts to read take her out of the infant primers, despite long hours of knitted brow and puckered lips, and labonous triumphs over the childish sentences, by patient addition of syllable to syllable. She also tried to write, but got no further than her own name, imitated from the envelopes

To occupy Brum's days, Jossel, gaining enlightenment in the ways of darkness, procured Braille books. But the boy had read most of the stock works thus printed for the blind, and his impatient brain fretted at the tardiness of finger-reading. Jossel's one consolation was that the boy would not have to earn his living. The thought, however, of how his blind hear would be cheated by agents and rent-collectors was a touch of bitter even in this solitary sweet

VIII

It was the Sabbath Fire-Woman who, appropriately enough, kindled the next glimmer of hope in Zillah's bosom. The one maid-of-all-work, who had suppld all the help and grandeur Zillah needed in her establishment, having transferred her services to a husband, Zillah was left searching for an angel at thirteen pounds a year. In the interim the old Irishwoman who made a few pence a week by attending to the Sabbath fires of the poor Jews of the neighbourhood, became necessary on Friday nights and Saturdays, to save the household from cold or sin

"Och, the quare little brat!" she muttered, when she first came upon the pale, gnome-like figure by the fender, tapping the big book, for all the world like the Leprechaun cobbling

"And can't he see at all, at all?" she asked Zillah confidentially one Sabbath, when the boy was out of the room

Zillah shook her head, unable to speak

"Nebbich!" compassionately sighed the Fire-Woman, who had corrupted her native brogue with "Yiddish" "And wud he be borrun dark?"

"No, it came only a few months ago," faltered Zillah

The Fire-Woman crossed herself

"Sure, and who'll have been puttun' the Evil Oi on him?" she asked.

Zillah's face was convulsed

" I always said so ! " she cried , " I always said so ! "

" The divil burrun thim all ! " cried the Fire-Woman, poking the coals viciously

" Yes, but I don't know who it is They envied me my beautiful child, my lamb, my only one And nothing can be done " She burst into tears

" Nothin' is a harrd wurrd ! If he was my bhoy, the darlint, I'd cure him, aisy enough, so I wud "

Zillah's sobs ceased " How ? " she asked, her eyes gleaming strangely

" I'd take him to the Pope, av course "

" The Pope ! " repeated Zillah vaguely

" Ay, the Holy Father ! The ownly man in this wurrudd that can take away the Evil Oi "

Zillah gasped " Do you mean the Pope of Rome ? "

She knew the phrase somehow, but what it connoted was very shadowy and sinister some strange, mighty chief of hostile heathendom

" Who else wud I be manin' ? The Holy Mother I'd be for prayin' to meselt , but as ye're a Jewess, I dursn't tell ye to do that But the Pope, he's a gentelman, an' so he is, an' sorra a bit he'll moind that ye don't go to mass, whin he shpies that poor, weeshy, pale shrimp o' yours He'll just wave his hand, shpake a wurrd, an' whisht ! in the twinklin' of a bedposht ye'll be praisin' the Holy Mother "

Zillah's brain was whirling " Go to Rome ! " she said

The Fire-Woman poised the poker

" Well, ye can't expect the Pope to come to Dalston ! "

" No, no , I don't mean that," said Zillah, in hasty apology " Only, it's so far off, and I shouldn't know how to go "

" It's not so far off as Ameriky, an' it's two broths of bhoys I've got there "

" Isn't it ? " asked Zillah

" No, Lord love ye an' sure, gold carries ye anywhere nowadays, except to Heaven "

" But if I got to Rome, would the Pope see the child ? "

" As sartin as the child wud see him," the Fire-Woman replied emphatically

" He can do miracles, then ? " inquired Zillah

"What else wud he be for? Not that 'tis much of a miracle to take away the Evil Oi, bad scran to the witch!"

"Then perhaps our Rabbi can do it too?" cried Zillah, with a sudden hope

The Fire-Woman shook her head "Did ye ever hear he could?"

"No," admitted Zillah

"Thru for you, mum Divil a wurrd wud I say against your Priesht—wan's as good as another, maybe, for ivry-day use, but whin it comes to throuble and heart-scaldin', I pity the poor craythurs who can't put up a candle to the blessed saints—an' so I do Niver a bhoy o' mine has crassed the ocean without the Virgin havin' her candle"

"And did they arrive safe?"

"They did so, ivery mother's son av 'em."

IX

The more the distracted mother pondered over this sensational suggestion, the more it tugged at her Science and Judaism had failed her perhaps this unknown power, this heathen Pope, had indeed mastery over things diabolical Perhaps the strange religion he professed had verily a saving efficacy denied to her own Why should she not go to Rome?

True, the journey loomed before her as fearfully as a Polar Expedition to an ordinary mortal Germany she had been prepared to set out for it lay on the great route of Jewish migration westwards But Rome? She did not even know where it was But her new skill in reading would, she felt, help her through the perils She would be able to make out the names of the railway stations, if the train waited long enough

But with the cunning of the distracted she did not betray her heretical ferment

"P-o-p-e, Pope," she spelt out of her infants' primer in Brum's hearing "Pope? What's that, Brum?"

"Oh, haven't you ever heard of the Pope, mother?"

"No," said Zillah, crimsoning in conscious invisibility

"He's a sort of Chief Rabbi of the Roman Catholics He wears a tiara Kings and emperors used to tremble before him"

"And don't they now?" she asked apprehensively.

"No, that was in the Middle Ages—hundreds of years ago. He only had power over the Dark Ages."

"Over the Dark Ages?" repeated Zillah, with a fresh, vague hope.

"When all the world was sunk in superstition and ignorance, mother. Then everybody believed in him."

Zillah felt chilled and rebuked. "Then he no longer works miracles?" she said faintly.

Brum laughed. "Oh, I daresay he works as many miracles as ever. Of course thousands of pilgrims still go to kiss his toe. I meant his temporal power is gone—that is, his earthly power. He doesn't rule over any countries, all he possesses is the Vatican, but that is full of the greatest pictures by Michael Angelo and Raphael."

Zillah gazed open-mouthed at the prodigy she had brought into the world.

"Raphael—that sounds Jewish," she murmured. She longed to ask in what country Rome was, but feared to betray herself.

Brum laughed again. "Raphael Jewish! Why, so it is! It's a Hebrew word meaning 'God's healing'."

"God's healing!" repeated Zillah, awestruck.

Her mind was made up.

X

"Knowest thou what, Jossel?" she said in "Yiddish," as they sat by the Friday-night fireside when Brum had been put to bed. "I have heard of a new doctor, better than all the others!" After all it was the doctor, the healer, the exorcist of the Evil Eye, that she was seeking in the Pope, not the Rabbi of an alien religion.

Jossel shook his head. "You will only throw more money away."

"Better than throwing hope away."

"Well, who is it now?"

"He lives far away."

"In Germany again?"

"No, in Rome."

"In Rome? Why, that's at the end of the world—in Italy!"

"I know it's in Italy," said Zillah, rejoiced at the information. "But what then? If organ-grinders can travel the distance, why can't I?"

"But you can't speak Italian!"

"And they can't speak English!"

"Madness! Words, but not wisdom! I could not trust you alone in such a strange country, and the season is too busy for me to leave the factory"

"I don't need you with me," she said, vastly relieved "Brum will be with me"

He stared at her "Brum!"

"Brum knows everything Believe me, Jossel, in two days he will speak Italian"

"Let be! Let be! Let me rest!"

"And on the way back he will be able to see! He will show me everything, and Mr Raphael's pictures 'God's healing,'" she murmured to herself "And you'd be away for Passover! Enough!"

"No, we shall be easily back by Passover"

"O these women! The Almighty could not have rested on the seventh day if He had not left woman still uncreated!"

"You don't care whether Brum lives or dies!" Zillah burst into sobs

"It is just because I do that I ask how are you going to live on the journey? And there are no kosher hotels in Italy"

"We shall manage on eggs and fish God will forgive us if the hotel plates are unclean"

"But you won't be properly nourished without meat"

"Nonsense, when we were poor we had to do without it" To herself she thought, "If he only knew I did without food altogether on Mondays and Thursdays!"

XI

And so Brum passed at last over the shining, wonderful sea, feeling only the wind on his forehead and the salt in his nostrils It was a beautiful day at the dawn of spring, the far-stretching sea sparkled with molten diamonds, and Zillah felt that the highest God's blessing rested like a blue sky over this strange pilgrimage. She was dressed with great taste, and few would have divined the ignorance under her silks

"Mother, can you see France yet?" Brum asked very soon.

"No, my lamb"

"Mother, can you see France yet?" he persisted later.

"I see white cliffs," she said at last

"Ah! that's only the white cliffs of old England. Look the other way"

"I am looking the other way I see white cliffs coming to meet us"

"Has France got white cliffs too?" cried Brum, disappointed

On the journey to Paris he wearied her to describe France In vain she tried her untrained vision and poor vocabulary could give him no new elements to weave into a mental picture There were trees and sometimes houses and churches And again trees. What kind of trees? Green! Brum was in despair France was, then, only like England white cliffs without, trees and houses within. He demanded the Seine at least

"Yes, I see a great water," his mother admitted at last

"That's it! It rises in the Cote d'Or, flows N N W then W, and N W into the English Channel It is more than twice as long as the Thames Perhaps you'll see the tributaries flowing into it—the little rivers, the Oise, the Marne, the Yonne"

"No wonder the angels envy me him!" thought Zillah proudly.

They halted at Paris, putting up for the night, by the advice of a friendly fellow-traveller, at a hotel by the Gare de Lyons, where, to Zillah's joy and amazement, everybody spoke English to her and accepted her English gold—a pleasant experience which was destined to be renewed at each stage, and which increased her hope of a happy issue

"How loud Paris sounds!" said Brum, as they drove across it. He had to construct it from its noises, for in answer to his feverish interrogations his mother could only explain that some streets were lined with trees, and some foolish, unrespectable people sat out in the cold air, drinking at little tables

"Oh, how jolly!" said Brum "But can't you see Notre Dame?"

"What's that?"

"A splendid cathedral, mother—very old Do look for two towers We must go there the first thing to-morrow"

"The first thing to-morrow we take the train The quicker we get to the doctor, the better"

"Oh, but we can't leave Paris without seeing Notre Dame, and the gargoyles, and perhaps Quasimodo, and all that Victor Hugo describes "I wonder if we shall see a devil-fish in Italy," he added irrelevantly

"You'll see the devil if you go to such places," said Zillah, who, besides shirking the labour of description, was anxious not to provoke unnecessarily the God of Israel

"But I've often been to St Paul's with the boys," said Brum

"Have you?" she was vaguely alarmed

"Yes, it's lovely—the stained windows and the organ Yes, and the Abbey's glorious too, it almost makes me cry I always liked to hear the music with my eyes shut," he added, with forced cheeriness, "and now that'll be all right"

"But your father wouldn't like it," said Zillah feebly

"Father wouldn't like me to read the Pilgrim's Progress," retorted Brum "He doesn't understand these things There's no harm in our going to Notre Dame"

"No, no, it'll be much better to save all these places for the way back, when you'll be able to see for yourself"

Too late it struck her she had missed an opportunity of breaking to Brum the real object of the expedition

"But the Seine, anyhow," he persisted "We can go there to-night"

"But what can you see at night?" cried Zillah unthinkingly

"Oh, mother! how beautiful it used to be to look over London Bridge at night when we came back from the Crystal Palace!"

In the end Zillah accepted the compromise, and after their dinner of fish and vegetables—for which Brum had scant appetite—they were confided by the hotel porter to a bulbous-nosed cabman, who had instructions to restore them to the hotel Zillah thought wistfully of her warm parlour in Dalston, with the firelight reflected in the glass cases of the wax flowers

The cab stopped on a quay

"Well?" said Brum breathlessly

"Little fool!" said Zillah good-humouredly "There is nothing but water—the same water as in London"

"But there are lights, aren't there?"

"Yes, there are lights," she admitted cheerfully.

"Where is the moon?"

"Where she always is—in the sky."

"Doesn't she make a silver path on the water?" he said, with a sob in his voice

"What are you crying at? The mother didn't mean to make you cry"

She strained him contritely to her bosom and kissed away his tears

XII

The train for Switzerland started so early that Brum had no time to say his morning prayers, so, the carriage being to themselves, he donned his phylacteries and his praying-shawl with the blue stripes

Zillah sat listening to the hour-long recitative with admiration of his memory

Early in the hour she interrupted him to say. "How lucky I haven't to say all that! I should get tired"

"That's curious!" replied Brum "I was just saying, 'Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, who hath not made me a woman' But a woman has to pray, too, mother Else why is there given a special form for the women to substitute?—'Who hath made me according to His will' "

"Ah, that's only for learned women Only learned women pray"

"Well, you'd like to pray the Benediction that comes next, mother, I know Say it with me—do"

She repeated the Hebrew obediently, then asked "What does it mean?"

"'Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, who openest the eyes of the blind' "

"Oh, my poor Brum! Teach it me! Say t' c Hebrew again"

She repeated it till she could say it unprompted And then throughout the journey her lips moved with it at odd times It became a talisman—a compromise with the God who had failed her

"Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, who openest the eyes of the blind"

XIII

Mountains were the great sensation of the passage through Switzerland Brum had never seen a mountain, and the thought of being among the highest mountains in Europe was thrilling Even Zillah's eyes could scarcely miss the mountains She painted them in broad strokes But they did not at all correspond to Brum's expectations of the Alps

"Don't you see glaciers?" he asked anxiously

"No," replied Zillah, but kept a sharp eye on the windows of passing chalets till the boy discovered that she was looking for glaciers at work

"Great masses of ice," he explained, "sliding down very slowly, and glittering like the bergs in the Polar regions"

"No, I see none," she said, blushing

"Ah! wait till we come to Mont Blanc"

Mont Blanc was an obsession, his geography was not minute enough to know that the route did not pass within sight of it He had expected it to dominate Switzerland as a cathedral spire dominates a little town

"Mont Blanc is 15,784 feet above the sea," he said voluptuously "Eternal snow is on its top, but you will not see that, because it is above the clouds"

"It is, then, in heaven," said Zillah

"God is there," replied Brum gravely, and burst out with Coleridge's lines from his school-book

"God! let the torrents, like a shout of nations,
Answer! and let the ice-plains echo, God!
God! sing ye meadow-streams with gladsome voice
Ye pine-groves, with your soft and soul-like sounds!
And they, too, have a voice, yon piles of snow,
And in their perilous fall shall thunder God!"

"Who openest the eyes of the blind," murmured Zillah

"There are five torrents rushing down also," added Brum "'And you, ye five wild torrents fiercely glad' You'll recognise Mont Blanc by that Don't you see them yet, mother?"

"Wait, I think I see them coming"

Presently she announced Mont Blanc definitely, described it with glaciers and torrents and its top reaching to God

Brum's face shone

"Poor lamb! I may as well give him Mont Blanc," she thought tenderly.

XIV

Endless other quaint dialogues passed between mother and son on that tedious and harassing journey southwards.

"There'll be no more snow when we get to Italy," Brum explained. "Italy's the land of beauty—always sunshine and blue sky. It's the country of the old gods—Venus, the goddess of beauty, Juno, with her peacocks, Jupiter, with his thunderbolts, and lots of others"

"But I thought the Pope was a Christian," said Zillah

"So he is. It was long ago, before people believed in Christianity"

"But then they were all Jews"

"Oh no, mother. There were Pagan gods that people used to believe in at Rome and in Greece. In Greece, though, these gods changed their names"

"So!" said Zillah scornfully, "I suppose they wanted to have a fresh chance. And what's become of them now?"

"They weren't over there, not really"

"And yet people believed in them? Is it possible?" Zillah clucked her tongue with contemptuous surprise. Then she murmured mechanically, 'Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, who openest the eyes of the blind' "

"Well, and what do people believe in now? The Pope!" Brum reminded her. "And yet he's not true"

Zillah's heart sank. "But he's really there," she protested feebly

"Oh yes, he's there, because pilgrims come from all parts of the world to get his blessing"

Her hopes revived

"But they wouldn't come unless he really did them good"

"Well, if you argue like that, mother, you might as well say we ought to believe in Christ"

"Hush! hush!" The forbidden word jarred on Zillah. She felt chilled and silenced. She had to call up the image of the Irish Fire-Woman to restore herself to confidence. It was clear Brum must not be told, his unfaith might spoil all. No, the deception must be kept up till his eyes were opened—in more than one sense

XV

After Mont Blanc, Brum's great interest was the leaning tower of Pisa. "It is one of the wonders of the world," he said, "there are seven altogether!"

"Yes, it is a wonderful world," said Zillah; "I never thought about it before"

And, in truth, Italy was beginning to touch sleeping chords. The cypresses, the sunset on the mountains, the white towns dozing on the hills under the magical blue sky—all these broad manifestations of an obvious beauty, under the spur of Brum's incessant interrogatory, began to penetrate. Nature in unusual combinations spoke to her as its habitual phenomena had never done. Her replies to Brum did rough justice to Italy.

Florence recalled Romola to the boy. He told his mother about Savonarola. "He was burned!"

"What!" cried Zillah. "Burn a Christian! No wonder, then, they burned Jews. But why?"

"He wanted the people to be good. All good people suffer."

"Oh, nonsense, Brum! It is the bad who suffer."

Then she looked at his wasted, white face, grown thinner with the weariness of the long journey through perpetual night, and wonder at her own words struck her silent.

XVI

They arrived at last in the Eternal City, having taken a final run of many hours without a break. But the Pope was still to seek.

Leaving the exhausted Brum in bed, Zillah drove the first morning to the Vatican, where Brum said he lived, and asked to see him.

A glittering Swiss Guard stared blankly at her, and directed her by dumb show to follow the stream of people—the pilgrims, Zillah told herself. She was made to scrawl her name, and, thanking God that she had acquired that accomplishment, she went softly up a gorgeous flight of steps, and past awe-inspiring creatures in tufted helmets, into the Sistine Chapel, where she wondered at people staring ceilingwards through opera-glasses, or looking downwards into little mirrors. Zillah also stared up through the gloom till she had a crick in the neck, but saw no sign of the Pope. She inquired of the janitor whether he was the Pope, and realised that English was, after all, not the universal language. She returned gloomily to see after Brum, and to consider her plan of campaign.

"The great doctor was not at home," she said. "We must wait a little."

"And yet you made us hurry so through everything," grumbled Brum.

Brum remained in bed, while Zillah went to get some lunch in the dining-room. A richly dressed old lady who sat near her noticed that she was eating Lenten fare, like herself, and, assuming her a fellow-Catholic, spoke to her in foreign-sounding English about the blind boy whose arrival she had observed.

Zillah asked her how one could get to see the Pope, and the old lady told her it was very difficult.

"Ah, those blessed old times before 1870!—ah, the splendid ceremonies in St Peter's! Do you remember them?"

Zillah shook her head. The old lady's assumption of spiritual fellowship made her uneasy.

But St Peter's stuck in her mind. Brum had already told her it was the Pope's house of prayer. Clearly, therefore, it was only necessary to loiter about there with Brum to chance upon him and extort his compassionate withdrawal of the spell of the Evil Eye. With a culminating inspiration she bought a photograph of the Pope, and overcoming the first shock of hereditary repulsion at the sight of the large pendent crucifix at his breast, she studied carefully the Pontiff's face and the Papal robes.

Then, when Brum declared himself strong enough to get up, they drove to St Peter's, the instruction being given quietly to the driver so that Brum should not overhear it.

It was the first time Zillah had ever been in a cathedral, and the vastness and glory of it swept over her almost as a reassuring sense of a greater God than she had worshipped in dingy synagogues. She walked about solemnly, leading Brum by the hand, her breast swelling with suppressed sobs of hope. Her eyes roved everywhere, searching for the Pope, but at moments she well-nigh forgot her disappointment at his absence in the wonder and ghostly comfort of the great dim spaces, and in the mysterious twinkle of the countless lights before the bronze canopy with its golden-flashing columns.

"Where are we, mother?" said Brum at last.

"We are waiting for the doctor."

"But where?"

"In the waiting-room."

"It seems very large, mother."

"No, I am walking round and round."

"There is a strange smell, mother—I don't know what—something religious."

" Oh, nonsense ! " She laughed uneasily

" I know what it smells like cold marble pillars and warm coloured windows "

Her blood froze at such uncanny sensibility

" It is the smell of the medicines," she murmured Somehow his divination made it more difficult to confess to him

" It feels like being in St Paul's or the Abbey," he persisted, " when I used to shut my eyes to hear the organ better " He had scarcely ceased speaking, when a soft, slow music began to thrill with life the great stone spaces

Brum's grasp tightened convulsively a light leapt into the blind face Both came to a standstill, silent In Zillah's breast rapture made confusion more confounded, and as this pealing grandeur, swelling more passionately, uplifted her high as the mighty Dome, she forgot everything—even the need of explanation to Brum—in this wonderful sense of a Power that could heal, and her Hebrew benediction flowed out into sobbing speech

" ' Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, who openest the eyes of the blind ' "

But Brum had fainted, and hung heavy on her arm

XVII

When Brum awoke, in bed again, after his long fainting-fit, he related with surprise his vivid dream of St Paul's, and Zillah weakly acquiesced in the new deception, especially as the doctor warned her against exciting the boy But her hopes were brighter than ever, for the old lady had beneficently appeared from behind a pillar in St Peter's to offer Eau de Cologne for the unconscious Brum, and had then, interesting herself in the couple, promised to procure for her fellow-Catholics admission to the next Papal reception Being a very rich and fashionable old lady, she kept her word, but unfortunately, when the day came round, Brum was terribly low and forbidden to leave his bed

Zillah was distracted If she should miss the great chance after all ! It might never recur again

" Brum," she said at last, " this is the only day for a long time that the great eye-doctor receives patients Do you think you could go, my lamb ? "

"Why won't he come here—like the other doctors?"

"He is too great"

"Well, I daresay I can manage It's miserable lying in bed. Fancy coming to Rome and seeing nothing!"

With infinite care Brum was dressed and wrapped up, and placed in a specially comfortable brougham, and thus at last mother and son stood waiting in one of the ante-chambers of the Vatican, amid twenty other pilgrims whispering in strange languages. Zillah was radiantly assured the mighty Power, whatever it was, that spoke in music and in mountains, would never permit such weary journeyings and waitings to end in the old darkness. the malice of witches could not prevail against this great spirit of sunshine For Brum, too, the long pilgrimage had enveloped the doctor with a miraculous glamour as of an eighth wonder of the world

Drooping wearily on his mother's arm, but wrought up to joyous anticipation, Brum had an undoubting sense of the patient crowd around him waiting, as in his old hospital days, for admission to the doctor's sanctum His ear was strung for the ting-ting of the bell summoning the sufferers one by one

At last a wave of awe swept over the little fashionable gathering, and set Zillah's heart thumping and the room fading in mist, through which the tall, venerable, robed figure, the eagle features softened in benediction, gleamed like a god's Then she found herself on her knees, with Brum at her side, and the wonderful figure passing between two rows of reverent pilgrims

"Why must I kneel, mother?" murmured Brum feebly

"Hush! hush!" she whispered "The great doc——" she hesitated in awe of the venerable figure—"the great healer is here."

"The great healer!" breathed Brum His face was transfigured with ecstatic forevision "'Who openeth the eyes of the blind,'" he murmured as he fell forward in death:

BEATRICE HARRADEN

B. 1864

AN IDYLL OF LONDON

IT was one o'clock, and many of the students in the National Gallery had left off work, and were refreshing themselves with lunch and conversation. There was one old worker who had not stirred from his place, but he had put down his brush, and had taken from his pocket a small book, which was, like its owner, thin and shabby of covering. He seemed to find pleasure in reading it, for he turned over its pages with all the tenderness characteristic of one who loves what he reads. Now and again he glanced at his unfinished copy of the beautiful portrait of Andrea del Sarto, and once his eyes rested on another copy next to his, better and truer than his, and once he stooped to pick up a girl's prune-coloured tie which had fallen from the neighbouring easel. After this he seemed to become unconscious of his surroundings, as unconscious indeed as any one of the pictures near him. Any one might have been justified in mistaking him for the portrait of a man, but that his lips moved, for it was his custom to read softly to himself.

The students passed back to their places, not troubling to notice him, because they knew from experience that he never noticed them, and that all greetings were wasted on him, and all words were wanton expenditure of breath. They had come to regard him very much in the same way as many of us regard the wonders of Nature, without astonishment, without any questionings, and often without any interest. One girl, a new-comer, did chance to say to her companion

"How ill that old man looks!"

"Oh, he always looks like that," was the answer. "You will soon get accustomed to him. Come along! I must finish my 'Blind Beggar' this afternoon."

In a few minutes most of the workers were busy again, although there were some who continued to chat quietly, and several young men who seemed reluctant to leave their girl-friends, and who were by no means encouraged to go! One young man came to claim his book and pipe, which he had left in the charge of a bright-eyed girl, who was copying Sir Joshua's Angels. She gave him his treasures, and received in exchange a dark-red rose, which she fastened in her belt, and then he returned to his portrait of Mrs Siddons. But there was something in his disconsolate manner which made one suspect that he thought less of Mrs Siddons's beauty than of the beauty of the girl who was wearing the dark-red rose! The strangers strolling through the rooms stopped now and again to peer curiously at the students' work. They were stared at indignantly by the students themselves, but they made no attempt to move away, and even ventured sometimes to pass criticisms of no tender character on some of the copies. The fierce-looking man who was copying "The Horse-Fair" deliberately put down his brushes, folded his arms, and waited defiantly until they had gone by, but others, wiser in their generation, went on painting calmly. Several workers were painting the new Raphael—one of them was a white-haired old gentlewoman, whose hand was trembling, and yet skilful still. More than once she turned to give a few hints to the young girl near her, who looked in some distress and doubt. Just the needful help was given, and then the girl plied her brush merrily, smiling the while with pleasure and gratitude. There seemed to be a genial, kindly influence at work, a certain homeliness too, which must needs assert itself where many are gathered together, working side by side. All made a harmony—the wonderful pictures collected from many lands and many centuries, each with its meaning, and its message from the Past—the ever-present memories of the painters themselves, who had worked and striven and conquered—and the living human beings, each with his wealth of earnest endeavour and hope.

Meanwhile, the old man read on uninterruptedly, until two hands were put over his book, and a gentle voice said

"Mr Lindall, you have had no lunch again. Do you know, I begin to hate Lucretius. He always makes you forget your food."

The old man looked up, and something like a smile passed over his joyless face when he saw Helen Stanley bending over him.

"Ah!" he answered, "you must not hate Lucretius. I have had more pleasant hours with him than with any living person."

He rose, and came forward to examine her copy of Andrea del Sarto's portrait.

"Yours is better than mine," he said critically, "in fact, mine is a failure I think I shall only get a small price for mine, indeed, I doubt whether I shall get sufficient to pay for my funeral "

" You speak dismally," she answered, smiling

" I missed you yesterday," he continued, half-dreamily " I left my work, and I wandered through the rooms, and I did not even read Lucretius Something seemed to have gone from my life at first I thought it must be my favourite Raphael, or the Murillo, but it was neither the one nor the other, it was you That was strange, wasn't it? But you know we get accustomed to anything, and perhaps I should have missed you less the second day, and by the end of a week I should not have missed you at all Mercifully, we have in us the power of forgetting "

" I do not wish to plead for myself," she said, " but I do not believe that you or any one could really forget That which outsiders call forgetfulness might be called by the better name of resignation "

" I don't care about talking any more now," he said suddenly, and he went to his easel and worked silently at his picture and Helen Stanley glanced at him, and thought she had never seen her old companion look so forlorn and desolate as he did to-day He looked as if no gentle hand had ever been placed on him in kindness and affection, and that seemed to her a terrible thing, for she was one of those prehistorically-minded persons who persist in believing that affection is as needful to human life as rain to flower-life When first she came to work at the Gallery, some twelve months ago, she had noticed this old man, and had wished for his companionship she was herself lonely and sorrowful, and, although young, had to fight her own battles, and had learnt something of the difficulties of fighting, and this had given her an experience beyond her years She was not more than twenty-four years of age, but she looked rather older, and though she had beautiful eyes, full of meaning and kindness, her features were decidedly plain as well as unattractive There were some in the Gallery who said amongst themselves jestingly, that as Mr Lindall had waited so many years before talking to any one, he might have chosen some one better worth the waiting for! But they soon became accustomed to seeing Helen Stanley and Mr. Lindall together, and they laughed less than before, and meanwhile the acquaintance ripened into a sort of friendship, half sulky on his part, and wholly kind on her part He told her nothing about himself, and he asked nothing about herself: for weeks he never even knew her name Sometimes he did not speak at all, and the two friends would work silently side by side until it was time to go, and then he waited until she was ready, and walked with her across Trafalgar Square, where they parted and went their own ways

But occasionally, when she least expected it, he would speak with glowing enthusiasm on art then his eyes seemed to become bright, and his bent figure more erect, and his whole bearing proud and dignified There were times, too, when he would speak on other subjects on the morality of free-thought, and on those who had died to vindicate free-thought; on Bruno, of blessed memory, on him, and scores of others too He would speak of the different schools of philosophy, he would laugh at himself, and at all who, having given time and thought to the study of life's complicated problems, had not reached one step farther than the old-world thinkers Perhaps he would quote one of his favourite philosophers, and then suddenly relapse into silence, returning to his wonted abstraction, and to his indifference to his surroundings Helen Stanley had learnt to understand his ways, and to appreciate his mind, and, without intruding on him in any manner, had put herself gently into his life, as his quiet champion and his friend No one, in her presence, dared to speak slightly of the old man, or to make fun of his tumble-down appearance, or of his worn-out silk hat with a crack in the side, or of his rag of a black tie, which, together with his overcoat, had "seen better days" Once she brought her needle and thread, and darned the torn sleeve during her lunch-time, and though he never knew it, it was a satisfaction to her to have helped him

To-day she noticed that he was painting badly, and that he seemed to take no interest in his work, but she went on busily with her own picture, and was so engrossed in it that she did not at first observe that he had packed up his brushes, and was preparing to go home

"Three more strokes," he said quietly, "and you will have finished your picture I shall never finish mine Perhaps you will be good enough to set it right for me I am not coming here again I don't seem to have caught the true expression what do you think? But I am not going to let it worry me, for I am sure you will promise to do your best for me See, I will hand over these colours and these brushes to you, and no doubt you will accept the palette as well I have no further use for it"

Helen Stanley took the palette which he held out towards her, and looked at him as though she would wish to question him

"It is very hot here," he continued, "and I am going out I am tired of work"

He hesitated, and then added "I should like you to come with me, if you can spare the time"

She packed up her things at once, and the two friends moved slowly away, he gazing absently at the pictures, and she wondering in her mind as to the meaning of his strange mood

When they were on the steps inside the building, he turned to Helen Stanley and said

"I should like to go back to the pictures once more I feel as if I must stand amongst them just a little longer They have been my companions for so long that they are almost part of myself I can close my eyes and recall them faithfully But I want to take a last look at them, I want to feel once more the presence of the great masters, and to refresh my mind with their genius When I look at their work, I think of their life, and can only wonder at their death It was so strange that they should die"

They went back together, and he took her to his favourite pictures, but remained speechless before them, and she did not disturb his thoughts At last he said

"I am ready to go I have said farewell to them all I know of nothing more wonderful than being amongst a number of fine pictures It is almost overwhelming One expects Nature to be grand, but one does not expect Man to be grand"

"You know we don't agree there," she answered "I expect everything grand and great from Man"

They went out of the Gallery, and into Trafalgar Square It was a scorching afternoon in August, but there was some cooling comfort in seeing the dancing water of the fountains sparkling so brightly in the sunshine

"Do you mind stopping here a few minutes?" he said "I should like to sit down and watch There is so much to see"

She led the way to a seat, one end of which was occupied by a workman, who was sleeping soundly, and snoring too, his arms folded tightly together He had a little clay pipe in the corner of his mouth it seemed to be tucked in so snugly that there was not much danger of its falling to the ground At last Helen spoke to her companion.

"What do you mean by saying that you will not be able to finish your picture? Perhaps you are not well—indeed, you don't look well. You make me anxious, for I have a great regard for you."

"I am ill and suffering," he answered quietly. "I thought I should have died yesterday, but I made up my mind to live until I saw you again, and I thought I would ask you to spend the afternoon with me, and to go with me to Westminster Abbey, and sit with me in the Cloisters. I do not feel able to go by myself, and I know of no one to ask except you, and I believed you would not refuse me, for you have been very kind to me. I do not quite understand why you have been kind to me, but I am wonderfully grateful to you. To-day I heard some one in the Gallery say that you were plain. I turned round and I said, 'I beg your pardon, I think she is very beautiful.' I think they laughed, and that puzzled me, for you have always seemed to me a very beautiful person."

At that moment the little clay pipe fell from the workman's mouth, and was broken into bits. He awoke with a start, gazed stupidly at the old man and his companion, and at the broken clay pipe.

"Curse my luck!" he said, yawning. "I was fond of that damned little pipe."

The old man drew his own pipe and his own tobacco-pouch from his pocket.

"Take these, stranger," he said. "I don't want them. And good luck to you!"

The man's face brightened up as he took the pipe and pouch.

"You're uncommon kind," he said. "Can you spare them?" he added, holding them out half-reluctantly.

"Yes," answered the old man, "I shall not smoke again. You may as well have these matches too."

The labourer put them in his pocket, smiled his thanks, and walked some little distance off, and Helen watched him examine his new pipe, and then fill it with tobacco and light it.

Mr Lindall proposed that they should be getting on their way to Westminster, and they soon found themselves in the Abbey. They sat together in the Poet's Corner. A smile of quiet happiness broke over the old man's tired face as he looked around and took in all the solemn beauty and grandeur of the resting-place of the great.

"You know," he said, half to himself, half to his companion, "I have no belief of any kind, and no hopes and no fears, but all through my life it has been a comfort to me to sit quietly in a church or a cathedral. The graceful arches, the sun shining through the stained windows, the vaulted roof, the noble columns, have helped me to understand the mystery which all our books of philosophy cannot make clear, though we bend over them year after year, and grow old over them, old in age and in spirit. Though I myself have never been outwardly a worshipper, I have never sat in a place of worship but that, for the time being, I have felt a better man. But directly the voice of doctrine or dogma was raised, the spell was broken for me, and that which I hoped was being made clear, had no further meaning for me. There was only one voice which ever helped me, the voice of the organ arousing me, thrilling me, filling me with strange longing, with welcome sadness, with solemn gladness. I have always thought that music can give an answer when everything else is of no avail. I do not know what you believe."

"I am so young to have found out," she said almost pleadingly.

"Don't worry yourself," he answered kindly. "Be brave and strong, and let the rest go. I should like to live long enough to see what you will make of your life. I believe you will never be false to yourself or to any one. That is rare. I believe you will not let any lower ideal take the place of your high ideal of what is beautiful and noble in art, in life. I believe that you will never let despair get the upper hand of you. If it does, you may as well die, yes, you may as well die. And I entreat you not to lose your entire faith in humanity. There is nothing like that for withering up the very core of the heart. I tell you, humanity and nature have so much in common with each other, that if you lose your entire faith in the former, you will lose part of your pleasure in the latter, you will see less beauty in the trees, the flowers, and the fields, less grandeur in the mighty mountains and the sea. The seasons will come and go, and you will scarcely heed their coming and going. Winter will settle over your soul just as it settled over mine. And you see what I am."

They had now passed into the Cloisters, and they sat down in one of the recesses of the windows, and looked out upon the rich plot of grass which the Cloisters enclose. There was not a soul there except themselves. The cool and the quiet and the beauty of the spot refreshed these pilgrims, and they rested in calm enjoyment.

Helen was the first to break the silence.

"I am glad you have brought me here," she said; "I shall never grumble now at not being able to afford a fortnight in the country. This is better than anything else "

" It has always been my summer holiday to come here," he said. " When I first came I was like you, young and hopeful, and I had wonderful visions of what I intended to do and to be. Here it was I made a vow that I would become a great painter, and win for myself a resting-place in this very Abbey. There is humour in the situation, is there not ? "

" I don't like to hear you say that," she answered. " It is not always possible for us to fulfil all our ambitions. Still, it is better to have had them, and failed of them, than not to have had them at all. "

" Possibly," he replied coldly. Then he added " I wish you would tell me something about yourself. You have always interested me. "

" I have nothing to tell you about myself," she answered frankly. " I am alone in the world, without friends and without relations. The very name I use is not a real name. I was a foundling. At times I am sorry I do not belong to any one, and at other times I am glad. You know I am fond of books and of art, so my life is not altogether empty, and I find my pleasure in hard work. When I saw you at the Gallery, I wished to know you, and I asked one of the students who you were. He told me you were a misanthrope. Then I did not care so much about knowing you, until one day you spoke to me about my painting, and that was the beginning of our friendship. "

" Forty years ago," he said sadly, " the friend of my boyhood deceived me. I had not thought it possible that he could be false to me. He screened himself behind me, and became prosperous and respected, at the expense of my honour. I vowed I would never again make a friend. A few years later, when I was beginning to hold up my head, the woman whom I loved deceived me. Then I put from me all affection and all love. Greater natures than mine are better able to bear these troubles, but my heart contracted and withered up. "

He paused for a moment, many recollections overpowering him. Then he went on telling her the history of his life, unfolding to her the story of his hopes and ambitions, describing to her the very home where he was born, and the dark-eyed sister whom he had loved, and with whom he had played, over the daisied fields, and through the carpeted woods, and all amongst the richly-tinted bracken. One day he was told she was dead, and that he must never speak her name, but he spoke it all the day and all the night—Beryl, nothing but Beryl, and he looked for her in the fields, and in the woods, and amongst the bracken. It seemed as if he had unlocked the casket of his heart, closed for so many years, and as if all the memories of the past and all the secrets of his life were rushing out, glad to be free once more, and grateful for the open air of sympathy.

"Beryl was as swift as a deer!" he exclaimed. "You would have laughed to see her on the moor. Ah! it was hard to give up all thoughts of meeting her again. They told me I should see her in heaven, but I did not care about heaven. I wanted Beryl on earth, as I knew her, a merry, laughing sister. I think you are right. We don't forget, we become resigned in a dead, dull kind of way."

Suddenly he said, "I don't know why I have told you all this. And yet it has been such a pleasure to me. You are the only person to whom I could have spoken about myself, for no one else but you would have cared."

"Don't you think," she said gently, "that you made a mistake in letting your experiences embitter you? Because you had been unlucky in one or two instances, it did not follow that all the world was against you. Perhaps you unconsciously put yourself against all the world, and therefore saw every one in an unfavourable light. It seems so easy to do that. Trouble comes to most people, doesn't it?—and your philosophy should have taught you to make the best of it. At least that is my notion of the value of philosophy."

She spoke hesitatingly, as though she gave utterance to these words against her will.

"I am sure you are right, child," he said eagerly.

He put his hands to his eyes, but he could not keep back the tears.

"I have been such a lonely old man," he sobbed, "no one can tell what a lonely, loveless life mine has been. If I were not so old and so tired, I should like to begin all over again."

He sobbed for many minutes, and she did not know what to say to him of comfort, but she took his hand within her own and gently caressed it, as one might do to a little child in pain. He looked up and smiled through his tears.

"You have been very good to me," he said, "and I daresay you have thought me ungrateful. You mended my coat for me one morning, and not a day has passed but that I have looked at the darn and thought of you I liked to remember that you had done it for me. But you have done far more than this for me, you have put some sweetness into my life. Whatever becomes of me hereafter, I shall never be able to think of my life on earth as anything but beautiful, because you thought kindly of me, and acted kindly for me. The other night, when this terrible pain came over me, I wished you were near me, I wished to hear your voice. There is very beautiful music in your voice."

Russell

Beatrix Hammon

"I would have come to you gladly," she said, smiling quietly at him. "You must make a promise that when you feel ill again you will send for me. Then you will see what a splendid nurse I am, and how soon you will become strong and well under my care, strong enough to paint many more pictures, each one better than the last. Now, will you promise?"

"Yes," he said, and he raised her hand reverently to his lips.

"You are not angry with me for doing that?" he asked suddenly. "I should not like to vex you."

"I am not vexed," she answered kindly.

"Then perhaps I may kiss it once more?" he asked.

"Yes," she answered, and again he raised her hand to his lips.

"Thank you," he said quietly, "that was kind of you. Do you see that broken sun-ray yonder? Is it not golden? I find it very pleasant to sit here, and I am quite happy, and almost free from pain. Lately I have been troubled with a dull, thudding pain near my heart, but now I feel so strong that I believe I shall finish that Andrea del Sarto after all."

"Of course you will," she answered cheerily, "and I shall have to confess that yours is better than mine! I am quite willing to yield the palm to you."

"I must alter the expression of the mouth," he replied. "That is the part which has worried me. I don't think I told you that I have had a commission to copy Rembrandt's Old Jew. I must set to work on that next week."

"But you have given me your palette and brushes!" she laughed.

"You must be generous enough to lend them to me," he said, smiling. "By the way, I intend to give you my books, all of them. Some day I must show them to you. I especially value my philosophical books, they have been my faithful companions through many years. I believe you do not read Greek. That is a pity, because you would surely enjoy Aristotle. I think I must teach you Greek " it would be an agreeable legacy to leave you when I pass away into the Great Silence "

" I should like to learn," she said, wondering to hear him speak so unreservedly. It seemed as if some vast barrier had been rolled aside, and as if she were getting to know him better, having been allowed to glance into his past life, to sympathise with his past mistakes, and with the failure of his ambitions, and with the deadening of his heart.

" You must read Æschylus," he continued enthusiastically, " and, if I mistake not, the ' Agamemnon ' will be an epoch in your life. You will find that all these studies will serve to ennoble your art, and you will be able to put mind into your work, and not merely form and colour. Do you know, I feel so well, that I believe I shall not only live to finish Andrea del Sarto, but also to smoke another pipe ? "

" You have been too rash to-day," she laughed, " giving away your pipe and pouch, your palette and brushes, in this reckless manner ! I must get you a new pipe to-morrow. I wonder you did not part with your venerable Lucretius "

" That reminds me," he said, fumbling in his pocket, " I think I have dropped my Lucretius. I fancy I left it somewhere in the Poet's Corner. It would grieve me to lose that book "

" Let me go and look for it," she said, and she advanced a few steps and then came back to him.

" You have been saying many kind words to me," she said, as she put her hand on his arm, " and I have not told you that I value your friendship, and am grateful to you for letting me be more than a mere stranger to you. I have been very lonely in my life, for I am not one to make friends easily, and it has been a great privilege to me to talk with you. I want you to know this, for if I have been anything to you, you have been a great deal to me. I have never met with much sympathy from those of my own age. I have found them narrow and unyielding, and they found me dull and uninteresting. They had passed through few experiences, and knew nothing about failure or success, and some of them did not even understand the earnestness of endeavour, and laughed at me when I spoke of a high ideal. So I withdrew into myself, and should probably have grown still more isolated than I was before, but that I met you, and, as time went on, we became friends I shall always remember your teaching, and I will try to keep to a high ideal of life and art, and I will not let despair creep into my heart, and I will not lose my faith in humanity "

As she spoke, a lingering ray of sunshine lit up her face and gently caressed her soft brown hair slight though her form, and sombre her clothes, and unlovely her features, she seemed a gracious presence, because of her earnestness

"Now," she said brightly, "you rest here until I come back with your Lucretius, and then I think I must be getting on my way home But you must fix a time for our first Greek lesson ; for we must begin to-morrow "

When she had gone, he walked in the Cloisters, holding his hat in his hand and his stick under his arm There was a quiet smile on his face, which was called forth by pleasant thoughts in his mind, and he did not look quite so shrunken and shrivelled as usual His eyes were fixed on the ground , but he raised them and observed a white cat creeping towards him It came and rubbed itself against his foot, and purring with all its might, seemed determined to win some kind of notice from him The old man stooped down to stroke it, and was just touching its sleek coat, when he suddenly withdrew his hand and groaned deeply He struggled to the recess, and sank back The stick fell on the stone with a clatter, and the battered hat rolled down beside it, and the white cat fled away in terror , but realising that there was no cause for alarm, it came back and crouched near the silent figure of the old man, watching him intently Then it stretched out its paw and played with his hand, doing its utmost to coax him into a little fun , but he would not be coaxed, and the cat lost all patience with him, and left him to himself

Meanwhile Helen Stanley was looking for the lost Lucretius in the Poet's Corner She found it lying near Chaucer's tomb, and was just going to take it to her friend, when she saw the workman to whom they had spoken in Trafalgar Square. He recognised her at once, and came towards her.

"I've been having a quiet half-hour here," he said "It does me a right of good to sit in the Abbey "

"You should go into the Cloisters," she said kindly. "I have been sitting there with my friend He will be interested to hear that you love this beautiful Abbey."

" I should like to see him again," said the workman " He had a kind way about him, and that pipe he gave me is an uncommon good one Still, I am sorry I smashed the little clay pipe I'd grown used to it I'd smoked it ever since my little girl died and left me alone in the world I used to bring my little girl here, and now I come alone But it isn't the same thing "

" No, it could not be the same thing," said Helen, gently " But you find some little comfort here ? "

" Some little comfort," he answered " One can't expect much "

They went together into the Cloisters, and as they came near the recess where the old man rested, Helen said

" Why, he has fallen asleep ! He must have been very tired And he has dropped his hat and stick Thank you If you will put them down there, I will watch by his side until he wakes up I don't suppose he will sleep for long "

The workman stooped down to pick up the hat and stick, and glanced at the sleeper Something in the sleeper's countenance arrested his attention He turned to the girl, and saw that she was watching him

" What is it ? " she asked anxiously " What is the matter with you ? "

He tried to speak, but his voice failed him, and all he could do was to point with trembling hand to the old man

Helen looked, and a loud cry broke from her lips The old man was dead

BARRY PAIN

B. 1868

THE KINDNESS OF THE CELESTIAL

HIS real name was Cyprian Langsdyke, but that would have struck any one as being far too much of a name for the boy. He had a quaint Chinese look, due to his bright, narrow eyes, and in consequence he was generally known at Desford as The Celestial. He was much more athletic than he looked, was reputed to be clever but whimsical, and known to be unruly. He was in the Fifth, and just at present he was in a bad temper, for things had been going exceedingly wrong with The Celestial. He had just expressed, in simple language, a wish that he was dead, and had been asked for his reasons.

"I never get any luck nowadays, look at that." He pointed to a football list on the screens. "Peter Hill playing in my place, and me stuck in the scrum. Oh, yes! I'd expected that. I shall be kicked out altogether to-morrow, that's a bit of Tommy Hill's captaining, that is. I knew he'd give Peter a lift, I wonder he hasn't asked his blooming mother to play. However, I don't want any favouring. I want ordinary justice—not family influence, but ordinary justice. And you don't get that from Tommy Hill, nor from the old man, nor from Henry Reginald Liggers, M A—more especially Liggers. I have had a day with Liggers. I was about two seconds late for morning prep—row with Liggers. Then, when we got to work, I saw that fathead Smithson asleep on the other side of the table. So I spilt my ink, calculating that, the way the table sloped, it would run across and pour over Smithson, and wake him up. Liggers copped me, he didn't even take the trouble to ask why I spilt it—simply a hundred Greek, with accents. Going in to breakfast, I had a slight accident and fell up against Liggers, and he called me a clumsy lout. Morning school, he made me construe three-quarters of the Livy all to my own cheek, and never put on Douglas, nor Banks, nor that fathead Smithson at all, finding he couldn't pull me on the Livy, he tore up my prose and told me to do it again. In the afternoon, at footer, he amused himself by scragging me, and hacking me, and saying I was off-side when I wasn't."

"He can't play much," said Banks, meaning to be sympathetic, but speaking unadvisedly

"You complete chump!" replied The Celestial, scornfully "Of course he can play! He captained his college team, and he's better than any of the other masters by a long chalk There's no sense in saying that he can't play footer, but he spites me Coming up from footer, he saw me come out of Hunley's, so he said, 'You're always in there, Langsdyke, eating buns and chocolate and trash of that kind, you'll ruin your wind' I wasn't going to explain to him, but, as a matter of fact, I hadn't been eating anything I'd just had four bottles of ginger-beer, and that was all—not another thing Then, in afternoon school, he sent me out of the room for blowing my nose"

The Smithson to whom The Celestial had made uncomplimentary allusions giggled reminiscently "I own it made a row," continued The Celestial, with an air of judicial fairness "I don't deny it, but I didn't do it on purpose I never know when it's going to make that row and when it isn't And now its Liggers' prep, and I'm bound to get dropped on again Don't I wish I was in the Sixth and had a study to myself! You can get your work done in three-quarters of an hour, and then you have the other half of prep all to yourself to read novels in It's beastly working in that day-room with Liggers or some other master looking on all the time You don't get a chance to—to do anything However, if Liggers is going to be rough on me I'll be rough on him That's the prep. bell, so now for breezes!"

The little group dispersed During preparation that night there were more than breezes—there were hurricanes The Celestial retired to his cubicle at ten, resigned and philosophical There were two big dormitories in the School House at Desford, each containing twenty cubicles The partitions which formed the cubicles were about seven feet high and did not reach the ceiling, so conversation was possible, and was permitted until the lights were put out at half-past ten

"I'm going to give up being hard on Liggers," remarked The Celestial from his cubicle to the rest of the lower dormitory "It's played out A master can call you an idiot, and you can't call him anything back again, so he has the bulge It's no use being at war with Liggers I'm going on a different line"

"What are you going to do?" inquired Smithson from the next cubicle.

Smithson, generally addressed as "Fathead," was of the good-natured, fat, indolent, rather stupid type. He was entirely devoted to The Celestial, to whom he stood in the position of a humble serf

"I'm going to try kindness Now dry up, because I'm writing my lines, and the gas will be out directly "

When the gas was put out The Celestial removed the counterpane and one blanket from his bed and lay down He was in consequence only just warm enough to be able to go to sleep, and he calculated quite rightly that in a couple of hours the cold would wake him. The cold acted as a silent alarm As soon as he was awake he got out of bed and looked out of the window He was pleased to find that all the lights were out in the master's wing of the house Then he produced from his chest of drawers a bull's-eye lantern, which he lit and placed so that it would illuminate the head of his bed On the chair by the bedside he put his Homer, his writing-case, and two inkpots Then he put on a football jersey, an ulster, and a dressing-gown, and, sitting up in bed, began to write lines, taking the writing-case and the Homer on his knee He wrote these lines in the very highest style of calligraphy Greek looks very beautiful when it is beautifully written, and The Celestial looked upon his performance when he had finished with the eye of an artist. He numbered every fifth line in red ink, and wrote the following note at the head of the page

"NB—These lines have been correctly numbered in order to facilitate counting—C LANGSDYKE "

He could think of nothing else which would make the imposition look more artistic, so he got out of bed, put away his writing things, ate two cranberry tarts which he had brought from Hunley's to assist him in his midnight toil, and turned out the lantern Then he went back again to bed and slept like a tired dog

Yet was Mr Liggers not contented with that imposition "If I ever get any of this red-ink foolery from you again," he remarked, "you'll have to re-write—understand that, please" The Celestial sighed the sigh of Christian resignation, and as Mr Liggers was going out politely opened the door for him

That morning in school Mr. Liggers happened to crumple up a corrected prose in his hand and aim it at the waste-paper basket It just missed The Fifth were down at their desks at the time The Celestial rose from his place, stepped softly across the class-room picked up the little ball of paper, and carefully placed it in the very centre of the waste-paper basket. Then he looked round the room with perfect gravity and returned to his seat. The politeness was so excessive, so abnormal, and in The Celestial so unexpected, that the Fifth suffered—suffered badly from enforced suppression of their feelings. For a second or two the strict silence of the class-room continued, and then came a faint gurgling sound, as of one pouring water out of a bottle. It stopped abruptly, and an observer might have noticed that Smithson had gone purple in the face. Then the gurgling sound began again, it came quicker and louder and louder. Mr Liggers looked up from the prose that he was correcting and requested Smithson and Langsdyke to go out of the room.

"We've done it now," said Smithson. "I wonder what he'll do!"

"You've done it," said The Celestial, "I was only carrying out my plan and being polite to him. What did you laugh for?"

"If I hadn't laughed," said Smithson, sadly, "I believe I should have broken something inside me. It's awful. I never want to laugh except when I don't want to, and then I have to."

"Well," said The Celestial, "I'm going on being kind to the man. It's sure to move him in the end. Then he'll be sorry. I wonder if he likes cocoanuts?"

"Most people do. Where are you going to get them?"

"Market-place. There's a man comes in on Saturdays, and you have shies at them."

"But the market-place is out of bounds."

"I never said I wouldn't break any rules, Fathead. It's only Liggers I'm favouring."

"All right, I'm on!" said Smithson. "If we're copped, we're copped," he added fatalistically.

On the Saturday morning which followed, Mr Liggers put The Celestial on to translate Virgil. Now, The Celestial had taken particular trouble with his translation the night before, and on the rare occasions when The Celestial took trouble it became evident that he was a youth of some considerable promise. He had the beginnings of a poetical taste in him, of which he was very sincerely ashamed. His translation was not a marvellously brilliant piece of work, but it was good. He had a notion of style, and he had followed his master's example in translating Virgil into simple, rather archaic and Biblical English. Mr Liggers let him go on until he had translated the whole lesson, and then said icily, "Thank you—that will do" He gave The Celestial full marks for the translation, however, and Mr. Liggers very rarely gave full marks But The Celestial had no means of discovering what marks he had got, and in any case would have preferred a word or two of praise

"That was an awful swagger construe of yours," remarked the sympathetic Banks to The Celestial afterwards, "but Liggers didn't say much, did he?"

Before The Celestial could reply Mr Liggers touched him on the shoulder and asked him if he would play fives Now, fives was the game at which The Celestial particularly excelled, and Mr Liggers was rather a new hand at it But The Celestial thanked him, and presently they met at the fives-court Mr Liggers won the first game easily, and looked suspicious He was winning the second rather more easily when he stopped suddenly

"We'll finish this some time when you aren't sulking, Langsdyke I don't want any of your condescensions When I want you to let me win I'll tell you"

The Celestial said nothing, but politely handed Mr Liggers his coat In taming Mr Liggers it was obvious that considerable patience would be necessary

"Fathead," said The Celestial when he had found the devoted Smithson, "meet me after footer at Dow's Lane, and we'll go for those cocoanuts I'm going to give him three days' more kindness, he's trying, but I may get him in hand yet." Dow's Lane was the short cut to the market-place, both were out of bounds, and Dow's Lane was a peculiarly unsavoury, unsanitary, disease-producing place. But Smithson never thought of refusing, where his great patron The Celestial went, Smithson followed like a faithful dog

Late that afternoon the two returned from their expedition. The Celestial walked a little in advance—radiant, triumphant, behind him came the humble Smithson, bearing four cocoanuts—won by The Celestial at a cost of fivepence

"There's one for you, Fathead," remarked The Celestial when they had got up to the Schoolhouse, "and one for me, and two for a peace-offering on the altar of Liggers. Go and borrow Douglas's gimlet and get the gravy out of the inwards of our two I'm going upstairs to Liggers' study with the peace-offering"

"He is such a corker, you know," remarked Smithson to Douglas when The Celestial had disappeared " I'm blest if I know whether he's rotting Liggers or whether he isn't But, my lord, he can shy ! Four in five shots isn't so dusty "

The Celestial found Mr Liggers in his study, and remarked gravely that he had brought him two cocoanuts Mr Liggers almost smiled, and his manner approached geniality

" Come now, Langsdyke, that's very good of you, but you mustn't let me deprive the senior day-room of its desirable indigestion Suppose you leave one of them and take the other away with you Where did you get them ? "

The question was not in the least inquisitorial , Mr Liggers had expected that the answer would be " At Hunley's " The dialogue which followed illustrates the state of The Celestial's ethics, which were erratic, but had something rather fine about them

" I shied for them in the market-place, sir " (The Celestial would never lie to save himself )

The geniality vanished at once from Mr Liggers's manner " You know that the market-place is out of bounds. Which way did you go to it ? "

" By Dow's Lane, sir "

" Which also is out of bounds "

" Yes, sir "

" Did any one go with you ? "

" No " (The Celestial would always lie to save any one else )

" Not Smithson ? "

" No, sir , I went alone "

" Take these things away I will tell you on Monday afternoon what your punishment will be , you have broken a most important rule You have gone a little too far this time I am sorry for you, but I am afraid that this will mean expulsion Now go away "

The Celestial went down again to the day-room, where he found Smithson and some others engaged in extracting the milk from the nuts with a gimlet

" Cocoanuts are cheap to-day," observed The Celestial " Liggers can't eat them , they're too rich for his poor stomach So he bade me bestow them on the bilious Banks and the debilitated Douglas Give me to drink of the gravy of the cocoanut " He seemed to be in particularly high and whimsical spirits, and drained the tooth-mug proffered to him with a fine melodramatic air " Now, then," he said,

"I've got three blessed shillings Let us go to Hunley's and drink and eat cranberry tarts, for the day after to-morrow we die—at least, I do "

Smithson knew there was something wrong, and privately inquired what it was.

"I fancy," said The Celestial, meditatively, "that I've about come to the end of the string, and now you can dry up, Fathead. You'll hear all the rest of it soon enough "

But late on the Sunday evening following, moved perhaps by the sentimentality inspired by the music of the evening service and the lateness of the hour, he told the faithful Smithson everything "For myself," he said, "I don't care With Tommy Hill to captain the footer and Liggers to make your life miserable in the Fifth, the sooner I'm out of Desford the better But my people will be sick—that's what I'm thinking about "

"Look here," said Smithson, half angrily, "I won't stand it I—I'm damned if I want to get off and see you sacked I was in it every bit as much as you were, and I'm going to say so ! "

"If you say one single word about it," answered The Celestial, "I'll punch your fat head off and never speak to you again Dry up and keep quiet and do as you're told "

When on Monday afternoon Mr Liggers came downstairs with bad news for The Celestial he found the boy seated on the stack of hot-water pipes and wrapped up in two overcoats

"Langsdyke," he said coldly, "I have considered your case, and I see no reason for treating you with any leniency I shall therefore—" he stopped suddenly as he saw the boy's flushed face and feverish eyes "Why," he asked, in quite a different voice, "what's the matter with you, Langsdyke? Are you ill ? "

"It isn't anything, sir," answered The Celestial a little excitedly "It's just an ordinary sort of cold I'm shivering one moment and swea— awfully hot the next, and my head aches fit to split Couldn't I take out my punishment in canings, sir, or partly canings and partly lnes? I don't want to beg off anything—only, you see, it's not so much for me as the mater that'll feel it if I—"

Mr Liggers interrupted him, and he had lost all his beautiful magisterial manner "That's all right, old man, don't you fret yourself You're not going to be expelled Now run off to the sick-room at once and say I sent you, and don't dream of coming to school this afternoon We'll forget all about that punishment, I think I'm sorry you're ill "

The Celestial thanked him and climbed upstairs to the sick-room " I'm bad, Mrs Carter," he said to the matron, " and Liggers says I'm to stop here " And then this curious youth, who would have received the news of his expulsion with dry eyes, bent his head in his hands and burst into tears

" Poor dear ! " said the motherly Mrs Carter, " you must be ill to take on like that "

In the meantime Mr Liggers, who knew something of the condition of Dow's Lane, had hurried off to fetch a doctor On the following day the rest of the school knew that The Celestial was ill with scarlet fever, and had been removed to the sanatorium

On the following night, in Mr Liggers's sitting-room, the mathematical master, Mr Dunham, was giving Mr Liggers a piece of his mind

" I tell you I was in the dormitory passage myself, and overheard it , and I'll swear he only meant to be decent to you Of course, he blundered and overdid it and was whimsical about it—being a boy and not a prig—and would not let the others know that he really meant it , but he did mean it I know Langsdyke, and, I tell you, he's as plucky as a man, and proud of it—and as sensitive as a girl, and ashamed of it Look at that Virgil construe of his that you told me about Do you suppose a boy takes the trouble to prepare work like that unless he means to be kind to a master ? There isn't another boy in the Fifth, by the way, who could have rendered in optato alveo by ' in the haven where they fain would be ' I tell you that he's a clever fellow and a good fellow, and that you've consistently ill-treated and misunderstood him "

" I'm ashamed of myself, Dunham I always liked the boy really but I didn't want the others to say that I favoured him , and perhaps I——"

At this point there was a knock at the door, and the Fathead Smithson appeared in an agitated condition

" Please, sir, I was with The Celest—— with Langsdyke in Dow's Lane the other day, when he said I wasn't—to get me off And I'd sooner be expelled than Langsdyke, because I've only got an uncle, and he doesn't care much , -and Langsdyke's ill, you see, and it mightn't be good for him, and he'll knock my head off if he hears about it But I thought as long as one of us was expelled——"

"Go away!" said Mr Liggers, irritably "No one's going to be expelled Don't make a fool of yourself. I say, Dunham," he added when Smithson had withdrawn, "I say—damn it all—this is rather touching, you know"

The following is an extract from a fumigated letter which The Celestial wrote to his sister Madge during the period of his convalescence

"Well, severity didn't do him, no more did kindness, but illness has made him just proper He brought me books and things and came to inquire about me every day And now that term's over he has stopped on and risked infection by keeping me company in the sanatorium. So I said to him last night, 'If you'll tell me what you like next term, I'll do it, sir, because you're too good a sort to have rows with.' And he said, 'So are you, old man.' So that'll be all right"

BERNARD CAPES
1864-1918

THE HERO OF WATERLOO

COLONEL MANTON put up his rod and demanded to be set ashore. It had been his first experience of coarse fishing on the river and it had not proved to his taste. It was not that the perch had been distant or the chub unapproachable. On the contrary, the place having been ground-baited overnight, the sport had been excellent. It was the worms and one other thing which decided him. He had been present at Talavera, at Ciudad Rodrigo, at Badajoz, at Vittoria, at Quatre Bras, at Waterloo, he had seen as much carnage as most men, but this bloodless impaling of lob-worms on hooks, and then casting them, so transfixed, to lie writhing on the river bottom for an indefinite period at the end of a ledger-line, offended his sense of fitness. It was not, it seemed to him, playing the game. The worms had no chance, and they could not bite back. He hated to sit there and think of what was going on under the quiet water, and the reflection gained nothing in relish from the fact that, by refusing to soil his own hands with the viscous contortions of the creatures, he must appear, in delegating that operation to the boatman, to torture by deputy, like the most cowardly of Eastern despots. And so when, as presently happened, this same stolid deputy, in "disgorging" an obstinate hook from a barbel's throat, tore away—— But it is enough to say that the Colonel put down his rod and demanded there and then to be set ashore.

There was no gainsaying him, of course. It was sufficient that he was the guest of a distinguished General living at Datchet, but in addition to this the Colonel's personal actions invited no criticism. He fished—as he walked, as he rode, as he appeared on all secular occasions—in a dark-blue wasp-waisted frock-coat with frogs, in tight nankeen trousers strapped under neat insteps, in a stiff collar and full black stock, in a tall hat with a brim so crescented that its front peak looked like the "nasal" of a Norman helmet. And for the rest he carried himself and his white moustache with the conscious authority of a cock of a hundred fights.

The boatman put him ashore on the river-bank some half-mile below Datchet, towards which village he immediately addressed his steps. The path was lonely and unfrequented, and it gave the Colonel some surprise to observe, as he turned a clump of bushes, a fashionable old beau toddling along in front of him. In a few moments the latter paused, nonplussed, at a stile, and the Colonel came up with him. The pedestrian was a man of uncouth bulk but distinguished mien. He wore a black frock-coat of a somewhat military cut, with a rich fur collar. Curly auburn locks, obviously artificial, showed beneath the brim of his glossy hat, and accented somewhat ghastfully the puffy pallor of a face whose texture betrayed its age. His eyes had a glutinous, half-blind appearance, his loose lower lip perpetually trembled. He peered at the new-comer, panting a good deal as if the sudden apparition had shaken his nerves.

"If I may venture, sir," said Colonel Manton, and proffered his arm. The other accepted it to mount the stile. It was an ungraceful business, and, once over, he stood with his hands to his sides, vibrating heavily, like a worn-out engine, to his own respirations. Presently he was sufficiently recovered to speak.

"A damned obstruction — a damned obstruction! Cannot I leave my carriage a moment to walk round by the water but this annoyance must appear in my path?"

"A villainous stile," said the Colonel. "We will indict it for a trespass." He was a reasonable man and he felt the absurdity of the complaint. But to his surprise his sarcasm missed fire.

"Do so, do so," said the old gentleman, and took his arm again, as it might have been his own walking-stick. They went on together, and in a little the stranger had opened a conversation with all the effrontery in the world. "My boy, what's your rank?" said he. "I perceive you are a soldier."

The officer stared, and drew himself up.

"Colonel Manton, sir, at your service," he answered distantly.

He was surprised, but the man was old, near seventy by his appearance, and very possibly from his cut a retired veteran like himself. Familiarity from a general, say, would be pardonable, and even kindly. Besides, he did not dislike the implied suggestion of juniority.

"Hey!" said the stranger—"retired?"

"Yes, sir, retired."

"Brevet rank?"

"Brevet be damned!" said Colonel Manton hotly. "I owe my promotion, sir, if you wish to know, to Waterloo."

The stranger glanced at him with a curiously sly look, and pinched the arm on which his own fingers rested.

"What!" he said, "were you there?"

"I had the honour, sir," said the Colonel, grandiloquently, "of playing my little part in that Homeric contest"

"Whose division, hey?"

"Picton's—Pack's brigade You are a little—you will excuse my saying it—particular"

"Certainly I will, my boy Wounded—hey?"

A distinct flush suffused the Colonel's cheek

"Wounded—yes," he replied shortly

The old fellow nudged him confidentially "Tell me," he said—"how?"

"Look here—you must forgive me, you know," exploded the Colonel, "but I must point out that we are strangers Still, as a fellow-campaigner—if that is the case—may I ask, sir, if you were at Waterloo?"

The other laughed enjoyingly "Was I?" he said "To be sure I was You had all good reason for knowing it"

Colonel Manton's eyes opened Here was a momentous implication Evidently he had to do with some great general of division, though the boast sounded a little extravagant and unmilitary He ran over in his mind a dozen possible names, but without success And then the thought occurred to him "Good reason for knowing it? What the devil! Is it possible he was on the other side?"

The idea seemed too preposterous for belief, the stranger was so obviously British Who in wonder's name could he be, then? Hill, Macdonnell, Saltoun, Uxbridge, Vandeleur, Somerset, Hackett?—all divisional or brigadier-generals He could not identify him, of his knowledge, with any one of these The Iron Duke himself? He had never been brought into very close personal contact with the great man, but naturally he was familiar with his features Could it be possible that time had so fused and blunted those that their characteristic contour had degenerated into this scarce distinguishable pulp? Prosperity, he knew, could play strange tricks with countenances, yet a volte-face so revolutionary seemed incredible And yet who else but the Duke had been on that day as indispensable as implied? But it was conceivable that some might have so regarded themselves—that certain heads might have been turned by their share in the success of so stupendous a victory had dwelt for long a stranger to his native land. He could but suppose that he had in a measure lost the clue, through subsequent developments, to old events. It remained clear only that he was in the presence of one who had, or believed himself to have, contributed signally to the success of the epoch-making battle. And that must be enough for him. He spoke thenceforth as a subordinate to his commanding officer.

Colonel Manton had been living abroad on his half-pay for some years, and until the occasion of this visit during the summer of 1830,

"I beg your indulgence, sir," he said. "I have been absent from my country for a considerable time, and features once familiar elude me. You asked about my wound. It is a ridiculous matter, and I recall it without enthusiasm. The fact is that, when d'Erlon's guns were pounding us before the advance, a ball smashed the head of a sergeant standing near me, and one of the fellow's cursed double-teeth was driven into my neck. It was not enough to cripple my fighting power, but I would have given a dozen of my own to boast a more honourable scar."

The stranger chuckled.

"Scars are not the only guarantee of valour," he said. The Colonel ventured, "You brought away some of your own, sir?"

"No," said the old fellow. "No, Wellington and I got off scot-free."

The Colonel dared again. "Were you, may I ask, on his personal staff?"

"Well, yes," said the stranger, chuckling still more, "I suppose you might call it that."

Suppose? Colonel Manton gasped. It was positively a matter of history that not one of that staff had escaped death or mutilation. The other may have noticed his perplexity, for he turned on him with an air of sudden annoyance.

"You haven't the assurance to question my word, I hope, sir?" he demanded.

"Certainly not," answered the Colonel.

"I could give you convincing proof," said the stranger. "Did the Commander-in-Chief—now did he, or did he not—visit General Blücher at Wavre the night before the battle to make sure of his co-operation?"

"It is a disputed point, sir," said the Colonel. "I believe that even his Grace has been known to contradict himself in the matter, saying at one time that he would never have fought without Blücher's explicit promise to back him up, at another flatly contradicting the report that he saw the Prussian general on the night before the battle."

"And he did not, my boy," sniggered the old fellow triumphantly, "for his interview with him was after midnight, and therefore on the day of the battle I ought to know, for I sent him off there myself."

He cackled into such a spasm of laughter that the convulsion caught his wind

"O, my chest!" he wheezed and gasped, "my miserable chest! I'm the most wretched creature on earth But it's nothing, nothing—the youngest fellows are subject to it" He coughed and wiped his eyes with a heavily-scented handkerchief "Yes," he said presently, "yes, Wellington was a sound workaday general, a fine soldier, an inspired commissary, but of genius—h'm! We need only suggest, Manty, my boy, that he was well advanced The man at his elbow, hey? You need not mention it, you know, but the real hero of Waterloo—hey, d'ye see? Keep it to yourself, there were reasons against its being divulged—you understand? What, my boy!"

The Colonel stared before him as if hypnotised, he stumbled in his walk Was it possible to mistake the implication—that the laurels ought by rights to have adorned the brow of this stranger beside him? He felt like one whose faith had suddenly exploded of its own intensity, leaving his breast a blackened shell Could there actually have been another, of whom he had never heard, at the Duke's right hand on that tremendous day, the presiding but unconfessed genius of it? He had heard tell of the Corsican's little red familiar Was his great rival, were possibly all commanding intellects, so supernaturally provided?

He was really a simple man, with a mind ruled to certain prescriptive lines of conduct He glanced askance at his companion, who was smiling and murmuring to himself Who in Heaven's name could he be? and why had he selected him for his astounding confidence? For all his own fearless rectitude, an uncanny feeling began to possess him He was glad, in turning a corner, to see the end of the path, and the head of a waiting coachman showing above the hedge And the next moment they had emerged on to the village green

A barouche stood there, with a bare-headed gentleman standing at its door The liveries of the servants were scarlet, and a mounted man in a scarlet embroidered coat waited a little apart The gentleman came forward

"Will your Majesty be pleased to ascend?" he asked.

The King dropped the Colonel's arm, and appeared on the instant to forget all about him "Yes, Watty, yes, certainly, my boy," he said. "Is that the fiery chariot?"

DESERT AIR

I

ON an evening of last summer I was dining in London at the Carlton with two men. One of them was an excellent type of young England, strong, healthy, athletic, and straightforward. The other was a clever London doctor who was building up a great practice in the West End. At dessert the conversation turned upon a then recent tragedy in which a great reputation had gone down, and young England spoke rather contemptuously of the victim, with the superior surprise human beings generally express about the sin which does not happen to be theirs.

"I can't understand it!" was his conclusion. "It's beyond me."

"Climate," said the doctor quietly.

"What?"

"Climate. Air."

Young England looked inexpressively astonished.

"But hang it all!" he exclaimed, "you don't mean to say change of air means change of nature?"

"Not to everyone. Not to you, perhaps. Have you travelled much?"

"Well, I've been to Paris for the Grand Prix, and to Monte——"

"For the gambling. That's hardly travelling. Now, I've studied this subject a little, quietly in Harley Street. I'm no traveller myself, but I have dozens of patients who are. And I'm convinced that the modern facilities for travel, besides giving an infinity of pleasure, bring about innumerable tragedies."

He turned to me.

"You go abroad a great deal. What do you say?"

"That you're perfectly right. And I'm prepared to affirm that, in highly-strung, imaginative, or overworked people change of climate does sometimes actually cause, or seem to cause, change of nature."

Young England, who was by no means highly-strung or imaginative, looked politely dubious, but the doctor was evidently pleased.

"An all ! " he cried

He glanced at me for an instant, then added

"You've got a case that proves it, at any rate to you, in your mind "

"Quite true "

"Can you give it us ? "

"Jove ! let's have it ! " exclaimed young England

"Certainly, if you like," I said "I don't know whether you ever heard of the Marnier affair ? "

Young England shook his head, but the doctor replied at once

"Three years ago, wasn't it ? "

"Four "

"And it happened in some remote place in the Sahara Desert ? "

"In Beni-Kouidar I was with Henry Marnier in Beni-Kouidar at the time."

"Go ahead ! " said young England more eagerly.

"Poor Marnier was not an old friend of mine, but an acquaintance whom I had met casually at Beni-Mora, which is known as a health resort "

"I send patients there sometimes," said the doctor

"The railway stops at Beni-Mora To reach Beni-Kouidar one must go on horse- or camel-back over between three and four hundred kilometres of desert, sleeping on the way at Travellers' Houses—Bordjs as they are called there Beni-Kouidar lies in the midst of immeasurable sands, and the air that blows through its palm gardens, and round its mosque towers, and down its alleys under the arcades, is startling dry as the finest champagne, almost fiercely pure and fresh, exhilarating—well, too exhilarating for certain people."

The doctor nodded

"Champagne goes very quickly to some heads," he interjected

"Beni-Kouidar has nothing to say to modern civilisation It is a wild and turbulent city, divided into quarters—the Arab quarter, the Jews' quarter, the freed negroes' quarter, and so on—and furthermore is infested at certain seasons by the Sahara nomads, who camp in filthy tents on the huge sand dunes round about, and sell rugs, burnouses, and Touareg work to the inhabitants, buying in return the dates for which the palms of Beni-Kouidar are celebrated

"I wanted to see a real Sahara city to which the Cook's tourist had not as yet penetrated, and I resolved to ride there from Beni-

Mora. When Henry Marnier heard of it he asked if he might accompany me

"Marnier was a young man who had recently left Oxford, and who had come out to Beni-Mora only a week before to see his mother, who was going through the sulphur cure. He was what is generally called a 'serious-minded young man', intellectual, inclined to grave reading and high thinking, totally devoid of frivolity, a little cold in manner and temperament, one would have sworn; in fact, a type of a very well-known kind of Oxford undergraduate, the kind that takes a good tutorship for a year or so after leaving the University, and then becomes a schoolmaster or a clergyman. Marnier, by the way, intended to take orders

"Now, this sort of young man is not precisely my sort, and especially not my sort in the Sahara Desert. But I did not want to be rude to Marnier, who was friendly and agreeable, and obviously anxious to increase his already considerable store of knowledge. So I put my inclinations in my pocket, and, with inward reluctance, I agreed

"We set off with Safti, my faithful one-eyed Arab guide, and after three long days of riding and talking—as I had feared—Maeterlinck and Tolstoy, Henley and Verlaine (this last being utterly condemned by Marnier as a man of weak character and degraded life), we saw the towers of Beni-Koudar aspiring above the shifting sands, the tufted summits of the thousands of palm-trees, and heard the dull beating of drums and the cries of people borne to us over the spaces of which silence is the steady guardian.

"We were all pretty tired, but Marnier was specially done up. He had recently been working very hard for the 'first' with which he had left Oxford, and was not in good condition. We were therefore glad enough when we rode through the wide street thronged with natives, turned the corner into the great camel market, and finally dismounted before the door of the one inn, the 'Rendezvous des Amis,' a mean, dusty, one-story building, on whose dirty white wall was a crude painting of a preposterous haridan in a purple empire gown, pouring wine for a Zouave who was evidently afflicted with elephantiasis. Yet, tired as I was, I stepped out into the camel market for a moment before going into the house, emptied my lungs, and slowly filled them

" 'What air!' I said to Marnier, who had followed me

" 'It is extraordinary,' he answered in his rather dry tenor voice

' I should say like the best champagne, if I did not happen to be a teetotaller '

(" The market, I must explain, was not at that moment in active operation )

" After a bain de siège—we both longed for total immersion—and some weak tea, in which I mingled a spoonful of rum, we felt better, but we reposed till dinner, and once again Marnier, in his habitually restrained and critical manner, discussed contemporary literature, and what Plato and Aristotle, judging by their writings, would have been likely to think of it And once again I felt as if I were in the ' High ' at Oxford, and was almost inclined to wish that Marnier was the rowdy type of undergrad who ducks people in water troughs and makes bonfires in quads "

" H'm ! " said the doctor gravely " Better, perhaps, if he had been "

" Much better," I answered " At seven o'clock we ate a rather tough dinner in the small, bare salle à manger, on the red brick floor of which sand grains were lying Our only companion was a bearded priest in a dirty soutane, the aumônier of Beni-Kouidar, who sat at a little table apart, and greeted our entrance with a polite bow, but did not then speak to us

" When the meal was ended, however, he joined us as we stood at the inn door looking out into the night A moon was rising above the palms, and gilding the cupolas of the Bureau Arabe on the far side of the Market Square A distant noise of tom-toms and African pipes was audible And all down the hill to our left—for the land rose to where the inn stood—fires gleamed, and we could see half-naked figures passing and re-passing them, and others squatting beside them, looking like monks in their hooded burnouses

" ' You are going out, messieurs ? ' said the aumônier politely.

" I looked at Marnier

" ' You're too done up, I expect ? ' I said to him

" His face was pale, and he certainly had the demeanour of a tired man

" ' No,' he answered ' I should like a stroll in this wonderful air '

" I turned to the priest

" ' Yes, monsieur,' I said

" ' I come here to take my meals, but I live at the edge of the town. Perhaps you will permit me to accompany you for a little way'

" 'We shall be delighted, and we know nothing of Beni-Kouidar.'

"As we stepped out into the market Marnier paused to light his pipe But suddenly he threw away the match he had struck.

" 'No, it's a sin to smoke in this air,' he said

"And he drew a deep breath, looking at the round moon.

"The priest smiled

" 'I have lived here for four years,' he said, 'and cannot resist my cigar But you are right The air of Beni-Kouidar is extraordinary When first I came here it used to mount to my head like wine.'

" 'Bad for you, Marnier !' I said, laughing

"Then I added, to the aumônier

" 'My friend never drinks wine, and so ought to be peculiarly susceptible to such an influence.'

II

"Opposite to the aumônier's dwelling was the great dancing-house of the town, and when we had bade him good-night, and turned to go back to the inn, I rather tentatively suggested to Marnier that, perhaps, it would be interesting to look in there for a moment

" 'All right,' he responded, in his most donnish manner 'But I expect it will be rather an unwashed crowd'

"Many native soldiers—the sort that used to be called Turcos—were gathered round the door We pushed our way through them, and entered The café was large, with big white pillars and a double row of divans in the middle, and divans rising in tiers all round On the left was a large doorway, in which gorgeously-dressed painted women, with gold crowns on their heads, were standing, smoking cigarettes, and laughing with the Arabs, and at the end farthest from the street entrance was a raised platform, on which sat three musicians—a wild-looking demon of a man blowing into an instrument with an immense funnel, and two men beating tom-toms The noise they made was terrific The piper wore a voluminous burnous, and as the dancers came in in pairs from the big doorway, which led into the court where they all live together, each in her separate little room with her own front door, they threw their door keys into the hood that was attached to it As soon as they had finished dancing they went to the hood, and rummaged violently for them again And all the time the piper blew frantically into his instrument, and rocked himself about like a man in a convulsion

"We sat on one of the raised divans, with coffee before us on a wooden stool, and Marnier observed it all with a slightly supercilious coldness The women, who were dressed in different shades of red, and were the most amazing trollops I ever set eyes on, came and went in pairs, fluttered their painted fingers, twittered like startled birds, jumped and twirled, wriggled and revolved, and inclined their greasy foreheads to the impenetrable spectators, who stuck silver coins on to the perspiring flesh And Marnier sat and gazed at them with the aloofness of one who watches the creatures in puddle water through a microscope I could scarcely help laughing at him, but I wished him away For to me there was excitement, there was even a sort of ecstasy, in the utter barbarity of this spectacle, in the moving scarlet figures with their golden crowns and tufts of ostrich plumes, in the serried masses of turbaned and hooded spectators, in the rocking forms of the musicians, in the strident and ceaseless uproar that they made

"And through the doorway where the Turcos—I like the old name—crowded I saw the sand filtering in from the desert, and against the blackness of a solitary palm-tree, with leaves like giant Fatma hands, I saw the silver disc of the moon

" 'I vote we go,' said Marnier's light tenor voice in my ear 'The atmosphere's awful in here'

" 'Very well,' I said

"I got up; but just then a girl, dressed in midnight purple embroidered with silver, came in from the doorway, and began to dance alone She was very young—fourteen, I found out afterwards—and, in contrast to the other women, extremely beautiful There were grace, seduction, mystery, and coquetry in her face and in all her movements Her long black eyes held fire and dreams Her fluttering hands seemed beckoning us to the realms of the thousand and one nights I stood where I had got up, and watched her

" 'I say, aren't we going?' said Marnier's voice in my ear

"I cursed the day when I had agreed to take him with me, leaped down to the earth, and struggled towards the door As we neared it the girl sidled down the room till she was exactly in front of Marnier Then she danced before him, smiling with her immense eyes, which

Russell

Robert H. Hens

•

•

•

•

she fixed steadily upon him, and bending forward her pretty head covered with a cloth of silver handkerchief

" ' Give her something,' I said to him, laughing, as he stared back at her grimly

" He thrust his hand into his pocket, found a franc, stuck it awkwardly against her oval forehead, and followed me out

" When we were in the sandy street he walked a few steps in silence, then stood still, and, to my surprise, stared back at the dancing-house. Then he put his hand to his head

" ' Is the air having its alcoholic effect ? ' I asked in joke

" As I spoke a handsome Arab, splendidly dressed in a pale blue robe, red gaiters and boots, and a turban of fine muslin, spangled with gold, passed us slowly, going towards the dancing-house. He cast a glance full of suspicion and malice at Marnier

" ' What's up with that fellow ? ' I said, startled.

" The Arab went on, and at that moment the faithful Safti joined us. He never left me long out of his sight in these outlandish places " ' That is Batouch, Sidi, the brother of the Caïd of Beni-Kouudar,' he said. ' Algia, the dancer to whom Monsieur Henri has just given money, is his chère amie. But as the government has just made him a sheik, he dares not have her in his house for fear of the scandal. So he has put her with the dancers. That is why she dances, to deceive every one, not to make money. She is not as the other dancers. But every one knows, for Batouch is mad with jealousy. He cannot bear that Algia should dance before strangers, but what can he do ? A sheik must not have a scandal in his dwelling '

" We walked on slowly. When we got to the door of the ' Rendez-vous des Amis ' Marnier stood still again, and looked down the deserted, moonlit camel market

" ' I never knew air like this,' he said in a low voice

" And once more he expelled the air from his lungs, and drew in a long, slow breath, as a man does when he has finished his dumb-bell exercise in the morning

" ' Don't drink too much of it,' I said. ' Remember what the aumônier told us ! '

" Marnier looked at me. I thought there was something apprehensive in his eyes. But he said nothing, and we turned in " The next day I rode out with Safti into the desert to visit a sacred personage of great note in the Sahara, Sidi El Ahmed Ben Daoud Abderahmann. To my relief Marnier declined to come. He said he was tired, and would stroll about the city. When we got back at sundown the innkeeper handed me a note. I opened it, and found it was from the aumônier, saying that he would be greatly obliged if I would call and see him on my return, as he had various little curiosities which he would be glad to show me. Marnier was not in the inn, and, as I had nothing particular to do, I walked at once to the aumônier's house. As I have said, it was the last in the town. The dancing-house was on the opposite side of the way, but the aumônier's dwelling jutted out a little farther into the desert, and looked full on a deep depression of soft sand bounded by a big dune, which loomed up like a couchant beast in the fading yellow light.

"The aumônier met me at his door, and escorted me into a pleasant room, where his collection of Arab weapons, coins, and old vases, cups, and various utensils, dug up, he told me, at Tlemcen, was arranged. But to my surprise he scarcely took time to show it to me before he said

" ' Though a stranger, may I venture to speak rather intimately to you, monsieur ? ' "

" ' Certainly, ' I replied, in some astonishment

" ' Your friend is young ' "

" ' Marnier ? ' "

" ' Is that his name ? Well, I would not leave him to stroll about too much alone, if I were you ' "

" ' Why, monsieur ? ' "

" ' He is likely to get into trouble. The people here are a wild and violent race. He would do well to bear in mind the saying of a traveller who knew the desert men better than most people. " If you want to be friendly with them, and safe among them, give cigarettes to the men, and leave the women alone " I see a good deal, monsieur, owing to the situation of my little house ' "

" I looked at him in silence. Then I said

" ' What have you seen ? ' "

" He led me to the door, and pointed towards the great dune beyond the dancing-house

" ' I saw your friend this afternoon talking there with one whom it is specially unsafe to be seen with in Beni-Kowdar ' "

" ' With whom ? ' "

" ' A dancer called Algia ' "

" ' Talking, monsieur ! Marnier knows no Arabic. ' "

" The aumônier pursed his lips in his black beard.

“ ‘The conversation appeared to be carried on by signs,’ he responded ‘That did not make it less but more dangerous’

“ ‘I’m afraid I was rude, and whistled softly

“ ‘Monsieur l’Aumônier,’ I said, ‘you must forgive me, but this air is certainly the very devil’

“ ‘He smiled, not without irony

“ ‘I became aware of that myself, monsieur, when first I came to live in Beni-Kouddar But I am a priest, and—well, monsieur, I was given the strength to say “Get thee behind me, Satan”’

“ ‘A softer look came into his sunburnt, wrinkled face

“ ‘Better take your friend away as soon as possible,’ he added, ‘or there will be trouble’

III

“ ‘That night I found myself confronted by a Marnier whom I had never seen before The desert wine had gone to the lad’s brain. That was certain No intonations of the Oxford don lurked in the voice No reminiscences of the Oxford ‘High’ clung about the manner A man sober and the same man drunk are scarcely more different than the Marnier who had ridden with me up the sandy street of Beni-Kouddar the previous day and the man who sat opposite to me at dinner in the ‘Rendezvous des Amis’ that night I knew in a moment that the aumônier was right, and that I must get the lad away at once from the intoxicant which nature poured out over this far-away city His eyes were shining feverishly, and when I mentioned Mr Ruskin in a casual way he looked unutterably bored “ ‘Ruskin and all those fellows seem awfully slow and out of place here,’ he exclaimed ‘One doesn’t want to bother about them in the Sahara’

“ ‘I changed the subject

“ ‘There doesn’t seem very much to see here,’ I said carelessly ‘We might get away the day after to-morrow, don’t you think?’

“ ‘He drew his brows down

“ ‘The horses won’t be sufficiently rested,’ he said curtly

“ ‘Oh yes, I fancy they will’

“ ‘Well, I don’t fancy I shall The long ride took it out of me’

“ ‘Turn in to-night, then, directly after dinner’

“ ‘He looked at me with sharp suspicion I met his gaze blandly.

“ ‘I mean to,’ he said after a short pause

" I knew he was telling me a lie, but I only said ' That's right ! ' and resolved to keep an eye on him

" Directly dinner was over he sprang up from the table

" ' Good-night ! ' he said

" And before I could reply he was out of the salle à manger, and I heard him tramp along the brick floor of the passage, go into his room, and bang the door

" The aumônier was getting up from his little table, and shaking the crumbs from his soutane

" ' You are quite right, monsieur,' I said to him ' I must get my friend away '

" ' I shall be sorry to lose you,' replied the good priest ' But—desert air, desert air ! '

" He shook his head, half wistfully, half laughingly, bowed, put on his broad-brimmed hat, and went out.

" After a moment I followed him I stood in the doorway of the inn, and lit a cigar I knew Marnier was not going to bed, and meant to catch him when he came out, and join him In common politeness he could scarcely refuse my company, since he had asked me as a favour to let him come with me to Beni-Kouidar I waited, watching the moon rise, till my cigar was smoked out Then I lit another Still he did not come I heard the distant throb of tom-toms beyond the Bureau Arabe in the quarter of the freed negroes They were having a fantasia I began to think that I must have been mistaken, and that Marnier had really turned in So much the better. The ash dropped from the stump of my second cigar, and the deserted camel market was flooded with silver from the moon-rays I knew there was only one door to the inn Slowly I lit a third cigar

" A large cloud went over the face of the moon A gust of wind struck my face Suddenly the night had changed The moon looked forth again, and was again obscured A second gust struck me like a blow, and my face was stung by a multitude of sand grains I heard steps behind me in the brick passage, turned swiftly, and saw the landlord

" ' I must shut the door, m'sieu,' he said ' There's a bad sand-storm coming up '

" As he spoke the wind roared, and over the camel market a thick fog seemed to fall abruptly It was a sheet of sand from the surrounding dunes I threw away my cigar, stepped into the passage, and the landlord banged the door, and drove home the heavy bolts

" Then I went to Marnier's room, and knocked I felt sure he was there, but I thought I would make sure before going to my room

" No answer

" I knocked again loudly

" Again no answer

" Then I turned the handle, and entered

" The room was empty I glanced round quickly The small window was open All the windows of the inn were barred, but, as I learned later, a bar in Marnier's had been broken, and was not yet replaced when we arrived at Beni-Kouudar In consequence of this it was possible to squeeze through into the arcade outside This was what Marnier had done. My precise, gentlemanly, reserved, and methodical acquaintance had deliberately given me the slip by sneaking out of a window like a schoolboy, and creeping round the edge of the inn to the ditch that lay in the shadow of the sand dunes. As I realised this I realised his danger

" I ran to my room, fetched my revolver, slipped it into my pocket, and hurried to the front door The landlord heard me trying to undo the bolts, and came out protesting

" ' M'sieu cannot go out into the storm.'

" ' I must '

" ' But M'sieu does not know what Beni-Kouudar is like when the sand is blown on the wind It is enfer Besides, it is not safe In the darkness m'sieu may receive a mauvais coup '

" ' Make haste, please, and open the door I am going to fetch my friend ' He pulled the bolts, grumbling and swearing, and I went out into enfer For he was right. A sandstorm at night in Beni-Kouudar is hell

" Luckily, Safti joined me mysteriously from the deuce knows where, and we staggered to the dancing-house somehow, and struggled in, blinded, our faces scored, our clothes heavy with sand, our pockets, our very boots, weighed down with it

" The tom-toms were roaring, the pipe was yelling, blown by the frantic demon with his hood full of latch-keys, the impassible, bearded faces were watching the painted women who, in their red garments and their golden crowns, promenaded down the earthen floor, between the divans, fluttering their dyed fingers, smiling grotesquely like idols, bending forward their greasy foreheads to receive the tribute of their admirers I looked swiftly over the mob Marnier was not in it

I went towards the doorway on the left which gave on to the court of the dancers Saftu caught hold of my arm

" ' It is not safe to go in there on such a night, Sidi There are no lamps It is black as a tomb And no one can tell who may be there Nomads, perhaps, men of evil from the south Many murders have been done in the court on black nights, and no one can say who has done them For all the time men go in and out to the rooms of the dancers ' "

" ' Nevertheless, Saftu, I must——' "

" I stopped speaking, for at this moment Batouch, the brother of the Caïd of Beni-Kouidar, came slowly in through the doorway from the blackness of the sand-swept court There was a strange smile on his handsome face, and he was caressing his black beard gently with one delicate hand He saw me, smiled more till I caught the gleam of his white teeth, passed on into the dancing-house, sat down on a divan, and called for coffee I could not take my eyes from him Every movement he made fascinated me He drew from his pale blue robe a silver box, opened it, lifted out a pinch of tobacco, and began carefully to roll a cigarette And all the time he smiled

" A glacial cold crept over my body As he lit his cigarette I caught hold of Saftu, and hurried through the doorway into the blackness of the whirling sand "

Here I stopped " Well ? " said young England " Well ? "

The doctor did not speak

" Well," I answered, " Algia danced that night While she was dancing we found a dead body in the court It was Marnier's A knife had been thrust into him from behind ! "

" Ah ! " said the doctor

" But——" exclaimed young England, " it was that fellow ? It was Batouch ? "

I shrugged my shoulders " Nobody ever found out who did it "

" Well, but of course——" "

He checked himself, and an expression of admiration dawned slowly over his healthy, handsome face

" I say," he said, " to be able to roll a cigarette directly afterwards ! What infernal cheek ! "

" Desert air ! " I replied " My dear chap—desert air ! "

The doctor nodded

THE JUDGMENT OF PARIS

IN the summer of the memorable year —, but the date doesn't matter, Robichon and Quinquart both paid court to Mademoiselle Brouette. Mademoiselle Brouette was a captivating actress, Robichon and Quinquart were the most comic of comedians; and all three were members of the Théâtre Suprême.

Robichon was such an idol of the public's that they used to laugh before he uttered the first word of his rôle, and Quinquart was so vastly popular that his silence threw the audience into convulsions.

Professional rivalry apart, the two were good friends, although they were suitors for the same lady, and this was doubtless due to the fact that the lady favoured the robust Robichon no more than she favoured the skinny Quinquart. She flirted with them equally—and at last, when each of them had plagued her beyond endurance, she promised in a pet that she would marry the one that was the better actor.

Tiens! Not a player on the stage, not a critic on the Press, could quite make up his mind which the better actor was. Only Suzanne Brouette could have said anything so tantalising.

"But how shall we decide the point, Suzanne?" stammered Robichon helplessly. "Whose pronouncement will you accept?"

"How can the question be settled?" queried Quinquart, dismayed. "Who shall be the judge?"

"Paris shall be the judge," affirmed Suzanne. "We are the servants of the public—I will take the public's word!"

Of course she was as pretty as a picture, or she couldn't have done these things.

Then poor Quinquart withdrew, plunged in reverie. So did Robichon. Quinquart reflected that she had been talking through her expensive hat. Robichon was of the same opinion. The public lauded them both, was no less generous to one than to the other—to wait for the judgment of Paris appeared equivalent to postponing the matter sine die No way out presented itself to Quinquart None occurred to Robichon

"Mon vieux," said the latter, as they sat on the terrace of their favourite café a day or two before the annual vacation, "let us discuss this amicably Have a cigarette! You are an actor, therefore you consider yourself more talented than I I, too, am an actor, therefore I regard you as less gifted than myself So much for our artistic standpoints! But we are also men of the world, and it must be obvious to both of us that we might go on being funny until we reached our death-beds without demonstrating the supremacy of either Enfin, our only hope lies in versatility—the conqueror must distinguish himself in a solemn part!" He viewed the other with complacency, for the quaint Quinquart had been designed for a droll by nature

"Right!" said Quinquart He contemplated his colleague with satisfaction, for it was impossible to fancy the fat Robichon in tragedy

"I perceive only one drawback to the plan," continued Robichon "The management will never consent to accord us a chance Is it not always so in the theatre? One succeeds in a certain line of business and one must be resigned to play that line as long as one lives If my earliest success had been scored as a villain of melodrama, it would be believed that I was competent to enact nothing but villains of melodrama, it happened that I made a hit as a comedian, wherefore nobody will credit that I am capable of anything but being comic"

"Same here!" concurred Quinquart. "Well, then, what do you propose?"

Robichon mused "Since we shall not be allowed to do ourselves justice on the stage, we must find an opportunity off it!"

"A private performance? Good! Yet, if it is a private performance, how is Paris to be the judge?"

"Ah," murmured Robichon, "that is certainly a stumbling-block"

They sipped their apéritifs moodily Many heads were turned towards the little table where they sat "There are Quinquart and Robichon, how amusing they always are!" said passers-by, little guessing the anxiety at the laughter-makers' hearts

"What's to be done?" sighed Quinquart at last

Robichon shrugged his fat shoulders, with a frown

Both were too absorbed to notice that, after a glance of recognition, one of the pedestrians had paused, and was still regarding them irresolutely. He was a tall, burly man, habited in rusty black, and the next moment, as if finding courage, he stepped forward and spoke.

"Gentlemen, I ask pardon for the liberty I take—impulse urges me to seek your professional advice! I am in a position to pay a moderate fee. Will you permit me to explain myself?"

"Monsieur," returned Robichon, "we are in deep consideration of our latest parts. We shall be pleased to give you our attention at some other time."

"Alas!" persisted the newcomer, "with me time presses. I, too, am considering my latest part—and it will be the only speaking part I have ever played, though I have been 'appearing' for twenty years."

"What! You have been a super for twenty years?" said Quinquart, grimacing.

"No, monsieur," replied the stranger grimly. "I have been the public executioner, and I am going to lecture on the horrors of the post I have resigned."

The two comedians stared at him aghast. Across the sunlit terrace seemed to have fallen the black shadow of the guillotine.

"I am Jacques Roux," the man went on. "I am 'trying it on the dog' at Appreville-sous-Bois next week, and I have what you gentlemen call 'stage fright'—I, who never knew what nervousness meant before! Is it not queer? As often as I rehearse walking on to the platform, I feel myself to be all arms and legs, I don't know what to do with them. Formerly, I scarcely remembered my arms and legs, but, of course, my attention used to be engaged by the other fellow's head. Well, it struck me that you might consent to give me a few hints in deportment. Probably one lesson would suffice."

"Sit down," said Robichon. "Why did you abandon your official position?"

"Because I awakened to the truth," Roux answered. "I no longer agree with capital punishment, it is a crime that should be abolished."

"The scruples of conscience, hein?"

"That is it."

"Fine!" said Robichon. "What dramatic lines such a lecture might contain! And of what is it to consist?"

"It is to consist of the history of my life—my youth, my poverty, my experiences as executioner, and my remorse"

"Magnificent!" said Robichon "The spectres of your victims pursue you even to the platform Your voice fails you, your eyes start from your head in terror You gasp for mercy—and imagination splashes your outstretched hands with gore The audience thrill, women swoon, strong men are breathless with emotion" Suddenly he smote the table with his big fist, and little Quinquart nearly fell off his chair, for he divined the inspiration of his rival "Listen!" cried Robichon, "are you known in Appeville-sous-Bois?"

"My name is known, yes"

"Bah! I mean are you known personally, have you acquaintances there?"

"Oh no But why?"

"There will be nobody to recognise you?"

"It is very unlikely in such a place"

"What do you estimate that your profits will amount to?"

"It is only a small hall, and the prices are cheap Perhaps two hundred and fifty francs"

"And you are nervous, you would like to postpone your debut?"

"I should not be sorry, I admit But, again, why?"

"I will tell you why—I offer you five hundred francs to let me take your place!"

"Monsieur?"

"Is it a bargain?"

"I do not understand!"

"I have a whim to figure in a solemn part You can explain next day that you missed your train—that you were ill, there are a dozen explanations that can be made, you will not be supposed to know that I personated you—the responsibility for that is mine. What do you say?"

"It is worth double the money," demurred the man

"Not a bit of it! All the Press will shout the story of my practical joke—Paris will be astounded that I, Robichon, lectured as Jacques Roux and curdled an audience's blood Millions will speak of your intended lecture tour who otherwise would never have heard of it I am giving you the grandest advertisement, and paying you for it, besides. Enfin, I will throw a deportment lesson in! Is it agreed?"

"Agreed, monsieur!" said Roux

Oh, the trepidation of Quinquart! Who could eclipse Robichon if his performance of the part equalled his conception of it? At the theatre that evening Quinquart followed Suzanne about the wings pathetically. He was garbed like a buffoon, but he felt like Romeo. The throng that applauded his capers were far from suspecting the romantic longings under his scarlet wig. For the first time in his life he was thankful that the author hadn't given him more to do.

And, oh, the excitement of Robichon! He was to put his powers to a tremendous test, and if he made the effect that he anticipated he had no fear of Quinquart's going one better. Suzanne, to whom he whispered his project proudly, announced an intention of being present to "see the fun." Quinquart also promised to be there. Robichon sat up all night preparing his lecture.

If you wish to know whether Suzanne rejoiced at the prospect of his winning her, history is not definite on the point, but some chroniclers assert that at this period she made more than usual of Quinquart, who had developed a hump as big as the Panthéon.

And they all went to Appeville-sous-Bois.

Though no one in the town was likely to know the features of the executioner, it was to be remembered that people there might know the actor's, and Robichon had "made up" to resemble Roux as closely as possible. Arriving at the humble hall, he was greeted by the lessee, heard that a "good house" was expected, and smoked a cigarette in the retiring-room while the audience assembled.

At eight o'clock the lessee reappeared.

"All is ready, Monsieur Roux," he said.

Robichon rose.

He saw Suzanne and Quinquart in the third row, and was tempted to wink at them.

"Ladies and gentlemen——"

All eyes were riveted on him as he began, even the voice of the "executioner" exercised a morbid fascination over the crowd. The men nudged their neighbours appreciatively, and women gazed at him, half horrified, half charmed.

The opening of his address was quiet enough—there was even a humorous element in it, as he narrated imaginary experiences of his boyhood. People tittered, and then glanced at one another with an apologetic air, as if shocked at such a monster's daring to amuse them.

Suzanne whispered to Quinquart "Too cheerful, he hasn't struck the right note!" Quinquart whispered back gloomily "Wait; he may be playing for the contrast!"

And Quinquart's assumption was correct. Gradually the cheerfulness faded from the speaker's voice, the humorous incidents were past. Gruesome, hideous, grew the anecdotes. The hall shivered. Necks were craned, and white faces twitched suspensively. He dwelt on the agonies of the Condemned, he recited crimes in detail, he mirrored the last moments before the blade fell. He shrieked his remorse, his lacerating remorse. "I am a murderer," he sobbed, and in the hall one might have heard a pin drop.

There was no applause when he finished—that set the seal on his success, he bowed and withdrew amid tense silence. Still none moved in the hall—until, with a rush, the representatives of the Press sped forth to proclaim Jacques Roux an unparalleled sensation.

The triumph of Robichon! How generous were the congratulations of Quinquart, and how sweet the admiring tributes of Suzanne! And there was another compliment to come—nothing less than a card from the Marquis de Thevenin, requesting an interview at his home.

"Ah!" exclaimed Robichon, enraptured, "an invitation from a noble! That proves the effect I made, hein?"

"Who may he be?" inquired Quinquart. "I never heard of the Marquis de Thevenin!"

"It is immaterial whether you have heard of him," replied Robichon. "He is a marquis, and he desires to converse with me! It is an honour that one must appreciate. I shall assuredly go."

And, being a bit of a snob, he sought a fiacre in high feather.

The drive was short, and when the cab stopped he was distinctly taken aback to perceive the unpretentious aspect of the nobleman's abode. It was, indeed, nothing better than a lodging. A peasant admitted him, and the room to which he was ushered boasted no warmer hospitality than a couple of candles and a decanter of wine. However, the sconces were massive silver. Monsieur le marquis, he was informed, had been suddenly compelled to summon his physician, and begged that Monsieur Roux would allow him a few minutes' grace.

Robichon ardently admired the candlesticks, but began to think he might have supped more cosily with Suzanne.

It was a long time before the door opened.

The Marquis de Thevenin was old—so old that he seemed to be falling to pieces as he tottered forward. His skin was yellow and shrivelled, his mouth sunken, his hair sparse and grey, and from this weird face peered strange eyes—the eyes of a fanatic.

"Monsieur, I owe you many apologies for my delay," he wheezed. "My unaccustomed exertion this evening fatigued me, and on my return from the hall I found it necessary to see my doctor. Your lecture was wonderful, Monsieur Roux—most interesting and instructive, I shall never forget it."

Robichon bowed his acknowledgments.

"Sit down, Monsieur Roux, do not stand! Let me offer you some wine. I am forbidden to touch it myself. I am a poor host, but my age must be my excuse."

"To be the guest of monsieur le marquis," murmured Robichon, "is a privilege, an honour, which—er——"

"Ah," sighed the marquis, "I shall very soon be in the Republic where all men are really equals and the only masters are the worms. My reason for requesting you to come was to speak of your unfortunate experiences—of a certain unfortunate experience in particular. You referred in your lecture to the execution of one called 'Victor Lesueur.' He died game, hein?"

"As plucky a soul as I ever dispatched!" said Robichon, savouring the burgundy.

"Ah! Not a tremor? He strode to the guillotine like a man?"

"Like a hero!" said Robichon, who knew nothing about him.

"That was fine," said the marquis, "that was as it should be! You have never known a prisoner to die more bravely?" There was a note of pride in his voice that was unmistakable.

"I shall always recall his courage with respect," declared Robichon, mystified.

"Did you respect it at the time?"

"Pardon, monsieur le marquis?"

"I inquire if you respected it at the time, did you spare him all needless suffering?"

"There is no suffering," said Robichon. "So swift is the knife that——"

The host made a gesture of impatience. "I refer to mental suffering. Cannot you realise the emotions of an innocent man condemned to a shameful death?"

"Innocent? As for that, they all say that they are innocent"

"I do not doubt it Victor, however, spoke the truth I know it He was my son"

"Your son?" faltered Robichon, aghast

"My only son—the only soul I loved on earth. Yes, he was innocent, Monsieur Roux And it was you who butchered him—he died by your hands!"

"I—I was but the instrument of the law," stammered Robichon. "I was not responsible for his fate, myself"

"You have given a masterly lecture, Monsieur Roux," said the marquis musingly "I find myself in agreement with all that you said in it—'you are his murderer' I hope the wine is to your taste, Monsieur Roux? Do not spare it!"

"The wine?" gasped the actor. He started to his feet, trembling—he understood

"It is poisoned," said the old man calmly "In an hour you will be dead"

"Great Heavens!" moaned Robichon Already he was conscious of a strange sensation—his blood was chilled, his limbs were weighted, there were shadows before his eyes

"Oh! I have no fear of you," continued the other, "I am feeble, I could not defend myself, but your violence would avail you nothing Fight, or faint, as you please—you are doomed"

For some seconds they stared at each other dumbly—the actor paralysed by terror, the host wearing the smile of a lunatic And then the "lunatic" slowly took court-plaster from his teeth, and removed features, and lifted a wig

And when the whole story was published, a delighted Paris awarded the palm to Quinquart without a dissentient voice, for while Robichon had duped an audience, Quinquart had duped Robichon himself

Robichon bought the silver candlesticks, which had been hired for the occasion, and he presented them to Quinquart and Suzanne on their wedding-day

THE LITTLE BROWN 'BUS

WEST India Dock Road is half inclined to put up its shutters, but reluctant to do this—albeit the hour is late—because foreign sailors, much more at sea here than when on the ocean, are still loafing on the edge of the pavement. The shops have everything a sea-going man may desire, from bars of hard yellow soap and fur caps and scarlet pocket-handkerchiefs to chromos of smiling young women in hats of the early 'eighties, the job lots of literature tied up with a boot-lace are calculated to satisfy nearly every taste. Outside the long red Asiatic Home and on its broad steps a few melancholy Chinamen stand, with queues carefully twisted up and pinned under their blue linen caps. This because the Limehouse boy has a weakness for pulling a pig-tail when he sees one, crying "Shawp!" and running away. Up Millwall way they are carrying round baskets of vegetables yoked over the shoulders. By the side of the tram terminus, and near the red-eyed fire-station, stands the 'bus. A little brown 'bus, with yellow wheels, there for the convenience of those whom circumstances compel to go to the Isle of Dogs.

"Right for Singapore, cap'en?"

"Jump in," says the driver from the pavement, making one more attempt to light his pipe.

"Change anywheres, cap'en?"

"Yes," replies the driver curtly, "you'll have to change a lot 'fore you get on board your ship."

"Not cross, are you, cap'en?"

"Look here, my lad," says the driver, goaded by this inquiry. "You get into that blooming 'bus and take your seat and shut your head. That's all you've got to do."

"I've seen your face somewhere before," says the peak-capped sailor. "Any relation to old Frank Macey that used to live at Devonport?" Sulky reply in the negative. "Then 'ave a cigar," says the sailor genially. "Put your pipe in your hat and have something to smoke. Lor' bless my soul, I am glad to meet you. How's the missus?"

Driver, accepting two pale brown cigars from the envelope offered, answers that he never had a missus, and expresses a pious hope that, with the help of Providence and his own acuteness, he never may

A piano organ starts one of Sousa's marches, and the sailor, encouraged by the comparative friendliness of the driver, solicits the favour of his hand for a waltz, but here the driver draws the line, and with the assistance of a strap cranes himself up into his seat, giving the sailor renewed advice to secure a place inside, which the sailor does, hailing the passengers with a sea-faring salutation and lurching into the one vacant seat more by accident than design. The little brown 'bus turns and goes across the tram lines

"Well," says the friendly sailor, "how are we all getting on, this voy'ge?" Some of the passengers are sleepy and some are thoughtful, the sailor, closing one eye, selects a quiet, puss-headed Japanese "Very glad to hear," he says, laying a hand on the other's knee, "that me and old Solsbury managed that little affair all right. We're chums, ain't we?"

The short Japanese sailor, with N Y K on his collar, smiles and nods "Very well, then!" says the sailor, with an injured air, "why not shake hands? Has anybody been telling you anything 'bout me? Because if so——" The Japanese accepts the large hand "That's better!" remarks the sailor, restored to good temper "Now, having gone so fur, I should like to go a bit further and shake 'ands with everybody—just to show there's no ill-feeling"

The little 'bus swerves round between the high walls that border the commencement of West Ferry Road "There! Now you can all say you've shook 'ands with a honest seafaring man"

"I sha'n't brag about it," remarks a stout woman opposite

"Oh, mother!" protests the sailor tearfully, "don't be so 'arsh with your blue-eyed boy"

"Blue-eyed nuisance," amends the stout woman

"There's a nice parent for you! Bring up a mother in the way she should go, and when she grows old—— Anybody got any objection to my singing a song?"

"Yes," say the other passengers with unanimity, "we have."

"You ~~am~~ so fond of me as you used to be," remarks the sailor regretfully "Ever since that affair out at Valp'raiso you all seem different somehow 'Oh, thou 'ast changed, my darling,'" sings the sailor, "'Thou smil'st no more at me, Thou 'ast no word of fond farewell, As I put out to '—Way—ho!"

The little 'bus rattles across a wooden bridge separating the docks from the river, the passengers find coppers and hand up their pennies through a hole in the roof to the driver. Some want change and this makes for conversation. One spare, melancholy woman, who has been marketing, with a shining black bag, the lock of which has long since refused to perform any of the duties of a lock, deploras the price of bread, and says (with determination) that she has really made up her mind if it goes much higher—well (despairingly), she does not know what she shall do. From which the conversation goes by a rapid stage to the difficulty that the thin lady has with her youngest boy, who has lately been going to theatres, the other beats this with a deplorable story of her uncle John, who went in for religion.

"It all goes to show," says this lady, as she pulls the strap and prepares to alight at Glengall Road, "that it's a mistake to go to either extreme, the 'appy mejum's my motto. Good-night, all! Don't be late in the morning."

The Japanese also descends here, to disappear in the meagrely-lighted streets, and on the talkative sailor, who has been asleep, discovering this, he weeps and declares that he has not a friend left in the world, that he is forsaken and alone, for two pins he would—If only he had some one to love him! If only some tidy, respectable woman, with a bit put by in the Savings Bank, would come to him and say, "Jim Allwright, give up seafaring life and settle down on shore and keep an eye on the shop and entertain your friends with a glass now and again," why, then he would say, "Done with you!" and give the old ship the chuck without the least hesitation.

"I'm the most reas'nable, good-tempered man alive," remarks the sailor contentedly. "Nothing ever upset me. I take everything as it comes. What you all getting out for?"

"Because," explains one of the descending passengers politely, "because we can't go any further. That's why!"

"And a dashed good reason, too," cries the sailor agreeably. "Goo' ni' everybody. Goblessye."

The spare, thin old woman stands on the edge of the pavement, watching him as he goes. The driver of the little brown 'bus announces his intention of utilising the minutes of waiting before the return journey by going into the tavern in order to get the right time, the bystanders ignore the hint, and he goes alone.

"I used to have a son that was that way inclined," says the thin woman, rather wistfully, "only he was never funny with it."

LAURENCE HOUSMAN

B. 1865

INSIDE-OUT

THE STORY OF BUNDER-RUNDER, THE JAILBIRD

BUNDER-RUNDER was in jail He was there for having talked too much, for saying things which the owners of the jail did not at all like, and which those who did not own the jail liked only too well

The people of the country did not own the jail, that you must quite understand It was owned by those of another country, the natives only paid for it That was Bunder-Runder's complaint, or one of them. He did not yet know how good it was for a people not to own jails at all, and how much better it was to be in a jail than to own one Would he ever find that out, do you think? What can a jail teach one?

In this jail Bunder-Runder was to remain for ten years He was a young man, strong, rather beautiful Women loved to look at him They laughed when they saw him put forth his strength easily to do them a service, they laughed more when they put their children into his arms for him to play with He had not yet any children of his own That was soon to have been—love, marriage, and home The vision he had long had of them was then to become a dear, kind, foolish reality, a little world of his own to shape and cherish and make grow, sweeter and more beautiful than all the bigger world around him But now, no That little world, on the making of which his mind had been bent, had fallen from his hand, shattered

Ten years!

"When I come out," Bunder-Runder said to himself, "I shall be old Every one will have forgotten me It will be like another world, my thoughts will not have gone into it, or anything I have done, I shall not belong to it I shall be old, but I shall have made nothing" And as he thought thus, his very blood seemed to be weeping—the warm, swift blood which ran strenuously through him, touching as with tears the heart and head and feet and hands, which henceforth were to be useless

Every time he began thinking, grief took hold of his thoughts and drew them to the same end

"I am shut up in walls," he cried "It were better that I were dead " Just as his blood went weeping through his body, so through his brain his thoughts went weeping from place to place , round and round wearily they went, beating a high-road for grief to travel by.

After he had been in prison for a while, food was brought to him, and he ate , but he did not know why he ate

" I am eating only to become old," he said to himself. " What good is that to me ? " He left off eating

But presently he grew so hungry that food seemed good to him again, and time not so long or so vain a thing as dying without having learned all that there was to learn

So when food was again brought to him he ate, sitting to it in seemly fashion, with thoughts turned aside from grief for a while to the strange beauty and brotherhood of things which grew and were serviceable to man

Then his mind went out to the rice-fields, green and waving and changing colour toward ripeness from day to day , changing, too, as the light fell on them, morning or evening, from east or west , and at night, under moon and stars, more wonderfully changed still, and always different, yet always inwardly the same

But as soon as he had finished eating, his thoughts came back to him with a shock, and he remembered that he was a prisoner

" I shall see the rice-fields shining no more," he said, " till I am old Then they will have ceased to shine, for then with my old eyes I shall no longer see them " And turning his face to the wall, he wept It was always the same wall his thoughts came back to

The same wall ! How long had that wall been there ? How had it come ? Who were the men that had built it ? He began to look at and to examine it It was strong, but it was not very old , not so old, he thought, as his own father Yet it seemed older, for already within its narrow space many young lives had pined and faded and grown old waiting for freedom

Then, as he bethought him, he knew how it had come, and what men had had the building of it They were his own brothers, his countrymen , and they, not gladly or willingly, but being ordered to it and for payment, had built this wall to be a prison for themselves and others They had drawn clay from the beds of dried rivers, they had made bricks, they had hewn stone and timber, they had mixed plaster and mortar, they had reared up beam and roof, cutting off light and air from the space below, dividing it into cells , and now into this space below he, their brother, had come to be kept, wasted and useless, to bury bit by bit, one day at a time, with nothing of change to make one seem different from another, the ten most beautiful years of his life, with all their gladness taken out of them

"Oh, Brothers, why have you done this to me?" he cried.

And suddenly his own thoughts answered for them

"Because we could not help ourselves, because we are all broken parts of that which was meant to be one whole. All over the world men are building walls, dividing themselves each from each, through ignorance and cruelty and fear. Because they don't know, that is why people are afraid of one another, and being afraid, they become cruel. That is why they build walls, not here only. All over the world it is the same—walls, walls. As walls grow rotten and old, as long as fear lasts, they will make us build others in place of them."

Bunder-Runder laid his hand on his prison-wall, he felt the strength and the depth of it, how well it was built, what a lot of brick and stone lay there, imprisoned like himself, but for much longer a time. Of that imprisonment not ten or twenty or fifty years would see the end.

"Brothers," said Bunder-Runder, "I am sorry for you. For your setting free is further away than mine, before you even begin to be old I shall be dead. Old age is good, is it not? But it is so far away."

Thus to his prison-wall he spoke, pitying it.

Suddenly he had a thought. It stood up and looked at him. It seemed to be standing only on one foot, on the very point of a toe, as if to show, even without motion, how light and quick and alert it could be. Then it seemed as though it lifted a hand and beckoned to him.

"Let us go out!" it said.

"How can one go out through this wall?" said Bunder-Runder.
"We are in prison."

"There is no wall that I cannot get through," said his thought. It gave a flick of its foot, and was gone.

A moment later, and it was back again.

"Outside there is sunshine," it said.

"Yes," said Bunder-Runder, very attentive.

"There has been rain," his thought went on. "The wells are all full, the streams are running down from the hills, the frogs are singing in the marshes, and the rice-fields are beginning to look green."

"I know," said Bunder-Runder.

Other thoughts began cropping up thick and fast, in and out they went. It was quite true that there was no wall they could not get through. They began to crowd in on him. Bunder-Runder let them come and go again just as they liked. He made them all welcome. If they wished to stay, they stayed, if they wished to go, they went.

Bunder-Runder sat in a sort of dream.

"This wall is wearing thin," he said to himself and laughed, while quicker and quicker his thoughts went in and out.

Presently he began singing. First he began imitating the song of the frogs, then of the birds. Hearing so much noise going on within, one of the jailers looked in on him. But Bunder-Runder was outside, and did not see him. Bunder-Runder was up in the hills. He had climbed quite high, he was looking down on the plain, he could see all the streams shining away through the grain-fields, he could see men driving bullocks along the road, he could hear them call as they passed to other men working in the fields, he could hear——

"Hi, you!" cried his jailer for the third time. "Not so much noise in there!"

Bunder-Runder came back with a bound, and sat cross-legged, smiling up at the eye which looked in on him through the hole in the door.

"High and mighty and merciful, I beg pardon," said Bunder-Runder respectfully. "I forgot myself, I did not remember where I was. It is a beautiful day, is it not?"

The jailer grunted and withdrew, and Bunder-Runder was off again. He came back to his cell to sleep, quite tired, but most wonderfully refreshed. Truly, as he had said, it had been a beautiful day.

After that the days grew more and more beautiful. In and out went his thoughts, they never left him alone. He was always forgetting himself, and sang without knowing it.

His jailer reported him to the governor.

"Bunder-Runder," he said, "is always making more noise than he has any right to. From the way he sings, Sahib, you would think he was at a festival or at a wedding or at a rich uncle's funeral. I can't cure him of it, I've left him without light and I've left him without food, and still he goes on. It's not reasonable unless he is planning some way by which to escape."

The governor seemed to think as the jailer did, he caused Bunder-Runder to be brought before him, and examined him up and down, and could discover nothing. He caused his cell to be searched, and, to make doubly sure, had him transferred to another. But despite it all, the singing of Bunder-Runder went on, and some days it was as though he were burying not one rich uncle, but ten.

In a way that is what Bunder-Runder was doing He was burying one after another all the injuries that life had done him in the days when he was at liberty, and from the grave of every injury and injustice that he buried a little kindness sprang up to life and came to keep him company. Bunder-Runder's cell became full of these little kindnesses. They sat round him and under him, they leaned over him, they laughed and jested, pushing him this way and that Every morning when he woke they pushed him into the open He left his cell behind, passing through the thin walls, and followed their leading away over the shining plains and into the lives of people he knew and of others he had never known, and of others still who had not yet been born

He began to make a poem about them all in his own head, he must not write it down That occupied him, day by day it grew larger, filling his mind He sat very silent, his jailer no more complained of him

"His spirit is properly broken," said he to the governor, "he has become good" And the governor gave him a good-conduct mark

In the course of three years Bunder-Runder earned a lot of good-conduct marks, but he did not know of it The poem was nearly finished, that was all he cared about

It was a very beautiful poem, all about children—children of tender years, children in the spring of youth, in the full strength of manhood, and in the decline of age, for he had found out that secret which keeps alive the common child in us all When the governor of the prison came and spoke to him, Bunder-Runder heard him—under his beard and inside that fat, red face of his—babbling like a child, and putting it into his poem as soon as the governor's back was turned, he swung his head this way and that and laughed for the babbling of the governor's voice was as sweet to him as the sound of a brook that runs down to empty itself into the great river and into the sea It wanted only that the poem was done

Out in the world everything had begun to spring, flowers and the young green fields of rice and music in the living heart, and from every tree, a little shaken by the wind, came fragrance to catch the breath and a twinkle of leaves to make delight to the eye Bunder-Runder was there in the midst of it all, oh, yes, he was there His poem was finished now, and he stood on the ridge of hills looking out over the villages of the plains, and in every village, he knew, festival was going on, and people were rejoicing, perhaps not knowing why But he knew that it was because the eternal child in Nature was looking once more into men's eyes as unspoiled as ever, as clear and shining and pure as in the days of old For hundreds and thousands of years wrong and cruelty had been trying to possess and cover the earth , but it had failed, and Nature was as much a child as she had ever been

Bunder-Runder, with his finished poem in his heart, followed his thoughts from village to village , and everywhere he went he found a home waiting for him He had not to speak the meaning of his poem was in his face , people came and looked at him, then ran to tell others, and word of him went before Everywhere he went that day whole villages came out to meet him The children and the young women threw garlands upon him as he passed He became a wagon of flowers , a wonderful scent filled his brain , he ceased to see the faces that thronged about him or hear the voices of the people Forward and forward he moved till he came to a deep sleep

In the evening, just before sunset, the jailer opened the door of Bunder-Runder's cell He looked in , then, without looking again, he ran fast, fast to fetch the governor He was almost too frightened to speak , but what he did say was enough to make the governor understand that the prison rules were being broken So the governor put on an angry countenance and came with him to the door of Bunder-Runder's cell

Inside sat Bunder-Runder very still, his legs crossed, his hands resting upon his feet , and all about him hung garlands of flower . breathing incense very strange The cell was full of their fragrance

" Number 109," said the governor, " where did you get those flowers ? "

Bunder-Runder did not answer

" Go and give him a shake," said the governor " He is asleep "

" Sahib, I dare not," replied the jailer

So the governor went and did it himself At the governor's touch Bunder-Runder bowed softly forward, his face to the ground , and suddenly all the garlands of flowers that were upon him faded away, leaving only their fragrance behind

The governor turned and ran out of the cell, for he too was afraid Bunder-Runder was just as harmless now that he was dead as ever he had been in life, and yet the governor was afraid That is often the way People are afraid of things they do not understand

The cell where Bunder-Runder lived those three years making his poem has been many times washed and disinfected , but there is still something the matter with it, and it is almost useless, for when a prisoner is put into it he sings.

E W HORNING

B. 1866

THE SALOON PASSENGER

AS the cable was hauled in, and the usual cheering passed between tug and ship, Skrimshire unclenched his teeth and gave tongue with a gusto as cynical as it was sincere. It had just come home to him that this was the last link with land, and he beheld it broken with ineffable relief. Tuskar Rock was already a little thing astern, the Australian coast lay the width of the world away, the captain did not expect even to sight any other, and had assured Skrimshire that the average passage was not less than ninety days. So, whatever was to happen in the end, he had three months more of life, and of such liberty as a sailing-ship affords.

He descended to his cabin, locked himself in, and lay down to read what the newspapers had to say about the murder. It seemed strange to Skrimshire that this was the first opportunity he had had of reading up his own crime, but the peculiar circumstances of his departure had forbidden him many a last pleasure ashore, and he was only too glad to have the papers to read now and a state-room to himself in which to read them. There was a heavy sea running, and Skrimshire was no sailor. But he would not have been without the motion, or even its effects upon himself. Both were an incessant reminder that his cabin was not a prison cell, and could not turn into one for three months at all events. Besides, he was not the man to surrender to a malady which is largely nervous. So he lay occupied in his berth, medium-sized, dark-skinned, neither young nor middle-aged, only respectably dressed, and with salient jaw unshaven since the thing of which he read without a flicker of the heavy eyelids or a tremor of the hairy hands.

He had five papers of that morning's date, the crime was worthily reported in them all, one or two had leaders on its peculiar atrocity. Skrimshire sighed when he came to the end, it was hard that he could see no more papers for three months. The egotism of the criminal was excited within him. It was lucky he was no longer on land, he would have run any risk for the evening papers. His very anonymity as author of the tragedy—the thing to which he owed his temporary security—was a certain irritation to him. He was not ashamed of what he had done. It read wonderfully, and was already admitted to have shown that diabolical cleverness and audacity for which Skrimshire alone deserved the credit, yet it looked as though he would never get it. Thus far, at least, it was plain that there was not a shred of evidence against him, or against any person upon earth. He sighed again, smiled at himself for sighing, and, closing his eyes for the first time since the murder, slept like a baby for several hours.

Skrimshire was the only passenger in the saloon, of which he presently became the life and soul. At the first meal he yielded to the temptation of a casual allusion to the murder on the Caledonian Railway, but though they had heard of it, neither captain nor officers showed much interest in the subject, which Skrimshire dropped with a show of equal indifference. And this was his last weakness of the kind. He threw his newspapers overboard, and conquered the morbid vanity they had inspired by a superb effort of the will. Remorse he had none, and for three months certain he was absolutely safe. So he determined to enjoy himself meanwhile, and, in doing so, being a dominant personality, he managed to diffuse considerable enjoyment throughout the ship.

This man was not a gentleman in either the widest or the narrowest sense of that invidious term. He wore cheap jewellery, cheap tweed as yellow as his boots, paper collars, and shirts of a brilliant blue. He spoke with a Cockney intonation which, in a Scottish vessel, grated more or less upon every ear. But he had funds of information and of anecdote as inexhaustible as his energy and as entertaining as his rough good-humour. He took a lively interest in every incident of the voyage, and was as ready to go aloft in a gale of wind as to make up a rubber in any part of the ship. Within a month he was equally popular in the fore-castle, the steerage, and the captain's cabin. Then one morning Skrimshire awoke with a sense that something unusual was happening, followed by an instantaneous premonition of impending peril to himself.

There were too many boots and voices over his head, the ship was bowling sedately before the north-east trades, and otherwise as still as a ship could be. Skrimshire sat up and looked through his port-hole. A liner was passing them, also outward-bound, and some three or four miles to port There was nothing alarming in that. Yet Skrimshire went straight on deck in his pyjamas, and, on the top rung of the poop-ladder, paused an instant, his now bearded jaw more salient than it had been for weeks

Four little flags fluttered one above the other from the peak halliards, and at the weather-rail stood the captain, a powerful figure of a man, with his long legs planted well apart, and a marine binocular glued to his eyes Near him was the second mate, a simple young fellow, who greeted Skrimshire with a nod

"What's up, M'Kendrick? What is she?"

"A Castle liner, one o' Donal' Currie's Cape boats."

"Why did you signal her?" whispered Skrimshire

"'Twas she signalled us"

"Do you know what it's all about?"

"No, but the captain does"

The captain turned round as they were speaking, and Skrimshire read his secret at a glance It was his own, discovered since his flight and flashed across the sea by the liner's pennons Meanwhile the captain was looking him up and down, his hitherto friendly face convulsed with hatred and horror, and Skrimshire realised the instant necessity of appearing absolutely unsuspecting of suspicion

"Mornin', captain," said he, with all the cheerful familiarity which already existed between them, "and what's all this bloomin' signallin' about?"

"Want to know?" thundered the captain, now looking him through and through

"You bet I do"

And Skrimshire held his breath upon an insinuating grin, parrying plain abhorrence with seeming unconcern, until the other merely stared

"Then you can mind your own business," roared the captain at last, "and get off my poop—and speak to my officer of the watch again at your peril!"

"Well—I'm—hanged!" drawled Skrimshire, and turned on his heel with the raised eyebrows of bewildered innocence, but the drops stood thick upon his forehead when he saw himself next minute in his stateroom mirror

So he was found out, and the captain had been informed he had a murderer aboard, and detectives would meet the ship in Hobson's Bay, and the murderer would be escorted back through the Suez Canal and duly hanged after nothing better than a run round the world for his money! The thing had happened before · it had been the fate of the first train murderer, but he had taken the wrong hat in his panic. What on earth had Skrimshire left behind him that was going to hang him after all?

He could not think, nor was that the thing to think about. The immediate necessity he had seen at once, with extraordinary quickness of perception, and he had already acted upon it with a nerve more extraordinary still. He must preserve such a front as should betray not the shadow of a dream that he could by any possibility be suspected by any soul on board, absolute ease must be his watchword, absolute security his pose, then they might like to save themselves the inconvenience of keeping him in irons, knowing that detectives would be waiting to do all the dirty work at the other end. And in two months' thinking a man should hit upon something, or he deserved to swing.

The opening day was not the worst. The captain's rudeness was enough to account for a change in any man's manner, and Skrimshire did both well and naturally to sulk for the remainder of that day. His unusual silence gave him unusual opportunities for secret observation, and he was thankful indeed that for the time being there was no necessity to live up to his popular reputation. The scene of the morning was all over the ship, yet, so far as the saloon passenger could see, the captain had not told anybody as yet. The chief mate invited him into his cabin for a smoke, spread the usual newspaper for a spittoon, and spun the inevitable yarns, but then the chief was a hard-bitten old dog with nerves of iron and a face of brass, he might know everything, or nothing at all, it was for Skrimshire to adapt his manner to the first hypothesis, and to impress the mate with the exuberance of his spirits and the utter lightness of his heart. Later in the morning he had some conversation with the second officer. It was but a word, and yet it confirmed the culprit in his conviction about the signals.

"What have I done," he asked M'Kendrick, "to make the old man jump down my throat like that?"

"It wasna you," replied the second, "it was the signals. But ye might have known not to bother him wi' questions just then."

"But what the deuce were the signals about?"

"That's more than I ken, Bennett."

This was Skrimshire's alias on board.

" Can't you find out ? "

" Mebbe I might—after a bit "

" Why not now ? "

" The old man's got the book in his cabin—the deectionary-book about the signalling, ye ken It's my place to keep yon, but the old man's carried it off, and there's no' another in the ship "

" Aha ! "

" Ou, ay, it was somethin' for hisselt', nae doot , but none of us kens what ; an' noo we never wull, for he's as close as tar, is the old man "

The " old man " was in point of fact no older than Skrimshire, but he had worked his way aft from ship's boy, and a cruel boyhood followed by an early command had aged and hardened him A fine seaman, and a firm, though fiery, commander, Captain Neilson had also as kind a heart as one could wish to win, and a mind as simple as it was fair It was on these qualities that Skrimshire determined to play, as he sulked in his deck-chair on the poop of the four-masted barque Lochwinnoch, while the captain thumped up and down in his rubber soles, his face black with thought, and a baleful eye upon the picture of offended oblivion behind the novel in the chair

It was an interesting contest that was beginning between this pair, both of whom were strong, determined, wilful men , but one was as cunning as the other was kind, and he not only read his better like a book, but supplied in his turn a very legible and entirely plausible reading of himself He never dreamt of impressing the captain as an innocent man , that would entail an alteration of pose inconsistent with the attitude of one who entertained no tittle of suspicion that the morning's signalling had been about himself On the contrary, what he had really been, and what he must now doubly appear, was the guilty man who had very little fear of ever being detected, and not the fleeting shadow of a notion that such detection had already taken place.

This was the obvious and the only rôle , he had played it instinctively thus far, and need only go on as he had begun The reward was at best precarious It depended entirely upon the character and temperament of Captain Neilson Skrimshire credited him with sufficient strength and sufficient humanity to do nothing and to tell nobody until the Australian detectives came aboard. But that remained to be proved. Neilson might leave him a free man all the voyage, and yet put him in irons before the very end ; it would be kinder to do so at once. However, he should not do so at all if Skrimshire could help it, and he was not long in letting fall an oblique and delicate, though an excessively audacious hint upon the responsibility of such a course in his own particular case.

It was at the mid-day meal, while the smoke of the accursed liner was still a dirty cloud on the horizon. Neilson remained morose and silent, while the offended passenger would not give him word or look, but, on the other hand, talked more than ever, and with invidious gaiety, to the first and second officers. The captain glowered at his plate, searching his transparent soul for the ideal course and catching very little of the conversation, how the topic of suicide arose he never knew.

"An' I call it th' act of a coward," young M'Kendrick was declaring, "you can say what you like, but a man's no' a man that does the like o' that."

"Well, you think about it next time you're havin' a shave, old man," retorted Skrimshire pleasantly. "Think o' buryin' a razor in your neck, and the pain, and the blood comin' over your fingers like as though you'd turned on the hot tap, and if you think long enough you'll know whether it's the act of a coward or whether it ain't."

"I'd blow my blessed head in," said the chief officer. "It'd be quicker."

"Oh, if it comes to that," said Skrimshire, "I'd take prussic acid for choice. It would take a lot to make me, I admit, but I'd do it like a shot to escape a worse death. I've often thought, for instance, what a rum thing it is, in these days, that a man of any sense or education whatever should let himself live to be hung!"

The captain looked up at this, so far he had merely listened. But Skrimshire was addressing himself to the chief mate at the other end of the table, neither look nor tone was intended to include Captain Neilson, the one being averted, and the other lowered, to a nice degree of insolent disregard. On the other hand, the manner of this theoretical suicide was all audacity and nonchalance, combined with a certain underlying sincerity which gave it a peculiar value in the mind of one listener. In a word, it was the manner of a man so convinced of his own security as to afford the luxury of telling the truth about himself in jest.

"They don't give you a chance," said the mate. "They watch you night and day You'd be a good man, once you'd got to dance the hornpipe on nothing, if you went out any other way "

" Nevertheless, I'd do it," said Skrimshire, with cheery confidence. " I'd back myself to do it, and before their eyes "

" Poison ? "

" Yes "

" In a ring, eh ? "

" A ring ! Do you suppose they'd leave you your rings ? No ; it might be in a hollow tooth, and it might not All I say is that I'd back myself to cheat the hangman " Skrimshire said it through his black moustache " And I'd do it, too," he added, after a pause

Then, at last, the captain put in his word " You would do well," said he quietly " I once saw a man swing, and I never want to see another Ugh ! "

His eyes met Skrimshire's, which fell deliberately , and the talkative tongue wagged no more that meal

Thereafter Neilson was civility itself, only observant civility He had made up his mind in the knotty matter of the suspected murderer, and the latter read his determination as he had read the difficulty which it solved, if only for the present

" So he means to let me go loose, only keeping an eye on me , so far, so good But how long—how long ? If I thought he was going to put me in irons as soon as he sights the land——"

He looked over the side, and a slight shudder shook even his frame It was very blue water now, the depth unfathomable A shark had been seen that morning And, sharks or no sharks, Skrimshire could not swim But he had two months of steady thought before him

Meanwhile the captain showed some cunning in his turn He evidently wished to convince himself that Skrimshire had not suspected the signalling One day, at any rate, the passenger was invited into the captain's cabin, in quite the old friendly fashion, for a pipe and a chat , in the middle of which Neilson left him for five minutes to speak to the officer of the watch As the north-east trades blew as strong and true as ever, as the yards had not been touched for days, and as no sail was in sight, Skrimshire scented a trap, and presently beheld one set under his nose in the shape of the signalling book. Skrimshire smiled The captain found him buried in a magazine, and his little trap untouched And the obvious deduction was also final to the sailor's mind.

Six weeks produced no change in the outward situation, but brought the voyage so near its end that every soul but one waxed merry with the thought of shore—and that one seemed the merriest of them all. They had come from the longitude of the Cape to that of Kangaroo Island in twenty days, and in all probability would enter Port Philip Heads in two days more. In one week the Lochwinnoch had logged close upon two thousand miles, boy and man, her commander had never made such an "eastings" in his seagoing life. His pleasure and his pride were alike enormous, and Skrimshire conceived that his general good-will towards men could scarcely have suffered by the experience. He determined, at all events, to feel his way to such compassion as an honest man could be expected to extend towards an unhung murderer, and he felt it with that mixture of cautious craft and sheer impudence which made him the formidable criminal he was.

It was the night that might prove the last of the voyage, and the last night of freedom for the unhappy Skrimshire. Unhappy he undoubtedly was, for the strain of continuing as he had begun, "the life and soul of the ship," had told upon even his nerves in the end, though to the end it had been splendidly borne. To-night, however, as he paced the poop by the captain's side, he exhibited for the first time a despondency which exactly fitted in with Neilson's conception of his case.

"I shall never forget this voyage," said Skrimshire, sighing. "You may not believe me, captain, but I'm sorry it's over. I am, indeed, no doubt I'm the only man in the ship who is."

"And why are you?" asked Neilson, eyeing his passenger for once with the curiosity which had so long consumed him, as also with the sympathy which had grown upon him, despite, or on account of, those sinister signals from the Castle liner.

Skrimshire shrugged.

"Oh, that's a long story. I've had a rum life of it, and not what you would call the life of a saint. This voyage will stand out as one of its happiest chapters, that's all, and it may be one of the last."

"Why do you say that?"

"Oh, one can never tell."

"But what did you think of doing out there?"

"God knows!"

Neilson was miserable. There was a ring in the hoarse voice that went straight to his heart. He longed to tell this man what was in store for him—what he himself knew—but he conquered the longing as he had conquered it before. Time enough when the detectives came on board, dirty work and all responsibility would very well keep for them.

So the good captain thought to himself, as the pair took turns in silence, so the dominant brain at his side willed and intended that he should think.

"Whatever you hear of me," resumed Skrimshire at last, "and however great a beast I may some day turn out, remember that I wasn't one aboard your ship. Will you, captain? Remember the best of me and I'll be grateful, wherever I am, and whatever happens."

"I will," said Neilson, hoarse in his turn, and he grasped the guilty hand. Skrimshire had some ado to keep from smiling, but there was another point upon which he required an assurance, and he sought it after a decent pause.

"So you expect to pass the Otway some time to-morrow?"

"By dinner-time, if we're lucky."

"And there you signal?"

"Yes, they should hear of us in Melbourne early to-morrow afternoon."

"And what about the pilot?"

"Oh, he'll come aboard later—certainly not before evening. It's easy as mid-ocean till you come to the Heads, and we can't be there before nightfall, even if the wind holds fair."

"Well, let's hope it may. So long, captain, and a thousand thanks for all your kindness. Dark night, by the way!"

"Yes, let's hope to-morrow won't be like it."

But the next night was darker still, there was neither moon nor star, and Skrimshire was thankful to have had speech with the captain while he could, for now he would speak to nobody, and to-morrow—

There was no to-morrow in Skrimshire's mind, there was only to-night. There was the hour he had been living for these six long weeks. There was the plan that had come to him with the south-east trades, and rolled in his mind through the Southern Ocean, only to reach perfection within the last few hours. But it was perfect now. And all beyond lay dark.

"Isn't that their boat, sir?"

It was the chief steward who wanted to know, he was dallying on the poop in the excitement of the occasion. The captain stood farther aft, an anxious face, a red cigar-end, and a blue Tam-o'-Shanter were all of him that showed in the intense darkness. The main-yard had just been backed, and the chief officer was now on the quarter-deck, seeing the rope ladder over the side. It was through his glasses that Skrimshire was watching the pilot's cutter, or rather her lights, and as well as he could, by their meagre rays, the little boat that now bobbed against the cutter's side.

"It is the boat, ain't it, sir?" persisted the steward.

"Yes, I think so," said Skrimshire. "How many men come with the pilot as a rule?"

"Only himself and a chap to row him."

"Ah! You might give these to the chief officer, steward. I'm going to my cabin for a minute. Don't forget to thank the mate for lending me his glasses, they've been exceedingly useful to me."

And Skrimshire disappeared down the ladder, his tone had been strange, but the steward only remembered this afterwards, at the time he was too excited himself, and too glad of a glass to level at the boat, to note any such nicety as a mere tone.

"Four of them, by Jingo!" mused the steward. "I wonder what that's for?"

But he did not wonder long. In a very few minutes the four were on board, and ascending the same ladder by which Skrimshire had gone below, the pilot at their head. Neilson received them at the break of the poop.

"I congratulate you, captain," was the pilot's greeting; "we didn't expect you before next week. Now, first allow me," and he lowered his voice, "to introduce Inspector Robins, of the Melbourne police, this gentleman is an officer he has brought with him, and my man has come aboard for a message for the shore. Mr Robins would like a word with you before we let him go. There is no hurry, for I'm very much afraid I can't take you in till daylight."

Neilson took the inspector to the weather-rail.

"I know what's coming," he said. "The Garth Castle signalled——"

"I know, I know. Have you got him? Have you got him?" rapped out Robins.

"Safe and sound," whispered the captain; "and thinks himself as right as the bank, poor devil!"

"Then you didn't put him in irons?"

"No, I thought it better not to. He'd have committed suicide. I spotted that, sounded him without his knowing," said the crafty captain. "I happened to read the signals myself, and I never let on to a soul in the ship."

The good fellow looked delighted with himself behind his red cigar, but the acute face of the detective scarcely reflected his satisfaction.

"Well, that's all right if he's all right," said Robins. "If you don't mind, captain, I'd like to be introduced to him. One or both of us will spend the night with him, by your leave."

"As you like," said Neilson; "but I can't help feeling sorry for him. He's no more idea of this than the man in the moon. That you, steward? Where's Mr Bennett? He was here a minute ago."

"Yes, sir, only just gone below, sir."

"Well, go and ask him to come up and drink with the pilot. I'll introduce him to the pilot, and you can do what you like," continued the captain, only wishing he could shirk a detestable duty altogether. "But I give you fair warning, this is a desperate man or I'm much mistaken in him."

"Desperate!" chuckled the inspector, "don't we know it? It seems to have been as bad a murder as you've had in the old country for a long time. In a train. All planned. Victim in one carriage, our friend in the next, got along footboard in tunnel, shot him dead through window, and got back. Case of revenge, and other fellow no beauty, but this one's got to swing. On his way to join your ship, too, passage booked beforehand. The most cold-blooded plant——"

It was the chief steward, breathless and panic-stricken.

"His door's locked——"

"He always does lock it," exclaimed the captain, as Robins darted to the ladder with an oath.

"But now he won't answer!" cried the steward.

And even with his words the answer came, in the terrific report of a revolver fired in a confined space. Next instant the inspector had hurled himself into the little saloon, the others at his heels, and half the ship's company at theirs. There was no need to point out the culprit's cabin. White smoke was streaming through the ventilated panels, all stood watching it, but for a time none spoke. Then Robins turned upon the captain.

"We have you to thank for this, Captain Nelson," said he. "It is you who will have to answer for it."

Nelson turned white, but it was white heat with him.

"And so I will," he thundered, "but not to you! I don't answer to any confounded Colonial policeman, and I don't take cheek from one either. By Heaven, sir, I'm master of this ship, and for two paws I'll have you over the side again, detective or no detective. Do your business and break in that door, and you leave me to mind mine at the proper time and in the proper place."

He was furious with the fury of a masterful mariner, whose word is law aboard his own vessel, and yet beneath this virile passion there lurked a certain secret satisfaction in the thought that the companion of so many weeks was at all events not to hang. But the tragedy which had occurred was a greater unpleasantness for himself, indeed, it might well lead to something more, and Nelson stood in the grip of grim considerations in his own doorway, while Robins sent for the carpenter without addressing another syllable to the captain.

The saloon had been invaded by steerage passengers, and even by members of the crew, but discipline was for once a secondary matter in the eyes of Captain Nelson, and their fire was all for the insolent intruder who had dared to blame him aboard his own ship. The carpenter had to fight his way through a small, but exceedingly dense, crowd, beginning on the quarter-deck outside, and at its thickest in the narrow passage terminating in the saloon. On his arrival, however, the lock was soon forced, and the door swung inwards in a sudden silence, broken as suddenly by the detective's voice.

"Empty, by Heaven!" he shrieked. "Hunt him—he's given us the slip!"

And the saloon emptied only less rapidly than it had filled, till Nelson had it to himself, he stepped over to the passenger's cabin, half expecting to find him hiding in some corner after all. There he was wrong, nor did he at once grasp the full significance of what he did find.

A revolver was dangling from a peg on one side of the cabin—dangling by a yard of twine secured to the trigger. A few more inches of the twine, tied to the butt, had been severed by burning, as had another yard dangling from another peg at the opposite side of the cabin. An inch of candle lay upon the floor. The twine had been passed through it, there was its mark in the wax. The whole had been strung across the cabin and the candle lighted before Skrimshire left, the revolver, hung by the trigger as a man is hanged by the neck, had been given a three-feet drop, and gone off duly as the flame burnt down to the string. Such was the plan which an ingenious (if perverted) mind had taken several weeks to perfect.

Neilson rushed on deck, to find all hands at the rail, and a fresh sensation in the air. The pilot met him on the poop.

"My boat's gone!" he cried. "And the night like pitch!"

Neilson stood thunderstruck.

"Did you leave a man aboard?"

"No, he came up for a telegram for the police in town."

"Then you can't blame me there."

And the captain leapt upon the rail at the break of the poop.

"Silence!" he roared. "Silence—every man of you! If we can't see we must listen. That's it. Not a whisper now."

At first there was nothing to be heard but the quick-drawn breath from half a hundred throats, then, out of the impenetrable darkness, came the thud, thud, thud of an oar in a rowlock, already some distance away, but in which direction it was impossible to tell on such a night.

THE STOLEN BACILLUS

"THIS again," said the Bacteriologist, slipping a glass slide under the microscope, "is a preparation of the celebrated Bacillus of cholera—the cholera germ "

The pale-faced man peered down the microscope He was evidently not accustomed to that kind of thing, and held a limp white hand over his disengaged eye "I see very little," he said

"Touch this screw," said the Bacteriologist, "perhaps the microscope is out of focus for you Eyes vary so much Just the fraction of a turn this way or that "

"Ah! now I see," said the visitor "Not so very much to see after all Little streaks and shreds of pink And yet those little particles, those mere atomies, might multiply and devastate a city! Wonderful! "

He stood up, and releasing the glass slip from the microscope, held it in his hand towards the window "Scarcely visible," he said, scrutinising the preparation He hesitated "Are these—alive? Are they dangerous now? "

"Those have been stained and killed," said the Bacteriologist "I wish, for my own part, we could kill and stain every one of them in the universe "

"I suppose," the pale man said with a slight smile, "that you scarcely care to have such things about you in the living—in the active state? "

"On the contrary, we are obliged to," said the Bacteriologist "Here, for instance—" He walked across the room and took up one of several sealed tubes "Here is the living thing This is a cultivation of the actual living disease bacteria " He hesitated "Bottled cholera, so to speak "

A slight gleam of satisfaction appeared momentarily in the face of the pale man "It's a deadly thing to have in your possession," he said, devouring the little tube with his eyes The Bacteriologist watched the morbid pleasure in his visitor's expression This man, who had visited him that afternoon with a note of introduction from an old friend, interested him from the very contrast of their dispositions.

The lank black hair and deep grey eyes, the haggard expression and nervous manner, the fitful yet keen interest of his visitor were a novel change from the phlegmatic deliberations of the ordinary scientific worker with whom the Bacteriologist chiefly associated. It was perhaps natural, with a hearer evidently so impressionable to the lethal nature of his topic, to take the most effective aspect of the matter.

He held the tube in his hand thoughtfully. "Yes, here is the pestilence imprisoned. Only break such a little tube as this into a supply of drinking-water, say to these minute particles of life that one must needs stain and examine with the highest powers of the microscope even to see, and that one can neither smell nor taste—say to them, 'Go forth, increase and multiply, and replenish the cisterns,' and death—mysterious, untraceable death, death swift and terrible, death full of pain and indignity—would be released upon this city, and go hither and thither seeking his victims. Here he would take the husband from the wife, here the child from its mother, here the statesman from his duty, and here the toiler from his trouble. He would follow the water-mains, creeping along streets, picking out and punishing a house here and a house there where they did not boil their drinking-water, creeping into the wells of the mineral-water makers, getting washed into salad, and lying dormant in ices. He would wait ready to be drunk in the horse-troughs, and by unwary children in the public fountains. He would soak into the soil, to reappear in springs and wells at a thousand unexpected places. Once start him at the water-supply, and before we could ring him in, and catch him again, he would have decimated the metropolis."

He stopped abruptly. He had been told rhetoric was his weakness.

"But he is quite safe here, you know—quite safe."

The pale-faced man nodded. His eyes shone. He cleared his throat. "These Anarchist—rascals," said he, "are fools, blind fools—to use bombs when this kind of thing is attainable. I think——"

A gentle rap, a mere light touch of the finger-nails was heard at the door. The Bacteriologist opened it. "Just a minute, dear," whispered his wife.

When he re-entered the laboratory his visitor was looking at his watch. "I had no idea I had wasted an hour of your time," he said. "Twelve minutes to four. I ought to have left here by half-past three. But your things were really too interesting. No, positively, I cannot stop a moment longer. I have an engagement at four."

He passed out of the room reiterating his thanks, and the Bacteriologist accompanied him to the door, and then returned thoughtfully along the passage to his laboratory. He was musing on the ethnology of his visitor. Certainly the man was not a Teutonic type nor a common Latin one. "A morbid product, anyhow, I am afraid," said the Bacteriologist to himself. "How he gloated on those cultivations of disease germs!" A disturbing thought struck him. He turned to the bench by the vapour-bath, and then very quickly to his writing-table. Then he felt hastily in his pockets, and then rushed to the door. "I may have put it down on the hall table," he said.

"Minnie!" he shouted hoarsely in the hall.

"Yes, dear," came a remote voice.

"Had I anything in my hand when I spoke to you, dear, just now?"

Pause.

"Nothing, dear, because I remember——"

"Blue ruin!" cried the Bacteriologist, and incontinently ran to the front door and down the steps of his house to the street.

Minnie, hearing the door slam violently, ran in alarm to the window. Down the street a slender man was getting into a cab. The Bacteriologist, hatless, and in his carpet slippers, was running and gesticulating wildly towards this group. One slipper came off, but he did not wait for it. "He has gone mad!" said Minnie, "it's that horrid science of his", and, opening the window, would have called after him. The slender man, suddenly glancing round, seemed struck with the same idea of mental disorder. He pointed hastily to the Bacteriologist, said something to the cabman, the apron of the cab slammed, the whip swished, the horse's feet clattered, and in a moment cab, and Bacteriologist hotly in pursuit, had receded up the vista of the roadway and disappeared round the corner.

Minnie remained straining out of the window for a minute. Then she drew her head back into the room again. She was dumbfounded. "Of course he is eccentric," she meditated. "But running about London—in the height of the season, too—in his socks!" A happy thought struck her. She hastily put her bonnet on, seized his shoes, went into the hall, took down his hat and light overcoat from the pegs, emerged upon the doorstep, and hailed a cab that opportunely crawled by. "Drive me up the road and round Havelock Crescent, and see if we can find a gentleman running about in a velveteen coat and no hat."

"Velveteen coat, ma'am, and no 'at. Very good, ma'am." And the cabman whipped up at once in the most matter-of-fact way, as if he drove to this address every day in his life

Some few minutes later the little group of cabmen and loafers that collects round the cabmen's shelter at Haverstock Hill were startled by the passing of a cab with a ginger-coloured screw of a horse, driven furiously

They were silent as it went by, and then as it receded—"That's 'Arry 'Icks Wot's he got?" said the stout gentleman known as Old Tootles

"He's a-using his whip, he is, to rights," said the ostler boy

"Hullo!" said poor old Tommy Byles. "here's another bloomin' loonatic Blowed if there ain't"

"It's old George," said old Tootles, "and he's drivin' a loonatic, as you say Aint he a-clawin' out of the keb? Wonder if he's after 'Arry 'Icks?"

The group round the cabmen's shelter became animated Chorus "Go it, George!" "It's a race" "You'll ketch 'em!" "Whip up!"

"She's a goer, she is!" said the ostler boy

"Strike me giddy!" cried old Tootles "Here! I'm a-goin' to begin in a minute Here's another comin' If all the kebs in Hampstead ain't gone mad this morning!"

"It's a fieldmale this time," said the ostler boy

"She's a-followin' him," said old Tootles "Usually the other way about"

"What's she got in her 'and?"

"Looks like a 'igh 'at"

"What a bloomin' lark it is! Three to one on old George," said the ostler boy "Nexst!"

Minnie went by in a perfect roar of applause She did not like it, but she felt that she was doing her duty, and whirled on down Haverstock Hill and Camden Town High Street with her eyes ever intent on the animated back view of old George, who was driving her vagrant husband so incomprehensibly away from her.

The man in the foremost cab sat crouched in the corner, his arms tightly folded, and the little tube that contained such vast possibilities of destruction gripped in his hand His mood was a singular mixture of fear and exultation Chiefly he was afraid of being caught before he could accomplish his purpose, but behind this was a vaguer but larger fear of the awfulness of his crime. But his exultation far exceeded his fear No Anarchist before him had ever approached this conception of his Ravachol, Vaillant, all those distinguished persons whose fame he had envied dwindled into insignificance beside him He had only to make sure of the water supply, and break the little tube into a reservoir How brilliantly he had planned it, forged the letter of introduction and got into the laboratory, and how brilliantly he had seized his opportunity ! The world should hear of him at last All those people who had sneered at him, neglected him, preferred other people to him, found his company undesirable, should consider him at last Death, death, death ! They had always treated him as a man of no importance All the world had been in a conspiracy to keep him under He would teach them yet what it is to isolate a man What was this familiar street ? Great Saint Andrew Street, of course ! How fared the chase ? He craned out of the cab The Bacteriologist was scarcely fifty yards behind That was bad He would be caught and stopped yet He felt in his pocket for money, and found half-a-sovereign This he thrust up through the trap in the top of the cab into the man's face " More," he shouted, " if only we get away "

The money was snatched out of his hand " Right you are," said the cabman, and the trap slammed, and the lash lay along the glistening side of the horse The cab swayed, and the Anarchist, half-standing under the trap, put the hand containing the little glass tube upon the apron to preserve his balance He felt the brittle thing crack, and the broken half of it rang upon the floor of the cab He fell back into the seat with a curse, and stared dismally at the two or three drops of moisture on the apron

He shuddered

" Well ! I suppose I shall be the first P. w ! Anyhow, I shall be a Martyr That's something But it is a filthy death, nevertheless I wonder if it hurts as much as they say "

Presently a thought occurred to him—he groped between his feet. A little drop was still in the broken end of the tube, and he drank that to make sure It was better to make sure At any rate, he would not fail

Then it dawned upon him that there was no further need to escape the Bacteriologist In Wellington Street he told the cabman to stop, and got out He slipped on the step, and his head felt queer It was rapid stuff this cholera poison He waved his cabman out of existence, so to speak, and stood on the pavement with his arms folded upon his breast awaiting the arrival of the Bacteriologist. There was something tragic in his pose The sense of imminent death gave him a certain dignity He greeted his pursuer with a defiant laugh

"Vive l'Anarchie! You are too late, my friend I have drunk it The cholera is abroad!"

The Bacteriologist from his cab beamed curiously at him through his spectacles "You have drunk it! An Anarchist! I see now" He was about to say something more, and then checked himself A smile hung in the corner of his mouth He opened the apron of his cab as if to descend, at which the Anarchist waved him a dramatic farewell and strode off towards Waterloo Bridge, carefully jostling his infected body against as many people as possible The Bacteriologist was so preoccupied with the vision of him that he scarcely manifested the slightest surprise at the appearance of Minnie upon the pavement with his hat and shoes and overcoat "Very good of you to bring my things," he said, and remained lost in contemplation of the receding figure of the Anarchist

"You had better get in," he said, still staring Minnie felt absolutely convinced now that he was mad, and directed the cabman home on her own responsibility "Put on my shoes? Certainly dear," said he, as the cab began to turn, and hid the strutting black figure, now small in the distance, from his eyes Then suddenly something grotesque struck him, and he laughed Then he remarked, "It is really very serious, though"

"You see, that man came to my house to see me, and he is an Anarchist No—don't faint, or I cannot possibly tell you the rest And I wanted to astonish him, not knowing he was an Anarchist, and took up a cultivation of that new species of Bacterium I was telling you of, that infest, and I think cause, the blue patches upon various monkeys, and like a fool, I said it was Asiatic cholera And he ran away with it to poison the water of London, and he certainly might have made things look blue for this civilised city And now he has swallowed it Of course, I cannot say what will happen, but you know it turned that kitten blue, and the three puppies—in patches, and the sparrow—bright blue But the bother is, I shall have all the trouble and expense of preparing some more

"Put on my coat on this hot day! Why? Because we might meet Mrs Jabber My dear, Mrs Jabber is not a draught. But why should I wear a coat on a hot day because of Mrs.—? Oh! very well."

THE MAGIC SHOP

HERBERT GEORGE WELLS

I HAD seen the Magic Shop from afar several times, I had passed it once or twice, a shop window of alluring little objects, magic balls, magic hens, wonderful cones, ventriloquist dolls, the material of the basket trick, packs of cards that looked all right, and all that sort of thing, but never had I thought of going in until one day, almost without warning, Gip hauled me by my finger right up to the window, and so conducted himself that there was nothing for it but to take him in. I had not thought the place was there, to tell the truth—a modest-sized frontage in Regent Street, between the picture shop and the place where the chicks run about just out of patent incubators—but there it was sure enough. I had fancied it was down nearer the Circus, or round the corner in Oxford Street, or even in Holborn, always over the way and a little inaccessible it had been, with something of the mirage in its position, but here it was now quite indisputably, and the fat end of Gip's pointing finger made a noise upon the glass.

"If I was rich," said Gip, dabbing a finger at the Disappearing Egg, "I'd buy myself that. And that"—which was The Crying Baby, Very Human—"and that," which was a mystery, and called, so a neat card asserted, "Buy One and Astonish Your Friends."

"Anything," said Gip, "will disappear under one of those cones I have read about it in a book."

"And there, dadda, is the Vanishing Halfpenny—only they've put it this way up so's we can't see how it's done."

Gip, dear boy, inherits his mother's breeding, and he did not propose to enter the shop or worry in any way, only, you know, quite unconsciously he lugged my finger doorward, and he made his interest clear.

"That," he said, and pointed to the Magic Bottle.

"If you had that?" I said, at which promising inquiry he looked up with a sudden radiance.

"I could show it to Jessie," he said, thoughtful as ever of others.

"It's less than a hundred days to your birthday, Gibbles," I said, and laid my hand on the door-handle.

Gip made no answer, but his grip tightened on my finger, and so we came into the shop

It was no common shop this, it was a magic shop, and all the prancing precedence Gip would have taken in the matter of mere toys was wanting. He left the burthen of the conversation to me.

It was a little, narrow shop, not very well lit, and the door-bell pinged again with a plaintive note as we closed it behind us. For a moment or so we were alone and could glance about us. There was a tiger in papier-maché on the glass case that covered the low counter—a grave, kind-eyed tiger that wagged his head in a methodical manner, there were several crystal spheres, a china hand holding magic cards, a stock of magic fish-bowls in various sizes, and an immodest magic hat that shamelessly displayed its springs. On the floor were magic mirrors, one to draw you out long and thin, one to swell your head and vanish your legs, and one to make you short and fat like a draught, and while we were laughing at these the shopman, as I suppose, came in.

At any rate, there he was behind the counter—a curious, sallow, dark man, with one ear larger than the other and a chin like the toe-cap of a boot.

"What can we have the pleasure?" he said, spreading his long, magic fingers on the glass case, and so with a start we were aware of him.

"I want," I said, "to buy my little boy a few simple tricks."

"Legerdemain?" he asked. "Mechanical? Domestic?"

"Anything amusing?" said I.

"Um!" said the shopman, and scratched his head for a moment as if thinking. Then, quite distinctly, he drew from his head a glass ball. "Something in this way?" he said, and held it out.

The action was unexpected. I had seen the trick done at entertainments endless times before—it's part of the common stock of conjurers—but I had not expected it here. "That's good," I said, with a laugh.

"Isn't it?" said the shopman.

Gip stretched out his disengaged hand to take this object and found merely a blank palm.

"It's in your pocket," said the shopman, and there it was!

"How much will that be?" I asked.

"We make no charge for glass balls," said the shopman, politely.

"We get them"—he picked one out of his elbow as he spoke—"free" He produced another from the back of his neck, and laid it beside its predecessor on the counter Gip regarded his glass ball sagely, then directed a look of inquiry at the two on the counter, and finally brought his round-eyed scrutiny to the shopman, who smiled "You may have those too," said the shopman, "and, if you don't mind, one from my mouth So!"

Gip counselled me mutely for a moment, and then in a profound silence put away the four balls, resumed my reassuring finger, and nerved himself for the next event

"We get all our smaller tricks in that way," the shopman remarked

I laughed in the manner of one who subscribes to a jest "Instead of going to the wholesale shop," I said "Of course, it's cheaper."

"In a way," the shopman said "Though we pay in the end But not so heavily—as people suppose Our larger tricks, and our daily provisions and all the other things we want, we get out of that hat . And you know, sir, if you'll excuse my saying it, there isn't a wholesale shop, not for Genuine Magic goods, sir I don't know if you noticed our inscription—The Genuine Magic Shop" He drew a business card from his cheek and handed it to me "Genuine," he said, with his finger on the word, and added, "There is absolutely no deception, sir"

He seemed to be carrying out the joke pretty thoroughly, I thought

He turned to Gip with a smile of remarkable affability "You, you know, are the Right Sort of Boy"

I was surprised at his knowing that, because, in the interests of discipline, we keep it rather a secret even at home, but Gip received it in unflinching silence, keeping a steadfast eye on him

"It's only the Right Sort of Boy gets through that doorway"

And, as if by way of illustration, there came a rattling at the door, and a squeaking little voice could be faintly heard "Nyar! I warn 'a go in there, dad-da, I WARN 'a go in there Ny-a-a-ah!" and then the accents of a down-trodden parent, urging consolations and propitiations "It's locked, Edward," he said

"But it isn't," said I

"It is, sir," said the shopman, "always—for that sort of child," and as he spoke we had a glimpse of the other youngster, a little, white face, pallid from sweet-eating and over-sapid food, and distorted by evil passions, a ruthless little egotist, pawing at the enchanted pane

"It's no good, sir," said the shopman, as I moved, with my natural helpfulness, doorward, and presently the spoilt child was carried off howling

"How do you manage that?" I said, breathing a little more freely

"Magic!" said the shopman, with a careless wave of the hand, and behold! sparks of coloured fire flew out of his fingers and vanished into the shadows of the shop

"You were saying," he said, addressing himself to Gip, "before you came in, that you would like one of our 'Buy One and Astonish your Friends' boxes?"

Gip, after a gallant effort, said "Yes"

"It's in your pocket"

And leaning over the counter—he really had an extraordinarily long body—this amazing person produced the article in the customary conjurer's manner "Paper," he said, and took a sheet out of the empty hat with the springs, "string," and behold his mouth was a string-box, from which he drew an unending thread, which when he had tied his parcel he bit off—and, it seemed to me, swallowed the ball of string And then he lit a candle at the nose of one of the ventriloquist's dummies, stuck one of his fingers (which had become sealing-wax red) into the flame, and so sealed the parcel Then there was the Disappearing Egg, he remarked, and produced one from within my coat-breast and packed it, and also The Crying Baby, Very Human I handed each parcel to Gip as it was ready, and he clasped them to his chest

He said very little, but his eyes were eloquent, the clutch of his arms was eloquent He was the playground of unspeakable emotions These, you know, were real Magics

Then, with a start, I discovered something moving about in my hat—something soft and jumpy I whipped it off, and a ruffled pigeon—no doubt a confederate—dropped out and ran on the counter, and went, I fancy, into a cardboard box behind the papier-mâché tiger

"Tut, tut!" said the shopman, dexterously relieving me of my head-dress, "careless bird, and—as I live—nesting!"

He shook my hat, and shook out into his extended hand two or three eggs, a large marble, a watch, about half a dozen of the inevitable glass balls, and then crumpled, crinkled paper, more and more and more, talking all the time of the way in which people neglect to brush their hats inside as well as out, politely, of course, but with a certain personal application "All sorts of things accumulate, sir. . . Not you, of course, in particular. . . Nearly every customer . . . Astonishing what they carry about with them. . ." The crumpled paper rose and billowed on the counter more and more and more, until he was nearly hidden from us, until he was altogether hidden, and still his voice went on and on "We none of us know what the fair semblance of a human being may conceal, sir. Are we all then no better than brushed exteriors, whited sepulchres——"

His voice stopped—exactly like when you hit a neighbour's gramophone with a well-aimed brick, the same instant silence, and the rustle of the paper stopped, and everything was still.

"Have you done with my hat?" I said, after an interval

There was no answer

I stared at Gip, and Gip stared at me, and there were our distortions in the magic mirrors, looking very rum, and grave, and quiet. . .

"I think we'll go now," I said "Will you tell me how much all this comes to?"

"I say," I said, on a rather louder note, "I want the bill, and my hat, please."

It might have been a sniff from behind the paper pile

"Let's look behind the counter, Gip," I said "He's making fun of us."

I led Gip round the head-wagging tiger, and what do you think there was behind the counter? No one at all! Only my hat on the floor, and a common conjurer's lop-eared white rabbit lost in meditation, and looking as stupid and crumpled as only a conjurer's rabbit can do. I resumed my hat, and the rabbit lolloped a lollop or so out of my way.

"Dadda!" said Gip, in a guilty whisper

"What is it, Gip?" said I

"I do like this shop, dadda."

"So should I," I said to myself, "if the counter wouldn't suddenly extend itself to shut one off from the door." But I didn't call Gip's attention to that. "Pussy!" he said, with a hand out to the rabbit as it came lolloping past us, "Pussy, do Gip a magic!" and his eyes followed it as it squeezed through a door I had certainly not remarked a moment before. Then this door opened wider, and the man with one ear larger than the other appeared again. He was smiling still, but his eye met mine with something between amusement and defiance. "You'd like to see our show-room, sir," he said, with an innocent suavity. Gip tugged my finger forward. I glanced at the counter and met the shopman's eye again. I was beginning to think the magic just a little too genuine. "We haven't very much time," I said. But somehow we were inside the show-room before I could finish that.

"All goods of the same quality," said the shopman, rubbing his flexible hands together, "and that is the Best. Nothing in the place that isn't genuine Magic, and warranted thoroughly rum. Excuse me, sir!"

I felt him pull at something that clung to my coat sleeve, and then I saw he held a little, wriggling red demon by the tail—the little creature bit and fought and tried to get at his hand—and in a moment he tossed it carelessly behind a counter. No doubt the thing was only an image of twisted india-rubber, but for the moment——! And his gesture was exactly that of a man who handles some petty biting bit of vermin. I glanced at Gip, but Gip was looking at a magic rocking-horse. I was glad he hadn't seen the thing. "I say," I said, in an undertone, and indicating Gip, and the red demon with my eyes, "you haven't many things like that about, have you?"

"None of ours! Probably brought it with you," said the shopman—also in an undertone, and with a more dazzling smile than ever. "Astonishing what people will carry about with them unawares!" And then to Gip, "Do you see anything you fancy here?"

There were many things that Gip fancied there.

He turned to this astonishing tradesman with mingled confidence and respect. "Is that a Magic Sword?" he said.

"A Magic Toy Sword. It neither bends, breaks, nor cuts the fingers. It renders the bearer invincible in battle against any one under eighteen. Half-a-crown to seven and sixpence, according to size. These panoplies on cards are for juvenile knights-errant and very useful—shield of safety, sandals of swiftness, helmet of invisibility."

"Oh, daddy!" gasped Gip.

I tried to find out what they cost, but the shopman did not heed me. He had got Gip now, he had got him away from my finger; he had embarked upon the exposition of all his confounded stock, and nothing was going to stop him. Presently I saw with a qualm of distrust and something very like jealousy that Gip had hold of this person's finger as usually he has hold of mine. No doubt the fellow was interesting, I thought, and had an interestingly faked lot of stuff, really good faked stuff, still——

I wandered after them, saying very little, but keeping an eye on this prestidigital fellow. After all, Gip was enjoying it. And no doubt when the time came to go we should be able to go quite easily.

It was a long, rambling place, that show-room, a gallery broken up by stands and stalls and pillars, with archways leading off to other departments, in which the queerest-looking assistants loafed and stared at one, and with perplexing mirrors and curtains. So perplexing, indeed, were these that I was presently unable to make out the door by which we had come.

The shopman showed Gip magic trains that ran without steam or clockwork, just as you set the signals, and then some very, very valuable boxes of soldiers that all came alive directly you took off the lid and said —— I myself haven't a very quick ear and it was a tongue-twisting sound, but Gip—he has his mother's ear—got it in no time. "Bravo!" said the shopman, putting the men back into the box unceremoniously and handing it to Gip. "Now," said the shopman and in a moment Gip had made them all alive again.

"You'll take that box?" asked the shopman.

"We'll take that box," said I, "unless you charge its full value. In which case it would need a Trust Magnate——"

"Dear heart! No!" and the shopman swept the little men back again, shut the lid, waved the box in the air, and there it was, in brown paper, tied up and—with Gip's full name and address on the paper!

The shopman laughed at my amazement.

"This is the genuine magic," he said. "The real thing."

"It's a little too genuine for my taste," I said again.

After that he fell to showing Gip tricks, odd tricks, and still odder the way they were done. He explained them, he turned them inside out, and there was the dear little chap nodding his busy bit of a head in the sagest manner.

I did not attend as well as I might. "Hey, presto!" said the Magic Shopman, and then would come the clear small "Hey, presto!" of the boy. But I was distracted by other things. It was being borne in upon me just how tremendously rum this place was, it was, so to speaking, inundated by a sense of rumness. There was something a little rum about the fixtures even, about the ceiling, about the floor, about the casually distributed chairs. I had a queer feeling that whenever I wasn't looking at them straight they went askew, and moved about, and played a noiseless puss-in-the-corner behind my back. And the cornice had a serpentine design with masks—masks altogether too expressive for proper plaster.

Then abruptly my attention was caught by one of the odd-looking assistants. He was some way off and evidently unaware of my presence—I saw a sort of three-quarter length of him over a pile of toys and through an arch—and, you know, he was leaning against a pillar in an idle sort of way doing the most horrid things with his features! The particular horrid thing he did was with his nose. He did it just as though he was idle and wanted to amuse himself. First of all it was a short, blobby nose, and then suddenly he shot it out like a telescope, and then out it flew and became thinner and thinner until it was like a long, red, flexible whip. Like a thing in a nightmare it was! He flourished it about and flung it forth as a fly-fisher flings his line.

My instant thought was that Gip mustn't see him. I turned about, and there was Gip quite preoccupied with the shopman, and thinking no evil. They were whispering together and looking at me. Gip was standing on a little stool, and the shopman was holding a sort of big drum in his hand.

"Hide and seek, dad-da!" cried Gip. "You're He!"

And before I could do anything to prevent it, the shopman had clapped the big drum over him.

I saw what was up directly. "Take that off," I cried, "this instant! You'll frighten the boy. Take it off!"

The shopman with the unequal ears did so without a word, and held the big cylinder towards me to show its emptiness. And the little stool was vacant! In that instant my boy had utterly disappeared!

You know, perhaps, that sinister something that comes like a hand out of the unseen and grips your heart about. You know it takes your common self away and leaves you tense and deliberate, neither slow nor hasty, neither angry nor afraid. So it was with me.

I came up to this grinning shopman and kicked his stool aside.

"Stop this folly!" I said. "Where is my boy?"

.

"You see," he said, still displaying the drum's interior, "there is no deception——"

I put out my hand to grip him, and he eluded me by a dexterous movement. I snatched again, and he turned from me and pushed open a door to escape. "Stop!" I said, and he laughed, receding. I leapt after him—into utter darkness.

Thud!

"Lor' bless my 'eart! I didn't see you coming, sir!"

I was in Regent Street, and I had collided with a decent-looking working man, and a yard away, perhaps, and looking a little perplexed with himself, was Gip. There was some sort of apology, and then Gip had turned and come to me with a bright little smile, as though for a moment he had missed me.

And he was carrying four parcels in his arm!

He secured immediate possession of my finger.

For the second I was rather at a loss. I stared round to see the door of the magic shop, and, behold, it was not there! There was no door, no shop, nothing, only the common plaster between the shop where they sell pictures and the window with the chicks!.

I did the only thing possible in that mental tumult, I walked straight to the kerbstone and held up my umbrella for a cab.

"'Ansoms," said Gip, in a note of culminating exultation.

I helped him in, recalled my address with an effort, and got in also. Something unusual proclaimed itself in my tail-coat pocket, and I felt and discovered a glass ball. With a petulant expression I flung it into the street.

Gip said nothing.

For a space neither of us spoke.

"Dadda!" said Gip, at last, "that was a proper shop!"

I came round with that to the problem of just how the whole thing had seemed to him. He looked completely undamaged—so far, good, he was neither scared nor unhinged, he was simply tremendously satisfied with the afternoon's entertainment, and there in his arms were the four parcels.

Confound it! what could be in them?

"Um!" I said. "Little boys can't go to shops like that every day."

He received this with his usual stoicism, and for a moment I was sorry I was his father and not his mother, and so couldn't suddenly there, coram publico, in our hansom, kiss him After all, I thought, the thing wasn't so very bad

But it was only when we opened the parcels that I really began to be reassured Three of them contained boxes of soldiers, quite ordinary lead soldiers, but of so good a quality as to make Gip altogether forget that originally these parcels had been Magic Tricks of the only genuine sort, and the fourth contained a kitten, a little living white kitten, in excellent health and appetite and temper

I saw this unpacking with a sort of provisional relief I hung about in the nursery for quite an unconscionable time

That happened six months ago And now I am beginning to believe it is all right The kitten had only the magic natural to all kittens, and the soldiers seem as steady a company as any colonel could desire And Gip—— ?

The intelligent parent will understand that I have to go cautiously with Gip

But I went so far as this one day I said, "How would you like your soldiers to come alive, Gip, and march about by themselves ?"

"Mine do," said Gip "I just have to say a word I know before I open the lid"

"Then they march about alone ?"

"Oh, quite, dad-da I shouldn't like them if they didn't do that"

I displayed no unbecoming surprise, and since then I have taken occasion to drop in upon him once or twice, unannounced, when the soldiers were about, but so far I have never discovered them performing in anything like a magical manner

It is so difficult to tell

There's also a question of finance I have an incurable habit of paying bills I have been up and down Regent Street several times, looking for that shop I am inclined to think, indeed, that in that matter honour is satisfied, and that, since Gip's name and address are known to them, I may very well leave it to these people, whoever they may be, to send in their bill in their own time

A PORTRAIT

IT is at the age of eighty that I picture him, without the vestige of a stoop, rather above middle height, of very well-proportioned figure, whose flatness of back and easy movements were the admiration of all who saw them. His iron-grey eyes had lost none of their colour, they were set-in deep, so that their upper lids were invisible, and had a peculiar questioning directness, apt to change suddenly into twinkles. His head was of fine shape—one did not suspect that it required a specially made hat, being a size larger than almost any other head, it was framed in very silky silvery hair, brushed in an arch across his forehead, and falling in becoming curves over the tips of his ears, and he wore always a full white beard and moustaches, which concealed a jaw and chin of great determination cleft by a dimple. His nose had been broken in his early boyhood, it was the nose of a thinker, broad and of noticeable shape. The colour of his cheeks was a fine dry brown, his brow very capacious, both wide and high, and endowed with a singular serenity. But it was the balance and poise of his head which commanded so much attention. In a theatre, church, concert-hall, there was never any head so fine as his, for the silvery hair and beard lent to its massiveness a curious grace and delicacy.

The owner of that head could not but be endowed with force, sagacity, humour, and the sense of justice. It expressed, indeed, his essential quality—equanimity, for there were two men in him—he of the chin and jaw, a man of action and tenacity, and he of the nose and brow, the man of speculation and impersonality, yet these two were so curiously balanced and blended that there was no harsh ungraceful conflict. And what made this equanimity so memorable was the fact that both his power of action and his power of speculation were of high quality. He was not a commonplace person content with a little of both. He wanted and had wanted throughout life, if one may judge by records, a good deal of both, ever demanding with one half of him strong and continuous action, and with the other half, high and clean thought and behaviour The desire for the best both in material and spiritual things remained with him through life He felt things deeply , and but for his strange balance, and a yearning for inward peace which never seems to have deserted him, his ship might well have gone down in tragedy

To those who had watched that journey, his voyage through life seemed favourable, always on the top of the weather He had worked hard, and he had played hard, but never too hard And though one might often see him irritated, I think no one ever saw him bored He perceived a joke quicker than most of us , he was never eccentric, yet fundamentally independent of other people's opinions, and perhaps a little unconscious that there were better men than he Not that he was conceited, for of this quality, so closely allied to stupidity and humbug, he had about as much as the babe unborn He was, indeed, a natural foe to anæmia in any of its forms, just as he was instinctively hostile to gross bull-beef men and women The words, "a bullying chap," were used by him as crushing dispraise I can recall him now in his chair after dinner, listening to one, who, puffing his cigarette, is letting himself go on a stream of robustious, rather swaggering complacencies , with what a comprehending straight look he regards the speaker, not scornful, not sarcastic, but simply, as it were, saying "No, my young buck, for all your fine full-blooded talk, and all your red face, you are what I see you to be, and you will do what I tell you to do ! " Such men had no chance with him when it came to the tug of war , he laid his will on them as if they had been children

He was that rather rare thing, a pure-blooded Englishman , having no strain of Scotch, Welsh, Irish, or foreign blood in his pedigree for four hundred years at least He sprang from a long line of farmers intermarrying with their kind in the most southern corner of Devonshire, and it is probable that Norse and British blood were combined in him in a high state of equality Even in the actual situation of his place of origin, the principle of balance had been maintained, for the old farmhouse from which his grandfather had emerged had been perched close to the cliff Thus, to the making of him had gone land and sea, the Norseman and the Celt

Articled to the Law at the age of sixteen by his father, a Plymouth merchant, whose small ancient ships traded to the Mediterranean in fruits, leather, and wines, he had come to London, and at the earliest possible date (as was the habit with men in those times) had been entered on the rolls as a solicitor. Often has he told me of the dinner he gave in honour of that event. "I was a thread-paper, then," he would say (indeed, he never became fat) — "We began with a barrel of oysters." About that and other festivities of his youth, there was all the rich and rollicking flavour of the days of Pickwick. He was practically dependent on his own exertions from the time he began to practise his profession, and it was characteristic of him that he never seems to have been hard pressed for money. The inherent sanity and moderation of his instincts preserved him, one imagines, from the financial ups and downs of most young men, for there was no niggardliness in him, and a certain breadth of conception characterised his money affairs throughout life. It was rather by the laws of gravity, therefore, whereby money judiciously employed attracts money, and the fact that he lived in that money-maker's Golden Age, the nineteenth century, that he had long been (at the age of eighty) a wealthy man. Money was to him the symbol of a well-spent, well-ordered life, provocative of warmth in his heart because he loved his children, and was careful of them to a fault. He did not marry till he was forty-five, but his feeling for the future of his family manifested itself with the birth of his first child. Selecting a fair and high locality, not too far away from London, he set himself at once to make a country place, where the little things should have fresh air, new milk, and all the fruits of the earth, home-grown round them. Quite wonderful was the forethought he lavished on that house and little estate stretching down the side of a hill, with its walled gardens, pasture, corn-land, and coppice. All was solid, and of the best, from the low four-square red brick house with its concrete terrace and French windows, to the cow-houses down by the coppice. From the oak trees, hundreds of years old, on the lawns, to the peach trees just planted along the south sunny walls. But here too, there was no display for the sake of it, and no extravagance. Everything was at hand, from home-baked bread to mushrooms wild and tame, from the stables with their squat clock-tower to pigsties, from roses that won all the local prizes to bluebells, but nothing redundant or pretentious.

The place was an endless pleasure to him, who to the last preserved his power of taking interest, not only in great, but in little things. Each small triumph over difficulty—the securing of hot water in such a quarter, the better lighting of another, the rescue of the nectarines from wasps, the quality of his Alderney cows, the encouragement of rooks—afforded him as much simple and sincere satisfaction as every little victory he achieved in his profession, or in the life of the Companies which he directed. But with all his shrewd practical sense, and almost naïve pleasure in material advantage, he combined a very real spiritual life of his own. Nor was there anything ascetic in that inner life. It was mellow as the music of Mozart, his most beloved composer, Art and Nature, both had their part in it. He was, for instance, very fond of opera, but only when it could be called 'grand', and it grieved him that opera was no longer what it had been, yet was it secretly a grave satisfaction that he had known those classical glories denied to the present generation. He loved indeed almost all classical music, but (besides Mozart) especially Beethoven, Gluck, and Meyerbeer, whom he insisted (no less than Herbert Spencer) on considering a great composer. Wagner he tried very hard to appreciate and, after visiting Bayreuth, even persuaded himself that he had succeeded, though he never ceased to point out the great difference that existed between this person and Mozart. He loved the Old Masters of painting, having for favourites amongst the Italians Rafael, Correggio, Titian, Tintoretto, and amongst Englishmen Reynolds and Romney. On the other hand, he regarded Hogarth and Rubens as coarse, but Vandyke he very much admired, because of his beautiful painting of hands, the hall-mark, he would maintain, of an artist's quality. I cannot remember his feeling about Rembrandt, but Turner he certainly distrusted as extravagant. Botticelli and the earlier masters he had not as yet quite learned to relish, and Impressionism, including Whistler, never really made conquest of his taste, though he always resolutely kept his mind open to what was modern—feeling himself young at heart.

Once on a spring day, getting over a stile, I remember him saying "Eighty! I can't believe it. Seems very queer. I don't feel it. Eighty!" And, pointing to a blackbird that was singing, he added "That takes the years off you!" His love of Nature was very intimate, simple, and unconscious. I can see him standing by the pond of a summer evening watching the great flocks of starlings that visited those fields, or, with his head a little to one side, listening rapturously to a skylark. He would contemplate, too, with a sort of serene passion, sunset effects, and every kind of view.

But his greatest joy in life had been his long summer holidays, in Italy or among the Alps, and his memory was a perfect storehouse of peaks, passes, and arrivals at Italian inns. He had been a great walker, and, as an old man, was still very active. I can remember him on horseback at the age of sixty, though he had never been a sportsman—not being in the way of hunting, having insufficient patience for fishing, and preferring to spend such time as he might have had for shooting, in communing with his beloved mountains. His love for all kinds of beauty, indeed, was strangely potent, and perhaps the more natural and deep for its innocence of all tradition and formal culture. He got it, I think, from his mother, of whom he always spoke with reverence as “the most beautiful woman in the Three Towns.” Yes, his love of beauty was a sensuous, warm glow pervading the whole of him, secretly separating him from the majority of his associates. A pretty face, a beautiful figure, a mellow tune, the sight of dancing, a blackbird’s song, the moon behind a poplar tree, starry nights, sweet scents, and the language of Shakespeare—all these moved him deeply, the more perhaps because he had never learned to express his feelings. His attempts at literature indeed were strangely naïve and stilted, his verse, in the comic vein, rather good, but all, as it were, like his period, ashamed to express any intimate feeling except in classical language. Yet his literary tastes were catholic, Milton was his favourite poet, Byron he also admired, Browning he did not care for, his favourite novelist was George Eliot, and, curiously enough—in later life—Turgenev. I well remember when the translated volumes of that author were coming out, how he would ask for another of those yellow books. He did not know why he liked them, with all those “crack-jaw” Russian names, but assuredly it was because they were written by one who worshipped beauty.

Нотте

Thompson

The works of Dickens and Thackeray he read with appreciation, on the whole, finding the first perhaps a little too grotesque, and the second a little too satiric. Scott, Trollope, Marryat, Blackmore, Hardy, and Mark Twain also pleased him; but Meredith he thought too “misty.”

A great theatre-goer all his life, he was very lukewarm towards modern actors, comparing them adversely with those constellations of the past, Edmund and Charles Kean, Charlie Mathews, Farren, Power, “little Robson,” and Helen Faucit. He was, however, a great lover of Kate Vaughan’s dancing, an illustration of the equanimity of one who had formed his taste on Taglioni.

Irving he would only accept in Louis XI, The Bells, and, I think,

Charles I, and for his mannerisms he had a great aversion. There was something of the old grand manner about his theatre habits. He attended with the very best and thinnest lavender kid gloves on his hands, which he would hold up rather high and clap together at the end of an act which pleased him; even, on memorable occasions, adding the word "Bravo." He never went out before the end of a play, however vehemently he might call it "poor stuff," which, to be quite honest, he did about nine times out of ten. And he was ever ready to try again, having a sort of touching confidence in an art which had betrayed him so often. His opera hats were notable, usually of such age as to have lost shape, and surely the largest in London. Indeed, his dress was less varied than that of any man I have ever seen, but always neat and well-cut, for he went habitually to the best shops, and without eccentricity of any kind. He carried a repeating gold watch and thin round gold chain which passed, smooth and sinuous as a little snake, through a small black seal with a bird on it, and he never abandoned very well made side-spring boots with cork soles, greatly resenting the way other boots dirtied his hands, which were thin and brown with long polished nails, and blue veins outstanding. For reading only, he wore tortoise-shell eyeglasses, which he would perch low down on the bridge of his nose, so that he could look over them, for his eyes were very long-sighted. He was extremely fastidious in his linen, and all personal matters, yet impatient of being mollicoddled, or in any way over-valeted. Even on the finest days, he carried an umbrella, the ferrule of which, from his habit of stumping it on the pavement, had a worn and harassed look, and was rarely more than half present.

Having been a Conservative Liberal in politics till well past sixty, it was not until Disraeli's time that he became a Liberal Conservative. This was curious, for he always spoke doubtfully of "Dizzy," and even breathed the word "humbug" in connection with him. Probably he was offended by what he termed "the extravagance" in Dizzy's rival. For the Duke of Devonshire and Lord Salisbury he had respect without enthusiasm, and conceived for John Bright a great admiration as soon as he was dead. But on the whole the politician who had most attracted him had been Palmerston, because—if memory serves—he had in such admirable degree the faculty of "astonishing their weak nerves." For, though never a Jingo, and in later days both cautious and sane in his Imperialism, he had all a Briton's essential deep-rooted distrust of the foreigner. He felt that they were not quite safe, not quite sound, and must from time to time be made to feel this. Born two years after the battle of Waterloo, he had inherited a certain high pride of island birth. And yet in one case, where he was for years in close contact with a foreigner, he conceived for him so grave a respect that it was quite amusing to watch the discomfiture of his traditional distrust. It was often a matter of wonder amongst those who knew him that a man of his ability and judgment had never even sought to make his mark in public affairs. Of the several reasons for this, the chief was, undoubtedly, the extraordinary balance of his temperament. To attain pre-eminence in any definite department of life would have warped and stunted too many of his instincts, removed too many of his interests, and so he never specialised in anything. He was quite unambitious, always taking the lead in whatever field he happened to be, by virtue of his great capacity and will-power, but never pushing himself, and apparently without any life-aim, but that of leading a sane, moderate, and harmonious existence.

And it is for this that he remains written on the national page, as the type of a lost and golden time, when life to each man seemed worth living for its own sake, without thought of its meaning as a whole, or much speculation as to its end. There was something classical, measured, and mellow in his march adown the years, as if he had been god-mothered by Harmony. And yet, though he said his prayers and went to church, he could not fairly have been called a religious man, for at the time when he formed his religious habits, "religion" had as yet received no shocks, and reigned triumphant over an unconscious nation whose spirit was sleeping, and when "religion," disturbed to its foundations, began to die, and people all round him were just becoming religious enough to renounce the beliefs they no longer held, he was too old to change, and continued to employ the mechanism of a creed which had never really been vital to him. He was in essence pagan. All was right with his world! His love was absorbed by Nature, and his wonder by the Great Starry Scheme he felt all around. This was God to him; for it was ever in the presence of the stars that he was most moved to a sense of divine order. Looking up at those tremulous cold companions he seemed more reverent, and awed, than ever he was in the face of creeds or his fellow-man. Whether stirred by the sheer beauty of Night, or by its dark immensity swarming with those glittering worlds, he would stand silent, and then, perhaps, say wistfully "What little bits of things we are! Poor little wretches!" Yes, it was then that he really worshipped, adoring the great wonders of Eternity. No one ever heard him talk with conviction of a future life. He was far too self-reliant to accept what he was told, save by his own inner voice, and that did not speak to him with certainty. In fact, as he grew old, to be uncertain of all such high things was part of his real religion, it seemed to him, I think, impertinent to pretend to intimate knowledge of what was so much bigger than himself. But neither his conventional creed nor that awed uncertainty which was his real religion were ever out of hand, they jogged smoothly on in double harness, driven and guided by a supream power—his reverence for Life. He abhorred fanaticism. In this he truly mirrored the spirit of that great peacefully expanding river, the Victorian Era, which began when he came of age. And yet, in speaking before him of deep or abstract things, it was not safe to reckon without his criticism, which would sometimes make powerfully shrewd deductions out of the sheer logical insight of a nature neither fundamentally concerned with other worlds, nor brought up to the ways of discussion. He was pre-eminently the son of a time between two ages—a past age of old, unquestioning faith in Authority, a future age of new faith, already born but not yet grown. Still sheltering in the shade of the old tree which was severed at the roots and toppling, he never, I think, clearly saw—though he may have had glimpses—that men, like children whose mother has departed from their home, were slowly being forced to trust in, and be good to, themselves and to one another, and so to form out of their necessity, desperately, unconsciously, their new great belief in Humanity. Yes, he was the son of a time between two ages—the product of an era without real faith—an individualist to the core.

His attitude towards the poor, for instance, was essentially that of man to man. Save that he could not tolerate impostors (one of his favourite words), and saw through them with almost startling rapidity, he was compassionate to any who had fallen on evil fortune, and especially to those who had been in any way connected with him. But in these almonary transactions he was always particularly secretive, as if rather doubting their sagacity, and the wisdom of allowing them to become known—himself making up and despatching the parcels of old clothes, and rather surreptitiously producing such coins and writing such cheques as were necessary But "the poor," in bulk, were always to him the concern of the Poor Law pure and simple, and in no sense of the individual citizen It was the same with malefactors, he might pity as well as condemn them, but the idea that the society to which he and they belonged was in any way responsible for them, would never have occurred to him His sense of justice, like that of his period, was fundamentally based on the notion that every man had started with equal, or at all events, with quite sufficient opportunities, and must be judged as if he had But, indeed, it was not the custom in his day to concern oneself with problems outside one's own class Within that class, and in all matters domestic, no man was ever born with a nicer sense of justice It was never overridden by his affections, very seldom, and that with a certain charming naïveté, by his interests This sense of justice, however, in no way prevented him from being loved, for, in spite of a temper apt to take fire, flare up, and quickly die down again, he was one of the most lovable of men There was not an ounce of dourness or asperity in his composition His laughter was of a most infectious kind, singularly spontaneous and delightful, resembling the laughter of a child The change which a joke wrought in the aspect of his large, dignified, and rather noble face, was disconcerting It became wrinkled, or, as it were, crumpled, and such a twinkling overcame his eyes as was frequently only to be extinguished by moisture "That's rich!" was his favourite expression to describe what had tickled him, for he had preserved the use of Devonshire expressions, bringing them forth, from an intimate pet drawer of memory, and lingering over them with real gusto He still loved, too, such Devonshire dishes of his boyhood, as "junket" and "toad in the hole", and one of his favourite memories was that of the meals snatched at the old coaching Inn at Exeter, while they changed the horses of the Plymouth to the London coach Twenty-four hours at ten miles an hour, without ever a break! Glorious drive! Glorious the joints of beef, the cherry brandy! Glorious the old stage coachman, a "monstrous fat chap" who at that time ruled the road!

In the City, where his office was situate, he was wont, though at all times a very moderate eater, to frequent substantial, old-fashioned hostelrys such as Roche's, Pim's, or Birch's, in preference to newer and more pretentious places of refreshment He had a remarkable palate too, and though he drank very little, was, in his prime, considered as fine a judge of wine as any in London Of tea he was particularly fond, and always consumed the very best Indian, made with extreme care, maintaining that the Chinese variety was only fit for persons of no taste

He had little liking for his profession, believing it to be beneath him, and that Heaven had intended him for an advocate, in which he was probably right, for his masterful acumen could not have failed to assure him a foremost position at the Bar And in him, I think, it is certain that a great Judge was lost to the State Despite this contempt for what he called the "pettifogging" character of his occupation, he always inspired profound respect in his clients, and among the shareholders of his Companies, of which he directed several, his integrity and judgment stood so high that he was enabled to pursue successfully a line of policy often too comprehensive and far-seeing for the temper of the times The reposeful dignity, and courage, of his head and figure when facing an awkward General Meeting could hardly have been exceeded He sat, as it were, remote from its gusty temper, quietly determining its course

Truly memorable were his conflicts with the only other man of his calibre on those Boards, and I cannot remember that he was ever beaten He was at once the quicker tempered and more cautious And if he had not the other's stoicism and iron nerve, he saw further into the matter in hand, was more unrelenting in his effort, equally tenacious of purpose, and more magnetic In fact, he had a way with him

But, after all said, it was in his dealings with children that the best and sweetest side of his personality was manifested With them he became completely tender, inexhaustibly interested in their interests, absurdly patient, and as careful as a mother No child ever resisted him, or even dreamed of doing so From the first moment they loved his white hair and beard, his "feathers" as one little thing called them They liked the touch of his thin hand, which was never wet or cold, and, holding to it, were always ready to walk with him—wandering with complete unanimity, not knowing quite where or for what reason How often have I not watched him starting out on that high adventure with his grandson, his face turned gravely down towards a smaller face turned not quite so gravely up, and heard their voices tremendously concerned with all the things they might be going to do together! How often have I not seen them coming back, tired as cats, but still concerned about what was next going to happen ! And children were always willing to play cricket with him because he bowled to them very slowly, pitching up what he called " three-quarter " balls, and himself always getting " out " almost before he went in. For, though he became in his later years a great connoisseur of cricket, spending many days at Lord's or the Oval, choosing out play of the very highest class, and quite impatient of the Eton and Harrow Match, he still performed in a somewhat rococo fashion, as of a man taught in the late 'twenties of the last century, and having occasion to revive that knowledge about 1895. He bent his back knee, and played with a perfectly crooked bat, to the end that when he did hit the ball, which was not too often, it invariably climbed the air. There was, too, about his batting, a certain vein of recklessness or bravado, somewhat out of keeping with his general character, so that, as has been said, he was never in too long. And when he got out he would pitch the bat down as if he were annoyed, which would hugely please his grandson, showing of course that he had been trying his very best, as indeed he generally had. But his bowling was extremely impressive, being effected with very bent knees, and a general air of first putting the ball to the eye, as if he were playing bowls, in this way he would go on and on giving the boy " an innings," and getting much too hot. In fielding he never could remember on the spur of the moment whether it was his knee or his feet that he ought to close, and this, in combination with a habit of bending rather cautiously, because he was liable to lumbago, detracted somewhat from his brilliance, but when the ball was once in his hands, it was most exciting—impossible to tell whether he would throw it at the running batsman, the wicket, or the bowler, according as the game appeared to him at the moment to be double wicket, single wicket, or rounders. He had lived in days when games were not the be-all and end-all of existence, and had never acquired a proper seriousness in such matters. Those who passed from cricket with him to cricket in the cold wide world found a change for which at first they were unable to account. But even more fascinating to children than his way of playing cricket was his perfect identification with whatever might be the matter in hand. The examination of a shell, the listening to the voice of the sea imprisoned in it, the making of a cocked hat out of the Times newspaper, the doing up of little buttons, the feeding of pigeons with crumbs, the holding fast of a tiny leg while walking beside a pony, all these things absorbed him completely, so that no visible trace was left of the man whose judgment on affairs was admirable and profound. Nor, whatever the provocation, could he ever bring himself to point the moral of anything to a child, having that utter toleration of their foibles which only comes from a natural and perfectly unconscious love of being with them. His face, habitually tranquil, wore in their presence a mellow look of almost devil-may-care serenity.

-

Their sayings, too, he treasured, as though they were pearls. First poems, such as

I sorr a worm,
It was half-ly dead,
I took a great spud,
And speared through his head, were to him of singular fair promise. Their diagnoses of character, moreover, especially after visiting a circus, filled him with pure rapture, and he would frequently repeat this one

"Father, is Uncle a clever man?"

"H'm! well—yes, certainly."

"I never seen no specimens. He can't balance a pole on his nose, for instance."

To the declining benison of their prayers, from their "darling father and mother," to "all poor people who are in distress," he loved to listen, not so much for the sentiments expressed, as because, in their little night-gowns, they looked so sweet, and were so round-about in their way of getting to work.

Yes, children were of all living things his chosen friends, and they knew it.

But in his long life he made singularly few fast friendships with grown-up people, and, as far as I know, no enemies. For there was in him, despite his geniality, a very strong vein of fastidiousness, and such essential deep love of domination, that he found, perhaps, few men of his own age and standing to whom he did not feel natively superior. His most real and lifelong friendship was for a certain very big man with a profound hatred of humbug and a streak of "the desperate character" in him. They held each other in the highest esteem, or, as they would probably have put it, swore by one another; the one grumbling at, but reverencing, the other's high and resolute equanimity; the other deploring and admiring the one's deep and generous recklessness The expressions " Just like John, the careful fellow ! " " Just like Sil, reckless beggar ! " were always on their lips , for like all their generation they were sparing of encomium ; and great, indeed, must have been their emotion before they would show their feelings Dear as they were to each other's hearts, they never talked together of spiritual things, they never spoke in generalities, but gravely smoking their cigars, discussed their acquaintances, investments, wine, their nephews and grandchildren, and the affairs of the State—condemning the advertising fashion in which everything was now done Once in a way they would tell a story—but they knew each other's stories too well , once in a way quote a line of Byron, Shakespeare, or Milton , or whistle to each other, inharmoniously, a bar or two from some song that Grist, Mario, or Jenny Lind had sung Once in a way memories of the heyday of their youth, those far-off golden hours, stealing over them, they would sit silent, with their grave steady eyes following the little rings of bluish smoke . Yes, for all their lack of demonstration, they loved each other well

I seem still to see the subject of this portrait standing at his friend's funeral one bleak November day, the pale autumn sunlight falling on the silver of his uncovered head a little bowed, and on his grave face, for once so sad I hear the tones of his voice, still full and steady , and from the soul in his eyes, looking, as it were, through and through those forms of death to some deep conclusion of his own, I know how big and sane and sweet he was.

His breed is dying now, it has nearly gone But as I remember him with that great quiet forehead, with his tenderness, and his glance which travelled to the heart of what it rested on, I despair of seeing his like again For, with him there seems to me to have passed away a principle, a golden rule of life, nay, more, a spirit—the soul of Balance It has stolen away, as in the early morning the stars steal out of the sky He knew its tranquil secret, and where he is, there must it still be hovering.

A WOMAN

JOHN GALSWORTHY

A TRAVELLER was writing to his friend . . . "We were sitting on the stoep Above the pines the long line of Table Mountain was like a violet shadow two shades deeper than the sky We had no light except the 'Cross,' and a swarm of other stars, it was a rare night, dark crystal

"There had been a dance, and the girls had gone to bed, all the shutters were closed, the old house against our backs looked very silent, and flat, and long Only the door was open, and we sat round it The sparks from our pipes writhed about in the air, or, falling on to the stoep, expired like the words dropping from our mouths You know the kind of talk In the morning we had played cricket amongst the trees—a hit into the vineyards, 'five and out'—girls and all In the afternoon we had played tennis, on a half-made court—the girls too In the evening we had danced Some had hitched up, and departed Some had gone to bed We four were left, and old Juno, the pointer, with her head on her paws, and her nose wrinkling at the squeaking of some tiny beast in the darkness Little Byng, with his waistcoat unbuttoned, was sitting quite square above his parted legs, round-faced little man, no neck to speak of, straw-coloured hair, and eyes without lashes, just like a dissipated egg You know him, Billy Byng, best-hearted little man, they say, in Cape Colony Young Sanley—married to one of the Detwell girls, sleeping a healthy sleep already indoors—such a neat, smooth chap, great Scott! yes, and how commonplace! with his pale moustache, and his high white forehead, and his slim nose, and his well-cut clothes, and his tidy made-up tie And our host—you know him, a little too alert, a little too dark, a little too everything, but a right good fellow, engaged to the other Detwell girl, who was perhaps thinking of him, and perhaps wasn't, in her bed just over our heads Well, we were talking, profaning things a bit, not much, you know, couldn't lay claim to original profanity, just tarbrushing the surface We were all a bit bored, rather sleepy, and accordingly just a little too jovial. Even

Juno, who's at least as wise as any human, was pondering somewhat gloomily over her master's intention of taking us to shoot pheasants at daybreak—'before it was too hot' We had been there before, we knew it—that pheasant shooting, up stony slopes in a tangle of cover, with the chance of a couple of shots, at most, producing one disembowelled bird Every now and then one of us would get up, walk to the edge of the stoep, stare into the dark vineyard, stretch as if he were going to make a move, and after all yield to our host's: 'Just one more, boys!'

"All of a sudden young Sanley murmured:

" 'I heard footsteps'

" 'Some nigger,' said our host

"And then at the far end of the stoep a woman appeared, walked straight into our midst, and sat down It was pretty startling, and absurd Little Byng seemed absolutely transfixed, he blinked his lashless eyes, and seemed to twitch all over his face Sanley got very pale and nervously tapped the table Our host alone kept the use of his tongue

" 'Corrie!' he said

" 'Why not? Give me a drink, Jack Allen'

"Our host, in a kind of surreptitious way, poured brandy into a glass and added seltzer

"The woman held out her hand for it, and as she tilted her chin to drink, the cloak fell from her shoulders, and we could see her neck and arms gleaming, out of her evening dress.

" 'Thanks!' she said, 'I wanted that' Then she bent over the table and leaned her face on her hand Well, no one spoke, and we all cast secret looks back at the house Sa. ley reached out his hand quietly and drew the door to

"The woman said

" 'I saw the bowls of your pipes, and heard your voices. You're not too lively now'

"Her voice wasn't loud, but it sounded wilfully coarsened Her lips were slightly parted above her forefinger crooked across her chin Her nostrils seemed to broaden as she looked at us, in a sort of distrustful way She wore no hat, and her hair was like a little black patch of the night over her brow Her eyes, how can I describe them? They seemed to see everything, and to see nothing They were so intent, and mournful, and defiant, hard, if you like, tragic, too I remembered, now, where I had met her—though I hadn't been ten days in the Colony—at the supper party of a man called Brown, after the theatre, very vulgar and noisy

"The most notorious woman in Cape Town! Her house had been pointed out to me, too, just at the corner of the Malay quarter, a little house, painted mauve, with large red flowers starring its front

"The most notorious woman in Cape Town! I looked at our host. He was biting his fingers. At Byng. His mouth was a little open, as if he were about to make a very sage remark. Sanley struck me as looking altogether too pitifully decent

"Our host broke the silence

"'How? Where? Eh! What?'

"'Staying down there at Charlie Lennard's, what a beast! Oh! what a beast!'

"Her eyes rested, wistfully it seemed to me, on each of us in turn

"'It's a beautiful night, isn't it?'

 she said

"Little Byng kicked out his foot, as if he would have sent something sprawling, and began stuttering out

"'I beg pardon—I beg pardon.' I saw the old pointer thrust her nose against the woman's knees. Something moved, back in the house, we all looked round with a start. Then the woman began to laugh, almost noiselessly, as though she had an unholy understanding of our minds, as if she would never leave off. I saw Sanley tear at his hair, and stealthily smooth it down again. Our host frowned horribly, and thrust his hands so deep into his pockets that it seemed to me they must go through the linings. Little Byng almost bounded up and down in his chair. Then just as suddenly, the woman stopped laughing, there was dead silence. You could only hear the squeaking of the tiny beast. At last the woman said

"'Doesn't it smell good to-night, it's quiet, too. Here! let me have another drink!' She took the glass our host held out. 'Your very good health,' she said, 'my respectable friends!'

"Our host suddenly resumed his seat, crossed his arms and sighed. A pitiful little noise he made of it

"'I'm not going to hurt you,' she said, 'I wouldn't hurt a fly to-night—it smells like home. Look!' She held out the edge of her skirts to us. 'Dew! I'm dripping, isn't it sweet?'

"Her voice had lost all coarseness—it might have been your mother or sister speaking, it was ever so queer, and little Byng sputtered out 'Too bad! too bad!' but whether to her, or of her, or to us—no one knew

" 'I've walked miles to-night,' she said 'Haven't had such a walk since I was a girl' There was a kind of tone in her voice that hurt me horribly, and suddenly young Sanley rose

" 'Excuse me, Allen!' he stammered 'it's very late Going to turn in?' I caught the gleam of his eyes on the woman

" 'Oh! are you going?' she said There was a sort of regret, a sort of something innocent and unconscious in her voice, that seemed regularly to pierce a bag of venom in that smooth young man

" 'Madam, I am May I ask why you came here? My wife——' He stopped, groped for the door, pulled it open, smiled his mean tidy smile and vanished

" The woman had risen, and she gave a sort of laugh

" 'His wife! Oh! Well, I wish her happiness Ah! my God! I do wish her happiness—I do, and yours, Jack Allen, and yours, if you have one Billy Byng, you remember me—you remember when I first—to-night, I thought—I thought——' She hid her face One by one we slunk off the stoep, and left her, sobbing her heart out before the house

" God knows what she was thinking of! God knows what sort of things lurk round us, and leap out—thank Heaven! not often—from the darkness, as that did!

" I crept back later to the edge of the vineyard

" There she was still, and, beside her, little Byng, with his toes turned out, bending over her fingers Then I saw him draw them under his arm, pat them with his other hand, and gazing up at the sky, lead her gently out into the darkness." . .

R. MURRAY GILCHRIST

1868-1917

A STROLLING PLAYER

AT the bend of the hill-road, where one loses sight of the distant village, a stream had overflowed before the last frost, and the limestone cart-way, with its smoothly-worn cobbles and its lattice of red and yellow and black leaves, was covered for many yards with a transparent sheet of ice. In daylight it resembled a mosaic of arabesque device, but now, reflecting the last scarlet shred of the afterglow, it suggested a river of blood. All around grew dwarf sycamores and elms and silver birches, their bare timber streaked with ribbons of frozen sleet.

When the wagon reached this perilous place, Joe Ascham got down from the high shaft, and, with a few sad clucks of encouragement, strove to make the young white horse proceed. Its shoes had not been sharpened, however, and at the first attempt it slipped back with such violence that the thing inside the wagon was jolted roughly against the side. At the sound the old man winced and crept to the back and drew the burden again into the middle, covering it neatly with the strip of clean sacking.

"Theer munna be a scrat on et," he muttered, "else Johanna'll breek her heart altogether. Ef et's all reet, hoo'll be pleased, poor soul, for et's th' best whōak I've ever seen! Dane said as et cem off one o' th' big trees i' Whetstone Dale."

He caught the bridle again and pulled with all his might, and the horse felt its way very slowly, without lifting its hoofs from the ground. The road turned abruptly again, at a corner with a steep and barren acclivity on the right hand, and on the left a dangerous ravine filled with ancient firs and rough stones. The wind was rising, and the place seemed full of whispers.

There the horse slipped for the second time, and the sacking fell in a heap at the back. In the waning light was visible a short and narrow coffin, with a bright metal name-plate. Joe covered it again, and jerked the bridle almost furiously, but the horse would not move.

"O Boxer, my lad, dunna fail me at such a time," he cried querulously. "Johanna's waitin' theer all alone, an' we're late enaa already!"

Some one rose from the low wall and came towards him His eyes were wet, and he could only distinguish the outline of a woman's figure

"Can I help you at all?" she inquired, in a thin, eager voice

"I 'ld tek et very kindly, mam, ef yo'ld set inside an' howd et i' position I dunna want et spoilin' I could mek Boxer go, ef on'y I werena afeard o' shakin' et"

"What is inside?" she said, lifting her bundle and preparing to climb

"Et's a coffin, mam my poor Michal's—my dowter's"

The woman shivered, but got in without a word and knelt and clasped her arms about the thing Joe dragged Boxer forward, and in a few minutes they had reached the level There the woman rose to alight, but the old man put out his hand

"I reckon yo're goin' my way over th' moor," he said "Et's five mile to my house—midway across, an' yo're welcoom to ride ef yo' will"

She thanked him "I want to reach Great Hucklow to-night, if I can," she said "I'm a strolling player, and I'm trying to get an engagement with Bainbridge's company I shall be very glad to ride with you, for I've walked ever since daybreak"

Darkness fell and the air grew thick with the oncoming of snow. Ascham struck a match and lighted his lantern and walked on in front The woman saw that they had reached the moorland on either side was a low bank of heather-covered turf, broken here and there with frozen water holes A few ragged sheep followed in the wake of the wagon The road was no longer of limestone, but of brown sand and pebbles, the shadow of the wheels stretched behind and broke amidst the moving sheep

A few snowflakes fluttered downwa. ls Ascham stopped the horse and came again to the side The woman was still crouching with her arms about the coffin

"I reckon et were a strange thing o' me to ask," he said, "but yo' see I were baffled Et's getten' mortal cowl I've got th' horse rug i' front,—yo' may's well put it on an' sit on the shaft Yo'll hev to step daan first"

She obeyed He put the lantern on the ground and found the rug He saw that she was very wan and exhausted Her face was a wasted oval, the skin about her eyes was blue with weeping and sleeplessness She wore a shabby black silk cloak, trimmed with moth-eaten fur, the hat that shaded her forehead was of dingy yellow lace She might have been any age between thirty-five and fifty.

When Joe had pinned the rug over her breast, he helped her to the shaft and she sat there with her feet dangling. The snow was falling heavily now, the sheep had retreated to the hollows, and even the sides of the road were invisible. Suddenly the old man lagged and fell behind to walk beside the stranger.

"I want to talk, mam," he said. "I want to forget things. Yo've seen misfortun', hevna yo'?"

"Yes, I've seen misfortune," she replied. "So much misfortune that I wish the coffin had been made for me. But all of us have our share. Do you go much farther?"

"Abaat a mule, but I'd liefer yo' cem' up to th' haase wi' me. I dessay et 'ld do Johanna good. An' happen—ef I may tek' th' liberty o' askin' yo'—we could carry th' coffin in betwixt us."

The woman nodded.

"Ay, et's Michal's coffin, an' Michal's aar on'y child. Such a rare wench too hoo were afore hoo went away. But such were her will, an' there were no howdin' her in a' whōam. Yo' should hev seen her! Hoo were just as pink an' white as th' inside o' a peony-pod. An' et were a bad year wi' th' crops, though things bettered afterwards. . . . Hoo wouldna coom whōam till a month ago, an' then hoo were heavy wi' trouble."

He was obliged to go forward again—a track, diverging to the right, crossed a frozen brook and climbed, between stunted hedges, to the farmstead. He turned the horse safely and came back.

"I want to ask you something," the woman said anxiously. 'When she came back to you—were you kind?'

"Kind, mam? Ay, that we were. Et were th' happiest an' yet th' saddest day o' aar lives. Prethee wheer else should hoo hev' gone, ef none to her own fowk? Hoo browt shame wi' her, but hoo were Johanna's dowter, an' my dowter, an' th' shame were all forgi'en."

The woman's eyes swam in scalding tears. She pressed her hands over her heart, then she quaked, remembering a casting from a door and a shouting of curses.

A dog barked softly. The wind was whirling the snowflakes in wreathed columns that passed in front of the house like veils of smoke. From the window of an upper room a clear streak of light stretched over the croft. The dog came bounding from a shippon and jumped up to Ascham's waist.

"Hush, Gyp, we munna hev a noise," he said, stooping to stroke its head. He "put up" the horse, leaving the stranger standing in the open air, then he unlatched a door in that side of the house that abutted on the stable-yard, and beckoning her to help, silently drew the coffin from the wagon. They carried it through the kitchen, not without difficulty, for the oak planks were thick, and into the house-place, where they laid it on the lang-settle.

Ascham went to the foot of the stairs. "Johanna," he called gently. "I've gotten back, an' theer's a lady coom wi' me—hoo's bin helpin' me wi' et."

Mrs. Ascham came down very slowly. She was a stout little woman, with clear blue eyes and brown wrinkled skin. The outline of a goitre showed through her black and white neckerchief. She held out a cold hand. "Et were good o' yo', mam," she said. "I were afeared my lad couldna manage et by himsen."

"Th' lady's an actress," Joe explained, "on th' way to Greet 'Ucklow. Hoo held th' coffin for me when Boxer slipped."

Johanna tried to unbutton the ragged silk cloak, but the stranger held it more tightly together.

"Lend me a lantern," she said, "and let me go on. If I am not there early to-morrow, my chance will be lost."

The old woman threw open the window. The snowfall had thickened, it came down so quickly that it seemed as if a white sheet hung outside.

"Yo' see et's impossible, mam," she said. "Yo' mun stay wi' us, an' hev soom o' Joe's supper. Th' way's hard to find i' broad dayleet, an' to-neet, e'en my lad, who's lived here all his life, wouldna dare to venture. Yo' dunna wish to freeze to dēath?"

The player smiled painfully. "It would not matter much," she replied, "but if you will have me stay I must do something. Is there any sewing—I am good with the needle?"

"No, mam, nothin'." I med shroud an' all mysen—I' fact they were th' very things I'd put by for when my own time cooms. Thank yo' very kindly, but all's doon."

Her husband drew her attention to the coffin. She examined it carefully, feeling the polish of the wood and the weight of the metal handles with divers murmurs of pleasure.

"Et's a beautiful thing," she remarked at last. "Ah, ef on'y aar Michal could see et, hoo'd be more nor satisfied!"

She took from the oven a huge bowl of hot porridge. Joe drank buttermilk with his share, but Johanna poured over the stranger's a jugful of rich cream. After supper, man and wife began to wrangle soberly concerning which should sit up in the death chamber Johanna had done so on the preceding night, but knowing that her husband was weary with the journey, she wished to take his turn

The actress broke in, during a pause, with—" Let me watch with your dead I will keep awake all night "

It was only with considerable difficulty that she prevailed Johanna told her that it had been the custom of the family for many generations " Michal's th' third I've watched," she said proudly " Theer were Joe's mother first, an' then my own lad as died thretty years ago But Joe an' I 'm growin' old an' worn aat, an' et'll be best for us to sleep, for to-morrow'll be a hard day What may your name be, mam ? "

" Call me Violetty, that is the name my parents gave me—a foolish name, like tinsel and sawdust "

Johanna opened the staircase door " Coom, then, Violetty," she said " This es th' way to Michal's chamber "

She led her up the broad, worm-eaten stairs to a great room, where stood a large four-post bedstead, hung with blue and white gingham She drew the curtains aside reverentially, and after removing a crocheted cloth, showed Violetty the face of a young girl, whose long glossy hair spread from the frilled nightcap in strands over the pillow Johanna peered into Violetty's hollow eyes before drawing down the counterpane and showing her the baby lying in its embroidered gown, like a doll, with its head resting between the mother's left breast and arm

Violetty's face worked, she turned aside

" Esna hoo a pretty yen ? " Johanna said " Twenty-one year, but et's just as ef hoo were ten or 'leven, an' hoo'd gone to sleep wi' her moppet " There was a low fire on the hearth She put on a dried peat and turned up the lamp

" Yo' wunna be scared, Violetty ? Hoo never did ony harm to anyone My owd man an' me'll sleep wi' aar door ajar—et's just across the landin' Ef yo' want owt, yo' need but call, for I warrant yo' we shanna sleep heavy to-neet "

Violetty sat quietly in the arm-chair, with her hands folded in her lap The old people went to bed soon she heard them undress, and for a while caught sounds of sobbing and whispering When they were asleep the silence of the place became too oppressive, and she walked to and fro, looking at the pictures that covered the walls Most of these were sombre-hued chap-paintings, done on thin glass :

the scene of Nelson's death hung above the funeral of Pitt, and a ruined castle surrounded by a moat beside a basket of impossible flowers. Over the mantel was a sampler, embroidered in faded silks—a prim cottage with a formal garden, on whose lawn was wrought a verse from the dialogue of "Death and the Lady"

Soon she drew her chair to the bedside and took away Michal's face-cloth. "If only I were dead instead of you, poor child," she said. "I have nobody and you had those who needed you."

She folded her hands again and sat gazing at the curves of the girl's body. A clock downstairs struck hour after hour, the muffled wind stroked the windows with snow. A feeling of content filled her now, it was like a dream—a dream of quietness and rest. Her life had been one long turmoil of excitement and of shame and of repentance. Michal had known only one short sorrow, hers had been many and protracted through years and years.

"There is no rest but death," she murmured.

Yet, all the time, her heart was craving for warmth and peace. She wished no longer for love—all that desire was burned out long ago—all that she wanted was a perfect calm.

The wind fell and a grey dawn broke. She heard the old couple stir in their bed, then fall asleep again. The nights of watching before and after Michal's death had taken away all their strength. She did not waken them, although she knew that unless she reached Great Hucklow before noon, all her chance of an engagement would be lost. But she felt no pang for herself, for were they not oblivious of all their trouble?

At last Johanna came, half-dressed, into the chamber. She leaned over Michal's uncovered face and kissed it twice.

"My dear deary," she whispered. "Thy nose were always cowed; et doesna seem as thou wert dead. An' i' a little while thou 'lt be put away fro' thy owd mother."

She beckoned Violetty to follow her down to the house-place.

"I mun ask yo'r pardon," she said, "but we slept on an' on. Why didna yo' waken us? I'm afeard yo'll be too late. Yo'd best stay till noon an' go wi' us to Highlow for the buryin', et's on th' way to Greet 'Ucklow. Theer'll be none theer—we wanted to put her away by aarsens. Besides, we hevna ony frien's."

Joe came downstairs soon and they breakfasted in silence, then Violetty, seeing that he wished to take the coffin upstairs, took hold of the end. Johanna followed, and between them they lifted Michal and the child by the towels that were spread underneath, and spread the gimped cotton-wool evenly from head to foot

"We mun start at twelve," Joe said "Parson'll be waitin' at two Et'll be a white buryin' "

He raised the lid Violetty left them to say their last good-bye, and waited downstairs At noon the wagon started, with the two women sitting on either side of the coffin, whilst Joe rode on the shaft The father and mother had donned rusty black garments and big, half-mouldy gloves Violetty still wore her silk cloak, but Johanna had lent her an uncouth scuttle bonnet that almost concealed her haggard face The track was deep with snow, but at even distances the heads of roughly chiselled boundary stones kept them from straying on the moor Johanna, who held the actress's hand in hers, wept silently all the way When they reached the churchyard, which lies in a hollow at the end of a scattered hamlet, they found the clergyman waiting in the porch Two gravediggers came forward to carry the coffin, but the Aschams and Violetty lifted it themselves and laid it on the trestles in front of the altar None of the villagers were present they knew but little of the moor-folk, and it was much too cold to venture out of doors for such a trivial sight The clergyman's voice rang hollow amongst the stuccoed arches Joe and Johanna trembled as if ague-struck The grave had been newly dug Violetty saw on the mound, not yet covered by the falling snow, some little white bones and the shreds of a long-decayed coffin It was all that remained of the boy that Johanna had lost thirty years before The player buried her badly-shod feet in the snow and covered these relics hurriedly, so that they might not hurt the mother's eyes In a few minutes the service was over, and ere the gravediggers began to throw back the soft clayey soil, Violetty drew the old people away When Johanna had got into the wagon, Violetty leaned over the side and kissed her

"Good-bye," she said "God bless you for your comfort of me."

Johanna threw her arms around her neck

"I wunna let yo' go, Violetty, wench," she wailed. "Coom whōam wi' Joe an' me—coom an' stop wi' us for good Aar Michal 'ld hev wished et "

Joe put his hand over his eyes. "Ay, dunna leave us, Violetty. We'n got nob'dy left us." Violetty turned faint, everything reeled before her eyes. Then she flushed as if overcome by some great and unexpected happiness, and clambered into the wagon.

THE GAFFER'S MASTERPIECE

R. MURRAY GILCHRIST

THE masterpiece was finished, and the gaffer sat in a rush-bottomed chair beside the table and gazed upon it with greater love in his eyes than had sparkled there when he had beheld his first-born. For his children had favoured their mother, who had been a managing woman—almost a shrew—and as they had grown to maturity he had become of less and less account. Long ago, even the youngest had passed into the world and all had forgotten him, save at Wakes' time and Christmas, when, out of their prosperity, they sent sparse gifts.

But the masterpiece was his own, his very own, the offspring of his body and his soul. He had stolen long hours from his rest for its creation, all the coppers that he had saved out of his week's earnings had been spent on materials. In fact, he had denied himself the luxury of twist so that everything might be of the best. On Saturday afternoons he had plodded to the market town to buy oddments of plain and gaily-coloured glass and bright paints and blocks of cork and dyed mosses.

Now that his first joy in its completion was over, he fell into a half-melancholy humour. The work was too good for him, he had owned nothing good in his life.

"I'm jealous as some one 'll want to tek' thee away," he said sadly, "tek' thee away an' put thee i' a peep-show. An' wheer shall I be wi'aat thee? Et's like enaa mony'll fancy thee, for theer's none been such a gran' mesterpiece doap i' th' Peak i' man's mem'ry!"

He rose, and opening a door in the press, took out a red and purple table-cloth, which he spread, as carefully as his trembling fingers would permit, over the masterpiece. Before it was covered, a knock sounded on the door and the latch was lifted and an elderly matron entered. She was the hostess of the "Forester's Arms" at Milton, and, having been a schoolmate of the gaffer's eldest daughter, she considered it her duty to concern herself occasionally in his doings.

He pushed forward an arm-chair. She drew off one of her loose kid gloves, and passed her forefinger over the seat before trusting her black silk skirt to its tender mercies

"No offence, Mester Rowarth," she said, in a thin, high-pitched voice, "but men's ways arena as women's ways, an' I'm sore afeard o' dust wi' these ruchin's Haasoe'er theer isna ony"

"I try to keep et as clean as I can, but et's onpossible, wi' them purgatories on th' harstone, to keep ashes fro' flyin'," he remarked, pointing to the grate beneath the fire "Yo're lookin' well, Ruth"

"Ay, I'm well enaa, but th' pull up th' hull's a bit more nor I care for I've coom to see th' mesterpiece, fowk hev bin talkin' abaat et for God knows haa long, an' as yo've ne'er shown et to nob'dy, I mun ask yo' for owd time's sake"

The gaffer reddened "I didna want to exhibit et afore et were finished," he said apologetically "Et's took nigh on two years to mek, an' on'y last neet did I gi'e et th' last touch Et's set naa, an' I'm willin' for everybody as cares to see Would yo' mind liftin' th' cloth—very lightly—for I'm a bit uplifted, an' my fingers arena stiddy"

She obeyed, and uncovered the masterpiece and gave a cry of pleasure, and a low hum such as a bee makes in a cowslip clump

"Et's just marvellous," she said "All Milton Dale an' Village true to natyure"

The gaffer stood proudly erect "I med et all mysen, Ruth, wench," he said "When I were a lad, I were good at workin' wi' coork, buildin' haases an' castles an' the like, an' the summer afore last I were that lonesome, I tuk to et onct more Every morn I went out at sunbreak an' studied th' spot an' set et daan i' my mind, so as at neet I could just work et aat Th' cottages es med' o' coork, wi' real rye-grass thack I've covered th' church top wi' lead, just as et es covered, an' put stained glass i' th' windows Them beech trees wes hard to do, but I reckon I've copied 'em well See, theer's th' cross again' th' big gate, an' every tomb as es o' consequence"

He touched a corner of the churchyard where an ancient yew thrust out uncouth boughs "An' theer's wheer I'm to be buried," he murmured "Mother and feyther were laid theer, but my wife rests wi' her own fowk at Great 'Ucklow Esna et fine?"

Rutli Pilkington nodded "I've just got an idea," she said. "Et's th' rent dinner to-morrow, why none bring et daan to th' inn an' show et to th' party? Et'll gi'e 'em a seet o' pleasure, an' let 'em know whatten an' owd man like yo' es capable o' doin'. Coom early an' hev a bit o' summat wi' me, afore th' table's set Milton fowk 'll be praad o' such a thing "

He laughed feebly, like an ailing boy. None had thought him worthy of note before, he had been simply an old stonebreaker, akin to the beasts that had passed him on the road

" I'll coom, Ruth, wench, an' thank yo' kindly for askin' me."

" Yo're welcoom Now I mun be off Dunna be later nor twelve. Good e'en."

He sat up all night with his masterpiece. It is true that he undressed and moved towards the bed, but he could not find the heart to lie down, and he drew back immediately and went downstairs, and with a thin blanket wrapped round his knees, sat feasting his eyes on the model Soon after daybreak he donned his best clothes, which had only been used for funerals and were creased ineradicably and moth-eaten, and went to the overseer and begged a full day's holiday—the first he had wanted in thirty years Then he returned and sat again beside the table, not moving thence until the church clock struck eleven.

At the appointed time he reached the "Forester's Arms" and showed his work to a crowd of labourers who were assembled for the mid-day drinking The natives of Milton have strong enthusiasms, and their praise exhilarated the genius so much that he could scarce touch the bountiful food that Ruth had provided

Soon afterwards a wild fit of terror came over him As he moved to the club-room, carrying the model on a large tray, a half-drunken tramp came from the bar-parlour He bore a pewter tankard, brimful of ale, which he was about to drink on the bench outside the porch

" Eh, mister ! " he exclaimed " What a gay little thing—all trees an' roofs an' windows an' chimneys I warrant et's rain-proof "

He raised the tankard and poured some froth on the church steeple The gaffer cowered over his masterpiece as a hen cowers over her chicks when the harrier is near

" I'm on'y an owd chap," he sobbed " Eighty an' one year——"

But Ruth Pilkington caught the fellow by the shoulders and pushed him to the door, and left him cursing there, for all the ale was spilt on the sanded floor

" Dunna fret, Mester Rowarth," she said. " Et'll wipe off—here's a bit o' soft rag Naa set et daan on th' sideboard Theer, et do look han'some ! "

The rent agent and the farmers entered, and before they sat to the table all examined the masterpiece. Most of them were untravelled men, and the model was beyond anything they had ever seen. The height of the gaffer's triumph was when the agent shook his hand and called him "a wonderful artist," and asked leave for his wife and daughters to call at the cottage.

Whilst they dined, he leaned over the masterpiece and wondered if anything could be improved. The sundial on the chancel wall seemed slightly awry, and he determined to raise one side a hair's-breadth. The agent invited him to take wine with him, and he sipped nervously from the thick-stemmed glass.

It was evening when he left the "Forester's Arms." The intoxication that had followed the unaccustomed drinking had passed, but he was strangely drowsy, and when he had passed the stile that opened to the heath on whose farther side his home lay, he covered Milton Dale and Village with his neckerchief, sat down and fell asleep.

And whilst he slept the tramp, bemused and still rankling with the contumely Mrs Pilkington had thrust upon him, reeled that way. He saw the foolish genius and prepared to kick him with his iron-shod toe, but recognising the grey head and withered cheeks, he refrained.

"Why, here's th' fellow as I met at th' pub, an' here's his dommed Noah's Ark! I'll pay him aat. Et were his faut as th' —— laid her paws on me!"

He snatched off the cover, and laughed evilly as he saw the quaint workmanship of the masterpiece.

"I set two barns afire last back-end," he muttered, "an' now I'll burn a whōal village."

He struck a match and lighted the yew in the corner of the graveyard. It blazed up instantly. He whistled, for he had the soul of Nero. Then he crept behind the hedge and watched.

The gaffer woke when the church fell in ruins. He whimpered at first, but soon was silent. When the last spark had died he rose and clasped his forehead and tottered homewards.

ACCESSORY BEFORE THE FACT

AT the moorland cross-roads Martin stood examining the sign-post for several minutes in some bewilderment. The names on the four arms were not what he expected, distances were not given, and his map, he concluded with impatience, must be hopelessly out of date. Spreading it against the post, he stooped to study it more closely. The wind blew the corners flapping against his face. The small print was almost indecipherable in the fading light. It appeared, however—as well as he could make out—that two miles back he must have taken the wrong turning.

He remembered that turning. The path had looked inviting, he had hesitated a moment, then followed it, caught by the usual lure of walkers that it "might prove a short cut." The short-cut snare is old as human nature. For some minutes he studied the sign-post and the map alternately. Dusk was falling, and his knapsack had grown heavy. He could not make the two guides tally, however, and a feeling of uncertainty crept over his mind. He felt oddly baffled, frustrated. His thought grew thick. Decision was most difficult. "I'm muddled," he thought, "I must be tired," as at length he chose the most likely arm. "Sooner or later it will bring me to an inn, though not the one I intended." He accepted his walker's luck, and started briskly. The arm read "Over Litacy Hill" in small, fine letters that danced and shifted every time he looked at them, but the name was not discoverable on the map. It was, however, inviting like the short-cut. A similar impulse again directed his choice. Only this time it seemed more insistent, almost urgent.

And he became aware, then, of the exceeding loneliness of the country about him. The road for a hundred yards went straight, then curved like a white river running into space, the deep blue-green of heather lined the banks, spreading upwards through the twilight; and occasional small pines stood solitary here and there, all unexplained. The curious adjective, having made its appearance, haunted him. So many things that afternoon were similarly unexplained: the short cut, the darkened map, the names on the sign-post, his own erratic impulses, and the growing strange confusion that crept upon his spirit. The entire countryside needed explanation, though perhaps "interpretation" was the truer word. Those little lonely trees had made him see it. Why had he lost his way so easily? Why did he suffer vague impressions to influence his directions? Why was he here—exactly here? And why did he go now "over Litacy Hill"?

Then, by a green field that shone like a thought of daylight amid the darkness of the moor, he saw a figure lying in the grass. It was a blot upon the landscape, a mere huddled patch of dirty rags, yet with a certain horrid picturesqueness too, and his mind—though his German was of the schoolroom order—at once picked out the German equivalents as against the English. Lump and Lumpen flashed across his brain most oddly. They seemed in that moment right, and so expressive, almost like onomatopœic words, if that were possible of sight. Neither "rags" nor "rascal" would have fitted what he saw. The adequate description was in German.

Here was a clue tossed up by the part of him that did not reason. But it seems he missed it. And the next minute the tramp rose to a sitting posture and asked the time of evening. In German he asked it. And Martin, answering without a second's hesitation, gave it, also in German, "halb sieben"—half-past six. The instinctive guess was accurate. A glance at his watch when he looked a moment later proved it. He heard the man say, with the covert insolence of tramps, "T'ank you, much obliged." For Martin had not shown his watch—another intuition subconsciously obeyed.

He quickened his pace along that lonely road, a curious jumble of thoughts and feelings surging through him. He had somehow known the question would come, and come in German. Yet it flustered and dismayed him. Another thing had also flustered and dismayed him. He had expected it in the same queer fashion. It was right. For when the ragged brown thing rose to ask the question, a part of it remained lying on the grass—another brown, dirty thing. There were two tramps. And he saw both faces clearly. Behind the untidy beards, and below the old slouch hats, he caught the look of unpleasant, clever faces that watched him closely while he passed. The eyes followed him. For a second he looked straight into those eyes, so that he could not fail to know them. And he understood, quite horribly, that both faces were too sleek, refined, and cunning for those of ordinary tramps. The men were not really tramps at all. They were disguised.

"How covertly they watched me!" was his thought, as he hurried along the darkening road, aware in dead earnestness now of the loneliness and desolation of the moorland all about him.

Uneasy and distressed, he increased his pace. Midway in thinking what an unnecessarily clanking noise his nailed boots made upon the hard white road, there came upon him with a rush together the company of these things that haunted him as "unexplained." They brought a single definite message. That all this business was not really meant for him at all, and hence his confusion and bewilderment; that he had intruded into some one else's scenery, and was trespassing upon another's map of life. By some wrong inner turning he had interpolated his person into a group of foreign forces which operated in the little world of some one else. Unwittingly, somewhere, he had crossed the threshold, and now was fairly in—a trespasser, an eavesdropper, a Peeping Tom. He was listening, peeping, overhearing things he had no right to know, because they were intended for another. Like a ship at sea he was intercepting wireless messages he could not properly interpret, because his receiver was not accurately tuned to their reception. And more—these messages were warnings!

Then fear dropped upon him like the night. He was caught in a net of delicate, deep forces he could not manage, knowing neither their origin nor purpose. He had walked into some huge psychic trap elaborately planned and baited, yet calculated for another man than himself. Something had lured him in, something in the landscape, the time of day, his mood. Owing to some undiscovered weakness in himself he had been easily caught. His fear slipped easily into terror.

What happened next happened with such speed and concentration that it all seemed crammed into a moment. At once and in a heap it happened. It was quite inevitable. Down the white road to meet him a man came swaying from side to side in drunkenness quite obviously feigned—a tramp, and while Martin made room for him to pass, the lurch changed in a second to attack, and the fellow was upon him. The blow was sudden and terrific, yet even while it fell Martin was aware that behind him rushed a second man, who caught his legs from under him and bore him with a thud and crash to the ground. Blows rained then, he saw a gleam of something shining, a sudden deadly nausea plunged him into utter weakness where resistance was impossible. Something of fire entered his throat, and from his mouth poured a thick sweet thing that choked him. The world sank far away into darkness . . . Yet through all the horror and confusion ran the trail of two clear thoughts—he realised that the first tramp had sneaked at a fast double through the heather and so come down to meet him, and that something heavy was torn from the fastenings that clipped it tight and close beneath his clothes against his body.

Abruptly then the darkness lifted, passed utterly away. He found himself peering into the map against the sign-post. The wind was flapping the corners against his cheek, and he was poring over names that now he saw quite clear. Upon the arms of the sign-post above were those he had expected to find, and the map recorded them quite faithfully. All was accurate again and as it should be. He read the name of the village he had meant to make—it was plainly visible in the dusk, two miles the distance given. Bewildered, shaken, unable to think of anything, he stuffed the map into his pocket unfolded, and hurried forward like a man who has just awakened from an awful dream that had compressed into a single second all the detailed misery of some prolonged, oppressive nightmare.

He broke into a steady trot that soon became a run, the perspiration poured from him, his legs felt weak, and his breath was difficult to manage. He was only conscious of the overpowering desire to get away as fast as possible from the sign-post at the cross-roads where the dreadful vision had flashed upon him. For Martin, accountant on a holiday, had never dreamed of any world of psychic possibilities. The entire thing was torture. It was worse than a "cooked" balance of the books that some conspiracy of clerks and directors proved at his innocent door. He raced as though the countryside ran crying at his heels. And always still ran with him the incredible conviction that none of this was really meant for himself at all. He had overheard the secrets of another. He had taken the warning for another unto himself, and so altered its direction. He had thereby prevented its right delivery. It all shocked him beyond words. It dislocated the machinery of his just and accurate soul. The warning was intended for another, who could not—would not—now receive it.

The physical exertion, however, brought at length a more comfortable reaction and some measure of composure. With the lights in sight, he slowed down and entered the village at a reasonable pace. The inn was reached, a bedroom inspected and engaged, and supper ordered with the solid comfort of a large Bass to satisfy an unholy thirst and complete the restoration of balance. The unusual sensations largely passed away, and the odd feeling that anything in his simple, wholesome world required explanation was no longer present. Still with a vague uneasiness about him, though actual fear quite gone, he went into the bar to smoke an after-supper pipe and chat with the natives, as his pleasure was upon a holiday, and so saw two men leaning upon the counter at the far end with their backs towards him. He saw their faces instantly in the glass, and the pipe nearly slipped from between his teeth. Clean-shaven, sleek, clever faces—and he caught a word or two as they talked over their drinks—German words. Well dressed they were, both men, with nothing about them calling for particular attention, they might have been two tourists holiday-making like himself in tweeds and walking-boots. And they presently paid for their drinks and went out. He never saw them face to face at all, but the sweat broke out afresh all over him, a feverish rush of heat and ice together ran about his body, beyond question he recognised the two tramps, this time not disguised—not yet disguised.

He remained in his corner without moving, puffing violently at an extinguished pipe, gripped helplessly by the return of that first vile terror. It came again to him with an absolute clarity of certainty that it was not with himself they had to do, these men, and, further, that he had no right in the world to interfere. He had no locus standi at all, it would be immoral . . . even if the opportunity came. And the opportunity, he felt, would come. He had been an eavesdropper, and had come upon private information of a secret kind that he had no right to make use of, even that good might come—even to save life. He sat on in his corner, terrified and silent, waiting for the thing that should happen next.

But night came without explanation. Nothing happened. He slept soundly. There was no other guest at the inn but an elderly man, apparently a tourist like himself. He wore gold-rimmed glasses, and in the morning Martin overheard him asking the landlord what direction he should take for Litacy Hill. His teeth began then to chatter and a weakness came into his knees "You turn to the left at the cross-roads," Martin broke in before the landlord could reply; "you'll see the sign-post about two miles from here, and after that it's a matter of four miles more" How in the world did he know, flashed horribly through him "I'm going that way myself," he was saying next, "I'll go with you for a bit—if you don't mind!" The words came out impulsively and ill-considered, of their own accord they came For his own direction was exactly opposite He did not want the man to go alone The stranger, however, easily evaded his offer of companionship He thanked him with the remark that he was starting later in the day . They were standing, all three, beside the horse-trough, in front of the inn, when at that very moment a tramp, slouching along the road, looked up and asked the time of day And it was the man with the gold-rimmed glasses who told him

"T'ank you, much ophged," the tramp replied, passing on with his slow, slouching gait, while the landlord, a talkative fellow, proceeded to remark upon the number of Germans that lived in England and were ready to swell the Teutonic invasion which he, for his part, deemed imminent

But Martin heard it not Before he had gone a mile upon his way he went into the woods to fight his conscience all alone His feebleness, his cowardice, were surely criminal Real anguish tortured him A dozen times he decided to go back upon his steps, and a dozen times the singular authority that whispered he had no right to interfere prevented him How could he act upon knowledge gained by eavesdropping? How interfere in the private business of another's hidden life merely because he had overheard, as at the telephone, its secret dangers? Some inner confusion prevented straight thinking altogether The stranger would merely think him mad He had no "fact" to go upon He smothered a hundred impulses . and finally went on his way with a shaking, troubled heart

The last two days of his holiday were ruined by doubts and questions and alarms—all justified later when he read of the murder of a tourist upon Litacy Hill. The man wore gold-rimmed glasses, and carried in a belt about his person a large sum of money His throat was cut And the police were hard upon the trail of a mysterious pair of tramps, said to be—Germans

HUBERT CRACKANTHORPE

1870-1896

SAINT-PÉ

I

REGULARLY, three times a week, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, he and his dog came to beg

He was very tall and very gaunt, and his clothes were all plastered with quaint patches, and ravelled along the hems. But he was always scrupulously clean. His flowing grey beard was silky and well combed, and the red skin of his hands glistened, as with much polishing. And his sabots, which were many sizes too large, were stuffed with clean straw, and he always left them on the doorstep, and came into the house bare-footed.

He called himself Saint-Pé—why, I could never discover—for one day he admitted to me that he had been baptized altogether differently. He and the curé, and the officier de santé and I represented the classes at Sallespisse, but Saint-Pé alone vivait en rentier. For from sunrise to sunset he was idle, he had not done a day's work since the war. He lived in a ramshackle, one-roomed, mud-floored building, from one corner of which at night, through the broken tiles, he could lie and watch the stars. But the house was his own property, and every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday morning he shuffled out of it in his clumsy sabots to beg around the neighbourhood.

Saint-Pé's dog was named Pluton. Once upon a time he had been of the race of St. Hubert, and Saint-Pé, when he learned my name, hastened to recommend the animal to my special attention. Whatever Pluton had been once in the distant days of his youth, he was now but a wriggling collection of bones encased in a worn-out skin. I never knew him venture to carry his tail otherwise than tight under his belly, and whenever I met him alone, or skulking along behind his master, he never failed to greet me with an interminable, complicated series of grovelling, Japanese-like obeisances.

And, as I have said, the two came to the house every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, and while Pluton sneaked off to rummage obsequiously for refuse in the scullery, Saint-Pé mumbled out the whole lamentation of his woes, as lugubriously, as elaborately, as if he were a complete stranger. Four sous per visit was my allowance to Saint-Pé, and when he had pocketed them somewhere amid those mysterious patches of his coat, he would clump away down the drive, noisily praying to the Virgin for the future repose of my soul.

Eudore and Saint-Pé were neighbours, and Eudore hated Saint-Pé after his obstinate, uncompromising fashion, and never altogether forgave me for encouraging the old impostor. "C'est de la canaille," he would repeat sullenly, when, to tease him, I related Saint-Pé's doings, "c'est comme des lagas, ça vit sur les gens."

But if, in Eudore's opinion, Saint-Pé was a worthless parasite, Pluton was a cursed thief. One night Eudore had missed five of his young ducks, and he had shouted across the hedge to Saint-Pé that the very next time he would shoot that cur of his dead on the spot. At which threat Saint-Pé shrugged his bony shoulders, and Pluton retreated inside the house, grovelling more obsequiously than ever.

"Il est malin," Saint-Pé confided to me the next morning. "Il trouve ce qu'il trouve—et ça ne paraît point—regardez." And, indeed, despite the five young ducks, Pluton looked more starved than before.

II

One Tuesday, about the time of the sowing of the maize, Saint-Pé never appeared, and on the Thursday I missed him again. So at sunset, when I had done my work, I strolled up to his house, wondering what could have happened to him. The door was open, a half-cut loaf of maize bread stood on the table, but there was no sign of Saint-Pé. Then I heard the scraping of a spade. Saint-Pé was behind the house, digging.

He put down his spade and shuffled up to me. And he began to repeat the whole of his elaborate lamentation—he was miserable, he was poor; life was hard, he had no one to look after him, he appealed to good, charitable folks to help him in his old age, "and now," he concluded, "my dog, the old Pluton, the only thing that the good God had left to me, my dog, my dog, he is dead." He led me behind his house, and lifting his coat, all plastered with patches, uncovered poor Pluton's corpse with his tail stretched behind him, stark and straight, as I had never seen it while he lived. "Et maintenant," said Saint-Pé proudly, pointing to the half-dug grave, "et maintenant, monsieur, je travaille " And once more, from the very beginning, he went through his lamentation, concluding with the appeal to the good, charitable folks to help him

I asked him how it had happened He jerked his head towards the hedge, beyond which stood Eudore's house " It was this morning, at daybreak A shot—paf ! " (And he imitated, dramatically, the gesture of shooting ) " And it was only one that he had taken—just one miserable little duck Only one I assure you, monsieur, he hadn't had time to take more than one " And for the third time he repeated his lamentation

Eudore came out of his house, and, seeing us, strolled up to the hedge and looked over Saint-Pé went back to his digging Eudore stood silent for several minutes , presently he said, half to himself—

" Ça faisait pitié de voir une bête affamée comme ça "

Then, turning to Saint-Pé, he called in patois—

" Stop a minute , I will dig for you "

He pushed his way through a gap in the hedge, and taking the spade, dug out the grave And when he had finished, Saint-Pé lifted the stiff carcass tenderly and placed it inside , then shovelled the earth over it with his clumsy sabots.

HALLIWELL SUTCLIFFE

B 1870

A MIDNIGHT BRIDAL

MAURICE ST QUAIN rode out from Edinburgh town—rode as a man rides on whom the world's cares sit lightly Seen by the light of the moon, the stars, the oil lamps that creaked fretfully the length of the Canongate, he showed a square, big-headed, well-knit fellow, and his clothes were London-made

"Damme, what a night!" he muttered, as the keen wind blew through him and about "For an east wind and a raw air, commend me to this same capital of Scotland"

He rode awhile in silence, then talked again to the slim-footed beast he rode, the while he patted her sleek mane

"Yet the women are softer than their climate, eh, dear lass?" he muttered to the mare "And if I love not Mistress Lang as well as I've loved others—well, she must serve to pass the time till I get marching orders from the sour old lord, my uncle"

The moon came forth more boldly, and showed the man's face in a clearer light Deep lines there were about the eyes and mouth—lines chiselled by a life of pleasure, yet promising a brave spirit under all Perhaps the moon knew—the moon, whose woman's curiosity has taught her such queer, prying habits at times when all true ladies are abed—perhaps the moon knew what there was of good and bad in Maurice St Quain He had loved lightly, and left sad hearts behind him, he had fought one duel at least in the course of each amour, and love and fight between them had marked him, yet withal he held a certain reverence for women in the abstract, which no woman in the flesh had yet found power to wake

And now he was journeying, under the light of this same moon that knew him, toward the village far away yonder at the foot of the low hills, where one he liked, and loved not, waited for him

He rode far out from the smoky lamps of the town, and was nearing a small and lonesome loch that lay on the left-hand of his road, when a figure, bent and cloaked, stepped out into the moonlit road. A hand was laid upon his bridle, and at the moment a wild blast of wind swept back the cloak, revealing a woman's face—old, worn and wrinkled beyond belief. For a full moment she stood there, saying no word, but looking at his face, his wearing-gear, the appointments of his horse. Nor did he break the silence, this figure, coming from the dreary night, seemed rather a spirit's than a woman's, and time and place alike combined to overlay the man's undoubted courage.

"Aye, the Lord is guid," murmured the old woman at last. "Didna I pray for sic a callant to come riding by the loch-side?"

"What is it, mother?" asked St. Quain, finding his voice again.

"I sent up many a prayer, an' ye have come."

St. Quain laughed—laughed as the Scots themselves are wont to do, with hardship and a sound of dryness in the throat. "'Tis the first time, to my knowledge, that I have come in answer to any woman's prayer, unless she chanced to be young and buxom. Come, mother, can I serve you? And if so, how? For time is pressing with me."

"An' isna time pressing wi' the bonnie bairn—the bit lassie I nursed on my ain knee? There's a tryst for ye the nicht, an' ye'll no fail to keep it."

"A tryst? Why, yes, but how should you know of it?"

Again she eyed him for awhile in silence, then, "The hour is no just one for yon kind o' love," said she. "There's Death will be tae groomsman if ye winna come wi' me."

Maurice St. Quain began to shiver, what with the wind that chilled his body and this queer speech that chilled his soul.

"What would you?" he said.

"Ye maun let me hold your bridle an' rade ye to the muckle house above the loch"—pointing a shrivelled finger, as she spoke, across the moonlit lake. "Ye maun ask naething as to aething, for there's little time, I'm thinking, if the lassie's to be kept from out a bridal shroud."

Slowly it was borne in upon him that there was a life to be saved—a young girl's life. Not all the night wind could frost his chivalry, not all the love trysts in the world could turn him from a clear errand of mercy such as this.

"I'll go with you," he said.

The woman clutched his bridle, muttered a blessing, so it seemed, and strode off along a grass-grown bridle-track with the step of one who had fewer years to carry. Down by the loch-side they went, with a mist of spray in their faces ; up the further side of the steep they journeyed, and in at a rude gateway The moon shone fair upon a rugged, loose-built house, and from an upper chamber came the light of many candles

"Get ye doon," murmured the old nurse "I'll lead your beastie to the stable, if ye'll bide a wee"

He waited, as if under orders from his superior officer ; and the wind shrilled about the walls , and the waters of the loch went lapping, lapping up the reedy beach

"Come wi' me," the same voice murmured at his ear, while yet he was in the midst of wonder and of vague affright

He followed her across the courtyard, and up a flight of steps, and into a great hall And now, for the first time, he ventured to draw breath Without, there was the wind, the moonlight and the witchery , within, all seemed to have a usual air about it—the air of a house whose master is well-found in this world's goods A manservant was putting logs upon the great fire on the hearth-place , a hound, long-nosed, long-bodied, dozed beside the blaze , the very nurse herself, who had shown as some weird creature of the night, grew to the likeness of a woman as she doffed her cloak She crossed to the board that held the middle of the floor, and poured a goblet of wine, and brought it to the strangely bidden guest

"And, ay, she's bonnie," she murmured, with a sort of hard encouragement. "Ye needna look as if 'twere pain an' grief to save the lassie's life"

St Quain gulped down his wine, and felt the red of it go tingling through him The old nurse watched him curiously, and something like a smile was on her face as she noted once again the big comeliness, the air of consequence, that hung about this Englishman

"My lady waits ye, and the meenister," she said

He could make nothing of it Who was my lady ? And the minister—surely he would not be there unless the maid were on the point of death , and if she were so near the end, what service could a stranger render her ? The house, moreover, did not seem like one that entertained old Death as visitor , for serving-men, with careless faces, free from any trace of woe, were moving in and out of the grim hall, making ready against supper-time Again, what did it mean, he asked himself.

"Perchance there is a supper-party," he said, with sudden inspiration, "and a guest has failed you?"

The old nurse was plucking at his sleeve impatiently. "There'll be one guest o' the twa come into hall the nicht," she muttered. "One o' the twa—and the other's death, I'm telling ye"

"Oh, ay You would be thirteen at the table, and you sought one more to break the ill-luck?"

"I ken little o' your English haverings Thirteen? Why for no should thirteen sit down to meat? Come ye wi' me, laddie, for we're ower near the strike o' twelve to stand here talking o' matters that only a Scot may ken"

He followed her, with quickened breath They mounted a broad stair of oak, and crossed a landing hung round about with trophies of the chase and battle-field The old nurse pointed to a rusty pike, and chuckled grimly

"That came fro' Bannockburn," she said, "and now it seems we have to beg fro' an English callant what once we took I could weel wish ye'd been cradled north o' the Border, but 'tis as God wills"

St Quain smiled quietly at the race-hatred which slumbered still—not knowing that this same race-hatred was to wear a graver aspect for him soon

The nurse flung open a door on the right-hand, and St Quain found himself in a well-lighted parlour A spinet stood at the far end, and round the hearth was grouped a company of three The first, a lean greybeard, habited in black, was talking to a stately matron, the third member of the group sat on the other side the hearth, and twined and untwined her white fingers restlessly

All the gallantry in Maurice St Quain, all the tenderness and passion, came headlong to the front as he looked at that third figure There was witchery in the pale face, he had known no other like her, though he had wandered through many countries with an eye wide open for such matters The old nurse could have taught him words with which to clothe his thoughts, had she been munded—soft, northern words that Southrons have no knowledge of. But the nurse was glancing at him eagerly, and from her look it seemed that life and death hung in the balance

As for St Quain, he stood and bowed above his trim, three-cornered hat, and felt the eeriness steal back upon him Without, the wind howled unwearied, and light spits of rain came tapping like so many fingers at the windows, within, he saw four people—strangers until now—all eyeing him with a regard half eager, half mistrustful.

"My prayer went bonnily, my lady," the old nurse said. "I met him on the road doon by the loch, an', tho' he's Southron, he's no that ill to look at"

My lady checked her "Your errand here must seem a strange one, sir," she said "It will seem stranger when you hear the nature of it"

He scarcely heard her, for his glance was on the lassie seated at the far side of the hearth, and he was thinking how gladly he would have journeyed half through England to win a sight of her And she, for her part, was regarding him with a look he could not understand, a warm colour, as of pleasure, had risen to her face, and it seemed not possible that she should be the victim of a fatal malady

"Your name, sir, is——?" went on my lady

"St Quain, at your service"

"A gentleman of quality, if I mistake not?"

"Nephew to Lord St Quain," he answered drily This cool, quiet questioning, as if he were a malefactor in the dock, was little to his taste, better, he thought, the wildness and glamour of the scene without

"Then, sir, I must ask your patience while I tell you how it comes that we entertain a guest so unexpected—and so welcome," she added, with a cold politeness that was almost insolence

She motioned him to be seated, but he would not He felt a strange repulsion from this lady who craved a favour, and received it, as if the world were made to do her service And yet, as he looked at the lassie once again—and found her eyes still resting on him, with their pitiful, half-pleading look—he could not nurse his anger.

"We are the Lockerbies of Loch," went on my lady, with the air of one who has said enough to compel both homage and surprise

St Quain, indeed, felt no little surprise, for the Lockerbies were famed for their poverty, their pride, and the beauty of their women. He understood now my lady's bearing, and resented it not at all, for no Lockerbie that he had heard or read of had thought to find his equal.

"I am honoured by any summons from Lady Lockerbie," he said.

My lady glanced shrewdly at him, it seemed she liked his quick address, and liked the fashion of his face and figure.

"There is a curse upon our house," she went on, with a note of fear beneath her coldness

"I have heard of it"

"Who has not? You know the danger, then, that overhangs our daughters?"

In a flash he saw the meaning of it all, and his first sense was one of wonder that an old superstition could die so hard. Was it not the year of grace 1750? And could it be that four folk gathered here together—one a minister, the others women of pluck and sense—were following this Jack-o'-Lantern legend with implicit faith? He caught the minister's eye, and the man of prayer began to shift his feet uneasily

"Such matters are idle, they are snares of Belial," he said; "yet the curse has never failed through three long centuries"

"Legend and history bear out your tale, sir," said St. Quain, and he paused in doubt

The pause was broken by a sudden, eager cry from the lassie who was the head and fount of all this trouble

"It is idle, sir," she said, with a swift glance at St. Quain. "Scots lassies do not die of legends, and so I tell them"

Yet under her gaiety, too, there was a note of fear. And under her gaiety, likewise, there was a something that told St. Quain the truth he hungered for. Mystery or no—hasty wedlock or no—it was plain that in her denial of the need there was a confession that he had already found some place in her regard

My lady came and laid a hand on the girl's shoulder, and all her pride was gone. "Janet," she said tenderly, "I have but you, and the curse is stronger than we are"

"But, mother, you are asking"—the colour swept across her face and left it pale again—"you are asking this gentleman to—to give his life for mine"

"What folly, child!"

"He will be bound to me—to me, whom he did not know a half-hour since. What will his life be worth to him afterwards?"

It was St. Quain who spoke now. "My life will be worth little to me if I lose you," he said

And the old nurse, standing in the shadows, rubbed her lean hands together. Southron or no, he spoke as women like to hear a lover speak.

There was an awkward silence, broken on the sudden by a deep whirr from the eight-day clock that stood beside the hearth. All turned to the dial-face, all listened while the ten strokes were struck, sonorous and deliberate. The girl herself began to tremble, for the legends of her race were strong on her, and two more hours might see her wedded to a grimmer bridegroom than St Quain.

"Haste ye, haste ye," crooned the old nurse. "It's gey ill to play wi' time as ye are doing."

The minister was grey of face, and now and then he muttered a prayer. And then there came a wailing from without, as if in answer to the deep voice of the clock—a wailing that drifted round the courtyard, and down the slope, and across the lapping waters of the loch.

"Cannot ye hear?" the old nurse cried.

"It is the wind—the wind, woman," said the minister fretfully.

"Oh, an' it's the wind, say ye? Well, I've heard it twice in a long life, an' I dinna like its voice." She looked at her young mistress. "For the love of heaven, dearie, save yoursel'," she said.

St Quain could scarce remember afterwards what chanced. He was aware of wind and rain against the window panes, of the loud ticking of the clock, of Janet's hand in his. He recalled vaguely that the minister had talked and prayed above them, and that his heart beat high as he named the girl his wife. But what he did remember in after years was the great sob of relief that came from Lady Lockerbie, it was plain that she looked on her daughter as one returned almost from the grave. Nor was this faith in an old legend so strange as at another hour and place it might have shown. This house by the lone loch was one that harboured ghosts, if ever a house did, and legends might well find lodging-place in every cranny of the walls.

When next he felt himself awake, Lady Lockerbie's voice was in his ears, and the pride that was almost insult had come back to it.

"We owe you more of explanation than we have given," she said, taking him aside. "Why, you will ask, knowing as we did the danger that hung over us, why did we leave all to the chance of the last moment?"

St Quain's air was full of quiet gaiety. "I ask for no explanation," he said. "I have won your daughter, and I count it the happiest evening of my life."

"Yet you will wonder by and by, and I must tell you. My daughter was to have been married this morning to an old lover of hers ; everything was in readiness, and he—he was killed in a duel yesternight The news reached us at daybreak, and we have spent the day in fear so horrible that you could not credit it "

" There was a Fate in it," said St Quain—and, indeed, he felt as much , " and if I bring your daughter one-half the happiness I have won——"

" Our pride must suffer," put in my lady , " the Lockerbies have never yet needed to go abroad in search of an alliance—to seek it in the public road I fear, sir, your thoughts of us must be something of the strangest "

He bit his lip, then smothered down his own sense of pride " My thoughts toward you are of gratitude," he said—" and surely the St Quains are not of such indifferent blood——"

" In England the name is a good one, so I believe Yet our pride is wounded, sir, to have hurried you into a bridal in this fashion —And yet, again, we owe you gratitude Pray lead my daughter to the hall , there is supper waiting for us there "

Plain as was my lady's attitude—of gratitude all chilled by Scottish pride—her daughter's was different altogether Half-shy she was, not knowing how this trim-built gallant felt toward her ; but the pressur of her hand upon his arm was friendly, warm, confiding almost

" I shall love wild nights henceforward," he whispered in her ear " The wind and the rain have brought me—you ! "

It seemed that she had suffered from deep feeling long repressed , for on the sudden she looked him in the face, and let a dangerous light come into her grey eyes " I was to have married Bruce of Muirtown," she murmured, " and, oh, how I hated him. Better have died, I think, than go through life with him "

St Quain laughed low and happily. " And I ? " he said " Am I a better mate than Death ? "

" You saved my life, and you saved me from Bruce of Muirtown Am I like to forget such services ? "

They were in the hall by this time, and the minister was bowing Lady Lockerbie into her chair Very handsome my lady looked, and chill as the night wind that raved about the house , and she glanced at St Quain with a curious distaste Not that her coldness troubled him , the girl beside him was his wife, and he had known no other like her in the world. This supper-party might, indeed, have dashed a bridegroom's spirits, had he been made of softer stuff, the wildness of the night, the urgency, the curse that seemed to be on the wind's lips as it hurried by—these were no usual forerunners of a bridal trip. Yet St Quain lifted his glass and drank a measure—pledging his lady with his eyes—as gaily as if all were orderly and well-omened.

"Why should such a destiny as ours hang over us?" the girl murmured. The fear, suspense and shame that she had undergone lay heavy still upon her, and she shivered as she spoke.

"The legend says, if I remember rightly, it was because some long-dead Lockerbie did bitter wrong to his neighbour's daughter."

"You know our story well, it seems."

"I have lived much in Scotland, and its tales are dear to me."

"Yet where is the justice of it? All this was centuries ago, and I——"

"And you have pride and all the other legacies to bear. He did grievous wrong to this girl, did he not—your ancestor? And she drowned herself upon her eighteenth birthday, and the mother came to him as he sat in the hall, and cursed him, saying that no maid of his should pass her eighteenth year."

She nodded gravely, and turned to shudder at the wind-beats that rocked the very walls. "And we have escaped—all but two of our race—by making maidens wives before they reached the fatal age."

"And I have reason only to bless the old-time story. Why, Scotland never saw bride so bonnie as mine, and one day—when, Janet?—she may learn to love me."

"I am to be taught—and the master, so it seems, is clever at his work," she murmured.

Lady Lockerbie frowned at them from her seat at the table-head. "Mr St Quain," she said, in measured tones, "I must offer you a lodging for the night. To-morrow, if it suits you, I should wish you to ride into England, to warn your friends of this alliance, and to make all preparations for a second marriage in due form."

St Quain laughed outright. The wine and the witchery and the sweetness of it all had got into his blood. "I ask for no second marriage," he said. "Happiness is happiness—and I have found it here to-night."

The minister looked soberly over his glass of wine. He was oppressed by the irregularity of it all, and by the bridegroom's levity. And Lady Lockerbie looked coldly at her son-in-law.

"I think," she said, "that happiness has very little to do with this matter. We are an old race, sir—indeed, you come of an old race yourself, so far as England goes—and I should wish to treat with your father as to settlements, and——"

St Quain felt a dull pain at his heart. He had loved his father well. "My father died," he said gravely, "four years ago—at Culloden."

Had he unsheathed his sword at the supper-table, the effect of this quiet speech could not have been more dire.

"Died at Culloden?" echoed Lady Lockerbie, clutching the table with restless fingers. "On which side, sir, did he fight?"

"Why, for the King."

"The King? Which King—our own Stuart, or the Usurper?"

"For King George. We have been loyal subjects always."

The minister began to mutter vaguely to himself. He knew not what might follow this rash confession of St Quain's "Loyalty, sir?" cried my lady, in a voice of bitter scorn. "We Lockerbies do not play with words, as you would seem to do. I lost my husband at Culloden—and your father fought against him, so it seems."

"I can but regret," said St Quain slowly. "Yet it would be a poor thing, surely, for the children to cherish enmity because their fathers were brave men and fought for different causes."

"It takes all rights from you, so far as my daughter is concerned."

St Quain felt the girl on his right hand move closer to him, with a sort of instinctive denial.

"You have saved her life, sir," went on my lady, in the same cold, even tones; "you have done us a service, and we thank you for it—but you must never have speech or sight of her again."

It was St Quain's turn now. He rose to his full height, and Janet, looking up at him, could not keep back that glow of pride and tenderness which had swept over her at his first coming.

"Lady Lockerbie," he said, "I have won my wife, and I shall take her home with me as soon as she has made her preparations. I care little for King George or Charlie Stuart—but I love her as I never thought that a man could love a woman."

"You do not understand," put in my lady. "Culloden was worse than Flodden even, the memory of it is with us day and night. We hate you English folk."

"Janet," said St Quain, and he laughed as he turned to the girl—"Janet, what say you? Granted I was unhappy in my English birth—and, faith, I had little choice about the matter!—are you willing to fare out with me and trust to my sword-arm and my honour?"

The Lockerbie pride took diverse forms, and my lady had no exclusive share in it. The girl rose, too, and put a warm hand into her lover's. "I will go with you," she said, "and—I shall go fearlessly."

Again there was a troubled silence, broken this time by a loud rattling at the door.

"The wind, my lady," murmured the grey minister, who seemed more uneasy than the rest.

"Open, open!" came a shout from the other side of the door.

"God help us, 'tis Bruce's voice!" murmured Lady Lockerbie. "Bruce—and we thought him dead!"

"The nicht is full of the wee bit ghosties," murmured the old nurse, standing behind her lady's chair. "He, too, I'm thinking, couldna rest quiet i' his quiet bed, while the English-born stepped into his dead shoon."

Again the girl moved nearer to St Quain, and slipped her hand into his own under cover of the board. "It is Bruce's voice," she whispered. "Bruce of Muirtown, and I fear him so!"

"Fear him, with me beside you?"

"Yes, for he has loved me since I was a child. Oh, he's not bad, not bad at all! But he is fierce, and I do not love him, and—and I would this trouble had not been brought on you."

St Quain's heart leaped high. Her last thought was for him, despite her own dread of Bruce, the pressure of her hand was sure and wifely.

"See, child," he whispered, "do you love me? May I act as if you were my wife in truth as well as in the letter?"

The pressure of her hand alone replied, and then the sound of knocking at the door grew louder, unmistakable. The old nurse went to open, and let in a storm of wind and rain that half-blinded those within. And when at last their eyes grew clearer, they saw a big fellow, with blue eyes and rain-wet hair of yellow, standing, like a storm-sprite, his eyes fixed upon my lady's daughter.

"I feared to be too late," he cried "It wants but an hour to midnight, and——"

He paused, and clutched his heart as if in pain And now they noticed that his left arm was bandaged, and that a kerchief was wrapped about his brow

"They—they said that you were dead," my lady stammered "Say, Bruce of Muirtown, is't your ghost?"

"My ghost?" he echoed "Nay, but 'twas like to be. I was wounded, and fell into a sort of trance through loss of blood, and when I woke there was a voice that called to me—your voice, Janet—and I rode out through the storm"

A sudden pity fell upon them His eyes dwelt hungrily upon the girl, and it was clear that only love of her had given him strength to ride so far

"She is married already," whispered my lady.

He looked more like a fiend than any fleshly man, as he paused to understand his misery "Married? To whom?" he thundered

St Quain bowed quietly "To me, sir, an hour ago," he said

Bruce of Muirtown began to mutter like a man deranged; then asked the minister if this were true

"They are fast as the Kirk can make them," said the grey man of peace

Again there was a silence, then Bruce laughed harshly, and lifted a glass from the table, and flung the contents full in his rival's face

"We'll fight upon it, sir, and she shall be a widow before to-morrow breaks"

St Quain felt a rush of shame come over him—shame, not for his wine-stained face, but for the weakness of this man who had challenged him to combat

"I regret, sir," he stammered, wiping his cheeks and brow, "that you are only strong enough to offer insult—not to atone for it"

Bruce of Muirtown turned his hungry eyes away—turned them from the lass he worshipped, and let them rest upon St Quain.

"I am recovered," he said, with a heaviness of voice that belied him, "I will fight you in the meadows by the loch to-night"

"Nay, for I refuse," St. Quain answered quietly. "I do not fight with wounded men"

Janet, for her part, wondered at his self-command, for already she had grown to love him, and no love-ridden woman doubts her lover's courage. But Lady Lockerbie was of different mould, and her voice was cold as the raving wind without when she turned toward St Quain.

"In Scotland, sir, men answer insult with the sword," she said.

St Quain drew back, with something near to horror. For the first time he understood this woman—understood the depth of her prejudice and her pride. She had been glad to save her daughter's life, she was more glad to think that Bruce of Muirtown had returned to cut the bridal-knot with one sharp stroke of his sword.

And yet the man was weak through loss of blood and long riding under rough skies. How could he fight with him?

"'Tis not the first time we have daunted Englishmen," said Bruce, with a mocking laugh. "See how he pales beneath the wine-stains—and all because he sees a hand go down toward a sword-hilt."

St Quain was mortal, though brave and tender-hearted. "You fasten a quarrel on me," he said. "Well and good—but these ladies should know nothing of it."

"Ay, ay, they should, seeing that one of them is my promised wife. And, gad, sir," he added, in a white heat of passion, "if you dally further, I'll thrash you in their presence."

St Quain could do no more. He lifted his wife's hand and kissed it, he bowed, as a courtier might have done, to Lady Lockerbie.

"I am ready, sir, and the moon is full to-night," he said.

The black-robed minister stepped forward. "Gentlemen, gentlemen——" he began.

"It is too late," said Bruce of Muirtown.

"Too late," echoed St Quain, turning, as he left the hall, to find his wife's eyes fixed on his, with a tenderness in them beyond belief.

"Yet think, sir," said the minister, his hand on St Quain's arm. "A duel is at all times a godless enterprise, but when your adversary is sick——"

"True," said St Quain quietly. "In England we do not fight with such as Mr Bruce here, but it seems that in Scotland the matter shows far otherwise."

"In Scotland men fight for a right cause, whether they be sick or well," said Lady Lockerbie sharply.

St Quain bowed low to her. He was beginning to understand how pride—Scottish pride—may oust all womanhood.

"You will fight?" said Bruce of Muirtown eagerly, as he gulped down a measure of red wine

"You leave me no option, sir," answered St Quain

Together they went out into the windy night, he and the man whose left arm carried bandages; and even now, amid the stress of weather and of feeling, he wondered that the prospect of sword-play could be so bracing to a wounded man

"There will be none to watch us," muttered Bruce "The minister is pledged to peace, and we can scarcely ask the women-folk to act as seconds"

"Where is the ground?" said St Quain shortly

"Rather, what is your weapon? You are the challenged party"

"Swords," said the other, after a scarce perceptible pause

The clouds had left the moon by this time, and the wind was dying into fitful moans and gusts as they went out into the grim courtyard and forward to the meadow-lands beyond From time to time Bruce halted in his walk, but always recovered and went forward with an air so hard and desperate that St Quain felt chilled and awestruck He could love and hate, this thwarted lover, and spared himself as little, so it seemed, as he spared man or woman when his heart was set upon a matter

They marked their ground, and once again St Quain drew back

"You are ill, sir, and I am ashamed," he said "Will you not wait awhile, and send your friend to me in proper form?"

"And let you snatch my wife from me? I think not, sir Either you fight me now, or I have you kicked into the high road by the serving-men"

St Quain drew his sword "I am ready," he said, in a voice as hard as Bruce's own

His enemy's attack was overwhelming at the first, Bruce, it was plain, distrusted his own staying-power, and his onslaught, like himself, was rash, impetuous, regardless of all laws St Quain, recovering after the first surprise, played a quiet, watchful blade, he made no effort of any sort to thrust, but parried each wild stroke with a studied ease that brought the other's blood to fever pitch

Time after time Bruce strove to beat the other down, and then a mist came before his eyes, and after that he felt his sword go up, and up, and up, toward the blue-grey moon, and a heaviness, as of death, came over him

He awoke to find St Quain bending over him—bending over him with a strange, almost womanish, solicitude

“ You fought—you fought well, sir,” murmured Bruce.

But shame was strong upon St Quain True, he had striven to avoid the combat, yet it was terrible to fight, as he had done, with one so weak

“ Can you stand ? ” he said “ If so, I’ll help you to the house ; your bandages have slipped, and the blood is trickling ”

“ Where did you prick me ? ” said Bruce of Muirtown faintly

“ Prick you ? Nowhere I robbed you of your sword, and then you fell into a swoon I am English, sir, but I am not the coward you would wish ”

Bruce rose stiffly from the wet, moon-bright grass, and passed a hand across his brow “ I played the bully awhile since,” he stammered, “ I raved and swore, and challenged you to fight, but then—God help me, I had lost a wife ”

St Quain would listen to no more He linked his arm in Bruce’s. “ And I have gained one,” he said softly “ Surely, sir, you will grant feelings to us English, though we’re of a different race ”

Dizzy as he was, sick of heart and brain and fortune, Bruce could not but warm to the manliness, the straightforward wish to give and take which marked his rival’s manner It was his turn now to feel shame, and, in love or war, in pride or shame, it had never been his way to do anything by halves

“ St Quain,” he said, stammering even as he spoke for weakness’ sake, “ you are a man—and I regret that insult more than any other deed of my wild life ”

“ Then quit regrets, for I have forgotten all Good God, does not Janet make a good excuse for any folly ! ”

They had reached the door by this time, and Bruce of Muirtown leaned a heavy hand upon his arm

“ And the girl,” he muttered “ Will she go with you, do you think ? ”

“ Yes, though her mother says she shall not ”

“ And why ? ”

“ I named Culloden in her hearing, and she learned that my father had fought upon the English side ”

Despite his weakness, despite his old sense of loss and his new sense of repentance, Bruce laughed aloud. “ Even for a Scot, she dwells too much upon Culloden," he said " You had better have robbed her plate-chest than mention what you did The serving-folk are of a like mind, too , you'll have trouble, if you wish to take your bride "

" I'll take her, if all Scotland says I shall not "

Like most wildings, Bruce of Muirtown had a heart He had shown it once to-night, when he could find room for honest admiration of a rival—a rival who had robbed him of a mistress, and who had given him back a forfeit life

" St Quain," he said, still standing on the wind side of the oaken door, " I'll play no dog-in-the-manger part. She's yours, and you shall win her yet "

They passed into the hall, where Lady Lockerbie was seated alone in front of the great fire She looked up eagerly as they came in, and her face was white as Bruce's own, soon as she saw them standing there—St Quain in health, his adversary leaning heavily on his arm

" You—you are hurt, Bruce," she stammered

" No," he said, " except so far as I was hurt before Mr St Quain has worsted me, and given me my life I hope that he will count me his friend henceforward "

My lady rose There was a sort of madness in her face—the madness of long hatred indulged in overmuch She seemed to gain stature and in coldness

" His father fought against my husband," she said " He is English , he can be nothing to any Lockerbie "

" He chanches to be husband to a Lockerbie," put in St Quain drily, " and he means to claim his right "

Taller yet she seemed to grow, and her grey eyes deepened, and her voice, no longer cold, was full of passion

" My daughter is in safety, sir She would have followed you, to interrupt this duel which has ended so unhappily , but I prevented it "

" I will find her," said St Quain doggedly, " if I spend a twelve-month in the search "

" And I will help you," put in Bruce of Muirtown

My lady looked from one to the other " What is this talk of friendliness, Bruce ? This stranger has robbed you—robbed you "

" Nay, it is I who would have robbed him , and I, no less than Janet, owe my life to him "

Obeying a sudden impulse, Bruce took my lady to one side and talked to her. St Quain could hear nothing of what passed ; but he guessed that his own cause was being pleaded by one who had so lately wished to kill him. And by and by Lady Lockerbie returned, and held her hand out with some show of warmth.

" I cannot pretend to welcome the match," she said, " but I am old, and weary, and I cannot but see that lives may well be ruined. Will you—will you treat her well ? "

Her voice broke at the last , and St Quain saw down into the tenderness that lay beneath her pride.

" I will treat her well," he answered huskily.

My lady turned to a manservant who stood by the door. " Prepare the bridal chamber," she said.

And St Quain looked out upon the loch, the moonlight, and the peaceful sky. And only the whimpering wind was left to recall the storm that had brought a wife to him.

ESCAPE

I

THE lamps now made the wet pavements dull gleaming shallows, with pools of darkness, the clouds raced across a dim and sodden sky. Now and again, a gust rising in captious fury came, shaking the heavy-headed roses, and drenched annuals in the little suburban gardens. Warm as the night was, the curtains at No. 5 Elm Row, known otherwise as the Beeches, were drawn, the windows shut. Two men sat in the study at the back of the house, the hour was late. One slight, slim-faced, clear-eyed, smoking quietly, a whisky-and-soda by his side, the other smaller, ordinary of feature, yet good-looking until you studied his weak mouth and heavy chin and furtive eyes. Clever with the cleverness which counts itself as nothing if it does not overreach others.

"Martin, I have said all I mean to say." The elder man spoke smoothly. "Does it enter your head that I am far too good for you, but for your father's sake I let you go free. Here are one hundred pounds in notes, and a little gold. Take them!"

"As final, Glynne?" asked Martin sharply.

"As final. Use them, start with them as you choose. I have had enough of you."

The man called Martin leant forward.

"No one but you knows," he said. "I could replace this borrowed money in a month—this slump is only a flash, and you know it. Give me a chance until the special settlements of the shares I gambled in. It was only borrowing."

"Borrowing which you have done before. No, Dick Martin. It's over. My firm has done with you. You had every chance. The books are here. You see what I must replace and pay. I have one thousand pounds to do it with. Here is my bureau. Now take your money. There is an early train. You have youth, brains—too many. One hundred pounds. I say I have dealt leniently with you."

The younger man leant back, gnawing his fingers. A sinister light in his narrow eyes—youth, brains—one hundred pounds. He who kept a motor, lunched at the Savoy and the Carlton, ruffled it as a rich man in this great London, to be hounded out, flung on the world. And no one but James Glynne knew. He drew a hissing breath. If Glynne were gone, if he could have those books and save exposure—

"I've told the servants you are leaving early," said Glynne, "and now good-bye."

"You'll expose me?" gasped the other.

"I must, I have no choice," said Glynne coldly. "You are not fit for decent company, Martin. Now go."

He stood up, looking on the mantelshelf for his tobacco. A heavy dagger, a trophy from Tapa, inlaid and beautiful, lay on the table. Martin's fingers fell on it—there was a swift movement, a dull sound, silently, coughing a little, Glynne crumpled up, slipped to the floor—coughed again and lay still, wide-eyed and very quiet.

Martin stood back staring at what had been his partner. He let the dagger be—there was a little blood oozing slowly. No sound in the quiet house.

How much was made of killing! It had been so easy, so very easy. He stooped to the still figure, rifling its pockets, taking the keys, he opened Glynne's desk. Yes, there were the notes, the books. He put the former into his pockets, he took up the books. They were not so easy, so he must pack them up. He disarranged the room a little, undid the window catch, took Glynne's watch and chain, and smiled as he did so. His brain was working so clearly that its power almost hurt him.

What fools men were who were caught—who neglected details with the still thing behind them. He wrote a note.

"Dear James—I am off by early train to B, as per your arrangement. Shall be back Wed next. Dine with me at old place. Don't forget Stewart's instructions. "R M"

He was careful not to blot the note. He put it in an envelope and all the time he listened. Then he gasped—there was a spot on his shirt-cuff, red and damning. Very quickly he slipped from the room. The clock struck one. He had seven hours' start. There was a train at four to Euston, a slow, crawling thing, which he would catch. He would go to the sea, lose himself there. Take a second hat and coat. Oh, it was all so easy! He would walk to the next suburban station, slip in there. Stealthily he slipped to his room and opened his wardrobe. He took a shirt and a suit of clothes, and changed, the white shirt with the stain was packed into his bag. he put on a cap, slouched and large, and a dark overcoat, he carried a parcel with another coat and a panama. Glynne wore glasses; he went for a pair.

But now the minutes flew. There was a make-up box in his room, a hair dye. With all the lights up he used it—turning his fair hair brown and dark, doing it deftly, quickly. He pinned the note on his pincushion, ruffled his bed, left his dress clothes, a second white shirt, in his room. He attended to every detail. What fools criminals were! He would come back on Wednesday or Thursday, expressing sorrow—surprise. Take up his partnership, drive his car again. It was all so easy. The books! He had almost forgotten them, they made a bulge in his bag, but he stuffed them in. The house was full of noise. Was that Anne coming downstairs? Would she go into the library and see what was there? With teeth bared, and grinning as a nervous dog, he stood in sick despair. But it had been a gust of wind. He stole noiselessly from his room, slipped into the dark hall, and out. Down the garden path, not so easily now, the great dim world was so big and cool. Steps heavy, slow, on the pavement—a stolid policeman coming his rounds. Martin crouched behind a clump of tiny bushes. What if the man should come in and see him? He was bathed in sweat, his heart choked him.

Constable XX yawned as he came to the gate, clicked it to—it was open—and passed on. Tramp, tramp. Minutes were passing as he got slowly on.

Martin got up and came to the gate. He smiled now. Constable XX had found it open, it might help as they gathered evidence.

He was out on the shadow-haunted pavement, treading lightly, going faster and faster. He would never get to the next station in time. Down Kilma Road, past green squares, each moment a lurking terror. Another policeman. Martin slackened pace, turned before he reached the man, passing away in the shadows, and then flew on. Edward Street at last. He was thirty minutes too soon. A shower came lashing down, he stood in it, not daring to go into the station. A rumble at last—a whistle. There were two other travellers. Martin dropped some money with a cry.

"Get me my ticket—third—will you?" he said, giving a sovereign to a sleepy workman "I've dropped half-a-crown"

It saved him showing his face at the office Off now, rumbling Londonwards, grey dawn stealing across the sky. He pulled his cap down, fearing the light.

II

Euston came all too soon, with dawn breaking He went out, bag in hand, into the quiet streets The sea! Yes, the sea was best.

He had no pity for Glynne Glynne had been hard to him, cruel, unjust He might have understood a rash speculation, not turn a man out of light into outer darkness The milk carts were about now He passed through London unnoticed, a mere traveller carrying his bag Criminals were such fools they took cabs, gave themselves away A man on foot was lost in the vast city So he walked on until the sordid large houses and dim, dirty squares gave way to shopland Which should it be? Charing Cross, Victoria, Paddington, Waterloo? He would go down to Folkestone He chose Victoria

The waiting-room was almost deserted. He went in, lying down on a sofa, for one man sprawled half asleep in a chair He turned his face away. Better to run no risks And then a sudden qualm of fear and misgiving How could he come back? They would ask him where he had been, they would wire to every branch of the business Staying with friends? He must produce the friends The easiness of it all slipped from him The dog Murder barked at his heels He lay easily no longer, but crouched on the sofa, a criminal fleeing from justice.

But certain—quite certain—of escape, and with a thousand pounds to help him He smiled again more easily After all, it was better than being a branded thing with a bare one hundred.

Ten minutes later a man in a floppy light overcoat and a panama hat, wearing spectacles, came out for a cup of tea If they looked for any one, it would be for some one in a cap and dark coat The sleepy man went into the refreshment-room, where flaring lights fought with the rosy morning Martin saw him and slipped away, sitting out on a bench, apparently dozing in the now filling station. It was his first touch of fear He got his tea later, gulping down the hot, tasteless stuff A clock struck eight They knew by now! Wires would flash, the police seek and hunt, but by that time he would be at Folkestone, safe in some small lodging. Third class again.

He sat in a corner of a third-class carriage, smoking, with bent head, thrills of fear upon him. He might have dyed his hair badly; there might be streaks in it. He kept his back wedged against the dusty cushions. Stations slipped by. The morning grew hotter. A mere traveller, lost in the crowd, he took breakfast at the railway. It was early yet to seek for lodgings. He left his bag, a new one and as yet uninitialed, at the station, and went down to the sea, letting the morning drag. Then into the busy town, and out along the streets with apartments in them. He wanted a poor place, and found one, clean and small. Here he gave his name as Ralph Meldon. He haggled for terms, he was most anxious to know if he could have another room later, a friend was coming to join him. He was discursive to the landlady. They were from Australia, he said, coming to see England, had come to Folkestone for a week or so.

He sat down behind the lace curtains with a sense of security. Who could trace him here? He was not feeling well, he had a cold, he said. Mrs Simmons got him a chop—a greasy, sodden thing—and some porter. She was too willing to housekeep. His bedroom was upstairs. He went up there after lunch. There was a key. The windows had clean lace curtains. He turned the key crisply and sat down to open his bag. The books, heavy and thick, lay among his scanty clothes. He tore the pages out, and burned them in the paper-decked grate—slowly, so as not to make too great a smoke. The covers were too stiff to burn. He cut them up into strips which could be dropped. But the grate now was full of charred, hot paper.

The woman would wonder, perhaps suspect. He gathered them all out, tying the charred pieces up in a newspaper. They, too, must be lost. He replaced the crimson frills and washed his blackened hands. New clothes he must get them—lose all these. He looked down at his shirt, and sprang up. "James Glynne" written neatly on the front, the wash had got mixed up. Off in a minute, changed wildly for one of his own, which was not marked. And what to do with this? He lit a match, holding the shirt over it until the words were burnt away, he trembled and shook as he did so.

He had brought one suit of clothes, his name was in it. He ripped it out, burnt it too. Socks—they were marked. At last they were all free of his name or Glynne's. The hot afternoon drowed across the world, and he sat cold and shivering in his bedroom.

III

His coat hung behind the door, the dark one he had started with. No name in it, but—why should he have two coats? He stuffed it into his bag, and locked the bag and stood up, sweating now, glancing down at the quiet road. But every hour counted. When his beard grew no one could tell him. They would never look in a big watering-place. He had forgotten nothing, nothing.

The evening waned. A thundering knock at his door brought him, panting, from a doze. Who was there? Who——

"Yer tea, sir"—from Mrs. Simmons.

Sloppy tea on a japanned tray, melting, strong butter; a loaf of bread, a slice of stringy, pink ham on a thick plate. He drank the tea, but could not eat.

Mrs. Simmons was sympathetic.

It was his chest, he said lightly. He had, worse luck, to grow a beard. He would go out for a letter now. Then a sudden fresh fear. The beard would sprout yellow, betray his brown hair.

He locked his bedroom door. He had parcels of burnt paper in his pocket. Down the streets of little houses and into the town. He wanted more clothes. There was an outfitter's, he went in—shirts, socks, bought prodigally.

The shopman looked at him critically. Martin stepped back. These notes might be numbered. He must change them, get away, but change them first. He went out, parcel in his hands, breathing hard.

Down to the shore—the tide was lapping in. There were people everywhere, he strode along, cursing the heavy parcel, until he came to comparative quiet. Then the little parcels fell on a gurgling, quiet sea, they would soak, sink before morning. Shrill voices behind him roused him.

"Gladys, Herbert, the man is floating paper boats!" A rush of barelegged children to watch the boats. One opened, the scraps of charred papers fell on the sunlit waters, dancing across them.

"What foony boats!" said the prattling voice. "Just burnt papers."

Fear! The fear he could not put away as he went back. These children would talk; people would wonder, and perhaps inquire. The slit covers were dropped in nooks and crannies on the beach before he went upwards to the Leas, crowded even in July. He was safe there. But never quiet. Into the town again. He bought some studs, and changed another note, some links in another shop. He had plenty of gold now. He snatched food in a cheap hotel, and read an evening paper.

The lines he had expected were black before him. "Awful murder in the suburbs. Mr James Glynne stabbed. The police suspect robbery. Mr Glynne's partner, Mr Martin, away on business, address not known. Watch and chain missing. Bureau rifled and open."

Watch and chain! Martin turned sickly green. They were in his bag.

He left his dinner, sped back to his lodgings, and on the way sent himself a telegram. These were the little things that fools forgot.

It came ten minutes after he got in. Half of it was used to light a pipe, the other half left on the table for Mrs Simmons to see.

"Sorry can't get away to-morrow—Tim."

Sleep curiously came to him. He had done everything. He was lost down here. But he stayed in bed next day, and felt the stubble grow on his chin—already his spruce good looks were gone. The papers revelled in the crime—some burglar—the window was left open. They had a clue.

Martin laughed. If his beard would but grow he would slip to France and away.

He lay in his room again, complaining of headache, and then went out. Half-way to the beach he took his handkerchief out. Oh, was he mad—mad. His name was on the corner. After all he had forgotten something. He might have dropped it any minute. Had he done so? He stood clasping his hot head, trying to remember.

The watch burned in his pocket. He slipped away along the beach, on with the handkerchief clasped tightly in his hands, until he was alone, to watch it burn. But madness—madness—clever as he was he had forgotten this simple thing. There might be another handkerchief in his room. With fevered fingers he dug in the moist sand. A fool would throw the watch into the sea. He would bury it. It sank at last into a deep hole, with a little smoothing over it might be there for ever. The blood-stained cuff went into another hole But he hurried home, posting a post-card and letter on the way

Up to his bedroom, searching wildly His other handkerchief was in his bag, the damning name upon it He burnt it too. Out again for a bottle of hair dye, going warily to-night, he was not altered yet Back, to darken the stubble on his chin and lip, growing fast now But in a day, two days, he would be safe

IV

He ate a slab of cold atrocity sent up with lumps of yellow, soapy potatoes, and read the paper, taking it up easily A day or two now, and he could be away—Canada? A man could live well there, there were some shares he wanted to buy He would send money for them, give his address out there He ate and drank with appetite

"The murder at the Beeches Mr Lloyd, of the London and County Bank, came down to-day It appeared Mr Glynne had drawn a large sum in notes on the day of his death The bank hope they can trace all the numbers There is no news of Mr Martin" Suspicion is beginning to fasten itself upon him He was not seen to leave the suburb Notice of the notes will be given now The porters at Grangedon saw a man with a bag—a man in a dark coat and cap pulled down He stopped, and he changed two notes here Panic in the quiet little room, the paper flung down He would change no more He could not pay for his passage out He gnawed at his fingers again, and sped out into the night

A little later he was back, and called Mrs Simmons. He showed her a portion of his wire

"Come at once to Cheltenham. Angeenia ill" He must go there immediately—in the morning—by the first train

And at night he could not sleep Children had dug upon the beach, the watch had been found All night he saw the moist sand raised, caught the gleam of gold He stared in the little glass in the early light The stubble was thick on him and dark His eyes were hidden by smoked glasses Bag in hand, he went to the busy station. Who was that man there, staring at him? He hurried away to the train. Was that a detective there? He changed at Redhill, and went across country—anywhere—to some big town. Night saw him at Manchester buying a new coat ; he left the blue one in the train. Travelling on again Birmingham

He came to obscure lodgings, lay in terror in an attic-room. It was so easy, so easy, but fear dogged each dragging hour The papers again—opened in trembling eagerness Nothing more He laughed his fears away After all, it was so very easy to escape Some of his jauntiness came back He went out into the smoky streets, and into a restaurant The glass, which threw back the reflection of a commercial-looking man, with brown stubble on his chin and brown hair, laughed at the possibility of recognition

Dick Martin was lost He could go abroad The money would be changed there at some shop He could buy jewels, and then pawn them. He had not thought of that

He started up with a laugh That could be done even in London, and he would be in France before they raised the hue and cry He would buy a wig—red, for choice—and go up now, leaving his bag at a station—and—his hand had waved as if in joy at his sudden plan—a glitter caught his eye. The man who had forgotten nothing wore a peculiar old seal ring, known to all his friends A barbaric thing, yellow topaz set in blood-stone and fringed with diamonds His hand dropped to his side Had every one in the restaurant seen his guilty start, the sudden hiding of his left hand ? Who was that man over there with close-cropped bullet-head ? A detective, perhaps "A reward is offered for any information concerning Richard Martin Five feet nine inches, slight, blond hair, clean-shaven, last seen in dark overcoat and tweed cap, wears a curious signet-ring on left hand "

In deadly fear he conjured the advertisement up. Stealthily and guiltily he slipped the ring into his pocket and took the paper up

"Strange discovery at Folkestone A little girl, digging in the sands, has found a gold watch and chain It has been given to the police, and is believed to have belonged to the murdered Mr Glynne " That was real, staring at him So the sand had given up his secret Even now they might have traced him.

Ring in hand, he slipped through the crowded streets. He let it drop suddenly, walking quickly on, and had not gone three paces before a child put it into his hands He went to the foul, sullen canal, and saw it flash before it fell into the water That was gone now He turned away

" Oh, it was so easy " Yet fear dogged him a little, drove him north to Newcastle—back again to Liverpool, a furtive, weary figure hiding in sordid lodgings, and yet still assured of his cleverness

He took heart of grace in the huge shipping city He would dare London and the diamonds His last change went on a new overcoat and a new suit of clothes He got into the London express, planning the future, which was yet to be his, but with him now he carried a revolver A stolid, dull-looking man got in with him, a conversational man, who spoke of the mysterious murder

It was a good chance of hearing the opinion of outsiders " Some tramp," said Martin carelessly, leaning back

" No " The man shook his head " Not at all It was the junior partner Lord ! they've as good as traced him now They can lay their hands on him when they want to "

The carriage swayed before Martin's eyes—a blood-red mist blurred his sight Traced him ! He gripped at his collar

" I don't see how they could," he heard himself answering " He—forgot—nothing He seems to have got away cleverly Any one could if they took the trouble "

The bullet-faced man came nearer him

" You don't know the police," he said, " they've detectives everywhere A man's traced, he doesn't know how There's the clue of the watch at Folkestone They haven't lost that In fact, I hear they're following him from there "

It was horrible to choke

" I've done some work." The man leaned back " I know They always forget something, these murderers They change their clothes, the colour of their hair, and walk about, wearing, perhaps, some trumpery bit of jewellery which betrays them The landladies suspect them, because they grow new beards and go out by dusk "

The horror of it gripped Martin as a steel trap This man was playing with him He knew everything Every ruse he had resorted to As they neared London he would be arrested He had left nothing undone Yet this stupid-faced man had unravelled every carefully-twisted thread The train rushed past the placid waters of the Dee, tearing Londonwards

In one great wrench and tear his nerves fell to shreds ; he shrieked in his agony—with a wild mixture of exasperation and relief

"You know me!" he yelled, standing up, swaying as the train swayed "Oh, you know me—Martin, the murderer—and you follow me to torture me I cannot change my notes, for the numbers are known You know I've dyed my hair, that I wore my signet-ring."

The stranger was up, gasping in astonishment

"I killed him because he had no pity, but I'll not hang for it—I'll not—see! You bloodhound! I have my remedy!" There was a sharp report, and something lay shuddering on the carriage-floor

Shouts—the attendants rushing in, the door shut, and yet the word drifted It was Martin, the missing junior partner of James Glynne. The whispers flowed from carriage to carriage A quiet, shabby-looking man ran down the passage, entered the smoky carriage, and heard the story as it was poured out "And I," the bullet-headed man said in horror, "I'd nothing to do with the police I never heard or dreamt of this being the murderer, except that I take an interest in detective stories and in criminal cases I'm a commercial traveller Oh, my God! It's awful for me!"

The shabby little man knelt by the figure which they had raised and laid on the seat

"I was chief man on the case," he said simply "The odd part of it was we'd completely lost trace of him And the numbers of the notes were never known Nor were we ever sure he did it He made one of the cleverest disappearances on record He had beaten us all round"

The man on the seat raised dimming eyes He had heard and understood A wry smile twisted his white lips

"So—hang—easy—to beat you," he whispered. "But—now——" his mouth slacked They covered his dead face gently and stood staring, as the express hummed Londonwards, at the face of the man who had neglected nothing in his escape.

A. J. DAWSON

B 1872

BILL'S SHORE JOB

(A Yarn of "The Genteel A B")

THE evening was full of still August heat, and the promise of thunder. My friend the night-watchman had forsaken his customary stronghold, the galley, and received me, with meditative affability, upon the fo'c'sle head, where we enjoyed whatever air might be stirring, with a clear view of the inky water and the few other ships then lying in the dock. There we sat, gazing at the break of the fo'c'sle, where innumerable look-out hands had tramped to and fro, under all kinds of night skies, from those which arch wild grey seas far south of the Horn, to those in which great stars hang like jewels above the hot silences of equatorial waters. The watchman seemed affected by a mild melancholy, and spoke of bygone days as one who had known losses, and without any regard for my question as to what happened to Bill after the meeting with Lord Chasemore.

Nowadays, of course, every blessed ship—such as there are that are ships, and not puffing smoke-stacks—seems to be one of a string, all owned by Messers blooming So-and-So an' Co (Limited). And limited it certainly is, when you come to grub, and liberty days, and sailormen's quarters, and the like o' that. But it wasn't always so, not by long odds. Even a very few years ago there was a many ships, and good ships, that was as you might say family affairs. And things was better for sailormen then. You knew who you was working for, and they knew you. But as for these "Limited" concerns, they've no soul to be damned, and nothing you could lay a rope's end over, nothing but a manager, in a glass case, and a board o' directors who think in double columns o' fractions, and don't feel at all.

The watchman pensively spat into the dock, and slicing a large wad from the end of a new plug of tobacco, stowed it with deliberation in the special corner of his mouth which habit reserved for this purpose.

Then he took up his parable with a note of added definiteness which prepared me for reference to his hero, the genteel sailorman.

Now I'd wager you've never even heard of Hedger and Paul of Cardiff. Maybe they're chawed up now by one o' these cormbines the papers tell about. But a while back they—leastways he, for there wasn't never no Hedger in it, so far 's I know—owned three of the most comfortable ships sailing out o' Cardiff—two full-rigged clippers and an eight-hundred-ton barque that could sail as close to the wind's eye as—as a archangel. Yes, I've seen the Cutlysark and the Thermopylae in my day, but, on a bowline, I never saw anything sweeter than the Mary Paul out o' Cardiff. It seemed a sin to put coal into her lap, for she'd lines like a yacht, and I reckon the man who skippered that packet ought never to have wanted any other kind of a wife. She was a lady in all weathers, but give her a bowline and, by the thick o' my arm, it brought the water to your eyes to hear her walk and talk!

We made three round v'y'ges in the Mary Paul, Bill Chasemore and me, so at last it got to be almost as if we'd married her and was on kissin' terms with her relations. Why, we knew Mr Paul and the office folk almost like shipmates, and Bill and me had the same two bunks in her fo'c'sle all the blessed time—close on five years.

Well, and then the third voyage we carried Miss Mary Paul and her aunt Susan Mrs Richardson that was. Miss Mary she'd had scarlet fever, I believe, and come near handing in her checks. Anyway, the doctor he'd ordered a sea v'y'ge, and there was the smartest barque out o' Cardiff in the front parlour, as you might say, and so we carried 'em. Well, at your job you may have seen queens and the like o' that on their travels, but you never saw any one made such a fuss of as we made of Miss Mary. The first mate—he reckoned to be skipper in another v'y'ge or two—went pretty near crazy about her before he was done, and the whole blessed ship's company, from the Old Man down to little Billy Worms, the boy, gave up its watch below to do something for our pretty passenger. You never saw the like.

The mate he talked more like a missionary than a man when he gave orders, and to hear the b'sun, with his "If you please" and "Quick as you can, men!" instead of—well, you know what—I tell you it was as good as a play. We had services on a Sunday, like a steamboat, and, once they got over their shyness, the crowd would fairly fight over who should do the singing out on main-braces or halyards when Miss Mary was on the poop The way they'd jump at any job that took them aft, and the time fellows spent in dolling up before taking a wheel, it would have made a horse laugh As for me, I used to get men to take two look-outs for me by giving 'em my trick at the wheel

There's no sort of doubt but the mate meant real church and orange-blossom business, and I give you my word I fairly pitied that man at times, mate and all as he was, and out of Peterhead at that. You could see he got no taste out of his baccy three parts of the time And for why? Miss Mary'd walk away from him any day to put in a word with Bill Chasemore And, mind you, the queer thing was Bill never seemed to take any very great stock of her, like the rest o' the crowd When they was all a-yarning about what she'd said, and how she looked, and the way her hair took the sun, and that, Bill never said a word And though I reckon he's got about the best chest o' clothes that ever went to sea—a royal prince couldn't have a finer kit—he never dolled up like the others to take a wheel I must say that fairly surprised me The rest of the crowd would put on shoes, and often as not a coat—one chap, a South Shields man he was, actually mounted a collar on Sundays, and had three stand-up fights over it—even in the doldrums But Bill, he'd just lounge up to that wheel in his shirt and trousers, same as if there wasn't a woman nearer than Trincomalee and Merrimashee To be sure, his shirts was always white as milk, and his dungarees scrubbed out every other time he wore 'em But that's no more than he's always done

But, say what you will, women is mighty contrary creatures and there's never any telling which tack'll suit 'em best Bill in his shirt an' trousers and bare feet, seemed to suit her better than Mister MacFee in his best shore clothes, or any other man in fresh-greased bluchers and a collar Women are that queer and contrary

Along about the beginning of cold weather on the homeward passage, I fancy Bill began to soften a bit But he never talked about her like the rest of 'em, and when we paid off in Dundee, upon my word I don't believe he'd even have stayed by to work the ship round to Cardiff if I hadn't a-made him I had my work cut out, I tell you, but Miss Mary, she said to me before they went ashore "Please, Mister Martin," she said, "don't you let Mister Chasemore leave the ship I want you two to come round to Cardiff with her—to please me."

Now, if you'll believe me, when we got round to Cardiff there was a letter waiting for Bill from Mr Paul, and Bill he never said a word about what was in it till we were turning in at our lodging that night, though I was just a-boiling, and he knew it. Then, when I had him fairly in a bight about it, he said, just as careless as a man might talk about weevilly bread "They want me to chuck the sea, and take a shore job at the office."

Well, you can depend I was in a fluster. But the rumbustuous thing was, Bill didn't feel very sure whether he'd do it or not. You can wager I was sorry to lose him for a shipmate, but, good sakes alive! a shore job with the owners, sleep in every night, and—and Miss Mary as a sort of guardian angel—well, what would you think? Yet, if you'll believe me, I had to fairly hustle Bill into that billet, as it might ha' been a Nova Scotia bo'sun booting a sick Dutchman aloft in a gale. But I got him there at last, in a long black coat an' all, till you couldn't have told him from an undertaker in a good way of business. And Miss Mary, she gave me a beautiful silver-mounted pipe in a case, with my name on an' all, and a couple of gold sovereigns in a purse, she did, and I've got the pipe now, though, of course, I don't smoke it, but 'tis an A number one pipe, an' hall-marked silver on the stem.

Well, the barque she was to be laid up for dry-docking and a thorough overhaul, but I'd a pretty fair pay-day, an' what with Miss Mary's two quid, an' one thing with another, I thought I'd stay ashore and wait for the old barky again. So I did, and now and again I'd stroll into the office and pretend to want news of the hooker, just to have a glimpse of Bill in his black coat, sitting there with the others, solemn as a ship's figurehead, and full of learning and respectableness. Bill would always shun down from his stool and get leave for a bit to take me out for a drink, as though I was a ship's husband or a skipper home from sea. I used to want to talk about the office, but Bill he'd talk ship till you could smell bilges, and the language he used those times was more like a Yankee second mate's than a Christian's. He'd swear more in ten minutes then than in a round v'y'ge at sea, and it seemed to ease him like a black draught.

Next thing I heard was he was taking tea up at Mr Paul's house, and becoming quite the society man. And then I heard the Mary Paul was under the coal shoots, and next day I signed on at the shipping office. I went to say good-bye to Bill, and we had a long yarn in the "First an' Last"—I dare say you know the house Bill's language would have fouled a fair wind I give you my word, the swearing he did about offices and owners and that would have shifted barnacles It made me quite uneasy

We were to warp out at daylight on the Wednesday, and I slept aboard Tuesday night in my old bunk, after having a little flutter with a Dago who had stowed his dunnage in Bill's old bunk, alongside mine I tell you I sent that Dago ashore with a knob on his jaw that looked like toothache, though I was too sleepy to say much when I heard the beggar turning in again some time past midnight

Come daylight I did my best to rouse that Dago out to make him fetch coffee, but the beggar was all tangled up in blankets and dead drunk, I reckoned, anyway, I couldn't shift him When he did shift we were out past Lundy, in a stiff north-easter, and then he wasn't the chap I'd punched at all, but Bill Chasemore, who'd squared the Dago, and come aboard in his place, as jolly as if he'd made a fortune instead of chucking one away to come to sea

We had to leave our old barky in the Colonies, for Bill said it would never do for him to be paid off by Hedger and Paul again "Don't talk to me of offices and shore jobs," says he Certainly the ways of a man like Bill, more specially with a woman, are like what the sky pilots say about peace—they passeth all understanding

THE LITTLE TOWN

I

"IT is quite a small place "

That was all the information I could obtain I had been referred to the omniscient Joe Shepperton, and this was everything he could tell me "St Erth," he had said "In Cornwall?" And when I had explained that this was another St Erth, he had said, "Oh! quite a small place" Probably he had never before heard of it

As I looked out into the darkness and tried to dodge the reflection of my own face in the window, it seemed that we were passing through country of a kind which was quite unfamiliar to me I had a vision of mountains and the broad roll of great forests, an effect that may have been produced by clouds The yellow lighted reflection of the now familiar interior jutted out before me, its floor diaphanous and traversed by two streaks of shining metal And my own white face peered in at me with strained, searching eyes, frowning at me when our glances met, trying to peer past me into the light and warmth of the railway carriage

Once we crossed an interminable bridge that roared a sonorous resentment against our passage I could not explain that bridge We were not near the sea and no English river could surely have been so wide Yet the bridge was not a valley viaduct, for I caught the gleam of water below, some reflection of paler shadows from the lift of the sky

This adventure into unknown country was immensely exciting It was discovery I gave up my strained enquiry into the world beyond and let my imagination wander out into mystery I was in the midst of high romance when the magnificent energy of our triumphant speed was checked by the sickening grind of the brake . .

The little station was a terminus, one forsaken, gloomy platform that stretched a grey finger into the night out of which we had come I tried to see what was on the farther side, across the metals, but beyond was a black void I received the impression that I was on an immense height, that the dimly seen low stone wall was the parapet of some awful abyss

I could form no idea of the town during my minute's walk from the station to the rooms I had engaged. The whole place seemed to be very ill-lighted. All I could see was that it hung on the side of a hill.

I went out when I had had something to eat. It was only a few minutes past eight, and I was eager for adventure. I told my landlady that I was going down into the town to explore.

"It's very dark," she said, with a note of warning in her voice.

The street in which I was staying dipped gently toward the town, but as I went on the dip became more pronounced. I congratulated myself on the fact that there would be no difficulty in finding my way back. The lie of the land would direct me, I had merely to ascend again.

My street was longer than I had expected. At first there were houses on one side only, but farther down the roadway narrowed and there were houses on each side. I classified my lodgings as being in a sort of suburb grown up round the railway station which was detached for obvious reasons—no railway but a funicular could have been carried down that hill.

I came to the bottom of the street at last and found another narrow street running across right and left. Opposite to me an alley continued the descent in a nearly straight line. Far below a dim lamp was burning. I decided to keep straight on and plunged down the alley.

It was interminably long. At the lamp it twisted suddenly but still descended the hill. "The place is bigger than I thought," was my reflection. I saw, however, that as the road continually fell before me, I must be keeping a right line.

The town was not deserted. There were movement and the sound of voices all about me, figures loomed up out of the darkness to meet me and clattered past over the rough cobbles. I heard laughter, too, and whisperings in the dim black recesses of courts and doorways, and once or twice I caught the tinkle of some thin high music far away in the distance.

Everywhere I was conscious of the stir and struggle of life, of unseen creatures as careless of my presence as I of theirs.

And still I had not come as yet to the town itself. I had pictured to myself some wider streets, or open market, a place of lighted shops and visible life. I began to wonder if I had not passed by this imagined centre. I became a trifle impatient. I hurried on, down, always down, through the wriggling maze of tiny narrow alleys and passageways, lighted only by an occasional flickering lamp, bracketed out from some corner house

"A small place, indeed," I said to myself "It is an enormous place" I received the impression that I might walk on for ever through that tedious ravel of streets Yet I knew that I could not be walking in a circle, for I was always descending

I gave no thought now to the long toil of my return up the mountain—already I thought of it as a mountain—I felt that I must and would reach the bottom

It was not what I had expected to find, yet the reality, when I came upon it, was so inevitable that I believed it to be the thing I had always anticipated

I turned at last out of a passage so narrow that my body brushed the wall on either side, into a small square of low houses and the floor of the square was flat On all sides it was entered by passages such as that from which I had just emerged, and all of them led upwards About and above me I could vaguely distinguish an infinite slope of houses, ranging up tier above tier, lost at last in the black immensity I appeared to be at the bottom of some Titanic basin among the mountains, at the centre of some inconceivably vast collection of mean houses that swarmed over the whole face of visible earth

"There is surely no other place like it in the world," I said to myself in wonder

II

There was light in the square, two lamps that flanked an open door Above the door was a faded sign I guessed the place to be a hall of entertainment, probably a "picture palace"

I walked over to it and read the sign, it bore the one word "Kosmos"

"Some charlatan," I decided

No one was taking money at the door, and after a moment's hesitation I went in

It was a queer little hall The bareness of the walls was partly hidden by pathetic attempts at decoration, some red material was rudely draped over the raw brickwork, and a few unframed, dingy canvases—the subjects indistinguishable—were hung on this back ground

At the end was a rough proscenium opening, and behind it a stage that appeared to me quite brilliantly lighted, after my long sojourn in the darkness

In the body of the hall some twenty persons were seated on rough benches staring at the still unoccupied stage

I found a seat near the door and waited. It came to me that the stage was disproportionately large for the size of the hall

And then out of the wings came wobbling a tiny figure, and I realised that this great stage was set for a puppet-show. The whole thing was so impossibly grotesque that I nearly laughed aloud

Presently I turned my attention for a moment to the vague forms sitting round me, some of them silhouetted against the light of the stage. But none of them returned my stare. " Rustics ! " I thought, with a touch of contempt. " Men and women of such small intelligence and narrow experience that even such an amateur show as this amuses them " I turned back to the performance, though the foolishness of the doll's actions was beneath criticism

Nevertheless, after a time, a certain fascinated interest began to grow upon me, and I watched the performance, chafing at its slowness—with increasing attention. I tried to disentangle some meaning, some story, some purpose, from the apparently aimless movements of these tiny dolls staggering about their gigantic setting. Every now and again I thought that I understood, that there was an indication of some sequence of action, some development of a theme. But always the leading figures wavered or fell at the critical moment, and chaos followed, a hopeless, maddening jumble

One piece of management, however, deserved and received my approbation. I had never in any marionette show I have ever witnessed seen the suspending wires so cleverly concealed. Stare and criticise as I would I could see no sign of any mechanism whereby the dolls were supported and animated. This did, indeed, give me a curious sense of reality, it made me feel that these poor ridiculous little figures had a sentient life of their own. Then some senseless action or helpless collapse reminded me of the invisible wires, and my pity for the feeble dolls was turned to contempt for the ineptitude of the operator

Dwelling on that ineptitude, I began to lose my temper and I became conscious that other members of the audience were being similarly affected. I heard impatient sighs and half-suppressed groans of despair when some doll attempted to strut across the stage and collapsed half-way. -

I looked round me again and saw that men were twitching their arms, hands and fingers, leaning this way and that as if to influence the movement of the dolls—just as a man will strain and grimace in order to influence the run of a ball over which he has no sort of control

I discovered that I had been unconsciously making the same foolish movements, and, also, that our attempted directions were not concerted. There was no unison, no characteristic sway in this direction or that. It was plain that we wished to influence the dolls in contradictory ways

But one feeling, I am convinced, animated us all, we were unanimously and angrily critical of the unseen operator, we were all convinced that we could work the unseen wires far more efficiently than that bungling performer. Indeed, the fact, so far as I was concerned, seemed clearly demonstrable. The actions of the dolls were so infantile, so contemptibly purposeless

That obsession grew upon me. The mismanagement of the whole stupid affair began to appear of quite transcendent importance

I could not watch without striving to help, and I was forced to watch . .

III

The performance closed abruptly.

The curtain descended without notice, apparently in the middle of the play, unheralded by any grouping or arrangement which might suggest a finale

The audience, almost in darkness, were left to stumble out as best they could

I could not find the exit, and when I did find a door it was not the right one. It opened on to a flight of steep narrow stairs

It occurred to me that this must be the way up into the flies, to the place in which the operator sat and controlled his dolls. In a sudden mood of determination I decided to seek him out—I would give him some primitive instruction. He must be some ignorant countryman. I would give him a few useful hints in the conduct of his business, suggest a story for his dolls to act, some sequent, purposeful story moving toward a climax

I stumbled upwards in the dark, one hand on the cold rough wall, the other stretched out before me to guard against any obstacle which might be in my path. It was a very long staircase, for the proscenium opening was a high one. When I was nearly at the top, the stairway twisted unexpectedly, and I found myself looking down on the still brilliantly lighted stage

Before me in a great chair that was almost a throne an old man sat gazing tenderly down upon the stage below him. There was a calm, gentle wisdom upon his face and he moved his hands slowly this way and that

I looked down and saw that although the curtain had fallen and the hall was empty, the performance was still going on in the same, aimless, inexplicable manner

Perhaps the old man was practising his art, or perhaps he did not know that the curtain had fallen and the audience gone away—in any case he sat there with a sweet intent smile, passing his outspread hands slowly to and fro over the heads of those foolish, inept figures beneath

And even then I could see no wires, no connection between those mesmeric hands and the tottering figures

A strange diffidence had come over me. From where I stood it appeared an immensely difficult task to control and guide the movements of those dolls below

My anxiety to instruct died out of me. I began to marvel at the dexterity with which the old man would sometimes raise a falling doll by the lift of his little finger. And from my new point of view I thought I could at least discern some purpose in the play

For a time I stood motionless, watching, and then I looked again at the operator seated in his great chair. He was quite unconscious of my presence. He wore always the same serene, gentle smile. He was in no way perturbed when his dolls stumbled and fell. He sat serene, intent, and his hands moved ceaselessly to and fro over the great stage

I crept away softly and found my way out

When I reached the square again the moon had risen.

I looked up and saw the little railway station a few hundred yards away.

It was a stiff climb, but I reached home in ten minutes.

The town was, after all, quite a small place . . .

In the morning I wondered whether the old man still sat in the same place manipulating his dolls

I wondered whether he was a charlatan or only very old, and very, very foolish.

THE MAN WHO WAS BLIND

HE was, as it is said, born blind From the moment when his sightless eyes, with the wistful pathos of all young, inarticulate creatures mirrored in their inscrutable depths, had seemed to gaze into his mother's face, he had had his lonely being in a world of profound darkness But it was no hereditary taint that had condemned him to spend all the days of his life, from the cradle to the grave, in impenetrable gloom and rayless solitude His mother was of a good yeoman stock fair, blue-eyed, white-skinned, dimpled, and radically robust, whilst his father was of ancient patrician lineage, whose family escutcheon had never been blotted by any such sinister visitation as blindness Thus his grievous disability seemed to be due to one of those mysterious, wanton mischances which from time to time do recur to flout and deride and set at naught the wire-drawn learning of science

The cold fact stood he was blind !

For him, the mellow sunshine had never been more than a sensation of genial warmth For him, the flowers had been only sweet perfumes His loved ones were as so many kindly voices, so many elusive presences, with warm, caressing hands and clinging lips, who sometimes dropped hot tears upon his cheek His invisible world was full of cruel protuberances and clogging obstacles against which he wounded and bruised his body, full of alarms and disconcerting, harrowing noises, a place of harsh surfaces that set his teeth on edge whenever he touched them with his sensitive finger-tips Light and shade, night and day, colour and form, distance and proportion, beauty and ugliness all these were words to the meaning of which he held no clue

If money implies wealth, then the Blind Man was rich, but it is likely that he set greater store on the unfailing devotion of his mother and sister, with whom he lived, than on all his possessions His father had died, half heart-broken—for he had been ambitious for his only son—when that son was but a child The child grew into a comely, lusty youth, became at last a masterful, strong man, but withal sweet-tempered and gentle, virile in spirit and tender in thought. Music was the crown of his life, its comfort and its solace lightening his blackest moods and bringing balm to his soul in his moments of deepest despondency. He sang very sweetly in a soft, flutelike voice, and could play, besides the piano and the organ, the harp and the violin. He delighted in good literature, too, and was made free of the magic world of romance at an early age. Good company, good wine and tasty dishes, the wit that is pointed and polished like a sword, the humour that is full-bodied yet genial, like a generous port, the laugh that ripples out heartily, and the pathos that is simple and not unseemly, all the tragedy and comedy, in fact, of this old variety show of a world, he rejoiced in exceedingly. He was—in the old phrase—a full man, and save when his affliction set some irksome prohibition upon him, and so brought home anew the deadly, stultifying nature of his infirmity, he was a happy man also.

For the most part, he lived in an old house on the coast. He revelled in the changing music of the sea and in its salt-sweet savour. Towns frightened him, though he never confessed to his fear. Among houses he had a sense of being stifled and overborne, the strident noises of the streets were torture to his shrinking ears, and the musty, rancid odours offended his nostrils.

Sometimes, however, he dwelt among mountains, and at first the abiding calm of these immutable fastnesses of Nature was grateful to his quivering sensibilities, but, after a little while, the unbroken, everlasting silence would oppress him, he grew afraid to be alone, for then he seemed to hear his secret thoughts clanging in his head like bells. So he would bid his women-folk take him back to his sea-side home again, and, in the roar of ocean, the screech of the undertow, the cold sprinkling of flying, stinging spray on his face and hands, he found peace once more.

Thus his eventless life continued for twenty-four years, and he had yielded up all expectation of ever beholding the wonders of earth and sky and sea. Many great physicians, specialists in all forms of blindness, had come to examine into the cause of his malady, and each had gone away sorrowfully acknowledging that his case was beyond human skill. He submitted uncomplainingly to these tiresome inquisitions for the sake of his loved ones, but he had soon ceased to cherish hope. Indeed, he felt—being a strong spirit and no weaking—that to entertain fallacious hope was also to invite despair, whilst in resignation there was at least peace.

But in his twenty-fifth year persistent rumours reached his ears of a great Italian doctor who had given sight to many born blind, and a trusted friend, named Wyman, himself an oculist, was despatched to Italy to ascertain, if possible, the truth or falsehood of these reports

“Not a very nice man, this Pereira,” was Wyman’s report on his return “But no charlatan, as jealous rival practitioners would like to make the world believe I have myself seen——” And he went on to describe the miracles of healing he had witnessed “He is willing to undertake Ferdinand’s cure, but he makes one proviso against failure”

“And that?” breathed the mother

“He says that he can hold out no hope of Ferdinand’s ever recovering his sight if he were really born blind”

The eager faces of the women were blanched in that instant.

“And—he was born blind,” the mother faltered

“Pereira, even though he has never seen Ferdinand, says probably not He told me, what, indeed, I know to be true, that it is the rarest thing in the world—a thing so rare as to be almost unknown—for a human being to be actually born blind He maintains that Ferdinand was once able to see, if only for a few hours immediately after birth”

“We should not have known, of course I myself did not suspect the sad truth for two whole days, and I watched his face all that time”

“Pereira holds himself at your disposal,” said Wyman “It is extraordinary in so great a man, but I am afraid he inclines to be a little mercenary He has suffered a good deal of misery and privation in the past, I fancy, and now, as you know, he is the laughing-stock of half the foolish, incredulous world, and it seems rather to have embittered him”

“He is welcome to all we have if he can cure Ferdinand,” said the mother “Telegraph to him at once At the worst he can do no harm”

So the great Italian was sent for, and mother and daughter went to prepare the blind man for his coming

“What—another!” exclaimed Ferdinand, with a rueful laugh “I thought I had come to an end of them.”

But when, after a fortnight, Pereira arrived, he gave himself into the wonder-worker's hands with imperturbable, meek fortitude

"I think," said Pereira, after the preliminary examination, "that there is a possibility—a good possibility." Then he plunged into a scientific dissertation, in which such terms as "sclerotic coat," "choroid coat," "canal of Schlemm," "tarsal cartilage," and many other like cryptic sayings figured again and again, with a maddening reiteration. But for all this the Italian bore upon him the stamp of competence. He did not boast or prophesy. He was not too confident of success. "You will pardon me," he wound up, "but I should judge you to be a man who could bear to be told the truth about your case?"

"I think that is so," said Ferdinand.

"You could bear a great disappointment?"

"I have weathered a good many. Yes."

"Then," said the doctor, "I may tell you that, though I believe I can restore your sight, and that I can restore it permanently——"

He hesitated.

"Yes?" prompted Ferdinand.

"There is—I will not disguise the fact from you—a bare likelihood of my cures being only temporary. You see——" and again he plunged headlong into a fresh dissertation. "You will regain your sight of that I am almost certain," he concluded, "but it may be for only a little while. Could you bear that?"

"It would be hard," replied Ferdinand. "But I think I could bear even that."

"You understand perfectly?" urged the Italian. "You realize what a temporary restoration of sight would mean to you? As you are now, the full meaning of your deprivation is not apparent to you. You have, to all intents and purposes, never had the use of your eyes at all. But if you were suddenly made to see, perhaps only for a few hours, or it might be only for a few minutes, and then became blind, incurably blind, again——"

He lapsed into eloquent silence.

"I am willing to take any conceivable risk you can name," Ferdinand declared, "so long as there is a reasonable chance of success."

"There is a very excellent chance," Pereira assured him, "if you will consent to obey me implicitly in all things."

"That you may rely upon."

Thus the matter was settled. The Italian doctor took up his quarters in the house, and forthwith began his treatment.

The processes of the cure were involved and excruciatingly painful as well as tediously slow in their results. For six weeks Ferdinand was condemned to lie on his back in a darkened room, his eyelids covered with plaster, his brows wrapped in thick layers of wet bandages. He was put upon a rigorous diet and forbidden exercise. But he bore the long suspense, the enervating inaction, the interminable days of empty quiescence, with the ensuing nights of sleeplessness, with high courage and long-suffering equanimity. In all respects he was an exemplary patient. He did not once complain, he did not once try to force the doctor's hand by demanding to know when he might expect this cruel ordeal to end. Never had the fine texture of the man's soul manifested itself so nobly as during that stupefying period of probation.

It was on the last day of the sixth week that Pereira shot his alarming bolt into that riven household. He did not appear as usual at breakfast. A maid, sent up to his room with a cup of tea, came fluttering downstairs, after a brief absence, with devastating tidings. The doctor was gone. He had packed his trunk with his own hands, and must himself have carried it to the station.

Mother and daughter, the blood slowly draining away from their faces, gazed mutely at each other across the table, heart-sick and stunned by the weight of this calamity, too deeply stirred by their emotions to exchange a word. Was this, then, to be the end of their fond dreams?

"I found this letter," said the maid, and laid it down beside the mother's plate.

But the world was rocking and spinning before the poor lady's clouded eyes. At last she controlled herself sufficiently to pick up the letter and open it. Then her eyes were flushed with bitter tears, she could not decipher the hurried scrawl. In silence she handed it to her daughter.

"Read it, dear," she said thickly.

The girl, who suffered scarcely less than her mother, read it aloud.

Doctor Pereira had the grace to be ashamed of himself. His letter of farewell began with florid apologies. He was desolated, he said, by the necessity that confronted him. His duty to himself, however, his best interests, demanded that he should leave them. A South American millionaire had offered him two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or more, if he stickled for it, to cross the sea and undertake the cure of his son, who was fast becoming blind. But he must come at once, if the young man's reason were to be saved. At once! The young man's impending blindness, Pereira went on to explain, was due merely to a superficial injury to the optic nerve, an injury that could be quite easily repaired, as Pereira had been able to deduce from a Brazilian oculist's diagnosis. In the circumstances, therefore, asked the Italian, how could he be blamed if he refused to forgo this golden opportunity of making his fortune at one single stroke? Moreover, there was really nothing left for him to do in Ferdinand's case which could not be done as well and as efficiently by Ferdinand himself. So soon as the last application of plaster had crumbled away the bandages might safely be removed, and if Ferdinand were ever to have his sight restored to him at all, it would be restored to him then. There followed a few general, precise instructions, and finally a solemn repetition of the Italian's insistent warning that after all the cure might be only temporary.

The two women gained heart as they read. Hope, then, was not dead even yet. Ferdinand might still see. Buoyed and fortified by this reassurance, they went together to the blind man's room to break to him as gently as possible the news of the doctor's flight.

He lay very still, listening.

"Ah, there can be no doubt now, I think, that the man is a charlatan," he remarked placidly. "But I will not utterly condemn him until I know. It means only a few more days of waiting."

They were weary, dreary days, those last days of martyrdom. Slowly, morsel by morsel, the burning plaster flaked away. Pereira had laid stress on one particular: the bandages must on no account be removed until the last infinitesimal grain of plaster had become detached from the eyelids.

Five agonizing days in all spun their slow coil of hours about the hearts of the three protagonists in this piteous drama before the hour of the blind man's emancipation dawned: the hour that was to make him free of humanity's dearest heritage, or to cast him out of the kingdom of light and beauty forever.

When the supreme moment at last arrived it found him hesitating. In his own despite a panic fear, a craven dread of the unknown future that confronted him, stayed his hand from the bandages. How would he bear the shock of beholding, for the first time, the wondrous world of men, or the worse shock of knowing that he never would behold it?

The women, marvelling at his inexplicable hesitation, waited impatiently beside him

"No," he gasped "I dare not I—I am afraid, mother Ah, perhaps it would have been better if I had not engaged in this hazardous experiment I was happy before, almost happy, I think, at any rate But, if it is still to be nothing but darkness for me, after all this, I shall never be happy again "

His mother laid her hand soothingly on his head He caught it and kissed it

"It is this," he cried, patting her hand, "that undoes me It is you, mother, and Emily who sap my manhood " He hung his head and pondered "How can I tell how this thing will take me now? " he muttered moodily, speaking as if to himself "Do you faintly realize, either of you, what it means to me? You cannot. How could you? I have heard you talk of the birds and the flowers, of colours, of things moving, of little children, of sun and moon and stars and sky, of the sea Ah, but I can smell the old familiar sea and hear its voice I think I should never be afraid of the sea! Oh, but, mother—think!" He shuddered down into his chair "I may not be able to bear it But if I am to bear it, as a man should," he continued in firmer tones, after a pause, "I will choose to bear it alone "

"Alone!" they echoed in concert

"Why not? One prays best alone One is nearest God when one is alone Therefore I elect to be alone," said he "I prayed awhile ago And this inspiration is my answer It is ordained that alone I should undergo this ordeal Yes—yes," he added softly, "it is best And I am set on it, mother, Emily I can see now that that is the only possible way for me to meet this trial of my mettle "

Though they clung to him and wept and cried out that this could not be, and implored him not to send them away, he was inexorable in his resolve Neither their tears nor their passionate supplications could move him

"I will be alone," he repeated doggedly "I will be alone for so long as it takes me to prepare myself to see your dear faces for the first time. You must not enter until I bid you You must not try to open the door I shall lock it You must wait—think how I have waited—until I call you ! ”

“ But, Ferdinand——” pleaded his mother

“ Mother,” he answered, with a note of sternness in his voice, “ would you have me shamed before you in my own eyes ? What if I cry, if I whine ? Should I desire any one, least of all those who love me, to be witnesses of my humiliation ? No I will be alone This interview is trying us all too hardly as it is Let us end it We may want all our strength presently ”

So accustomed were they to bend to his will that they did leave him at last, even as he bade them He followed them to the door and closed it upon them, and turned the key

“ Remember ! Not till I summon you,” were his last words as they passed out

And when, at length, he was alone, he began at once to pluck at the bandages But his fingers trembled and his hands were weak, so that he could hardly undo the fastenings at first He groaned with impatience he who had been patient for a quarter of a century He struck his head against a piece of furniture in his struggles and whimpered aloud at the pain like a child, though he had long schooled himself to bear such trivial hurts with stoical indifference

At last he tore the bandages free

Then a half-stifled scream broke from him

He could see !

His eyelids, woefully stiff and sore, seemed to move up and down creakily But he saw—he saw ! Of that one glorious bewildering fact there could be no doubt whatever He saw !

What he saw was but a pale mist, at first, in which vague grey patches floated slowly, amorphous and large Then, as his vision cleared, the patches grew more distinct, coalesced, took on form and substance, became sharply outlined, resolved themselves into tangible objects

He reeled, staggered, stretched out his hands wildly to ward off the manifold perils that seemed to menace him on every side, then fell upon a low settee in the bay of the window There he huddled, trembling

His terror was extreme He was, as he had dreaded, desperately afraid His impulse was to rush to the door—but of the many wonders that surrounded him which was a door ?—and to batter upon it with his hands and shriek aloud for his women-folk to come to him. He might have given way to that impulse, and thus have smurched his self-respect for all time, had not an overpowering numbness in all his limbs and members chained him down to the seat whereon he had fallen. As it was, he could do nothing but sit and gaze and listen to the thrashing of the blood through his veins and the wild, tumultuous hammering of his heart.

It was a still, grey day. Sea and sky alike were grey. Only a triangular segment of beach, and that all grey sand, sullied and trampled, was visible from the window. A ship under full sail passed across his field of vision. He wondered what it could be. Was it a bird? Then he saw a covey of gulls, black specks against the dull, drab sky. No, those were birds, he decided. But that white, floating, pitching thing? What was that? He had all a book-lover's theoretical knowledge of ships, a blind book-lover's knowledge, but he failed to recognise that schooner for a ship at all, though in fancy he had often lain out on the yards in a bucketing squall to shorten sail.

This moment of unique revelation contained within its brief compass the story of the dislocation of a man's whole world.

His fears were fast abating. His numbness had left him. But now he had no desire to summon his women-folk to his side. He was lapped in a warm apathy of sensuous bliss. His brain was sluggish. He had little power of thought. He could not correlate his first impressions, nor could he, ever after, describe them.

A newspaper, caught by a gust of wind, curveted across his view. Was that a man? he wondered. The sound of the wavelets, crisping into creamy foam on the sands as the tide crept in, came plainly to his ears. So he discovered the sea. But did the sea consist of only that breaking line of feathery white spume? Or did the sea include all that vast tumbled expanse which rose up and merged into the purple distance, and then changed colour and arched forward till it filled all the upper reaches of the world with a sullen, opalescent haze?

A spindling figure, the figure of a half-grown boy, darted across the segment of sand and disappeared. Was that a man? He found himself trembling again.

He had no definite conception of a mirror. And even had he desired to consult one he could not have done so, for among Pereira's general instructions to the women was one in particular on which he laid extraordinary stress they must not let Ferdinand see a mirror for quite a long time, not until he had grown thoroughly well used to his new-found sense of sight, and had learned to measure distances and to understand something of the principles of refraction He, Pereira, had known men go mad at their first sight of a mirror But one wonders if he could have seen himself !

Thus an hour passed

Then the mother, her anxiety triumphing over all other considerations, stole to his door and knocked softly He heard the knock He knew its meaning So that was the door, then He scrutinised it curiously as his first conscious discovery His mother knocked again, and he found his voice

"Not yet," he called out "I am all right I can see" He heard her utter a rapturous cry "But—not yet"

Then, as she went away and her footsteps dwindled, he rose cautiously and stood erect But he found it impossible to maintain his balance He fell forward on his hands and knees, crawled back to the sofa, and crouched there in the cold clutch of a new fear

The fear passed once more He had thought it all out beforehand, and now he was no longer dismayed So long as he stayed there he was safe His sanity began to laugh at his tremors He was clinging to sanity desperately now A man less well-balanced might have succumbed to the influence of his fantastic experiences But he held firmly to the knowledge that one moment of self-betrayal at that crisis of his life might condemn him to a future of mental blindness even more terrible than the doom of physical blindness from which he had so mercifully been delivered

And, gently as the dew forms on the sun-parched blossoms, so a cooling peace descended upon him He began to thrill with the beginnings of a full consciousness of the magnitude of the miracle which had been wrought

His temples throbbed, his palate was dry as tinder, his breath issued whistling through his teeth, his lungs seemed to rattle in his breast

Again his mother knocked at the door And again he called out : "No—presently"

He heard her murmur his name with infinite longing, but he knew that the time was not yet ripe for him to behold her. He dared not yet court the shock of joy that the first sight of his beautiful, beloved mother must provoke.

Once more he gazed out upon sea and sky.

Nearly two hours of self-communion had passed. The first affrighting keenness of his new-born perceptions was a little blunted. He sank back among the cushions in a languorous mood of exaltation that hung his will in fetters. Twice more had his mother knocked at the door, and each time he had sent her away, inexorably, as before. And each time she had obeyed him more reluctantly. On the last occasion she had reproached him with his cruelty.

"Next time," he said to himself, and smiled fondly.

Then the smile was struck from his face as by a blow.

What was this?

He raised his hands to his eyes and rubbed them—gently, for they still ached and burned. He sat up sharply and stared out with a startled fixity of gaze at the scene outspread before him. Was it possible that his blindness was returning? He closed his inflamed eyelids and opened them again. The uniform greyness of sea and sky seemed to have grown duller in hue. The outlines of things were becoming blurred and indistinct. He had no doubt of it now. Awhile ago he had been able clearly to discern the shape of a bunch of green weed on the sands. Now it had lost all colour and form, it was no more than a vague patch on the darkening expanse. And the tumbling waves! He had been able to follow their monotonous rise and fall, their lolling advance and their sudden collapse into foam upon the beach. But now——

He sank back and lay quite still, his eyes ranging restlessly round the room. The patterns of the wall-paper and the carpet, the tapestry hanging on the door, the pictures, the ceiling, the furniture, all were imperceptibly fading into a misty nebulosity before his eyes.

And then he recalled how the Italian had warned him that his sight might be restored only temporarily. "Perhaps for a few hours, perhaps for only a few minutes." He had forgotten that dire possibility in the first exuberance of his joy. Now the deadly truth encompassed him like a bleak, black cloud, putting all his hopes to death, banishing all his dreams of a radiant future. He must go back into the darkness again! He must return to the valley of impenetrable shadow! This glimpse of a world—and an end forever! This brief revelation of the wonder and the mystery of earth, and then the pitiless dark once more, to cover him until death !

Even as he lay and writhed and sickened in torment the light of his eyes failed faster and faster

Then the deeps of this strong man's soul were broken up, and he poured forth curses on the unspeakable malignity of an evil fate that had mocked him with this foretaste of a perfected life, only to snatch it away from him in the very moment of fruition

He uttered a great cry, and rose, and groped his way—once more moving confidently in familiar, ever-deepening darkness—towards the door He turned the key and flung the door wide, and the voice of his agony echoed through the palpitating silence Then he swooned and fell

When he regained consciousness he thought that surely he had passed through the gateless barrier and had attained to a world beyond the grave For it seemed that he could see once more, but not as he had first learned to see A soft, golden glow, a new, mellow effulgence filled the air His mother's face, which he only visualised as an apparition of terrifying aspect, hung over him

" You can see me, dear ? "

" Yes Now that I am dead I can see clearly again," he answered She stooped and kissed him

" Dear Ferdinand ! " she murmured " You are alive You are still in the dear old world You are—no, no, you must not question us, but believe what we say—it is only—we should have prepared you—but how could we foresee ? "

" I thought I saw," he murmured " It was a vision, I suppose And then the blindness returned "

" No," she cried " You still have your sight "

" And you will always have it in future," broke in the voice of Wyman from behind him

" Yes," continued the mother " You will always be able to see now It was not the blindness that returned How can I make you understand ? It was growing late The light always fades away, in that way, as night comes on It was only what we call—getting dark, dear "

But many hours elapsed ere he understood, even imperfectly.

JOHN MASEFIELD

B. 1875

THE YARN OF HAPPY JACK

I ONCE knew an old Norwegian sailor, one of the mildest and kindest of men, who attracted me strangely—partly because he was mild and kind, but partly, alas! because he had committed murder. I cannot remember that the crime weighed heavily upon him. He spoke of it frankly, as one would allude to a love affair or to the taking of a drink. It was an incident in life. It was part of a day's work. That it was exceptional and reprehensible not one of his friends, I am convinced, imagined.

We made a voyage together, that old Norwegian and I. We were in the same watch, and did very much the same duty. I was very young and green at that time, and he, an old man, a leader in the fore-castle, dignified further by poetical circumstances, befriended me in many ways. We used to yarn together in the night watches, under the break of the poop, while the rest of the watch snored heavily in the shadows.

"Hanssen," I asked him one night, "who was Davy Jones?" "Ah, come off your Davy Jones!" said the boatswain, interrupting. "Look out he don't get you by the leg." I repeated my question. "Davy Jones," said the old man. "I don't know, b' Joe, who Davy Jones was. I know his locker though, b' gee." This was a jest. "Just the sea?" I asked. "Dat's one of 'em, b' gee." "And what's the other?" "You want to know too much, you do," said the boatswain, interrupting us a second time, "you and your Davy Joneses. You're like a Welshman at a fair. 'Who trowned the tuck, Dafy Chones?' Come off with you and give us a breeze." "The other one," said the old man, "it's up in the sky, b' gee." "Is it a sea too?" I asked. "Of course it is. Didn't you never read your Bible?" "Why, yes, but—" "Well, then, don't you know about the waters above the firm-ment and the waters that are under the firm-ment?" "If you're going to talk Latin," said the boatswain, "I'm sheering off. I'll not rouse no head winds by listenin' to you. Bloody Latin they're talking, them two," he added, to the third mate, as he walked away.

"They ought to have been rooks, they'd ought"—by rooks meaning folk in Holy orders

After he had gone I got the old man to give me the whole story. He told me that up above, in the sky, there was another sea, of a kind different from our sea, but still fit to carry ships, and much sailed upon by the people of the sky. He told me that the ships were sometimes seen in the air—having perhaps heard from some Greek or Italian of the fata Morgana, a sort of mirage, which does verily reflect ships in the sky, though I believe upside down. He said that he himself had never seen it, but that it was well known how the anchors from this upper sea carried away chimneys and steeples and broke through roofs in European villages. Such accidents were rather more common in the hills, he added, because the hills made the upper sea shallow. In the valleys, where most big towns are, the water is too deep, and the sky ships do not anchor.

"One time," he said, "there was a sailor. His name, b' gee, was Happy Jack, and he was a big man and a sailor (s e he was strong of his body and a good seaman). One time Happy Jack got paid off and he tink he go home. So he go along a road, and by and by he come to a town, and he found all hands standing in a field looking up. In the middle of the field there was an anchor, and it was like red-hot gold, and the fluke of it was fast in the ground. It was fast to a cable which went up and up into the sky, so far that you couldn't see the end of it. A great nine-stranded cable it was, with every bit of it shining like gold. It was all laid up of golden rope-yarns. It was a sight to see, that cable and the anchor was. So by and by the parson of the village sings out to get an axe and cut it through, so that they should have the anchor and a bit of cable to buy new clothes for the poor. So a man goes and comes back with an axe, and he cuts a great chop at it, and the cable just shakes a little, but not so much as a rope-yarn carried away. 'You'll never do it that way,' says Happy Jack, 'you must never have seen a cable, the way you shape at it. What is it you want to do, anyway?' So they said they wanted to get the anchor and the cable to buy new clothes for the poor. 'Well,' says Jack, 'all you got to do is to bury the anchor a fathom deep, and then, when they come to heave in up above, the cable 'll carry away, and I shouldn't wonder if you get ten or twenty fathom of it, whereas if you cut it like you're doing you'll not get more'n three feet.' So they asked Jack to show them how. 'It's as simple as kiss,' he says. 'Get spades.' So they got spades And then they buried the anchor seven or eight feet deep, with rocks and stuff on the top of it, till it was all covered over like it had a house on top So when they'd done that, Happy Jack thinks he'd earned a supper And the parson says, ' You must be thirsty after all that work ' ' I am thirsty,' he says So the parson takes him into the town, and gives him a bite of bread and shows him where there's a water-butt ' Nothing like water,' he says ' You're right there,' says Jack, ' there isn't ' And so Jack walks out of that town, and back to where the anchor was

" By and by he began to think that the people in the ship up above might be rather more generous So he slung his coat off, and began to shinny up the cable, and he climb a great piece , and at last he see the ship

" And never in his life had he seen a ship the like of that She was built like of white-hot gold, like a ship built out of the sun—a great shining ship Her bows was white and round, like a great white cloud, and the air went swirling past them in thin blue eddies Her ropes were shining, and her blocks were shining, and the sails on her yards were as white as a bow-wash She had her colours flying at her truck—a long golden streamer that seemed to be white-hot like the hull

" Now, as he comes up of the sea like, and gets his foot on the cable and his hand on a bobstay, one of the crowd of that ship 'ans over the rail and looks at him And he was a queer man, and that's God's truth about him He hadn't not so much as hair on his head, but instead of hair he had great golden flames No smoke, mind you, only flames And he was in a white dress, but the dress was all shining and fiery, and sparks were all over it, b'c he'd been splashed with them So Happy Jack kow-tows to this person, and he says, ' You'll have a foul hawse when you come to heave in They been burying your mud-hook,' he says So the fiery fellow says, ' Well, Happy Jack, suppose you clear the hawse' So Jack slides down the cable and he works all night long, and just as it comes dawn he gets all clear Then he shinnyes up and climbs aboard the ship again

" Now, as soon as he come aboard, the fiery fellows go to the capstan and began to sing, and the song they sang would draw the soul out of the body It was slow and sweet, and strong and spirited, all in one And it seemed to Happy Jack that the golden cable was singing too as it came in through the hawse-holes In a few moments the sails were loose and the ship was under way, and she was tearing through it at the rate of knots All Happy Jack could see was the sails straining, and the ship lying over to it, and the blue air ripping past, and now and then a comet, and a dancing star, and a cloud all red with the sun So the fiery fellow came up to him, and he says, ' You must be thirsty after all that work ' ' I am thirsty,' he says. So the fiery fellow takes him into the cabin—it was all pictures in the cabin, all blue and green—as pretty as you can't tink And he give Happy Jack a great golden apple and a bottle of golden wine And Happy Jack pour out the golden wine and drank it down like it was good for him “ And the next thing he knew he was lying by the side of the road half a mile from where he lived And he was in a new suit of clothes with shiny buttons—he was all brass-bound like a reefer. And in his hand there was a bag of golden dollars ”

THREE—FOUR—FIVE!

NOT a soul in Moulsey—that is, not a soul who knew them—could at first believe that the Chandlers and the Simpsons had quarrelled. That such close allies could seriously fall out seemed too incredible, and yet it was so. Why, the Simpsons and Chandlers had been more like one family than two families! The children had been brought up together—the girls sharing the expenses of a common boat on the river, the boys being inseparable, the mothers like sisters, the one father leaning on the other for support in every emergency of life. Young Tom Chandler was as good as engaged to Edith Simpson, and, of course, Charlie Simpson was meant for Susan Chandler. Had there been an unpleasantness at the bridge table? Throughout the winter they met at each other's houses for a friendly rubber—on Wednesday at the Chandlers', on Saturday at the Simpsons'. Had some terrible discovery as to the financial position of one family been made by the other? If so, which of them was in Queer Street? Had young Thomas made a row about Edith's behaviour at the Rowing Club ball? Were Susan's eyes opened to Charles's methods of spending his evenings occasionally. How had it happened? Why had the fast-drawn bonds of years and years been severed in a day, and who was to blame?

No one could answer these questions. No one came anywhere near the real solution of the mystery. This was the occasion of the irrevocable breach.

Mrs Simpson and Mrs Chandler were going up to town early one winter morning. Mrs Simpson was a well-preserved, solid matron. Her hair was beginning to turn grey, and there were signs that she might alarmingly increase in bulk before long, but she was still well-favoured and pleasant to look on, and must have been handsome in her day. Mrs Chandler had the advantage in years, and was still slim and wiry. Her black hair, if it, too, were turning to the autumnal grey, was not permitted to betray the circumstance. Her dark eyes were as keen and bright as ever they had been, and there were wonderfully few wrinkles about them—considering that she was the mother of grown-up sons and daughters.

They carried small hand-bags, and were dressed comfortably, but far from showily, in matrons' black. They could both be fine enough when finery was demanded—at afternoon parties or on church parade—but at present they were bound for the Metropolis, strictly on business.

There was a drawn look about their mouths, and a haggard, dry light in their eyes, which spoke of sleeplessness, or the fever of suppressed excitement. As a matter of fact, neither of them had slept well the night before. Tossing and turning on uneasy pillows, their brains throbbing with thoughts of the battle planned for the morrow, whenever a light slumber overcame them, they awakened with a start to a horrible idea that it was late in the morning and that they had missed the 7.30 train.

"No one was up when I came away," said Mrs. Chandler, when at last the train was moving. They had been a quarter of an hour too soon on the cold and almost empty platform, and had found a second-class compartment all to themselves. "I made a cup of tea, and snatched a bit of bread-and-butter. Quite enough!"

"I didn't trouble about the kettle," said Mrs. Simpson, "I saved some cold tea and a couple of oatmeal biscuits. I never can eat when I have a day like this before me."

"No. We can get a bun or a scone somewhere, if you should feel faint. I shall be all right till tea-time."

"If all goes well, we shall be there before the shutters are taken down. I shall go straight to the Indian silks and muslins. That's where the rush will be!"

"I must go to the crockery and glass first. I am bound to match our soup plates—the pale green ones, not the best—and pick up some odd numbers of champagne tumblers first. But I shall hurry after you. You might hold any short lengths that you know I should fancy till I can get to you."

"I will try, dear, but you know how frightfully rough they are. I have had pieces torn to shreds in my hand before now."

"I know. They threatened to have a policeman at each of the remnant counters, and I only wish they would. I had my bonnet knocked right over my eyes, just as I was stretching for the sweetest bit of brocade I ever saw—thirteen yards, at eleven and three, ridiculous!—and, when I could see again, the woman behind me had grabbed it. Oh, dear—oh, dear! I have lost my list. I must have left it on the hall table."

At the sight of her friend fumbling and clutching, with tremulous fingers, inside her Russia leather hand-bag, Mrs Simpson was seized with nervous apprehension, and began to clutch and fumble about her own reticule. It was all right! After turning the contents upside down and sideways without taking anything out, she enjoyed a long-drawn sigh of relief—she had found her pencilled catalogue of requirements.

After that, while the one lady endeavoured to recall the items on the lost leaflet, the other lady read, over and over again, from the paper in her hand, and, above the rattle of the train, nothing was heard from the two pairs of murmuring lips but—"primrose parchment for Emily—the name or initial if possible—wash-leathers if they really go cheap. As many dusters as I can find—chipped decanters—soiled table-linen. Some watered silk from the fire—smoked gloves and short-waisted —s"—and other such fragments. unintelligible to male understandings, yet gravid with meaning to all good-managing matrons.

In spite of a friendly warning, Mrs Simpson would get out of the train at Richmond before it was at rest at the platform, and very nearly sprained her ankle. They had to change across to the Metropolitan Railway here, and, in the foggy and yellow atmosphere, they met a number of other ladies, mostly dressed in black and all with hand-bags and haggard, eager eyes. They looked ghost-like and shadowy as they clustered in the fog round the wooden barrier, waiting for the ticket-collector to open the gate and let them through.

The two friends glanced at each other, and Mrs Simpson whispered ominously, "It will be a fight!"

Evidently the Thames Valley was mobilising strongly for this first day of the campaign. The great man had sent out his pink proclamation only a week ago, when would-be combatants far and wide were waiting anxiously and wondering what had delayed the expected summons. This was the sale of sales, the annual winter engagement, to which all other battles were as skirmishes or brushes. If you were not in your place when the battle-field opened, you had very little chance of distinguishing yourself. There were, of course, people who believed in the second day, and even the third day; who swore that the real pickings were only to be made after the first flight of vultures had been satisfied, who affirmed that the best things were never scrambled for till the rougher children had been got out of the way, and pointed triumphantly to glorious prizes snatched from the lucky-bag in the last hours of the last evening But the vast majority believed that "first come, first served" was truly and indeed the order of the sphinx-like and mysterious general, and that the best fighters carried home the heaviest spoil The fight was fierce enough, in all conscience, but the owners of the burning eyes had come out to fight, and already, with a sensation that was by no means unpleasant, they scented the battle afar, and meant to be in the very thick of it

It was, at any rate, very pleasant to be going into the fray with an old campaigner and a cherished and well-trying comrade, thought the two ladies, as they sat squeezed together in the narrow carriage How nice it would be coming back, side by side, when all was over ! How they would exchange notes on the return to-night, fortifying and backing up each other in moments of sudden and sickening fear that they had not, after all, come out of it too well !

The fog hung heavier and heavier, and now and then a fog-signal went off like a gun, suggesting the exchanges on the outside of the battle-field The train would be—was already—late—very late—atrociously and maddeningly late

Thousands of flaring gas-jets, and hundreds of electric lights—great, pallid moons and orange-coloured, glowing stars—were fighting with the fog in the vast emporium From all its halls and passages, broad staircases and extensive saloons, there rose an indescribable perfume of leather and carpets, aromatic woods and fabrics from Japan and the spicy East, acrid-smelling prints and chintzes, and the sour skins of furry animals, together with a heavy steam of hot coffee and newly-baked rolls from the spacious refreshment-room, and this mingled and indescribable perfume was, to the nostrils of the feminine crowds—surging about the counters in every department, thronging, like bees in a swarm or like the football teams of the suburbs in one united scrimmage, round those particular redoubts where the besieged assistants were known to be literally giving things away—as the breath of war to the proverbial war-horse

Mrs Simpson and her friend had been fighting for over an hour, and were both considerably flushed and dishevelled They had met in the Mantle and Fur department, and were pausing a moment to recover themselves

In this large and fog-impregnated retreat, with its iron and glass dome, its wire busts and wicker figures, its tall and stately serving-women, who wore rustling black silk dresses and pyramids of hair on their queen-like heads, its piles of fashionable fur boas, its mountains of jackets and cloaks, and its suspended and tempting mantles, they were sheltered from the fury of the battle that was waging on every side. In here one could appreciate the wonderful hum of voices, and estimate the immense numbers that formed the humming chorus, which sounded strong and ceaseless as the waves of an incoming ocean.

Neither required anything in the mantle line. They were only looking about them, thanks.

"Certainly, madam," said one of the black silk dresses. "This is very soft," she whispered confidentially. "I half think it has been marked down in mistake. At this figure it is considerably less than cost price. They are only from Paris a week ago. I don't think they were meant to be in the sale at all. Forward, please!"

The two old campaigners smiled at one another and sauntered on. It is possible that they were aware of how such managerial mistakes had often been made on previous occasions.

Suddenly Mrs. Simpson stopped, pointing with outstretched hand, as if she had seen a ghost. Following the direction of the pointing hand, Mrs. Chandler instantly saw what had startled her companion. It was a rich blue velvet opera-cloak, trimmed with ostrich and peacock feathers, and lavishly embroidered with jet bugles and beads, and the skirt.

"Three—four—five!" the elder lady exclaimed breathlessly, and they both advanced—"three—four—five! That must be a mistake, or it's dirt cheap!"

"Silk lined!" They were picking at it like birds, by now. "It's so good throughout! Cheap at ten guineas I would have said. Look at the velvet! And the feathers! Count the ostrich feathers. Such a bold mixture, but so tasteful. I never liked peacocks before!" and they walked round and round it, retiring several yards sometimes and then running in from opposite directions, and stooping over the trimming, until the crests of their bonnets jammed, and they had to get up and readjust them.

"Emily," said Mrs. Simpson, all at once, "if I had the money to spare, I'd have it. Three—four—five."

"Lousa! So would I. Only I can't—daren't do it. Three—four—five."

Just then a black silk dress bore down upon them, whisked the glorious thing off its wires, hung it about her own graceful shoulders, and sailed up and down in front of a very large woman with a red face and a false fringe. The two friends hung about, fascinated, spell-bound, vibrating in every nerve.

"They say peacock feathers are unlucky, but that's nonsense, of course. Do you think she will take it? You would buy it for Edith, I suppose?"

"No," said Mrs. Simpson, rather shortly, "for myself. But it is no good thinking about it. I mustn't."

"For yourself? Oh, I hardly think you would like it for yourself. This blue is rather trying for anybody who hasn't the misfortune to be thin, and it is cut so very spare," said Mrs. Chandler, giving the cloak a curious sort of tweak as the shop girl returned.

"Do you think so?" said the elder lady, doubtfully. "They can alter anything here, you know. But it is bright, very bright. No, you are right, I won't like it. Besides, I do believe peacock feathers are unlucky—even as few as those. No, it won't do. It would not suit me, even if I could afford it, which I can't."

The girl had replaced the cloak on the wired outline of feminine beauty and grace, and Mrs. Chandler was stooping over its lower folds. Only the back of her neck and her bonnet, still slightly on one side, could be seen as she spoke.

"In that case, if you have made up your mind against it, I really think, if you'll promise to back me up, I will make the plunge and buy it myself."

"I certainly will not back you up," said Mrs. Simpson, surprised into unbecoming loudness of voice, and the back of Mrs. Chandler's neck was suffused with a guilty blush.

"Why not?"

"Why not? Because if either of us buys it, I will buy it. I found it, and it is mine by right, if I want it. This is not like you, Emily. You try to put me off it, and frighten me simply because you want it for yourself. That is deceitful of you."

Of course Mrs. Chandler declared that deceit was, as ever, foreign to her nature. If her friend claimed her right and took it, so be it. If she felt that it would suit her, that with her splendid and luxuriant figure she could carry off the blueness and the spareness together, and face a Moulsey concert audience without any inward misgiving, it was not for Mrs. Chandler to oppose her, whatever the force of her own opinion But if she did not care to risk the purchase, then Mrs. Chandler would, That was fair enough

But Mrs Simpson was utterly unreasonable It was hers, as between the two, by right of finding, whether she choose to buy it or not. In any case her friend must not, should not, buy it And so the animated discussion went on, and the humming chorus all round waxed stronger and stronger in volume

"I call on you as a friend to leave it alone, Emily," the discoverer said at last "It would be too mean and too unlike you to cut me out in that way"

"Is not that the dog in the manger?" said Mrs Chandler, very heatedly "At any moment somebody may come in and snap it up before our faces—while you stand talking such nonsense It would suit me, and you would look odious in it"

"Your rudeness and unkindness push me over the brink, Emily," said Mrs Simpson, solemnly "I will buy it There shall be no dog in the manger about it Three—four—five"

Then Mrs Chandler changed her front She implored her friend to forget her thoughtless words She should not go over the brink It would not suit her one little bit, and she should not burden herself with a white elephant at three—four—five Neither of them would buy it, since neither of them could really afford it They would leave it there for the next happy discoverer who should come that way

But Mrs Simpson was now resolute to go over the brink, and required a lot of management before she consented to be led away from temptation—away from this soft and enervating shelter, back into the raging centre of the battle

"I could not have believed she would behave like that, or say such rude things I know I could carry it off all right!" thought Mrs. Simpson, as she snatched and pushed and elbowed in front of the piles of rainbow-tinted note-paper in the Stationery department

"Odious selfishness! It would just suit me That shopgirl and I were a perfect match in height and everything, and she looked splendid in it It would make Louisa look a simple tub—nothing else!" thought Mrs Chandler, very wrathfully, as, with snake-like undulations and rushes, she approached an immense glove tray

Ten minutes later a lady in black was hurrying down the staircase that leads from Ladies and Infants' Underlinen to Cloaks, Capes, and Furs, while another lady in black was advancing through the great door of Boots, Shoes, and Slippers towards the same point They met in the middle of the carpeted floor, one on each side of the blue velvet cloak. Like the two elders in the apocryphal story, they had parted company under some idle pretence, and, taking circuitous routes, had returned to the object of attraction and temptation.

"I came back just to have one more peep at it," said Mrs Simpson, in confusion. "If only to see whether it was gone yet."

"And I came because I knew you were not to be trusted, and to save you from folly," said Mrs Chandler, putting a bold face upon the doubtful situation.

"Three—four—five!" Mrs Simpson murmured to herself, as once more she permitted herself to be led away. "Dirt cheap! It is madness leaving it", and she showed signs of breaking away and returning.

"If it is madness to leave it, and it doesn't suit you, why not let me have it?" said Mrs Chandler, almost dragging her along. "Come—come—you are forgetting everything. Does Mr Simpson wear flannel next his skin? Because I have seen some——"

"Giving them away? Show me where they are."

Then the two ladies went on with the business that had brought them to London. They struggled and bought and carried away their purchases, for fear other strugglers should get possession of them out of the shop people's hands, from counter to counter, from department to department. But in all their struggles, amid the confused sea of bonnets, in the roar of the assembled voices—for, though nobody meant to raise her voice, the general effect was in certain departments an angry roar—they never felt their minds free from one thought. Neither of them would lose sight of the other again until they were both safe in the moving train.

They could not trust each other. You see, the friendship of years is a very real thing, and it is absurd to sneer at the feminine notion of honour, but there are limits to everything. The soldier who will succour and stay with his comrade beneath the hail of the enemy's bullets, will cheat him out of his share of the plunder of a hen-roost. There is no stauncher or more loyal friendship than that of two women of mature years, between whom no rivalry of love is ever likely to come. They will do practically anything in the world for each other, but, in the peculiar and inexplicable fever of a draper's winter sale, their limits are reached, and treachery is absolutely certain to be practised.

Nobody knew this better than Mrs Simpson and Mrs Chandler. Had there been no obvious cause for suspicion of each other, it would have naturally occurred to both to keep a watchful eye But now, after what had happened—the first discussion, the meeting, and the angry words—a close guard was indeed necessary.

It occurred to Mrs Simpson that if only Mrs Chandler would get entangled or held in some distant portion of the vast building, she could then safely leave her friend for a brief space, but the lady gave her no such chance of freedom Doubtless she, too, was angry at having to keep guard, and would also have been glad of a short relief

"I am only running up to the Drugs Don't trouble to come I will find you here when I come down," Mrs Simpson would say, when she fancied the opportunity had arrived

"One instant, and I will come too," and Mrs Chandler would clutch her by the arm or hand-bag "Does this match that, or that match this best?"

They met friends or acquaintances, of course, here and there, in the press of the throng, but a hurried nod sufficed for recognition and they would press and push, shoulder to shoulder, in the storming of some strongly-defended place, without exchanging a single word Sometimes, in smoking-rooms and other haunts of men, one hears dark insinuations as to the hours spent by ladies in shopping One hears veiled allusions to the convenience of the great metropolitan bazaars for frivolous appointments or the furtherance of reprehensible flirtations No one who had ever been at one of the great water sales would make such ridiculous suggestions, or hint that the fair sex there congregated were bent on anything but business In all the multitude of buyers there was never a male to be seen, except the perspiring shop-walkers (with the red rosettes), the tails of whose elegant frock-coats were in constant danger of being pulled off by the eager pluckings that claimed attention on every side

The afternoon was wearing on, the fog was creeping in like heavy smoke, the heat was tropical, and still the battle raged The two friends were hot and dusty, dishevelled as to headgear, and, like pack-horses, burdened with parcels Their indomitable courage still sustained them They were unconscious of bodily fatigue, though their legs nearly failed them, and their feet were burning They had eaten nothing since the morning—not even the suggested bun or scone—and yet felt no hunger, though they were yawning woefully from sheer emptiness They were fighting, shoulder to shoulder, in the mêlée among the odd lengths of Chinese cretonnes and Japanese muslins when the opportunity that Mrs Simpson had been looking for came

"Pardon me, I have already selected that," said Mrs. Chandler firmly to a lady who had taken possession of the other end of a long strip of flowery curtain

"No, that you didn't Let go, if you please, at once," said the lady with spirit

"Don't think of letting go," said one of the lady's friends "Where's the shop-walker?"

"Hold it! hold it!" cried Mrs Simpson. "I will run for the shop-walker This belongs to my friend, madam Let go at once!" and she darted away

Her keen eye had discovered an ally in the crowd, not two yards off It was a Mrs Rogers, a humble friend—almost a hanger-on—of the Simpson household While her companion was still struggling with the unknown foe over the highly desirable length of stuff so insolently attacked, Mrs Simpson got in touch with Mrs Rogers, opened her bag, gave her money, and, with surprising rapidity, instructed her

"Three—four—five, in large figures You can't mistake it Peacock's and ostrich's Go as fast as you can To be sent to my address Don't delay—like a good creature"

The ally hurried off, and Mrs Simpson pounced on a rosetted assistant and returned to her friend, to find the delicate Oriental fabric hanging in shreds and tatters in her hand, and the enemy vanished

The shop-walker made nothing of the incident (they always had a grand style at this famous house), twirled the stuff—a remnant indeed now—into a bundle, and threw it down behind the counter

"Don't mention it, my dear madam We are accustomed to considerable eagerness and occasional accidents Pass along, ladies! Pass along, if you please, ladies!" and he pointed over their heads to a great, staring proclamation of the proprietor—the mysterious and venerated general—warning non-combatants not to loiter on the field of action There was a light of triumph in Mrs Simpson's haggard eyes as they at last found seats in the tea-room, but Mrs Chandler did not notice it She was utterly worn out with the double duty of fighting for herself and guarding her friend, and had renounced all idea of getting away from her It was not till they rested their aching limbs on the cane chairs that they knew they were dead beat, and nearly fainting from hunger them homeward out of the fog and turmoil of the vast town—out into the purer air of the river valley. It had been a grand day, a memorable day, a never-to-be-forgotten battle, and, while the rhythmical rattle of the wheels seemed to be repeating, "Three—four—five, three—four—five, three—four—five," with the emphasis on the first number, Mrs Simpson told herself that she had triumphed.

Their temples throbbed, and the inside of their heads seemed to be opening and shutting with a bang every second, as the train bore

What was Mrs Chandler thinking about, and what did the rattle of the wheels appear to her to say, while she sat with closed eyes, pretending to sleep? Were the wheels whispering, "Three—four—five," to her also? If so, she never alluded to those tempting numbers in the few scraps of conversation that passed between the two worn-out comrades-in-arms

BUT, she went up to town next morning by the same 7 30 train, all by herself, without a word of explanation to anybody, and returned, before one o'clock, with a brown-paper parcel in her hand

Less than a week after this Mrs Simpson and Mrs Chandler both went to the evening performance of the Moulsey and Hampton Vagrant Histrions. Each hoped against hope, as she entered the hall, that the other would not be there. Each wore a blue velvet opera cloak with a collar of mixed ostrich and peacock feathers. They both flushed crimson, and then turned deadly pale as they met in the reserved seats, but they did not speak, though the two husbands talked across them with boisterous cordiality. They both understood, even in their first surprise, that each had been treacherous to the other, and realised that in all probability the supply of those rich blue cloaks at three—four—five would not fail until the demand for them ceased.

One would have thought no solution of the little difficulty as to who should possess the object of their admiration could have been happier. Each of them had got what each wanted, without robbing her old friend. But they did not see the matter in this light. Everybody noticed the coldness at the performance, and the open and complete breach—the absolute severance of every old tie, the irrevocable separation of the two entire families, who were compelled to obey their commanders—immediately followed. You see, neither Mrs Simpson nor Mrs Chandler could forget that her friend had tried to deceive her, that she had tried to deceive her friend, and that she had deceived herself.

OLIVER ONIONS

THE ROCKER

I

THERE was little need for the swart gipsies to explain, as they stood knee-deep in the snow round the bailiff of the Abbey Farm, what it was that had sent them. The unbroken whiteness of the uplands told that, and, even as they spoke, there came up the hill the dark figures of the farm men with shovels, on their way to dig out the sheep. In the summer the bailiff would have been the first to call the gipsies vagabonds and roost-robbers, now they had women with them too.

"The hares and foxes were down four days ago, and the liquid-manure pumps like a snow man," the bailiff said. "Yes, you can lie in the laithes and welcome—if you can find 'em. Maybe you'll help us find our sheep too——"

The gipsies had done so. Coming back again, they had had some ado to discover the spot where their three caravans made a hummock of white against a broken wall.

The women—they had four women with them—began that afternoon to weave the mats and baskets they hawked from door to door, and in the forenoon of the following day one of them, the black-haired, soft-voiced queen whom the bailiff had heard called Annabel, set her babe in the sling on her back, tucked a bundle of long cane-loops under her oxters, and trudged down between eight-foot walls of snow to the Abbey Farm. She stood in the latticed porch, dark and handsome against the whiteness, and then, advancing, put her head into the great hall-kitchen.

"Has the lady any chairs for the gipsy woman to mend?" she asked in a soft and insinuating voice.

They brought her the old chairs, she seated herself on a box in the porch, and there she wove the strips of cane in and out, securing each one with a little wooden peg and a tap of her hammer. The child remained in the sling at her back, taking the breast from time to time over her shoulder, and the silver wedding ring could be seen as she whipped the cane back and forth.

As she worked she cast curious glances into the old hall-kitchen. The snow outside cast a pallid, upward light on the heavy ceiling-beams, this was reflected in the polished stone floor, and the children, who at first had shyly stopped their play, seeing the strange woman in the porch—the nearest thing they had seen to gipsies before had been the old itinerant glazier with his frame of glass on his back—resumed it, but still eyed her from time to time. In the ancient walnut chair by the hearth sat the old, old lady who had told them to bring the chairs. Her hair, almost as white as the snow itself, was piled up on her head à la Marquise, she was knitting, but now and then she allowed the needle in the little wooden sheath at her waist to lie idle, closed her eyes, and rocked softly in the old walnut chair.

"Ask the woman who is mending the chairs whether she is warm enough there," the old lady said to one of the children, and the child went to the porch with the message.

"Thank you, little missie—thank you, lady dear—Annabel is quite warm," said the soft voice, and the child returned to the play.

It was a childish game of funerals at which the children played. The hand of Death, hovering over the dolls, had singled out Flora, the articulations of whose sawdust body were seams and whose boots were painted on her calves of fibrous plaster. For the greater solemnity the children had made themselves sweeping trains of the garments of their elders, and those with cropped curls had draped their heads with shawls, the fringes of which they had combed out with their fingers to simulate hair—long hair, such as Sabrina, the eldest, had hanging so low down her back that she could almost sit on it. A cylindrical-bodied horse, convertible (when his flat head came out of its socket) into a locomotive, headed the sad cortège, then came the defunct Flora, then came Jack, the raffish sailor doll, with other dolls, and the children followed with hushed whisperings.

The youngest of the children passed the high-backed walnut chair in which the old lady sat. She stopped.

"Aunt Rachel—" she whispered, slowly and gravely opening very wide and closing very tight her eyes.

"Yes, dear?"

"Flora's dead!"

The old lady, when she smiled, did so less with her lips than with her faded cheeks. So sweet was her face that you could not help wondering, when you looked on it, how many men had also looked upon it and loved it    Somehow, you never wondered how many of them had been loved in return

" I'm so sorry, dear," Aunt Rachel, who in reality was a great-aunt, said    " What did she die of this time ? "

" She died of        Brown Titus        'n now she's going to be buried in a grave as little as her bed "

" In a what, dear ? "

" As little        dread    . . as little as my bed . . . you say it, Sabrina "

" She means, Aunt Rachel,

Teach me to live that I may dread
The Grave as little as my bed,"

Sabrina, the eldest, interpreted.

" Ah !        But won't you play at cheerful things, dears ? "

" Yes, we will, presently, Aunt Rachel , gee up, horse !        Shall we go and ask the chair-woman if she's warm enough ? "

" Do, dears "

Again the message was taken, and this time it seemed as if Annabel, the gipsy, was not warm enough, for she gathered up her loops of cane and brought the chair she was mending a little way into the hall-kitchen itself    She sat down on the square box they used to cover the sewing-machine    " Thank you, lady dear," she murmured, lifting her handsome almond eyes to Aunt Rachel    Aunt Rachel did not see the long, furtive, curious glance    Her own eyes were closed, as if she was tired , her cheeks were smiling , one of them had dropped a little to one shoulder, as it might have dropped had she held in her arms a babe , and she was rocking, softly, slowly, the rocker of the chair making a little regular noise on the polished floor

The gipsy woman beckoned to one of the children

" Tell the lady, when she wakes, that I will tack a strip of felt to the rocker, and then it will make no noise at all," said the low and wheedling voice , and the child retired again

The interment of Flora proceeded

An hour later Flora had taken up the burden of Life again    It was as Angela, the youngest, was chastising her for some offence, that Sabrina, the eldest, looked with wondering eyes on the babe in the gipsy's sling.    She approached on tiptoe

" May I look at it, please ? " she asked timidly

The gipsy set one shoulder forward, and Sabrina put the shawl gently aside, peering at the dusky brown morsel within

"Sometime, perhaps—if I'm very careful—" Sabrina ventured diffidently, "— if I'm very careful—may I hold it ? "

Before replying, the gipsy once more turned her almond eyes towards Aunt Rachel's chair. Aunt Rachel had been awakened for the conclusion of Flora's funeral, but her eyes were closed again now, and once more her cheek was dropped in that tender suggestive little gesture, and she rocked. But you could see that she was not properly asleep.

It was, somehow, less to Sabrina, still peering at the babe in the sling, than to Aunt Rachel, apparently asleep, that the gipsy seemed to reply

"You'll know some day, little missie, that a wean knows its own pair of arms," her seductive voice came

And Aunt Rachel heard. She opened her eyes with a start. The little regular noise of the rocker ceased. She turned her head quickly, tremulously she began to knit again, and, as her eyes rested on the sidelong eyes of the gipsy woman, there was an expression in them that almost resembled fright.

II

They began to deck the great hall-kitchen for Christmas, but the snow still lay thick over hill and valley, and the gipsies' caravans remained by the broken wall where the drifts had overtaken them. Though all the chairs were mended, Annabel still came daily to the farm, sat on the box they used to cover the sewing machine, and wove mats. As she wove them, Aunt Rachel knitted, and from time to time fragments of talk passed between the two women. It was always the white-haired lady who spoke first, and Annabel made all sorts of salutes and obeisances with her eyes before replying.

"I have not seen your husband," Aunt Rachel said to Annabel one day. (The children at the other end of the apartment had converted a chest into an altar, and were solemnising the nuptials of the resurrected Flora and Jack, the raffish sailor-doll.)

Annabel made roving play with her eyes. "He is up at the caravans, lady dear," she replied. "Is there anything Annabel can bid him do ? "

"Nothing, thank you," said Aunt Rachel.

For a minute the gipsy watched Aunt Rachel, and then she got up from the sewing-machine box and crossed the floor. She leaned so close towards her that she had to put up a hand to steady the babe at her back.

"Lady dear," she murmured with irresistible softness, "your husband died, didn't he?"

On Aunt Rachel's finger was a ring, but it was not a wedding ring. It was a hoop of pearls

"I have never had a husband," she said

The gipsy glanced at the ring "Then that is——?"

"That is a betrothal ring," Aunt Rachel replied.

"Ah!" said Annabel

Then, after a minute, she drew still closer Her eyes were fixed on Aunt Rachel's, and the insinuating voice was very low

"Ah! And did it die too, lady dear?"

Again came that quick, half-affrighted look into Aunt Rachel's face Her eyes avoided those of the gipsy, sought them, and avoided them again

"Did what die?" she asked slowly and guardedly

The child at the gipsy's back did not need suck, nevertheless, Annabel's fingers worked at her bosom and she moved the sling As the child settled, Annabel gave Aunt Rachel a long look

"Why do you rock?" she asked slowly

Aunt Rachel was trembling She did not reply In a voice soft as sliding water the gipsy continued

"Lady dear, we are a strange folk to you, and even among us there are those who shuffle the pack of cards and read the palm when silver has been put upon it, knowing nothing But some of us see—some of us see"

It was more than a minute before Aunt Rachel spoke

"You are a woman, and you have your babe at your breast now . . . Every woman sees the thing you speak of"

But the gipsy shook her head "You speak of seeing with the heart I speak of eyes—these eyes"

Again came a long pause Aunt Rachel had given a little start, but had become quiet again When at last she spoke it was in a voice scarcely audible

"That cannot be I know what you mean, but it cannot be He died on the eve of his wedding For my bridal clothes they made me black garments instead It is long ago, and now I wear neither black nor white, but——" her hands made a gesture. Aunt Rachel always dressed as if to suit a sorrow that Time had deprived of bitterness, in such a tender and fleecy grey as one sees in the mists that lie like lawn over hedgerow and copse early of a midsummer's morning

"Therefore," she resumed, "your heart may see, but your eyes cannot see that which never was."

But there came a sudden note of masterfulness into the gipsy's voice

"With my eyes—these eyes," she repeated, pointing to them

Aunt Rachel kept her own eyes obstinately on her knitting needles.

"None except I have seen it. It is not to be seen," she said.

The gipsy sat suddenly erect

"It is not so. Keep still in your chair," she ordered, "and I will tell you when——"

It was a curious thing that followed. As if all the will went out of her, Aunt Rachel sat very still, and presently her hands fluttered and dropped. The gipsy sat with her own hands folded over the mat on her knees. Several minutes passed, then, slowly, once more that sweetest of smiles stole over Aunt Rachel's cheeks. Once more her head dropped. Her hands moved. Noiselessly on the rockers that the gipsy had padded with felt the chair began to rock. Annabel lifted one hand

"Dovo se li," she said. "It is there."

Aunt Rachel did not appear to hear her. With that ineffable smile still on her face, she rocked.

Then, after some minutes, there crossed her face such a look as visits the face of one who, waking from sleep, strains his faculties to recapture some blissful and vanishing vision. . .

"Jal—it is gone," said the gipsy woman.

Aunt Rachel opened her eyes again. She repeated dully after Annabel

"It is gone."

"Ghosts," the gipsy whispered presently, "are of the dead. Therefore it must have lived."

But again Aunt Rachel shook her head. "It never lived."

"You were young and beautiful?"

Still the shake of the head. "He died on the eve of his wedding. They took my white garments away and gave me black ones. How then could it have lived?"

"Without the kiss, no. But sometimes a woman will lie through her life, and at the graveside still will lie. Tell me the truth."

But they were the same words that Aunt Rachel repeated. "He died on the eve of his wedding, they took away my wedding garments." From her lips a lie could hardly issue. The gipsy's face became grave. . . .

She broke another long silence.

"I believe," she said at last "It is a new kind—but no more wonderful than the other The other I have seen, now I have seen this also Tell me, does it come to any other chair?"

"It was his chair, he died in it," said Aunt Rachel.

"And you—shall you die in it?"

"As God wills"

"Has . . . other life . . . visited it long?"

"Many years, but it is always small, it never grows"

"To their mothers babes never grow They remain ever babes . . . None other has ever seen it?"

"Except yourself, none I sit here, presently it creeps into my arms, it is small and warm, I rock, and then . . . it goes"

"Would it come to another chair?"

"I cannot tell I think not It was his chair"

Annabel mused At the other end of the room Flora was now bestowed on Jack, the disreputable sailor The gipsy's eyes rested on the bridal party

"Yet another might see it . . ."

"None has"

"No, but yet The door does not always shut behind us suddenly Perhaps one who has toddled but a step or two over the threshold might, by looking back, catch a glimpse What is the name of the smallest one?"

"Angela"

"That means 'angel' . . . Look, the doll who died yesterday is now being married. It may be that Life has not yet sealed the little one's eyes Will you let Annabel ask her if she sees what it is you hold in your arms?"

Again the voice was soft and wheedling . . .

"No, Annabel," said Aunt Rachel faintly.

"Will you rock again?"

Aunt Rachel made no reply

"Rock . . ." urged the cajoling voice.

But Aunt Rachel only turned the betrothal ring on her finger Over at the altar Jack was leering at his new-made bride, past decency, and little Angela held the wooden horse's head, which had parted from its body

"Rock, and comfort yourself . . ." tempted the voice

Then slowly Aunt Rachel rose from her chair

"No, Annabel," she said gently "You should not have spoken. When the snow melts you will go, and come no more, why then did you speak? It was mine. It was not meant to be seen by another, I no longer want it Please go"

The swarthy woman turned her almond eyes on her once more

"You cannot live without it," she said as she also rose.

And as Jack and his bride left the church on the reheaded horse, Aunt Rachel walked with hanging head from the apartment

III

Thenceforward, as day followed day, Aunt Rachel rocked no more; and with the packing and partial melting of the snow the gipsies up at the caravans judged it time to be off about their business. It was on the morning of Christmas Eve that they came down in a body to the Abbey Farm to express their thanks to those who had befriended them, but the bailiff was not there. He and the farm men had ceased work, and were down at the church, practising the carols. Only Aunt Rachel sat, still and knitting, in the black walnut chair, and the children played on the floor.

A night in the toy-box had apparently bred discontent between Jack and Flora—or perhaps they sought to keep their countenances before the world, at any rate, they sat on opposite sides of the room, Jack keeping boon company with the lead soldiers, his spouse reposing, her lead-balanced eyes closed, in the broken clockwork motor-car. With the air of performing some vaguely momentous ritual, the children were kissing one another beneath the bunch of mistletoe that hung from the centre beam. In the intervals of kissing they told one another in whispers that Aunt Rachel was not very well, and Angela woke Flora to tell her that Aunt Rachel had Brown Titus also.

"Stay you here, I will give the lady dear our thanks," said Annabel to the group of gipsies gathered about the porch, and she entered the great hall-kitchen. She approached the chair in which Aunt Rachel sat.

There was obeisance in the bend of her body, but command in her long almond eyes, as she spoke.

"Lady dear, you must rock or you cannot live."

Aunt Rachel did not look up from her work.

"Rocking, I should not live long," she replied.

"We are leaving you."

" All leave me "

" Annabel fears she has taken away your comfort "

" Only for a little while The door closes behind us, but it opens again "

" But for that little time, rock——"

Aunt Rachel shook her head

" No It is finished Another has seen Say good-bye to your companions , they are very welcome to what they have had , and God speed you "

" They thank you, lady dear Will you not forget that Annabel saw, and rock ? "

" No more "

Annabel stooped and kissed the hand that bore the betrothal hoop of pearls The other hand Aunt Rachel placed for a moment upon the smoky head of the babe in the sling It trembled as it rested there, but the tremor passed, and Annabel, turning once at the porch, gave her a last look Then she departed with her companions

That afternoon Jack and Flora had shaken down to wedlock as married folk should, and sat together before the board spread with the dolls' tea-things The pallid light in the great hall-kitchen faded , the candles were lighted , and then the children, first borrowing the stockings of their elders to hang at the bed's foot, were packed off early—for it was the custom to bring them down again at midnight for the carols Aunt Rachel had their good-night kisses, not as she had them every night, but with the special ceremony of the mistletoe

Other folk, grown folk, sat with Aunt Rachel that evening , but the old walnut chair did not move upon its rockers There was merry talk, but Aunt Rachel took no part in it The board was spread with ale and cheese and spiced loaf for the carol-singers , and the time drew near for their coming

When at midnight, faintly on the air from the church below, there came the chiming of Christmas morning, all bestirred themselves

" They'll be here in a few minutes," they said , " somebody go and bring the children down " , and within a very little while subdued noises were heard outside, and the lifting of the latch of the yard gate The children were in their nightgowns, hardly fully awake , a low voice outside was heard giving orders , and then there arose on the night the carol

" Hush ! " they said to the wondering children , " listen ! . . "

It was the Cherry Tree Carol that rose outside, of how sweet Mary, the Queen of Galilee, besought Joseph to pluck the cherries for her Babe, and Joseph refused, and the voices of the singers, that had begun hesitatingly, grew strong and loud and free.

"and Joseph wouldn't pluck the cherries," somebody was whispering to the tiny Angela

Mary said to Cherry Tree,
"Bow down to my knee,
That I may pluck cherries
For my Babe and me,"

the carollers sang, and "Now listen, darling," the one who held Angela murmured

The uppermost spray then Bowed down to her knee,
"Thus you may see, Joseph,
These cherries are for me"

"O, eat your cherries, Mary,
Give them your Babe now,
O, eat your cherries, Mary,
That grew upon the bough"

The little Angela, within the arms that held her, murmured, "It's the gipsies, isn't it, mother?"

"No, darling The gipsies have gone It's the carol-singers, singing because Jesus was born"

"But, mother it is the gipsies, isn't it? . 'Cos look ."

"Look where?"

"At Aunt Rachel, mother The gipsy woman wouldn't go without her little baby, would she?"

"No, she wouldn't do that"

"Then has she lent it to Aunt Rachel, like I lend my new toys sometimes?"

The mother glanced across at Aunt Rachel, and then gathered the nightgowned figure more closely.

"The darling's only half awake," she murmured. . . . "Poor Aunt Rachel's sleepy too"

Aunt Rachel, her head dropped, her hands lightly folded as if about some shape that none saw but herself, her face again ineffable with that sweet and peaceful smile, was once more rocking softly in her chair.

PERCEVAL GIBBON

B 1879

THE KING OF THE BABOONS

THE old yellow-fanged dog-baboon that was chained to a post in the yard had a dangerous trick of throwing stones. He would seize a piece of rock in two hands, stand erect and whirl round on his heels till momentum was obtained, and then—let go. The missile would fly like a bullet, and woe betide any one who stood in its way. The performance precluded any kind of aim, the stone was hurled off at any chance tangent and it was bad luck rather than any kind of malice that guided one three-pound boulder through the window, across the kitchen, and into a portrait of Judas de Beer which hung on the wall not half-a-dozen feet from the slumbering Vrouw Grobelaar.

She bounced from her chair and ballooned to the door with a silent swift agility most surprising to see in a lady of her generous build, and not a sound did she utter. She was of good veld-bred fighting stock, which never cried out till it was hurt, and there was even something of compassion in her face as Frikkie jumped from the stoep with a twelve-foot thong in his hand. It was, after all, the baboon that suffered most, if his yells were any index to his feelings. Frikkie could smudge a fly ten feet off with just a flick of his whip, and all the tender parts of the accomplished animal came in for ruthless attention.

"He ought to be shot," was Frikkie's remark as he curled up the thong at the end of the discipline. "A baboon is past teaching if he has bad habits. He is more like a man than a beast."

The Vrouw Grobelaar seated herself in the stoep chair which by common consent was reserved for her use, and shook her head.

"Baboons are uncanny things," she answered slowly. "When you shoot them, you can never be quite sure how much murder there is in it. The old story is that some of them have souls and some not and it is quite certain that they can talk when they will. You have heard them crying in the night sometimes. Well, you ask a Kafir what that means. Ask an old wise Kafir, not a young one that has forgotten the wisdom of the black people and learned the foolishness only of the white."

"What does it mean, tante?" It was I that put the question Katje, too, seemed curious

The old lady eyed me gloomily

"If you were a landed Boer instead of a kind of schoolmaster," she replied witheringly, "you would not need to ask such a question But I will tell you A baboon may be wicked—look at that one showing his teeth and cursing—but he is not blind nor a fool He runs about on the hills, and steals and fights and scratches, and all the time he has all the knowledge and twice the strength of a man, if it were not for the tail behind him and the hair on his body So it is natural that sometimes he should be grieved to be such a mean thing as a baboon when he could be a useful kind of man if the men would let him And at nights, particularly, when their troop is in laager and the young ones are on watch among the high rocks, it comes home to the best of them, and they sob and weep like young widows, pretending that they have pains inside so that the others shall not feel offended and turn on them Any one may hear them in the kloofs on a windless night, and, I can tell you, the sound of their sorrow is pitiful "

Katje threw out a suggestion to console them with buckshot, and the Vrouw Grobelaar nodded with meaning

"To hate baboons is well enough in the wife of a Burgher," she said sweetly "I am glad to see there is so much fitness and wifehood about you, since you will naturally spend all your life on farms

Katje's flush was a distress signal First blood to the Vrouw

"Baboons," continued the old lady, "are among a farmer's worst enemies They steal and destroy and menace all the year round, but for all that there are many farmers who will not shoot or trap them And these, you will notice, are always farmers of a ripe age and sense-shaped by experience They know, you may be sure My step-sister's first husband, Shadrach van Guelder, shot at baboons once, and was so frightened afterwards that he was afraid to be alone in the dark."

There was a story toward, and now one moved

"There were many Kafirs on his farm, which you have not seen," pursued the Vrouw Grobelaar, adjusting her voice to narrative pitch "It was on the fringe of the Drakensberg, and many spurs of hill, divided by deep kloofs like gashes, descended on to it So plenty of water came down, and the cattle were held from straying by the rocks, on one side at any rate The Kafirs had their kraals dotted all about the land, and as they were of the kind that works, my step-sister's husband suffered them to remain and grow their little patches of mealies, while they worked for him in between. He was, of course, a cattle Boer, as all of our family have always been, but here were so many Kafirs to be had for nothing, that he soon commenced to plough great spaces of land and sow valuable crops. There was every prospect that he would make very much money out of that farm, for corn always sells, even when cattle are going for only seven pounds a-piece, and Shadrach van Guelder was very cheerful about it.

"But when a farmer weighs an ungrown crop, you will always find that there is something or other he does not take into account. He tells off the weather and the land and the Kafirs and the water on his fingers, and forgets to bend down his thumb to represent God—or something. Shadrach van Guelder lifted up his eyes to the hills from whence came the water, but it was not until the green corn was six inches high that he saw that there came with it baboons. Armies and republics of them, more baboons than he had thought to exist,—they swooped down on his sprouting lands and roted, ate and rooted, trampled and wantoned, with that kind of bouncing devilishness that not even a Kafir can correctly imitate. In one night they undid all his work on five sown morgen of fat land, and with the first wink of the sun in the east they were back again in their kopjes, leaving devastation and foulness wherever they passed.

"It was my step-sister's husband that stood on one leg and cursed like a Jew. He was wrathful as a Hollander that has been drinking water, and what did not help to make him content was the fact that hardly anything would avail to protect his lands. Once the baboons had tasted the sweetness of the young corn they would come again and again, camping in the kloofs overhead as long as anything remained for them, like a deaf guest. But for all that, he had no notion of leaving them to plunder at their ease. The least one can do with an unwelcome visitor is to make him uncomfortable, and he sent to certain kraals on the farm for two old Kafirs he had remarked who had the appearance of cunning old men.

"They came and squatted before him, squirming and shuffling, as Kafirs do when a white man talks to them. One was quite a common kind of Kafir, gone a little grey with age, a tuft of white wool on his chin, and little patches of it here and there on his head. But the other was a small twisted yellow man, with no hair at all, and eyes like little blots of fire on a charred stick, and his arms were so long and gnarled and lean that he had a bestial look, like a laborious animal 'The baboons have killed the crop on the lower lands,' said Shadrach, smacking his leg with his sjambok 'If they are not checked, they will destroy all the corn on this farm What is the way to go about it?'

"The little yellow man was biting his lips and turning a straw in his hands, and gave no answer, but the other spoke

" 'I am from Shangaanland,' he said, 'and there, when the baboons plague us, we have a way with them, a good way'

"He sneered sideways at his yellow companion as he spoke, and the look which the latter returned to him was a thing to shrink from.

" 'What is this way?' demanded Shadrach.

" 'You must trap a baboon,' explained the old Kafir 'A leading baboon for choice, who has a lot to say in the government of the troop And then you must skin him, and let him go again The others will travel miles and miles as soon as they see him, and never come back again'

" 'It makes me sick to think of it,' said Shadrach 'Surely you know some other way of scaring them?'

"The old Kafir shook his head slowly, but the yellow man ceased to smile and play with the straw and spoke

" 'I do not believe in that way, baas A Shangaan baboon'—he grinned at his companion—'is more easily frightened than those of the Drakensberg I am of the bushmen, and I know If you trap one of those up yonder, the others will make war, and where one came before, ten will come every night A baboon is not a fat lazy Kafir, one must be careful with him'

" 'How would you drive them away, then?' asked Shadrach

"The yellow man shuffled his hands in the dust, squatting on his heels There! There! See, the baboon in the yard is doing the very same thing

" 'If I were the baas,' said the yellow man, 'I would turn out the young men to walk round the fields at night, with buckets to hit with sticks, and make a noise And I—well, I am of the bushmen —' he scratched himself and smiled emptily.

" 'Yes, yes?' demanded Shadrach. He knew the wonderful ways of the bushmen with some animals

" 'I do not know if anything can be done,' said the yellow man, "but if the baas is willing I can go up to the rocks and try'

" 'How?'

"But he could tell nothing. None of these wizards that have charms to subdue the beasts can tell you anything about it. A Hottentot will smell the air and say what cattle are near, but if you bid him tell you how he does it, he giggles like a fool and is ashamed.

" 'I do not know if anything can be done,' the yellow man repeated. 'I cannot promise the baas, but I can try.'

" 'Well, try then,' ordered Shadrach, and went away to make the necessary arrangements to have the young Kafirs in the fields that night.

" They did as he bade, and the noise was loathsome,—enough to frighten anything with an ear in its head. The Kafirs did not relish the watch in the dark at first, but when they found that their work was only to thump buckets and howl, they came to do it with zest, and roared and banged till you would have thought a judgment must descend on them. The baboons heard it, sure enough, and came down after a while to see what was going on. They sat on their rumps outside the circle of Kafirs, as quiet as people in a church, and watched the niggers drumming and capering as though it were a show for their amusement. Then they went back, leaving the crops untouched, but pulling all the huts in one kraal to pieces as they passed. It was the kraal of the old white-tufted Shangaan, as Shadrach learned afterwards.

" Shadrach was pleased that the row had saved his corn, and next day he gave the twisted yellow man a lump of tobacco. The man tucked it into his cheek and smiled, wrinkling his nose and looking at the ground.

" 'Did you get speech of the baboons last night among the rocks?' Shadrach asked.

'The other shook his head, grinning. 'I am old,' he said. 'They pay no attention to me, but I will try again. Perhaps, before long, they will listen.'

" 'When they do that,' said Shadrach, 'you shall have five pounds of tobacco and five bottles of dop.'

" The man was squatting on his heels all this time at Shadrach's feet, and his hard fingers, like claws, were picking at the ground. Now he put out a hand, and began fingering the laces of the farmer's shoes with a quick fluttering movement that Shadrach saw with a spasm of terror. It was so exactly the trick of a baboon, so entirely a thing animal and unhuman.

" 'You are more than half a baboon yourself,' he said. 'Let go of my leg! Let go, I say! Curse you, get away—get away from me!'

"The creature had caught his ankle with both hands, the fingers, hard and shovel-ended, pressing into his flesh

" 'Let go!' he cried, and struck at the man with his sjambok

"The man bounded on all fours to evade the blow, but it took him in the flank, and he was human—or Kafir—again in a moment, and rubbed himself and whimpered quite naturally

" 'Let me see no more of your baboon tricks,' stormed Shadrach, the more angry because he had been frightened 'Keep them for your friends among the rocks And now be off to your kraal'

"That night again the Kafirs drummed all about the green corn, and sang in chorus the song which the mountain-Kafirs sing when the new moon shows like a paring from a finger-nail of gold It is a long and very loud song, with stamping of feet every minute, and again the baboons came down to see and listen The Kafirs saw them, many hundreds of humped black shapes, and sang the louder, while the crowd of beasts grew ever denser as fresh parties came down and joined it It was opposite the rocks on which they sat that the singing-men collected, roaring their long verses and clattering on the buckets, doubtless not without some intention to jeer at and flout the baffled baboons, who watched them in such a silence It was drooping now to the pit of night, and things were barely seen as shapes, when from higher up the line, where the guardians of the crops were posted, there came a discord of shrieks

" 'The baboons are through the line,' they cried, and it was on that instant that the great watching army of apes came leaping in a charge on the main force of the Kafirs Oh, but that was a wild, a haunting thing! Great bull-headed dog baboons, with naked fangs and clutching hands alert for murder, bounding mothers of squealing litters that led their young in a dash to the fight, terrible lean old bitches that made for the men when others went for the corn,—they swooped like a flood of horror on the aghast Kafirs, biting, tearing, bounding through the air like uncouth birds, and in one second the throng of the Kafirs melted before them, and they were among the corn

"Eight men they killed by rending, and of the others, some sixty, there was not one but had his wound—some bite to the bone, some gash, where iron fingers had clutched and torn their way through skin and flesh When they came to Shadrach, and woke him warily with the breathless timidity of beaten men, it was already too late to go with a gun to the cornlands The baboons had contented themselves with small plunder after their victory, and withdrew orderly to the hills, and even as Shadrach came to the door of the homestead he saw the last of their marshalled line, black against the sky, moving swiftly towards the kloofs

"He flung out his hands like a man in despair, with never a word to ease his heart, and then the old Shangaan Kafir stood up before him. He had the upper part of his right arm bitten to the bone and worried, and now he cast back the blanket from his shoulder and held out the quivering wound to his master

"'It was the chief of the baboons that gave me this,' he said, 'and he is a baboon only in the night. He came through the ranks of them bounding like a boulder on a steep hillside, and it was for me that his teeth were bared. So when he hung by his teeth to my arm and tore and snarled, I drew my nails across his back, that the baas should know the truth'

"'What is this madness?' cried Shadrach

"'No madness, but simple devilry,' answered the Shangaan, and there came a murmur of support from the Kafirs about him. 'The leader of the baboons is Naqua, and it was he who taught them the trick they played us to-night'

"'Naqua?' repeated Shadrach, feeling cold and weak

"'The bushman,' explained the old man. 'The yellow man with the long lean arms who gave false counsel to the baas'

"'It is true,' came the chorus of the Kafirs. 'It is true, we saw it'

"Shadrach pulled himself together and raised a hand to the lintel of the door to steady himself

"'Fetch me Naqua!' he ordered, and a pair of them went upon that errand. But they came back empty. Naqua was not at his hut, and none had news of him

"Shadrach dismissed the Kafirs to patch their wounds, and at sun-up he went down to the lands where the eight dead Kafirs still lay among the corn, to see what traces remained of the night's work. He had hoped to find a clue in the tracks, but the feet of the Kafirs and the baboons were so mingled that the ground was dumb, and on the grass of the baboons' return there remained, of course, no sign. He was no fool, my step-sister's first husband, and since a wild and belly-quaking tale was the only one that offered, he was not ready to cast it aside till a better one were found. At any rate it was against Naqua that his preparations were directed.

"He had seven guns in his house for which ammunition could be found, and from among all the Kafirs on the land he chose a half-dozen Zulus, who, as you know, will always rather fight than eat. These were only too ready to face the baboons again, since they were to have guns in their hands, and a kind of ambush was devised. They were to lie among the corn so as to command the flank of the beasts, and Shadrach was to lie in the middle of them, and would give the signal when to commence firing by a shot from his own rifle. There was built, too, a pile of brushwood lying on straw soaked in oil, and this one of them was to put a light to as soon as the shooting began. It was dark when they took their places, and then commenced a long and anxious watch among the corn, when every bush that creaked was an alarm and every small beast of the veld that squealed set hearts to thumping. From where he lay on his stomach, with his rifle before him, Shadrach could see the line of ridge of rocks over which the baboons must come, dark against a sky only just less dark, and with his eyes fixed on this he waited. Afterwards he said that it was not the baboons he waited for, but the yellow man, Naqua, and he had in his head an idea that all the evil and pain that ever was, and all the sin to be, had a home in that bushman. So a man hates an enemy.

"They came at last. Five of them were suddenly seen on the top of the rocks, standing erect and peering round for a trap. But Shadrach and his men lay very still, and soon one of these scouts gave a call, and then was heard the pat! pat! of hard feet as the body of them came up. There was not light enough to tell one from another, except by size, and as they trooped down among the corn Shadrach lay with his finger throbbing on his trigger, peering among them. But he could see nothing except the mass of their bodies, and waiting till the main part of them was past him, so that he could have a shot at them as they came back, should it happen that they retired at once, he thrust forward his rifle, aimed into the brown, and fired.

"Almost in the same instant the rifles of the Zulus spoke, and a crackle of shots ran up and down their line. Then there was a flare of light as the bonfire was lit, and they could see the army of baboons in a fuss of panic dashing to and fro. They fired again and again into the tangle of them, and the beasts commenced to scatter and flee, and Shadrach and his men rose to their full height and shot faster, and the hairy army vanished into the darkness, defeated.

"There was a guffaw of laughter from the Zulus, but ere it was finished a shout from Shadrach brought their rifles leaping up again. The baboons were coming back,—a line of them was breaking from the darkness beyond the range of the fire, racing in great leaps towards the men. As they came into the light they were a sight to terrify a host, all big tusked, and charging without a sound. Shadrach, aiming by instinct only, dropped two as they came, and the next instant they were upon him. He heard the grunt of the Zulu next him as a huge beast leaped against his chest and bore him down, and there were screams from another. Then something heavy and swift drove at him like a bullet and he clubbed his rifle. As the beast flew, with hands and feet drawn in for the grapple, he hewed at it with the butt and smashed it to the ground. The stock struck on bone, and he felt it crush and fail, and there was the thing at his feet.

"How they broke the charge, with what a frenzy of battle they drove the baboons from them, none of the four who spoke again could ever tell. But it must have been very soon after Shadrach clubbed his rifle that the beasts wavered, were beaten, and fled screaming, and the farmer found himself leaning on his weapon and a great Zulu, shining with sweat, talking to him. 'Never have I had such a fight,' the Zulu was saying, 'and never may I hope for such another. The baas is a great chief. I watched him.'

"Something was picking at Shadrach's boots, and he drew back with a shudder from the form that lay at his feet. 'Bring a stick from the fire,' he ordered. 'I want to see this—this baboon.'

"As the man went, he ran a cartridge into the breach of his rifle, and when the burning stick was brought, he turned over the body with his foot. A yellow face mowed up at him, and pale yellow eyes sparkled dully.

"'Tck!' clicked the Zulu in surprise. 'It is the bushman, Naqua. No, baas,' as Shadrach cocked his rifle, 'do not shoot him. Keep him and chain him to a post. He will like that less.'

"'I shoot,' answered Shadrach, and shattered the evil grin that gleamed in the face on the ground with a quick shot.

"And, as I told you, my step-sister's first husband, Shadrach van Guelder, was afraid to be alone in the dark after that night," concluded the Vrouw Grobelaar. "It is ill shooting baboons, Frikkie."

"I'm not afraid," retorted Frikkie, and the baboon in the yard rattled his chain and cursed shrilly.

MAJOR W. P. DRURY

THE PASSING OF THE FLAGSHIP

"THE best man at a funeral," I observed pessimistically, the wind being E by N, "is the man in the box "

In the little grey hamlet, tucked away under a fold of the great granite tor, a burial had followed closely upon the heels of a wedding, and from the moss-grown churchyard wall Mr Pagett (late private of Marines) and I had moralised on both. As in the big world beyond the purple shadow, the echoes of the bridal peal had mingled with the boom of the passing bell, and not a spade's length from the blossom-strewn path, along which the newly-made bride had tripped but an hour since, the white-headed sexton was stamping down the mould above a dear brother departed.

Mr Pagett indicated the bent figure with his pipe-stem.

"To my mind," said he sententiously, "a gravedigger in his boots is better than an Admiral o' the Fleet in his cawfin any day o' the week. No, sir, you may lay to it that the best man at a funeral is not so much the man in the box as the man who shovels the mud on to it."

I considered the philosopher's proposition with the attention it deserved, while the philosopher, with characteristic absent-mindedness, refilled his pipe from the pouch I had laid beside me for a moment on the wall.

"Besides," he presently resumed, with an air of clinching the argument, "it sometimes 'appens that there's nobody—best man or otherwise—in the bloomin' box at all. I could show you a cemet'ry, for instance, consecrated by a Greek bishop, with mortuary, dead'ouse, or whatnot, all complete, and with three-an'-twenty British graves in its nor'-west-by-westerly corner. Yet, unless my senses played 'anky-panky with my reason one midsummer night—— By-the-bye, what's the day o' the month, sir?"

"The twenty-first—as you were—the twenty-second of June."

"It sounds like a coincidence out o' Bow Bells," ruminated the ex-private, "but that's not my fault, and I'd kiss the Book to what I'm goin' to tell you. Eight years ago come to-night I saw things that I won't forget to my dyn' day Mind you, I don't say that they 'appened, I saw them, and that as plain as I see you now I never talk about that night, because the only time I ever did—which was nex' mornun'—I was sent by the skipper's orders to the sick bay, and kep' under observation for a month as a suspected loonatic At the end o' that time they had to return me to dooty, though, since a post-cap'n must never be in the wrong, the staff surjin scrawled 'Alloocination' in red ink on my medical 'istory sheet It is some consolation to think that he was court-martialled six months later for seen' lilac rats on the quarter-deck—but that's neither here nor there. What I want you to onderstand is that the 'alloocination,' if you like to call it so, was as plain to my eyes as Farmer Pearse's funeral was to yours 'alf an hour ago Besides, it stands to reason that I shouldn't be telling you silly fairy tales on the spot where I was christened, an' married, and where I shall some day be clapped under 'atches for my long watch below "

To do him justice I did not suppose he would, though Mr Pagett in serious vein was an entirely new departure In the sanded bar of the "Coach and Horses" in the little village below us, my sea-soldier friend had indeed unfolded to me much unwritten naval and military history But, despite his pointed and frequent reference to sceptics as "lop-eared lepers," I do not think that till now he had ever expected or even desired to be taken seriously On this occasion, however, his bona fides was unmistakable Whether the extraordinary phenomenon which he described to me so vividly that afternoon in the little moorland churchyard actually occurred, I leave you to judge That he himself believed so I have not the slightest doubt

"I was in trouble," he began sheepishly, "and the cause o' the trouble was a—well, a Turkish girl at Marmarice "

I shook my head in reproof

"If a sailor's allowed to have a wife in every port," he retorted, "why not his shipmate, the Marine? 'Owever, the Mediterranean Squadron continued its cruise short of a private, who afterwards lost threë good-conduc' badges for 'avin' been fooled into breakin' his leafe by a woman! "

" 'And the man said, the woman——' "

"I know," interrupted Mr Pagett "It's always the same, isn't it, whether they wear aprons o' sewn fig-leaves, or petticoats, or baggy trousers? Any'ow, the fact remains that there was I, up a blind alley of the Asia Minor coast, in a manner of speakin', with the kit I stood up in, and with no possible means of gettin' back to my ship. As the lady knew no English it didn't matter much what I said, and you can lay to it that I said it!

"Now Marmarice, as you may know, is a large circular bay, all but landlocked, and shut in by pine-covered mountains. At its head, opposite the invisible entrance, is a stinkin' little Turkish town, with the usual crumblin' castle and ramshackle 'ouses behind a lattice-work o' feluccas' masts an' yards. My pockets bein' empty (the lady 'ad seen to that), the honest Turks treated me like a brother, instead of cuttin' my throat, as they would probably otherwise 'ave done, and the Governor promised to send me to Beyrout, or some other Syrian port, where I might pick up the fleet by the first vessel goin' in that direction. But Turkish ships always seem to be lollin' against crazy piers, and the few Greeks that called in at Marmarice—to ask the time apparently—were all bound the other way. I was pretty sorry for myself, you may be certain—especially as every hour's absence meant so much more o' that ridic'lous Adm'rality scale on my return. But the man I was still sorrier for was the major commandin' my detachment, who, I knew, would sorely miss my valuable corporation an' advice.

"How I dragged through those two or three endless midn' mer days I ardlly know. I borrowed a rusty flintlock and shot cockliolly birds in the woods, I went out fishin' in a boat that leaked like a sieve, and every evenin' the whole bloomin' town turned up to see me bathe from the end o' the gimcrack pier. At night I smoked cigarettes with the ragged garrison o' the castle, or strolled under the stars with the lady in the baggy trousers, and it was durin' the last o' these walks that I saw the onaccountable thing that I'm goin' to tell you of.

"We'd wandered, me and her, half a mile or so along the foreshore to the left o' the town, until we'd come to what I took to be a private garden belongin' to some pasha or, maybe, the Governor himself. It was within a stone's-throw o' the water's edge, and was surrounded by a trim lime-washed wall, which made the foliage of the cypress trees overtoppin' it seem gloomier than ever. At the far end o' the wall, thurty or forty yards away, I could just make out the bars of a neat wooden gate—in fact, the entire place was so shipshape and

'omelike, after the ramshackle town, that I sat down with my back against the stonework, and lugged out my pipe for a smoke

"The girl seated herself beside me, and, conversation between us bein' impossible, amused herself by throwin' pebbles at the reflections of the stars in the sea. The stars themselves looked more like the little fire-balloons of the southern 'emisphere than 'oles pricked in the sky, and I never remember seein' such a brilliant moonless night anywhere's north o' the equator. The wavy lines o' reflections bordered by the inky mountain shadow 'minded me of a letter wrote on black-edged paper looked at sideways, and I some'ow began to hanker for a companion who could talk sense instead of silly Turkish gibberish

"Now, as I was wishin' (and I've wished it all over the world) that I could 'ave banged the thick skulls of them bickerin' Babel builders together, I chanced to look towards the mountain which masked the harbour entrance, and—the pipe fell from my open mouth. For there, picked out on the velvet shadow, were the electric lights of a great ship, and from the lamp in her fightin'-top I knew her for the flagship. The position-light on her jack-staff showed her to be at anchor, yet, although she was no more than a mile away, and the night was as still as death, I'd heard neither the splash of the big bower nor the tearin' rattle o' the cable through the hawsepipe. Where had my blessed eyes been, I wondered, not to have seen her enter the bay and pick up her present billet!

"None knew better than me the loss I was to my own ship. But I'm nat'rally a modest man, and I must confess that I was a little surprised at the adm'ral himself comin' back for a mere private o' Marines. I should have taken it as a compliment—though a thoroughly well-deserved one, mind you—if he'd sent a destroyer, or even a first-class torpedo-boat. But the flagship! It was the proudest moment of a long an' stainless career."

For a moment the figure on the churchyard wall became Mr Pagett, "our respected fellow-townsmen," vicar's warden, and husband of the buxom Mrs P. It became, in a word, the cardinal virtues amalgamated and personified. With the striking of a match, however it was again the laggard private of Marines dallying with Delilah under the eastern stars.

"I turned to see what the girl made of it, but she was still chuckin' pebbles into the sea, and didn't seem to take the least interest in the flagship's onexpected return. I pointed across the bay, but she only smiled vacantly, and went on with her stone-throwin' All her interest in the British Fleet was centred (not onnat'rally) in the fine figger of a man at her side

"The electric light shinin' through the long row of messdeck an' cabin scuttles made ragged strokes on the water like a lot of dotted i's scrawled across a slate in quicksilver From the dots in the ship's hull to the wrigglin' tails within a few yards of us, the sea was one big shiverin' fit, and I presently became aware that mixed up with the shivers was a movin' black speck growin' gradually bigger an' bigger After a bit I discovered what it was, namely, one of the flagship's boats She was headin' directly for us

"Now, how in the name o' fortune, I wondered, could the boat's crew have known that I was sittin' in that identical place on the dark beach? But as they got closer in I saw that they were makin' for a spot some forty yards to the left Then the oars were tossed, and a few seconds later the big boat—the pinnace she was—ran her blunt nose noiselessly into the shingle, right opposite the wooden gate in the whitewashed garden wall

"Whether the girl 'ad grown tired by this time of playin' ducks an' drakes in silence, or whether it was nat'ral feminine curiosity, I didn't know, anyway, she suddenly got up, and strolled along the beach in the direction of the boat Then I saw a most wonderful thing I saw a woman pass within a couple o' yards of a boat o' British sailors without so much as turnin' her 'ead to look at them!

"But if she took no notice of the men, the men—sailors, too, of all people in the world!—certainly paid no 'ecd to her It puzzled me why they expected to find me in a lonely garden at that time o' night, but every mother's son of them w - starin' at the gate as if he thought I might slip through the bars like a rat without bein' seen

"Standin' up in the bows o' the boat was a drummer of the Marines, and presently—by order, I suppose, of the orf'cer in command—he raised his bugle to his lips and sounded the long 'Last Post' It's a dismal call at the best o' times, even in the barnack square, with a hundred lighted windows all around you, but, allowin' for the depressin' effect o' that silent bay among the gloomy mountains, there was a wail in the boy's music that I never 'eard before or since, and never want to again It was like an icy finger reckonin' up the knobs upon your spine

"I stood up and shook myself to make sure that I wasn't dreamin' Why on earth had the flagship herself come to fetch me? Why had the pinnace been sent ashore for me instead of a dinghy or skiff? What was the meanin' of that cryin' 'Last Post of Tattoo' on the lonely beach? And then, for the first time, I realised that it wasn't for me that the silent boat's crew were waitin'

"The gate in the wall had swung open, and from the deep shadows o' the garden a little party in fours marched down the beach to the boat. A few paces in rear came another and smaller party, and from the rollin' lurch of the first and the erect 'eads of the second I knew them for bluejackets an' Marines respectively. It was the only diff'rence between them, though, for—what was most extr'ordin'ry—every blessed man was dressed in an 'ospital bedgown!

"I was in the act of countin' them—twenty-three they were, all told—when I perceived the girl comin' back over the shingle. I nat'rally expected to see her stop, for the men were right across her path, the first party at the water's edge, the second still marchin' down the beach. Without hesitatin' for a moment, without a glance at either, the girl walked slap between them!

"The mysterious men in the bedgown things havin' been helped over the bows o' the pinnace by their comrades, the entire party set to work with oars and boat'ooks to float her again, and so interested was I in watchin' their efforts that I forgot all about myself till they had pulled a dozen strokes or more from the beach. Then I ran down to the water's edge and hailed them with the full power o' my lungs, but although I continued to shout till I was hoarse and the woods be'ind me were full o' mockin' echoes, the only effect it had was to frighten my Turkish companion, who set off for home as fast as her baggy trousers would let her.

"Mechanic'lly fillin' my pipe, I watched the pinnace till she again dwindled to a black speck among the dancin' reflections, and as I watched I began to ponder on the remarkable silence with which she'd come an' gone. The oars, for some reason or other, must 'ave been muffled, since I'd certainly never 'eard them, nor had I noticed the gratin' of the keel upon the shingle. The men, moreover, as far as I was aware, hadn't spoken a syllable, and though I knew that silence was one of the adm'ral's 'obbies, I'd never dreamt that it could 'ave been brought to such a pitch o' deadliness. If it hadn't been for that hauntin' bugle call, which was still ringin' in my ears, and for the brilliant lights over yonder against the 'ill, I would have said that I'd been dreamin'

"How long does it take a man to light a well-drawin' pipe—ten or a dozen seconds? As I threw down the match I resumed my gaze across the bay, and—you might have knocked me down with the proverbial feather. Every vestige of electric light and its reflection had vanished! The flagship had left the anchorage as swiftly and silently as she had entered it.

"The next day a Turkish gunboat looked in at Marmarice on her way to the Syrian ports, and the Governor, true to his promise, ordered me a passage in her. Twenty hours later we sighted the British Fleet in Tripoli roads, and by seven bells in the forenoon watch I was on board my own ship again.

"The skipper was weighin' off defaulters on the quarterdeck when I come over the side, and I was marched straight aft and fallen in on the left o' the line. When he'd heard the charge against me, he asked what I had to say, and I told him that, although I'd no excuse for breakin' my leave, I had at all events done my best to get on board the flagship when she had come two nights before into Marmarice.

"The defaulters' book fell with a crash from the colour-sergeant's 'ands to the deck, the major jumped as though he'd been shot, and the skipper looked like a man that sees a ghost.

"Every one, in fact, within hearin' seemed to 'ave had an electric shock.

"'You are quite sure you don't mean the Royal George, my lad?' says the skipper kindly, when he'd recovered himself, and then he give orders, as I've already told you, that I was to be taken to the sick bay and kep' under the observation o' the doctor. I began to think that I really was mad.

"On our way for'ard I asked a question. 'I'm noo to the station, as you know, colour-sergeant,' says I, 'and there's things what even I don't savvy. What has the flagship to do with that there garden on the beach at Marmarice,' I says, 'the one to the right o' the town as you face it, with the whitewashed wall and the big wooden gateway?' "

"'Garden?' says the colour-sergeant, lookin' me 'ard in the face. 'Well, I suppose you could call it a garden, in a manner o' speakin'. It's the Greek cemet'ry,' he says, 'where three-an'-twenty o' the flagship's comp'ny were buried after the fever epidemic last summer '

" It was my turn to 'ave electric shocks now

" ' There's three-an'-twenty empty cawfins in that garden,' I says, more to myself than to 'im ' By-the-bye, colour-sergeant, now I come to think of it, I misremember seeing the flagship when we come into the roads this mornin' Where's she gone to ? '

" ' It's 'igh time, my lad,' returns the colour-sergeant solemnlike, ' that you was took to the sick bay The flagship was sent to the bottom in seventy-five fathom o' water by the Ramherdown on Thursday afternoon, six bloomin' hours before you saw her in Marmarice Bay ! ' "

Mr Pagett thoughtfully knocked the ashes from his pipe against the churchyard wall

" It's my belief," he concluded impressively, " that she returned to Marmarice to complete her complement before settlin' down to her last long commission under the shadow o' Mount Lebanon "

SAX ROHMER

NARKY

I

NINE times out o' ten—"Old Jack" confided to me—what you see in the noospapers is rot. Same as what you see on the stage. There's more young fellers been led astray by noospapers an' by plays than you'd ever think or imagine. My pal Narky was one of 'em.

Narky was in a small way o' business, but comfortable. Strea-tham was 'is pitch, an' e' mostly stuck to the kitchen lay. If he touched for a leg o' mutton an' a small bitter, with a couple o' dozen decent spoons an' a cruet-stand, 'e was satisfied. 'E never went beyond the kitchen. 'E just 'ad a good square meal, an' nipped out over the garden wall with one or two things easy to carry. 'E'd built up a nice little business, an' kept 'is aged parents in affluent circles. Then 'e made a bloomer.

It was one o' these noo cracksmen plays what 'e went to see, as done it. A bloke in Narky's line livin' in a swagger bachelor 'lat, an' wearin' evenin'-dress to all 'is meals! 'E used to always do 'is business in a fur coat and a opera 'at, smokin' chice Turkish cigarettes costin' 'im, ere, up to a ha'penny a time!

Narky was always romantic, and this 'ere tommy-rot got 'im properly by the gills.

I told 'im plain it was temptin' Providence. I says, "Narky, you've got a nice little business, you've got a nice girl what come of a good family"—'er father was public 'angman at one time—"an' every prospec' of bein' able to settle down comfy in the noospaper an' tobaccer line, an' make a book. Don't be a fool!"

But it wasn't no good. First of all 'e rigged 'isself up as a gent. High 'at, frock-coat, light-brown boots—all complete. 'E spent five shillin's on a beautiful red, knitted weskit, sich as a lord or a well-to-do publican might wear. 'E dons a green silk tie what 'e picked up in Lower Marsh, an' what 'ad probably belonged to a American millionaire or a bookmaker. A pair o' white kid gloves was another of 'is aristocratic fads 'E got 'em cheap, owin' to one havin' only three fingers complete

When 'e'd got 'em all blowin', with a imitation diamond in 'is green tie an' a umbereller with the case on, I must say Narky looked the real thing 'E wouldn't 'ave been out o' place in Bond Street, or at the National Sportin' Club

When 'e come in 'ere, with 'is ginger moustache waxed an' all 'is armour up, 'e fair took our breath away! Why, the way 'e wore 'is high 'at—tilted well forward an' a bit on one side—was simply Piccadilly! There's no two ways about it, it was Piccadilly!

Digger an' Ikey said they'd go in with 'im if 'e'd got a big thing on So 'e told 'em to spot a likely dook or hearl, an' leave 'im to look after 'er ladyship's hairlooms! We 'ad drinks round, an' Digger an' Ikey went out to see what they could do for 'im

II

I ain't likely to forgit the night Digger come in with the noos about the Walworth Road pawnbroker—an' 'is lovely daughter As Ikey said "With a lovely woman in the case, it's a cinch for Narky!"

When Digger give us full partics, I could see Narky fancied 'is luck by the way 'e kep' lookin' at 'isself in a lookin'-glass, an' shiftin' 'is high 'at more forward till you couldn't see 'is eyes Anyhow, the end of it was, we all started off for the Walworth Road, me an' Digger an' Ikey, Narky walkin' on the other side of the street

We'd arranged a little plot together Me an' Ikey—what she'd never seen—was to go in an' pop something so as to get a look at the daughter If she come up to Digger's description as regards sportiness, we was to give the wink to Narky

A little dispute cropped up right at the door, owin' to Ikey wantin' to pawn my 'at As I told 'im, it wasn't natural for a old bloke with whiskers an' a bald 'ead to walk into a pawnshop on a cold right an' pawn 'is 'at Not while 'e was sober I pointed out 'ow suspicious it would look, an' suggested Ikey's overcoat There was more trouble about that, an' at last we decided to offer my pipe

If we went, an' there was no sign of the lovely daughter as per Digger, only a 'Ebrew gent We 'ad to say something, so I showed 'im my pipe

It took 'im nearly five minutes to tell us all the kinds of fools 'e thought we was, an' I kep' suggestin' noo kinds of pass the time

But still no daughter So we came out, explainin' to the p'liceman who'd been sent for that we'd just come 'ome from Chinee, where well-coloured pipes like mine was reckoned very vallyble

Well, I wasn't goin' to turn it up, so I suggested we went back an' offered somethin' else

Ikey says "It'll 'ave to be your 'at, Jack!" very sad

I says "What about that fourpenny-bit o' yours with a 'ole in it? Offer to sell it—for fourpence-ha'penny," I says

So in we goes again, as large as life An' there's the daughter, laughin' with 'er father be'ind the counter

Ikey says "'E's tryin' to describe your face to 'er, Jack!"

Before I could think of a proper answer to 'im, we was right inside

"You 'ere again!" shouted the pawnbroker "Get out o' my shop, or I'll give you in charge!"

'E was well waxed, but we 'ardly noticed 'im We was that struck with 'is daughter No doubt about it, she was a oil paintin'
A fine girl she was—make two o' me an' Ikey put together—with black eyes, an' lovely blue earrings hangin' down on to 'er shoulders
She 'ad a big gold chain round 'er neck, an' 'er 'ands was so full o' diamond rings she couldn't bend 'er fingers Looked a perfect duchess, she did

"What are you starin' at?" she says, that saucy, an' showed
'er beautiful white teeth, with a gold 'un in the left top corner

I felt quite young again, for the moment Then

"What's the matter with you, Father Christmas?" she says
And I bobbed down

Well, I could see she was right up to Ligger's account, an' was regrettin' we 'adn't got Narky outside, when who should butt in but 'is nibs 'imself! 'E'd got tired of waitin' 'E see 'is chance in a flash

"Is these 'ere men annoyin' you, miss?" 'e says, surprised

I could see from the way she looked at 'im 'e'd made a 'it Ikey was smart 'E says "We only come in to pawn somethin', guv'nor!"

"Git out o' my shop!" hollered the pawnbroker

"Shall I put these 'ere fellers out, miss?" asks Narky, risin' 'is high 'at like a hearl

She just laughed an' looked at 'im the way girls do when they're struck An' 'e got 'old of us one in each 'and an' rushed us out the door Ikey objected to bein' 'andled by 'is ear As 'e said to me outside " I see Narky's move But there wasn't no occasion not whatever for 'im to kop 'old o' me by the ear! I shall mention that to Narky! " 'e says

III

Well, Narky got away with it wonderful 'E started payin' attention to the pawnbroker's daughter, an' used to spend nearly all the evenin' in the shop, talkin' to 'er 'Er father didn't take to 'im, funny enough, but 'e put up with that

'E says to me one night in 'is bedroom in Bream's Mews " I an't altogether satisfied I can't git 'er to come for a walk with me! " 'e says " She's always got a excuse Still, p'r'aps it's a good job If Loo " (that's 'is girl) " spotted me, there'd be trouble She'd never understand it was business! "

It seemed funny, certainly But as I told 'im, there might be another bloke what she'd jilted for 'im, an' who she didn't want to run into in case Narky got shot

That cheered 'im up wonderful, an' 'e set to work on 'is high 'at with the blackin'-brush in a way as did me good to see When 'e'd got 'em all on ('e was just goin' down to see 'er) 'e looked a fair picture 'E 'ad a pink shirt on, which not only matched 'is red weskit, but set off 'is green tie beautiful And 'e'd bought a nice yaller dahlia for 'is button'ole Digger (as 'ad been in the Militia) suggested as the white glove what 'ad only three fingers would look smarter if 'e pipe-clayed 'is 'ands But that seemed to annoy Narky, so we dropped the subjec'

'E says " Blowed if I don't tap 'er about the safe! I asked 'er to kiss me good-night last night, an' though she didn't, I see 'er laughin' as she dropped the iron shutter! I'm nearly stony! " 'e says. " I shall 'ave to go nap! "

We was all knocked silly that evenin' when he walked in 'ere just before closin' time with a face like a full moon, an' says " Drink up! I'm goin' to touch on Friday night! "

It appears 'e'd got on partic'lar well—unexpected well She'd let 'im 'old 'er 'and over the counter—not 'avin' any rings on that evenin'—an' 'e asked 'er to fly with 'im to lands across the sea

She asked 'im what lands, but 'e couldn't think of any

" Why," she says, " I've just been waitin' an' longin' for this! "

"Eh?" says Narky, 'ardly able to believe 'is ears Fair paralysed 'e said 'e was

"When shall we go, dear?" she asks 'im, very soft

'E drew a deep breath, seein' it was gettin' serious It was now or never!

"Well," 'e says, "I'm rather short o' ready, to put it quite plain to you!" 'e says "To be perfectly open about it, my dear, I'm waitin' for my people to send me a couple of thou or so!" 'e says

"I know where we can get some money to go on with!" she whispers

Narky 'ad a lump in 'is throat like a three'apenny baked pertater 'E'd never dared to 'ope it would be sich a walk over

"Go away now," she says, very soft, bendin' over the counter, "an' don't come 'ere again till Thur—Friday night, after closin' time! I'll let you in the side-way an' show you the strong-room!" she says, so low 'e could 'ardly 'ear 'er

We all listened, breathless, while Narky told us, like I'm tellin' you Then Ikey asks

"Was it Friday or Thursday she said, Narky? You didn't seem quite sure, some'ow, when you was tellin' us"

"Friday!" answers Narky, very quick An' turnin' to the counter 'e called for drinks all round

We all drank good luck to Friday—joyful Only Ikey—'e ank 'is, too, but kind of moody

Now, 'ere comes the wickedness of 'uman nature

On Thursday night, about eleven-thirty, a gen'l'man in a 'igh 'at, carryin' a nice umbereller what 'ad never smelled the rain, an' likewise a large grip, might 'ave been seen comin' out o' Bream's Mews The gen'l'man in the hugh 'at was none other than 'is jills! Narky!

'E walked all the way, an' 'e was actually in Walworth Road when some one claps 'im on the shoulder, an' 'e spins round as if 'e'd been struck by lightnin' It was Ikey! An' 'e was carryin' a big bag, too!

"Narky," 'e says, "I've brought my tools along as well, in case you 'ave any trouble with the safe!" 'e says, smilin' affectionate

Well, Narky was knocked silly for a minute So they slipped into a quiet bar an' 'ad a pick-me-up

Then Narky asks, very faint "Has the others rumbled me?"

"No, Narky," 'e says, "they 'aven't!"

Well, what arrangement they come to, I can't tell you I might make a guess, but I won't! Only, in the end the pair of 'em crep' up to the pawnbroker's side-door an' knocked gentle. There was no light to be seen in the 'ouse, but almost immediate the girl opened the door. When she see Ikey's face over Narky's shoulder, she give a little scream, which annoyed Ikey considerable.

"It's orlright, Becky!" whispers Narky. "This is my valley!"

Still she 'eld the door, an' seemed as if she couldn't make up 'er mind. Ikey could see she 'adn't expected 'im, an' 'e was thankin' 'is lucky stars 'e'd tumbled to Narky's little game in time.

Well, after Narky 'ad whispered to 'er for a while (Ikey couldn't catch what 'e said), she let 'em both in. Narky whispered to 'im that the pawnbroker was away an' there was nobody else in the 'ouse only a deaf servant.

The girl led 'em along a dim passage, up some stairs, all in the dark, along another passage, an' down some more stairs.

"It's a larger 'ouse than I 'ad supposed, Becky," Narky whispered. She answered: "S-sh! 'Ere it is!"

Before you could say Jack Robinson, Ikey 'ad 'is bag open 'an 'is lantern shinin' on the door. An' it wasn't half a door! Not 'alf it wasn't! An iron door it was, like a bank, an' they could see it was goin' to be a tough job.

"'E's taken the keys away with 'im," whispered Becky, "but p'r'aps your vally knows how to break open doors, Claud?"

"Claud!" began Ikey. But Narky stood on 'is favourite corn, brisk, an' 'e stopped—partly to oblige Narky, but principally because the pain took 'is breath away.

Well, the girl gave a kind of little sob—suggestin' to Ikey, who's soft 'earted, that she was tore between love an' dooty—an' whispered: "Till to-morrer. Leave no trace—for my sake."

They 'eard 'er skirts switchin', an' she was gone.

IV

I've heard a good many blokes tell what 'ard work's like, but I never listened to a more thrillin' narrative than what Ikey told me about this 'ere strong-room door. Even when 'e was tellin' me, the perspiration poured off of him, an' 'e trembled at the knees most pathetic.

For about two hours they went at it every way they knew.

Narky, to begin with, wore 'is high 'at an' 'is frock-coat—also, 'e smoked a cigarette, very cool. But by the end of the first hour's graft 'e'd laid aside the coat, an' likewise the knitted waistcoat. But 'e stuck to 'is high 'at. Only 'e 'adn't got any wind left for 'smokin'.

As for Ikey, 'e admits as 'is language was shockin'.

They busted all their skeleton-keys, an' they bent a steel crowbar (best Sheffield make) into a ornamental figure eight! But the door 'adn't got a scratch.

They tried to force a bottom 'inge, but Narky only broke 'is silk braces, an' Ikey blame near burst a blood-vessel.

What was to be done? In about another two hours an' a half it would be daylight, an' the bloomin' door, after about eighteen rounds, looked as fresh as paint—while as for Ikey an' Narky, they was blown out.

Narky 'ad a drop o' brandy with 'im, an' they finished it between 'em, an' made a fresh start.

For another clear hour they worked like lunatic stokers, till Ikey felt as 'e was liable to drop dead at any minute. Then 'e chucked down 'is tools, an' leaned up against the bloomin' door, quite dizzy.

'E says "Narky! No 'uman 'and," 'e says, "made this 'ere door. It's the fair limit, it is."

Narky looked at 'im an' then at the door, an' burst into tears. 'E says "Ikey, must we go away broke," 'e says, "with five thousand junmy o'goblins starin' us in the face?"

Ikey says "If you don't 'appen to 'ave 'alf a pound o' dynamite about you, I reckon we must."

Then Narky chucked 'is high 'at on the floor, an' jumped on it.

It was while 'e was a-jumpin' on it that 'e 'eard something jangle under 'is foot. Snatchin' up the lantern, 'e shone it into a corner—an' there lay a bunch o' keys!

'E says "Ikey! Ikey!" 'e says, 'usky "Is it too good to be true or am I a-dreamin'?" Can it be," 'e says, almost sobbin'—"can it be as the old gent dropped 'is keys?"

'E took the keys from Ikey—what was white as a ghost—an' began to try 'em on the door.

"It ain't a combination lock," 'e says, in a quiverin' voice, "an' if the right key's 'ere we're made!"

Well, the key was there right enough. Yes, if I never move again off this 'ere stool, the key was there. When Narky fitted it in the lock, 'e' adn't got the pluck left to turn it 'E come over quite faint. 'E felt like sitting down an' cryin' again—is 'eart was that full.

At last 'e pulled isselt together, an' turned the key Open come the iron door In nipped poor Narky An' (the wickedness o' the 'uman female 'eart ! ) found isselt outside in the street, an' right in the arms of a six-foot copper as was waitin' there for 'im !

Can you believe it ? Would you think such a lovely woman could be so wicked disposed ?

To think o' settin' that poor bloke to slave 'is life out thrōugh the mortal weary night on a door what opened on the street, an' then get 'im pinched !

Well, Narky was a pal at the finish As 'e felt the bracelets snap on 'is wrists, 'e 'ollered " Run for it, Ikey ! I'm nobbled ! "

So out rushed Ikey, like a whirlwind, dodges the copper—what Narky was keepin' busy , an' flies for 'is life just as the whistle starts

From a top winder 'e 'eard Becky shout " Got 'im, Bob ? "

" I've got the ringleader, Becky dear ! " says the copper " The other one's scooted "

Yes, guv'nor, it is dry work Thank you, I don't mind a final, as it's closin' time O' course, it was a bloomin' plant That wicked woman 'ad rumbled Narky's lay right from the start She got it all laid out for 'im But the unnecessary wickedness o' lettin' 'im spend the night on that bloomin' door ! Whether she nipped down while they was workin', an' planted the keys, or whether they was planted all the time, we never found out Oh, the door was a blessed goods entrance It was faced with wood outside The old boy 'ad been burgled through it once, so 'e 'ad a noo 'un made of iron

It turned out as the six-foot copper was only waitin' to git made sergeant to marry Becky This 'ere smart, single-'anded capture just did the trick for 'im nicely

The 'orrible wickedness o' some lovely women passes belief !

Poor Narky tried to do 'er a bit o' no good at 'is trial, but the Bench wouldn't listen to 'im

Ikey got away—yes

No, Narky ain't out yet Good-night, guv'nor !

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

To the living authors whose work is included in this volume, thanks are tendered for their courtesy in permitting the reprinting of their copyright stories, and thanks are likewise due to the various publishers who have also given their consent.

Portrait of a Lady From "Sketches in Lavender, Blue and Green," by Jerome K Jerome Messrs LONGMANS, GREEN & Co

The Fall of Maung San. From "Palace Tales," by Harold Fielding Hall Messrs HARPER & BROTHERS

The Death of Snarley Bob From "Mad Shepherds," by L P Jacks Messrs WILLIAMS & NORCOTE

The Heart of the Wood From "The Modern Way," by Mrs W K Clifford Messrs CHATMAN & HALL, LTD

The Chameleon, by H A Vachell, from Scribner's Magazine

The King's Last Sailing From "The Voice in the Light," by Bart Kennedy Messrs SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & CO, LTD

When the Door Opened From "Emotional Moments," by Sarah Grand. Messrs HURST & BLACKART, LTD

The Story of a Piebald Horse From "Il Ombu and Other Stories," by W H Hudson Messrs DUCKWORTH & CO

The Skipper's Bible From "The Folk Afield," by Eden Phillpotts Messrs METHUEN & CO

The Grey Frock, from "Tales of Two People," and A Liberal Education, from "Dolly Dialogues," by Anthony Hope Messrs THOMAS NELSON & SONS, LTD

The Monkey's Paw From "The Lady of the Barge" by W W Jacobs Messrs THOMAS NELSON & SONS, LTD
An Odd Freak. From "Eight Thoughts," by W W Jacobs Messrs METHUEN & CO, LTD

Charlwood with a Number From "Divers Vanities," by Arthur Morrison. Messrs. METHUEN & CO, LTD

Joie-de-Loup, by Max Pemberton, from The Graphic

The Roll-Call of the Reef From "Tales of our Coast," by "Q" Messrs CHATTO & WINDUS Old Æson and The Small People. From "Noughts and Crosses," by 'Q' Messrs. CASSELL & CO, LTD

They that walk in Darkness From the volume of that title by Israel Zangwill Mr WILLIAM HIFEMANN

An Idyll of London From "In Varying Moods," by Beatrice Harraden Messrs. WM BLACKWOOD & SONS

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The Kindness of the Celestial From "Collected Tales," by Barry Pain Mr MARTIN SECKER.

The Hero of Waterloo From "Historical Vignettes," by Bernard Capes Messrs SIDGWICK & JACKSON, LTD

Desert Air From "The Black Spaniel," by Robert Hichens
Messrs MITHUEN & CO, LTD

The Judgment of Paris. From "A Chair on the Boulevard," by Leonard Merrick Messrs HODDER & STOUGHTON

The Little Brown 'Bus From "Up Side Streets," by Pett Ridge Messrs HODDER & STOUGHTON

The Saloon Passenger, by E W Hornung, from The Strand Magazine

The Stolen Bacillus and The Magic Shop From "The Country of the Blind, by H G Wells Messrs THOMAS
NELSON & SONS, LTD

A Portrait and A Woman From "A Motley," by John Galsworthy Mr WILLIAM HEINEMANN

A Strolling Player and The Gaffer's Masterpiece From "A Lockland Faggot" by Murray Gilchrist By courtesy of Mrs MURRAY GILCHRIST

Accessory before the Fact From "Ten Minute Stories," by Algernon Blackwood Mr JOHN MURRAY

Saint-Pé, by Hubert Crackanthorpe By permission of Mrs CRACKANTHORPE

A Midnight Bridal From "Windover Tales," by Hildwell
Sutcliffe Mr JOHN MURRAY

Escape From "A Mixed Pack" by Dorothea Conyere
Messrs MITHUEN & CO, LTD

Bills Shore Job From "The Genteel A B," by A J
Dawson Mr GRANT RICHARDS

The Yarn of Happy Jack From "A Tarpaulin Muster" by John Masefield Mr GRANT RICHARDS

Three—Four—Five From "Odd Lengths," by W B
Maxwell Messrs MITHUEN & CO, LTD

The Rocker From "Widdershins," by Oliver Onions Mr
MARTIN SECKER

The King of the Baboons. From "Vrou Grobelaar's Leading Cases," by Perceval Gibbon Messrs THOMAS NELSON & SONS, LTD

The Passing of the Flagship From the volume of that title by Major W P Drury Mr A. H. BULLEN

INDEX.

COURTS, 1—223

- Abingdon, local court of, 138
- Admiral of England Court of, 90
- Admiralty appeals to Judicial Committee 48
  - borough courts of, 105
  - High Court of, jurisdiction of, 53
  - jurisdiction of the High Court, 57
  - Liverpool Court of Passage, 176
  - matters, appeal to Judicial Committee 28
  - registrars, 71
- agisters, 115
- Alston Moor, local court of, 138
- ancient demesne, court of, 217
- Andover, local court of, 139
- Appeal, Court of, 62
  - judges of, 64
    - salaries of, 64
  - jurisdiction of (appellate), 63
    - (original), 63
    - (transferred), 62
  - organisation of, 64
  - Criminal, Court of 91
  - (ecclesiastical) to Judicial Committee, 48
  - from Court of Chancery of Lancaster, 122
  - courts outside the United Kingdom, 30
  - inferior courts of record, 133
  - district registrar, 70
  - orders of the judge in lunacy, 96
  - (maritime) to Judicial Committee, 48
  - to Court of Criminal Appeal 91
    - divisional court, 59
    - Judicial Committee, 33
    - quarter sessions, 85, 86
    - single judge, 59
  - under Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890 32
- arraigns, clerk of, 73
- Arundel, local court of, 139
- assarts, meaning of, 113
- assize, clerk of, 73
  - commission of, 72
- Assizes, 72
- Attachment, Court of, 111, 112
- Bailiffs' Court of Llandoverly, 176
- Baunbury, local court of, 139
- bankruptcy jurisdiction of the High Court 56
  - London court of, jurisdiction of, 53
- Barmote Courts of High Peak, 140
  - Wirksworth and its liberties, 141
- Barnstaple, local court of, 141
- Basingstoke, local court of, 142
- Bath, local court of, 142
- Beaumaris, local court of, 142
- Beccles, local court of, 143
- Belford, local court of, 143

INDEX.

COURTS—continued

- Berwick upon Tweed, local court of, 143
- Beverly, local court of, 148
- Bewdley, local court of, 144
- Bickford, local court of, 144
- Bill of Attainder, 20
- Birmingham, local court of, 144
- Bishop's Liberty of the Soke of Winchester, 212
- Black Rod as to, 21
- Blandford Forum, local court of, 145
- Board of Agriculture, powers as to tithe commutation, 223
  - Trade, report to, by naval court, 109
- Bodmin, local court of, 145
- borough courts, jurisdiction of, 129
  - sessions, 84
- Boston, local court of, 145
- breach of privilege, clauses of, 21
  - of either House of Parliament, 21
- Brecon, local court of, 146
- Brewster sessions, 86
- Bridgnorth, local court of, 146
- Bridgwater, local court of, 146
- Bridport, local court of, 147
- Bristol, local court of, 147
- Brotherhood, Court of, 129
- Buckingham, local court of, 149
- Bury St. Edmunds, local court of, 149
- Cambridge, local court of, 150
- Cambridge University, local court of, 149
- Canterbury, local court of, 150
- capitales justiciarii forestal*, 115
- Cardiff, local court of, 151
- Carlisle, local court of, 151
- Carmarthen, local court of, 152
- "case notice" in appeal to Judicial Committee, 43
- catchpoll, meaning of, 155
- Central Criminal Court, 87
- Central Office of the Supreme Court, 69
- certiorari*, writ of, 136
- Chamberlain's Court of City of London, 178
- Chancellor's Court of University of Cambridge, 149
- Chancellor's Court of Oxford University, 187
- Chancery, Court of, nature of, 53
- Chancery Court of the County Palatine of Lancaster, 180
- Chancery Division, constitution of, 60
  - jurisdiction of, 60
- Cheney Court of Winchester, 212
- Chester, local court of, 152
- Chichester, local court of, 153
- chief clerks, 67
- Chipping Norton, local court of, 153
  - Wycombe, local court of, 154
- Chivalry, Court of, 116
- Cinque Ports, the, 127
- circuit system, the, 72—74
- Claims, Court of, 117
- Clerk Assistant of the House of Commons, 25
  - Lords, 24
- clerk of arraigns, 73
  - assize, 73
  - House of Commons, 25
  - Markets, Court of, 137
  - Parliaments, as to, 24
- Clitheroe, local court of, 154
- Colchester, local court of, 155
- Colonial appeals, jurisdiction of Judicial Committee in, 30
- Commission, Land Tax, 219
  - of assize, 73
  - general gaol delivery, 72

INDEX.

COURTS—continued

- commission of oyer and terminer, 72
  - the peace, 84
- commissioner of wrecks, 107
- Commissioners, Income Tax, 219
  - of Sewers, 230
  - Railway and Canal, 217
  - Salvage, of the Cinque Ports, 128
- commissions, special, 90
- Common Pleas, Court of, jurisdiction of, 53
- compensation under Lands Clauses Act, 1845, court to assess, 120
- Congleton, local court of, 155
- Constable, Lord High, the, 116
- contempt of either House of Parliament, 21
- convictions on summary proceedings are matters of record, 75
- Conway, local court of, 156
- copyright, jurisdiction of Judicial Committee as to, 80
- costs of appeal to Judicial Committee, 46
- court See also local courts
- court baron, 216
  - Burgess and Foreign of Pontefract, 191
  - definition of, 8
  - for divorce and matrimonial causes, jurisdiction of, 53
  - Foreigners (Lincoln), 172
- leet, 215
- of ancient demesne, 217
  - Appeal, 62
  - Attachments, 112
  - Brotherhood, 129
  - Chancellor (Oxford University), 157
  - Chancery, nature of, 52
    - of Durham, 124
  - Chivalry, 116
  - Claims, 117
  - Common Pleas at Lancaster, jurisdiction of, 53
    - jurisdiction of, 53
  - Criminal Appeal, 91
  - Crown Cases Reserved, superseasion of, 91
  - Equity (London), 177
  - Escheat, 110
  - Exchequer, jurisdiction of, 53
  - Guesling, 129
  - Husting (London), 176
    - (Lyme Regis) 179
  - Passage (Liverpool), 173
  - pie poudre, 136
  - Probate, jurisdiction of, 53
  - Quarter sessions for the City of London, 177
  - Queen's Bench, jurisdiction of, 52
    - record, by statute 10
    - criterion of, 9
  - Regard or Survey of Dogs, 112
  - Shepway, the, 129
  - survey (maritime), 107
  - Swainmote, 113
  - the Admiral of England, 90
    - Clerk of the Markets, 137
    - County Palatine of Lancaster, 120
    - Duchy Chamber of Lancaster, 120
    - Lord High Steward, 26
    - Staple, 137
    - vice-admirals of the coast, 106
  - Venire (Kingston-upon Hull), 169
  - to assess compensation under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845 120
- courts, classification of, 9
  - of the Cinque Ports, 127
  - martial, military, 100
    - naval, 97
    - under martial law, 104

INDEX.

COURTS—continued.

- Coventry, local court of, 156
- creation of courts, 17
- Criminal Appeal, Court of, 91
- criminal jurisdiction, courts of, 74
- Crown Cases Reserved, Court of, supersession of 91
- Crown Office Rules, 65
- curators, meaning of, 124
- customary court, 216
- damages, inquiries as to, by sheriff, 119
- Dartmouth, local court of, 156
- Daventry, local court of 157
- Deal, local court of, 157
- Denbigh, local court of, 157
- Derby, local court of, 157
- Devizes, local court of, 158
- district court-martial, 100
  - probate registrars, 71
  - registrars, 69
- divisional courts, jurisdiction (appellate) of, 59
  - (original) of, 54
- "division," various meanings of, 51
- divorce and matrimonial causes, court for, jurisdiction of, 53
- divorce bills, Irish, as to, 20
- Doncaster, local court of, 158
- Dorchester, local court of, 159
- Dover, local court of, 159
- Droitwich, local court of, 160
- Duchy Chamber of Lancaster, Court of, 120
- Durham Chancery Court, 124
- Earl Marshal, 116
- ecclesiastical appeals to Judicial Committee, 48
  - matters, appeal to Judicial Committee, 29
- election petitions, municipal and parliamentary trial of, 54
- elections (contested) of representative peers of Scotland or Ireland, 21
- elegit*, writ of, 118
- endowed school schemes, jurisdiction of Judicial Committee as to, 23
- Equity, court of (London), 177
- Fisheate, court of, 110
- Evesham, local court of, 160
- examiners, as to, 66
- Exchequer, Court of, jurisdiction of, 53
- Exeter, local court of, 160
- expedition of dogs, 112
- Eye, local court of, 161
- eyre, justices in, 114
- Falmouth, local court of, 161
- Faversham, local court of, 161
- Folkestone, local court of, 162
- Foreign Court of Colchester, 155
- Foreign Jurisdiction Act, appeals under, 82
- Fortignais, Court for (Lincoln), 172
- forest courts, 111
- foresters, 115
- Fortnight Court (Mayors) of Pembroke, 189
  - of Carmarthen, 152
- Forty Days' Court, the, 111, 112
- gaol delivery, commission of, 72
- general court-martial, 100
  - sessions, 83
- Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, 24
- Gloucester, local court of, 162
- Godmanchester, local court of, 163
- grand serjeantry, 117
- Grantham, local court of, 163
- Gravesend, local court of, 163
- Great Grimsby, local court of, 163
- Great Yarmouth, local court of, 164
- Guestling, Court of, 129

INDEX.

COURTS—continued

- Guildford, local court of, 165
- Guildhall Court of King's Lynn, 179
- Norwich, 185
- Halmote, the, 215
- Hartlepool, local court of, 165
- Harwich, local court of, 165
- Hastings, local court of, 166
- Haverfordwest, local court of, 166
- Hedon, local court of, 167
- Helston, local court of, 167
- hereditary steward of Macclesfield, 180
- Hereford, local court of, 167
- Hertford, local court of, 168
- High Court of Judicature,
  - constitution of, 60
  - judges of, appointment and tenure of,
    - enumeration of, 62
    - salaries of, 62
  - jurisdiction, Admiralty, of, 57
  - appellate, of, 59
  - bankruptcy, of, 56
  - civil, of, 54
  - criminal, of, 55
  - in winding up of companies of, 56
  - original, of, 54
- High Steward, as to, 22
- House of Commons, 24—27
  - jurisdiction of, 24
  - officers of, 25
- House of Lords, 19—24
  - constitution of, 19
  - judges, attendance of, 23
  - of the court, 22
  - jurisdiction of, appellate, 22
    - in Bills of Attainder, 20
    - contempt or breach of privilege, 21
    - contested elections, 21
    - impeachment, 19
    - Irish Divorce Bills, 20
    - peerage claims, 20
    - trial of peer for treason etc., 19
    - original, 19
  - lay peers, right of, to vote on judicial questions, 23
  - officers of, 23
- Hundred Courts (in general), 214
- Huntingdon, local court of, 168
- Husting, Court of (London), 176
- (Lyme Regis), 179
- Hythe, local court of, 168
- impeachment, jurisdiction of House of Lords, 20
- Income Tax Commissioners, 219
- India, misdemeanours of public officials in, tried by special commission, 90
- indictable offence, jurisdiction of courts of summary jurisdiction over, 81
- inferior court, distinguished from superior court, 11
  - jurisdiction of, 11
  - origin of, 11
  - courts of record, jurisdiction of, 131
- inquisitions on writ of elegit, 118
- Intrinsical Court of Haverfordwest, 166
- Ipswich, local court of, 169
- Irish Divorce Bills, as to, 20
- judge in lunacy, 95
- of local courts, 134
- judges of Central Criminal Court, 89
  - Court of Appeal, 64
  - Court of Chancery of Lancaster, 123
  - Court of Criminal Appeal, 92
  - Durham Chancery Court, 126

INDEX.

COURTS—continued

- judges of High Court of Justice, 62
- judge advocate-general, 101
  - of the fleet, 97
  - officiating, 101
- Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, 27—51
  - appeals to, 33
    - appearance by respondent, 41
    - "case notice," 43
    - costs of, 46
    - ecclesiastical, 48
    - evidence, 45
    - hearing of, 44
    - in formâ pauperis*, 34
    - judgment in, 45
    - lodging case, 43
    - maritime, 48
    - restoration of, 41
    - withdrawal or non presentation of, 40
  - jurisdiction of, in Admiralty matter appeals, 28
    - appeals under Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890 32
    - Channel Island appeals, 31
    - Colonial appeals, 30
    - copyright matters, 29
    - ecclesiastical appeals, 29
    - endowed school schemes, 33
- members of, 27
- officers of, 50
- petition of appeal, 37
  - form of, 42
  - to, for leave to appeal, 34
- practice and procedure of, 38
- record, preparation of, 35
- registrar of, 50
- resignation of office, by member of, 28
- special case, submission of, 36
- juries, of local courts, 135
- jurisdiction as to area, 16
  - subject-matter, 14
    - consent or waiver cannot give, 13
    - exercise of unauthorised, restrained by prohibition, 14
  - in every kind of action, Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has, 14
  - matrimonial causes, 16
  - offences in territorial waters, 17
    - oversea, 16
  - personal actions, 16
  - real actions, 16
  - testamentary matters 15
- meaning of, 13
- of borough courts, 129
  - Central Criminal Court, 88
  - Commissioners of Sewers, 221
  - Court of Chancery of Lancaster, 121
  - courts, 13—17
    - of summary jurisdiction, 75
  - Durham Chancery Court, 125
  - English court, limitations as to area, 16
  - House of Commons, 24
    - Lords, appellate, 22
    - original, 19
  - inferior courts of record, 131
  - judge in lunacy, 95
  - Judicial Committee of Privy Council, 28
  - local courts of record 180
  - military courts-martial, 102
  - naval courts, 108
    - courts-martial, 98
  - quarter sessions, 85
  - railway and canal commission, 218

INDEX.

COURTS—continued.

- jurisdiction of single justice of the peace, 82
  - remedy for exceeding, 15
  - service out of the, 17
- justice of the peace, commission of, 84
- Justice Seat, the, 114
- Justices in Eyre, the, 114
  - of the Cinque Ports, 128
  - protection of, 75
- King's Bench Division, constitution of, 61
  - jurisdiction of 61
- Kingston-upon-Hull, local court of, 169
- Kingston-on-Thames, local court of, 170
- Kirkby-in-Kendal, local court of, 171
- Lancaster, local court of 171
  - Chancery Court of the County Palatine of, 120
  - Court of the Duchy Chamber of, 120
- Land Tax Commission, 219
- Lands Clauses Act, court to assess compensation under, 121
- Launceston, local court of, 171
- Law Hundred Court of Colchester, 155
- lay peers, right of, to vote on judicial questions, 23
- Leicester, local court of, 171
- Leominster, local court of, 172
- licensing sessions, 86
- Lichfield, local court of, 172
- Lincoln, local court of, 172
- Liskeard, local court of, 173
- Liverpool, local court of, 173
- Llandovery local court of, 176
- local courts of record, 129
  - Abingdon, 138
  - Alston Moor, 138
  - Andover, 139
  - Arundel, 139
  - Banbury, 139
  - Barmote Courts of High Peak, 140
    - Wirksworth and its liberties, 141
  - Barnstaple, 141
  - Basingstoke, 142
  - Bath, 142
  - Beaumaris, 142
  - Beccles, 143
  - Bedford, 143
  - Berwick upon Tweed, 143
  - Beverley, 143
  - Bewdley, 144
  - Bideford, 144
  - Birmingham, 144
  - Blandford Forum, 145
  - Bodmin, 145
  - Boston, 145
  - Brecon, 146
  - Bridgnorth, 146
  - Bridgwater, 146
  - Bridport, 147
  - Bristol, 147
  - Buckingham, 149
  - Bury St. Edmunds, 149
  - Cambridge, 150, Cambridge University, 149
  - Canterbury, 150
  - Cardiff, 151
  - Carlisle, 151
  - Carmarthen, 152
  - Chester, 152
  - Chichester, 153
  - Chipping Norton, 153
  - Chipping Wycombe, 154
  - Clitheroe, 154

INDEX.

COURTS—continued

local courts of record—continued

- " Colchester, 155
- Congleton, 155
- Conway, 156
- Coventry, 156
- Dartmouth, 156
- Daventry, 157
- Deal, 157
- Denbigh, 157
- Derby, 157
- Devizes, 158
- Doncaster, 158
- Dorchester, 159
- Dover, 159
- Droitwich, 160
- Evesham, 160
- Exeter, 160
- Eye, 161
- Falmouth, 161
- Faversham, 161
- Folkestone, 162
- Gloucester, 162
- Godmanchester, 163
- Grantham, 163
- Gravesend, 163
- Great Grimsby, 163
- Great Yarmouth, 164
- Guildford, 165
- Hartlepool, 165
- Harwich, 165
- Hastings, 166
- Haverfordwest, 166
- Holton, 167
- Helston, 167
- Hereford, 167
- Hertford, 168
- Huntingdon, 168
- Hythe, 168
- Ipswich, 169
- Kingston upon Hull, 169
- Kingston-on-Thames, 170
- Kirkby in Kendal, 171
- Lancaster, 171
- Launceston, 171
- Leicester, 171
- Leominster, 172
- Lichfield, 172
- Lincoln, 172
- Liskeard, 173
- Liverpool, 173
- Llandover, 176
- London, 176
- Ludlow, 179
- Lyme Regis, 179
- Lynn or Kings Lynn, 179
- Macclesfield, 180
- Maldenhead, 180
- Maidstone, 181
- Maldon, 181
- Marlborough, 182
- Monmouth, 182
- Neath, 182
- Newark, 182
- Newbury, 183
- Newcastle-under-Lyme, 183
- Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 184
- Newport (Isle of Wight), 184
- Newport (Monmouth), 185

INDEX.

COURTS—continued

local courts of record—continued.

Northampton, 185
Norwich, 185
Nottingham, 186
Oswestry, 187
Oxford City, 189
Oxford University, 187
Pembroke, 189
Penryn, 189
Penzance, 190
Peterborough, 190
Plymouth, 191
Pontefract, 191
Poole, 191
Portsmouth, 192
Preston, 193
Ramsey (Huntingdonshire), 193
Reading, 193
Retford, East, 193
Richmond (Yorks), 193
Ripon, 194
Rochester, 194
Romsay, 195
Ruthin, 195
Rye, 195
St Albans, 196
St Ives (Cornwall), 196
Saffron Walden, 196
Salford Hundred, 197
Salisbury, 199
Sandwich, 200
Scarborough, 200
Shaftesbury, 201
Shrewsbury, 201
Southampton, 201
South Molton, 202
Southwark, 202
Southwold, 203
Stafford, 203
Stamford, 203
Stannaries of Cornwall and Devon, 204
Stockport, 204
Stratford on Avon, 205
Sudbury, 205
Swansea, 205
Tamworth, 206
Tenby, 206
Tenterden, 206
Tewkesbury, 207
Thetford, 207
Tiverton, 207
Torrington, Great, 207
Totnes, 208
Truro, 208
Wallingford, 208
Walsall, 209
Warwick, 209
Wells, 209
Welshpool, 210
Wenlock, Much, 210
Weymouth and Melcombe Regis, 210
Wigan, 211
Winchester City, 211
Winchester, Bishop's Liberty of the Soke of, 212
Windsor, 212
Wirksworth, 211
Worcester, 212
York, 213

INDEX.

COUETS—continued

- London, local court of, 176
- Lord High Constable, 116
- Lord High Steward, as president at trial of peer for treason etc., 19
- Court of, 26
- Lords Justices of Appeal, 64
- Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, 23
- Ludlow, local court of, 179
- lunacy, courts having jurisdiction in, 94
- jurisdiction of Lord Chancellor in, 95
- Lyme Regis, local court of, 179
- Lynn or King's Lynn, local court of, 179
- Macclesfield, local court of, 180
- Maidenhead, local court of, 180
- Maidstone, local court of, 181
- Maldon, local court of, 181
- manorial courts, 215
- maritime appeals to Judicial Committee 49
- courts (miscellaneous), 105
- Marlborough, local court of, 182
- Marshal of England, 116
- judge, 74
- martial law, courts martial under, 104
- master in lunacy, 96
- Masters of the Supreme Court (C D), 67
- (K B D), 66
- (taxing office), 68
- matrimonial causes, jurisdiction in, 15
- Mayor's Court (London), as to, 176
- melius inquirendum*, award of, 110
- meane process, meaning of, 133
- military courts martial, 100
- Monmouth, local court of, 182
- municipal election petitions, trial of, 54
- naval courts, 108
- courts martial, 97
- Neath, local court of, 182
- Norwich, local court of, 182
- Newbury, local court of, 183
- Newcastle under Lyme, local court of, 183
- upon Tyne, local court of, 184
- Newport (Isle of Wight), local court of, 181
- Newport (Monmouth), local court of, 185
- non user does not take away jurisdiction, 130
- Northampton, local court of, 185
- Norwich, local court of, 185
- Nottingham, local court of, 186
- officers of Supreme Court, 66
- official referees, as to, 66
- solicitor, 71
- origin of inferior courts, 11
- Oswestry, local court of, 187
- Oxford city, local court of, 9
- Oxford University, local court of, 187
- oyer and terminer, commission of, 72
- palatine courts, 120
- pannage, meaning of, 113
- pardon cannot be pleaded in bar of impeachment, 20
- Parliament, High Court of, 19—26
- parliamentary election petitions, trial of, 54
- Passage, Chester Court of, 152
- Court of (Liverpool), 173
- pay office, 69
- paymaster-general, 69
- peer, trial of, for treason, felony or misprison, 19
- peerage claims, 20
- Pembroke, local court of, 189
- Penryn, local court of, 189
- Pentice, Chester Court of, 152

INDEX.

COURTS—continued.

- Pennance, local court of, 190
- personal actions, jurisdiction in, 16
- Peterborough, local court of, 190
- petition of appeal to Judicial Committee, 87
- petty court of the bailiffs of Ipswich, 169
  - sessions, 74
- pie poudre, court of, 186
- placita foresta*, meaning of, 118
- Plymouth, local court of, 191
- Pontefract, local court of, 191
- Poole, local court of, 191
- Portmainmote Court of Stockport, 204
- Portman's Mote, Court of (Ipswich), 169
- Portmote, Chester Court of, 152
- Portmote Court of Faversham, 161
  - Rochester, 194
- Portsmouth, local court of, 192
- Preston, local court of, 192
- Probate, Court of, jurisdiction of, 53
  - Divorce and Admiralty Division, constitution of, 62
  - jurisdiction of, 62
- registrars, 71
- prohibition, exercise of unauthorised jurisdiction restrained by, 14
- purpresture, meaning of, 113
- quarter sessions, 82
  - Court of (for City of London), 178
  - for City of London, 84
  - jurisdiction of, civil, 85
  - criminal, 85
- Queen's Bench, Court of, jurisdiction of, 52
- quorum, justice, of, 82
- Railway and Canal Commission, 217
- Ramecy (Huntingdonshire), local court of, 193
- rangers of the forest, 115
- Reading, local court of, 193
- Reading Clerk of House of Lords, 24
- real actions, jurisdiction in, 16
- record, court of, as to what constitutes a, 9
  - meaning of, 11
  - preparation of (in appeals to Judicial Committee), 85
- Regard, the, 111, 112
- regarders, 115
- regimental court martial, 100
- registrar of Court of Criminal Appeal, 93
  - the Judicial Committee, 50
- registrars, Admiralty, 71
  - district, 69
  - of the Chancery Division, 68
  - probate, 71
- removal of actions from district registry, 71
- Retford, East, local court of, 193
- Richmond (Yorks), local court of, 193
- riots, defaults of justices and others in, to be tried by special commission. 91
- Ripon, local court of, 194
- Rochester, local court of, 194
- Romsey, local court of, 195
- Rule Committee, 65
- Rules (Chancery) of Durham, as to, 127
  - in lunacy, as to, 95
  - of borough civil court, as to, 138
  - Court of Criminal Appeal, as to, 92
- Ruthin, local court of, 195
- Rye, local court of, 195
- sac, meaning of, 178
- Saffron Walden local court of, 196
- St. Albans, local court of, 196
- St. Ives (Cornwall), local court of, 196
- Salford Hundred, local court of, 197

INDEX.

COURTS—continued

- Salisbury, local court of, 199
- Salvage Commissioners of the Cinque Ports, 128
- Sandwich, local court of, 200
- Scarborough, local court of, 200
- sergeant at-arms of the House of Commons, 25
  - Lords, 24
- service out of the jurisdiction, 17, 57
- sessions, borough, 84
  - brewster or licensing, 86
  - general, 83
  - quarter, 82
  - special, 86
- Sewers, Commissioners of, 220
- Shaftesbury, local court of, 201
- Shepway, Court of, 129
- sheriff, jurisdiction of, 118
- sheriffs' courts (London) 177
- shipping casualties, investigation of, 107
- Shrewsbury, local court of, 201
- slave trade, jurisdiction as to vessels engaged in, 106
- Solicitor to the Suitors' Fund, 71
- Southampton, local court of, 201
- South Molton, local court of, 202
- Southwark, local court of, 202
- Southwold, local court of, 203
- special case, submission of, to Judicial Committee, 26
  - commissions, 90
  - sessions, 86
- Stafford, local court of, 203
- Stamford, local court of, 203
- Stannaries of Cornwall and Devon, local court of 204
- Staple, Court of the, 137
- stating a case for Court of Criminal Appeal, 93
- Stockport, local court of, 204
- Stratford on Avon, local court of, 205
- Sudbury, local court of, 205
- summary jurisdiction, courts of, 74
- superior court distinguished from inferior court, 11
- Supreme Court of Judicature, 51—74
  - constitution of, 51
  - Court of Appeal, 62
  - High Court of Justice, 52
  - masters of, 66
  - officers of, 68
- surcharge of the forest, meaning of, 114
- survey, court of (maritime), 107
  - of dogs, 111
- Swainmote, the, 111, 113
- Swansea, local court of, 205
- Tamworth, local court of, 206
- taxing masters, 68
- Tenby, local court of 206
- Tenterden, local court of, 206
- territorial waters, offences in, jurisdiction in case of, 17
- Tewkesbury, local court of, 207
- Thetford, local court of, 207
- thol, grant of, meaning of, 164
- Three Weeks Court of Buckingham, 149
- tithe commutation, powers of Board of Agriculture and Fisheries as to, 222
- Tiverton, 207
- Tolsey Court of Bristol, 147
  - Gloucester, 162
- Torrington, Great, local court of, 207
- Totnes, local court of, 208
- tour, sheriff's, 118
- trophy tax of City of London, 178
- Truro, local court of, 208
- Venre, Court of, Kingston upon Hull, 169

INDEX.

COURTS—continued

- verderers, 115
- vice admirals of the coast, 106
- view of frankpledge, 215
- Wallingford, local court of, 208
- Walsall, local court of, 209
- wapentake, meaning of, 197
- Warden of the Cinque Ports, 127
- ward-motes of City of London, 178
- Warwick, local court of, 209
- Wells, local court of, 209
- Welshpool, local court of, 210
- Wenlock, Much, 210
- Weymouth and Melcombe Regis, local court of, 210
- Wigan, local court of, 211
- wills, jurisdiction as to, 15
- Winchester (Bishop's Liberty of the Soke of), local court of, 212
- Winchester City, local court of, 211
- Windsor, local court of, 212
- Wirksworth and its liberties, local court of, 111
- Woodmote, the, 111, 112
- Woodwards, 115
- Worcester, local court of, 212
- wrecks, inquiries as to, 107
- writ of certiorari, 136
  - elegit*, 118
  - false judgment, as to, 10
  - inquiry as to damages, 119
- York, local court of, 213

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE 225—703

- abatement of nuisance, order for, 412
- abduction of child under fourteen, 620
  - girl under sixteen, 621
  - eighteen, 623
  - heiress, 619
  - woman with intent to marry, 620
- venue in, 282
- abortion, death by drugs taken to procure, 679
  - procuring of, 696
- accessories after the fact, 255
  - and principals, 247
  - before the fact, 253
  - in malicious damage, 792
  - none, in case of treason, 455
  - to treason felony, 458
- accident, as defence in assault cases, 607
  - defence of, 237
  - during dangerous performance, 626
- accomplice, evidence of, 408
- accounts, falsification of, 661
  - kept by Bank of England etc., of stock owners etc. false entry in, 765
  - neglect to keep, by collector of Inland Revenue 489
  - of administrator or curator of convict's property, 430
  - company, circulation of false, 661
  - omission to make entries in, 661
- accusation of crime, for purpose of extortion, 666
- acquittance, forgery of, 725
- Act, private, printing, 737
- action, penal, compounding, 504
- adherence to the King's enemies, 454
- adjournment of trial, 369
- administration of convict's property, 429
  - justice, offences relating to, 489
- Admiralty jurisdiction, 273
- admission of public to trial, 362
- admissions by defendant, admissibility of, 394
  - of facts in felony, 386
  - misdeemeanour, 386

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- admissions preliminary to trial, 386
- advertisements, betting, 551
- affidavit, forgery of, 739
  - making false, 491
- affray, 468
- "affray of the peace," bringing force in, 468
- age, evidence of, in offences under Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 .. 616
- agent, corrupt transaction with, 710
  - fraudulent transfer of goods by, 659
  - meaning of, in Prevention of Corruption Act, 485
  - responsibility of master for acts of, 234
- aggravation of offence by previous conviction for another, 383
- aliens, commission of high treason by, 450
  - deportation of, 418
- allegations in indictment to be positive, 340
- alliance, violation of, 450
- allocutus*, the, 375
- alteration of bank note, 715
  - verdict of jury by Court of Criminal Appeal, 436
- ambassadors amenable to laws for treason, when 451
  - exemption of, from criminal liability, 245
  - immunity of, 528
  - libel on, 528
  - suing, 528
- amendment of indictment, 344
- animals feræ naturæ, when subject of larceny, 640
  - straying, 512
- annuitant, personation of, 706
- annuities etc., misappropriation of, under Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 655
- appeal See also Court of Criminal Appeal
  - against order on parent etc. to pay fine for child, 437
  - sentence, 433
  - assignment of solicitor and counsel, 440
  - bail on, 438
  - by case stated, 433
  - costs of, 418
- Appel, Court of Criminal, 432 See Court of Criminal Appeal.
- appeal, Director of Public Prosecutions depends on, 440
  - evidence on, 439
  - frivolous or vexatious, summary determination of, 442
  - from order for restitution, 688
  - grounds for allowing, 434
  - materials for information of court, 438
  - notice of, 437
  - power of court in case of a special verdict, 436
    - to order appellant to be detained as criminal lunatic, 436
  - presence of appellant at hearing, 440
  - procedure, 437
  - report on case by judge, 438
  - sentence, computation of, on dismissal of appeal, 441
    - passed in absence of appellant, 440
  - shorthand notes of trial for use at, 442
  - suspension of sentence on, 438
  - to Court of Criminal Appeal, 432
    - House of Lords, 433
    - with leave, 434
    - without leave, 433
- appeals in criminal cases, 432
- appearance of defendant at trial 351
- apprehension of offenders, rewards for, 449
- apprentice, neglect to provide food etc. for, 623
- apprenticeship in sea fishing service, taking money for, 558
- aqueduct, injury to 785
- arabic figures, whether allowable in indictment, 340
- armed, going, 458
  - person by night, 675
  - robbery by, 663
- army officer, offences by, 488

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- arraignment, 353
- array, challenges to the, 359
  - quashing the, 360
- arrest, 296—309
  - breaking open doors to effect, as to, 307
  - lawful, as a defence in assault cases, 609
  - of judgment, 375
    - by court, 375
    - rioters, 474
  - time for, 304, 309
  - under Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 .306
    - warrant, 307
  - use of force on, 309
  - without warrant, 296
    - by peace officer, 298
      - under statutory powers, 303
      - private person, 296
      - statutes authorising, 300
- arsenal, obtaining and communicating information as to, 480
- arsenals etc., arson of, 773
- arson by statute, 770
  - common law 770
  - of arsenals, 773
    - crops, 774
    - King's ships etc., 773
    - vegetable produce, 774
- transportation, 630
  - in case of stealing from the person, 664
- assault, chastisement of servant, 608
  - consent in case of, 607
  - correction as a defence, 608
  - in general, 605
  - indecent, 619
  - lawful arrest, as a defence in, 609
  - medical examination of prisoner, 607
  - on peace officer, 505
    - person endeavouring to save cargo or ship in distress, 559
    - the King, 458
  - self defence as a defence in, 608
  - with intent to commit felony, 610
    - rob, 663
- assemblage of persons for purposes of smuggling, 522
- assembly, unlawful, 469
- assessor to Court of Criminal Appeal, 439
- assignment of perjury, 493
- assize courts, 266
- assizes, trial of offence, triable at quarter sessions (usually) not to be at, 326
- assumed name, signature of bill of exchange by, 729
- attempts to commit crime, 258
  - obtain property by false pretences, 702
- attorney, appearance of defendant by, 361
  - corporation aggregate pleads by, 351
  - power of, fraudulent abuse of, 659
- Attorney-General, duty of, to institute prosecutions in certain cases, 292
  - information by, 329
- autrefois acquit*, 355
- autrefois convict*, 355
- averments, defective, in indictment, 343
- backgammon, winning money at, 691
- backing warrants, as to, 308
- bail after commitment, 325
  - at preliminary examination, 319, 323
  - by King's Bench Division on refusal of justices, 325
  - cases in which it cannot be refused at preliminary examination, 324
  - discretion of judges as to, 323
  - etreatment of, on non-appearance of defendant, 331
  - granting of, a judicial act, 325
  - on appeal, 438

INDEX

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued

- ball, sureties, who may be, 325
    - treason, in cases of, 323
  - bailee, larceny by, 631
    - of goods in the possession of a, 635
  - bailliff executing civil process, killing, 578
    - extortion by, 482
  - Ballot Act, 1872, forgery of nomination paper under, 762
  - bank note, alteration, or forging of or uttering of forged, 715
    - causing name of "Bank of England" etc to appear on paper, 717
    - paper for, sale of, 717
    - engraving, 717
    - possession of forged, 716
      - instruments for making, 716
  - Bank of England, accounts of, falsification of, 755
    - or Bank of Ireland, embezzlement by officer of, 654
  - Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 387
  - bankrupt, statements by, how far evidence, 657
  - bar, trial at, on removal by certiorari, 350
  - barrator, definition of, 499
  - barratry, 499
    - person convicted of, practising as, 499
  - begging letters, 697
  - Behring Sea Award Act, offences against, 561
  - Behring Sea, killing seals in, as to, 279
  - bench warrant, issue of, on non appearance of defendant, 371
  - besetting in trade disputes, 565
  - best evidence, rule as to, 390
  - bestiality, 540
  - betting advertisements, 551
    - houses, 548
    - in streets, 551
    - keeping a house for purposes of, what is, 550
    - on games, 691
    - with minors, 552
  - bigamy, 512
    - evidence in, 534
    - venue in, 535
  - bill of exchange, alteration of, from lower to higher sum, 723
    - assumed name, use of, to defraud, 729
    - fictional name use of, to defraud, 729
    - forgery of, 727, 719
    - unauthorised acceptance upon, 730
  - binding over, 414
  - birth, concealment of, 598
  - blasphemous libel, 531
  - blasphemy, 530
  - Book of Common Prayer, depraving the, 532
    - refusal of priest to conform to, 532
  - books of Bank of England, falsification of, 755
    - company, alteration or destruction of, 661
  - bond, forgery of, 733
  - borrowing of money induced by false statement of money-lender, 704
  - Borstal institutions, detention in, 418
    - discharge by licence from, 420
    - transference from prison to, 419
    - to prison, 420
  - brawling in church, 478
  - breach of contract, criminal, 564
    - prison, 507
    - the peace, 468
    - trust, by public officer, 485
  - breaking into church etc, 675
    - necessary to constitute burglary, 669
  - bribery at elections, 484
    - of members of public bodies, 484
    - public officers, 484
  - bridge, injury to, 785

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- brothel, detention of woman in, 543
- brothels, 541
- buggery, 539
- building, destruction of, by gunpowder, 776
  - riotous demolition of, 473
- buoys, cutting away, 790
- burden of proof, 377
- burglary, 668—672
  - breaking necessary to constitute, 669
  - dwelling-house, meaning of, 668
  - entry necessary to constitute, 671
  - evidence in, 672
  - indictment in, 669
  - intent in, 671
  - night, meaning of, 668
- burial, failure to give, 552
  - offences relating to, 552
  - prevention of, 552
  - riotous behaviour at a, 479
- buying counterfeit gold or silver coins, 515
- canal, injury to, 784
- capacity, criminal, 239
- "capital stock of a body corporate," what included in, 755
- caption to an indictment, nature of, 349
  - deposition of witness dangerously ill, 328
- carnal knowledge of girl under thirteen, 615
  - sixteen, 616
  - thirteen, 613
- case stated, appeal by, 433
- casting away ships, 789
- cattle, injury to, 788
  - threats to wound or kill, 791
- cause, challenges for, 361
- caution to accused at close of examination of witnesses for prosecution, as to, 316
- certificate of character, false, 711
  - registry of ships not legally granted, use of, 557
- certified copy wilfully certifying as true a false, 741
- centurari, change of venue on removal by, 350
  - effect of, 349
  - grounds for grant of, 349
  - return to, 349
  - trial at bar on removal by, 350
  - writ of, 349, 350
- challenges for cause, 361
  - peremptory, 360
  - to fight, 469
    - the array, 359
    - polls, 360
  - severance in, 361
- champerty, 499
- chapel, meaning of, in Larceny Act, 675
- character, evidence as to, of witnesses other than defendant, 384
  - of, 382
    - bad, 380
    - general bad etc in cases of rape, 384
  - false certificates of, 711
  - of prosecutor, evidence of, 383
- cheat, common law, 689
- cheque, forgery of, 719, 723, 727
  - what included in term, 727
- child, abduction of, 620
  - deposition of (under Children Act, 1908), 328
  - murder, when subject of, 571
  - overlying, 626
- children, accidents to, during dangerous performance, 626
  - competency of, as witnesses, 400
  - cruelty to, 623
  - depositions of, when admissible at trial, 366

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- children, evidence of, 408
  - exclusion of, from certain trials, 363
  - neglect of, 623
- choke, attempt to, with intent to commit indictable offence, 602
- choses in action, not the subject of larceny, 641
- Christian religion, bringing into contempt, 479
- church, breaking into, 675
  - monument in, injury to, 787
  - riotous demolition of, 778
- Church of England, offences against, 581
- circuits, enumeration of, 266
- circumstantial evidence in murder cases, 588
- civil proceedings, different from criminal proceedings, 886
- clearance of friendly society not an acquittance or receipt, 725
- clergyman, obstruction of a, 478
- clerk, falsification of accounts by, 666
  - larceny by, 644
  - of assize etc, exaction of fees by, 482
  - who is a, 651
- club, bo. & fide, not a house used for betting, 550
- clubs used for gaming, 546
- coal, larceny from mines, 639
- Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1897, forgery of certificate etc under, 761
- coercion of husband, presumption as to, 214
- cognovit actionem*, false acknowledgment of, 739
- coin, defacing King's, 518
  - King's gold or silver, lightening, 515
- coinage offences, 514
- coining tool, conveying out of the Mint, 520
- coins, counterfeit, making, 514
- collateral acts, in furtherance of a common object, responsibility for, 252
- collision, failure to help master in, 568
- commitment for trial, 420
- committal for contempt of court, 501
  - of witness refusing to be bound over, 922
- "committed for trial," meaning of, as to, 329
- commission, evidence on, 387
  - in army etc, sale of, 486
- Commissioner of Assize, as to, 267
- Commissioners of Customs, forgery of signature etc, 745
  - Inland Revenue, imitation etc of paper, dies etc of, 745
  - Treasury, forgery of name of, 749
- Commissioner, special, reference of questions to, by Court of Criminal Appeal, 439
- common law cheat, 649
  - forgery, 710
  - jurisdiction, 272
  - purpose, necessary to constitute a principal in the second degree, 250
- company, director etc of, offences by, 655
- company's books, destruction or falsification of, 660
- compassing the death of the King, 450
- compellable witnesses, 401
- compensation of person injured by felony, order for, 449
  - to innocent purchaser of stolen property, 688
  - relatives of man killed in attempt to apprehend offenders, 449
- compensations, 445
- competency of children as witnesses, 400
  - deaf and dumb persons as witnesses, 400
  - drunken persons etc as witnesses, 400
  - idiots etc as witnesses, 400
  - witnesses in criminal proceedings, 400
- complicity, degrees of, 247
- compound larceny, 627
- compounding felony, 503
  - penal action, 504
- compulsion, as a defence, 213
- concealment of birth, 598
  - indictment in, 598
  - verdict of, 592

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- concealment of documents or incumbrance, 705
  - treasure trove, 521
- conditional discharge under Probation of Offenders Act, 1907...418
- condonation in rape, 618
- conduct of proceedings, by person bound to appear and prosecute, 321
- confessions by defendant, 394
  - one or more defendants, 397
  - conviction of defendant on own confession, 397
  - person in authority, meaning of, 395
  - whole of, must be given in evidence 398
  - written, as evidence, 399
- "conscientious objection," not a defence, 236
- consent, defence of, 237
  - in assault cases, 606
  - incest, 617
  - indecent assault, 619
  - rape, 612
- conspiracy to murder, 595
- conspiracy, 260
  - for seduction of women, 543
  - seditions, 461
  - to defraud, 708
    - indictment in, 708
  - to obstruct the course of justice, 500
  - venue in, 283
- constable, parish, who bound to serve as, 487
  - special, refusal to serve as, 487
- Constitution, libel on the, 463
- contempt of court, 501
  - attachment for, 501
- contempts against the King, 459
- continuing acts, 281
- contract, criminal breach of, 564
  - for service of gas, breach of, 564
  - water, breach of, 564
  - or hiring, breach of, so as to endanger life, 564
- contractor (Government), communication of information by, 481
- contributory negligence as a defence in manslaughter, 586
- conveyances, fraudulent, 705
- conveying coming tools out of the Mint, 520
- convict, administration of property of, 429
  - at large, 512
  - definition of, 429
  - disabilities of, 429
  - property of, curator of, 430
- conviction, disqualifications following on, 428
  - of defendant on own confession, 397,
  - offence different from that charged in indictment, 371
  - (previous), charging, 374
  - evidence of, 382
  - punishment after, 411
- copper coin, making counterfeit, 518
- copyholds, forgery of court rolls, 740
- corn, attempt to set fire to, 778
- coroner, court of, jurisdiction of, 269
  - extortion, by, 482
  - inquisition of, in case of treasure trove, 521
  - trial on, 330
- corporation aggregate, criminal liability of, 239
  - pleads by attorney, 351
  - proper name of, must appear in indictment. 335
- corpsa, disinterment of, 553
  - disposal of, to avoid inquest, 561
  - exposure of, 553
- corpus delicti*, proof of, 378
- correction, killing in course of, 577
  - of verdict, 373
- corroboration in rape cases etc , 613

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continues.

- corroboration, when necessary, 388
- corrosives, injuries by, 603
- corrupt rewards, 504
- costs, 445
  - amount of, ascertainment of, 446
    - which may be awarded, 445
  - enforcement of order for payment of, 447
  - in Court of Criminal Appeal, 448
  - incorrigible rogue, in case of, 448
  - of person acquitted, 447
  - preliminary examination, 328
  - prosecution, payment of, out of local funds, 445
  - respondent in Court of Criminal Appeal, 449
  - solicitor and counsel, 445
- order for payment of, 446
- payment of, by person convicted, 447
  - treasurer of county council or borough, 446
- scale of, regulation of, by Secretary of State, 446
- counsel, appearance of, at trial, 352
  - instruction of, from the dock, 352
- counterfeit coin, buying, receiving, paying or putting off, 515
  - copper making, 518
    - or possessing machines for making, 520
  - exportation of, 516
  - foreign copper, making 519
    - gold and silver, importation of, 519
    - making, 518
    - uttering, 519
  - gold or silver, making or possessing machines for making, 520
  - importation of 515
  - making, 514
  - possession of three or more counterfeit coins, 516
  - uttering, 516
  - what is, 514
- counterfeiting, offence of, essentials of, 515
- counties of cities, enumeration of, 286
  - towns, enumeration of, 286
- counting house, meaning of 673
- counts in an indictment, 334
- coupon, company engraving, 757
  - newspaper, for guessing winner, 550
  - stock engraving or forging, 756
- court, contempt of, 501
  - of assize 268
  - coroner, 269
  - Criminal Appeal, 432
    - appeal to, from order for restitution, 688
    - assessor to, 439
    - costs in, 448
    - powers exercisable by single judge, 443
    - procedure, 437
    - reference of questions to special commissioner, 439
    - to, by Secretary of State, 443
    - registrar of, duties of, 441
  - King in Parliament, 270
  - quarter sessions, 267
  - Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, criminal jurisdiction of, 270
- court roll of copyhold estate forgery of 740
- courts, criminal 263
  - martial, 271
- credibility of witnesses evidence as to, 384
- cremation, offences relating to, 552
- Cremation Act, 1902, offences under, 553
- crime, classification of, 246
  - definition of, 232, 425
  - elements of, 233
- criminal courts, 265
  - capacity, 239

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- criminal jurisdiction, limits of, 371
  - lunatic, permitting escape of, 310
  - proceedings, difference from civil proceedings, 386
- Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, offences under, 614
- crimes, arson of, 774
  - larceny of, 637
- cross-examination as to impartiality, 384
  - in rape, 383, 613
  - of defendant, 367, 404
- Crown, succession to, libel as to, 464
- cruelty to children, 623
- culpable homicide, 570
- curator of convict's property, 430
- damage, malicious, to property, 768
- dangerous performance accidents during, 626
- date false date to deed, 712
- deadly weapon, use of, to repel assault 609
- deaf and dumb persons, competency of, as witnesses, 400
- death, acceleration of, may be 572
  - after a year and a day from injury inflicted, 571
  - from fright may be manslaughter, 571
  - punishment of, 409
- debentures forgery of, 733
- decoy, offences against, 537
- declaration, statutory, making a false, 496
- Declaration of Title Act, 1862, forgery of certificate under, 74
- decoying away of child, 620
  - Pacific Islanders, 527
- deed, definition of (within Forgery Act, 1861) 733
  - false acknowledgment of, 740
  - date to, 712
  - forgery of, 733
- deeds, forgery under Acts for registry of, 740
  - larceny of, 637
- defacing King's coin, 518
- defamatory libel, 569
- defence, the, 367
- defendant, cross examination of, 404
  - evidence of, 402
    - husband of, 405
    - wife of, 405
  - when called as a witness, 467
  - compellable as a witness 403
- defendants, joinder of several, 342
- degrees of criminal liability, 246
- delirium tremens*, as a defence, 242
- delivery of judgment, 376
- demanding money etc under forged instrument, 762
  - with menaces, 664
- demolition of buildings, riotous, 473
  - churches, houses etc, 777
  - house by tenants, 780
- demurrer, objection to indictment by, 355
- deportation of aliens, 418
- depositions, copies of, right of accused to, 322
  - forgery of, 739
  - how taken, 315
  - of child 328
    - defendant, when evidence against him 399
    - children when admissible in evidence, 366
    - witness dangerously ill 327
    - witnesses, when read at trial, 365
  - transmission of, to officer of court of trial, 322
  - use of, at trial, of witness dead or dangerously ill, 329
- depraving the Book of Common Prayer, 532
  - sacrament, 532
- detainer forcible, 476
- detention during King's pleasure of person under sixteen, 421

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- detention for period not exceeding one month of person under sixteen, 421
  - specified period of person under sixteen, 421
  - in a Borstal institution 418
  - industrial school, 422
  - reformatory school, 422
  - "retreat," 418
- of appellant, as criminal lunatic, 436
- inebriate in certified reformatory, 417
- woman in brothel, 543
- preventive, 415
- die, meaning of, in Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891.. 747
- difference between criminal and civil proceedings 486
- dignity, name of, must be given in indictment, 336
- director, alteration or destruction of company's books by, 660
  - misappropriation by, 655
  - of company, offences by, 655
- Director of Public Prosecutions, as to, 292
  - defence by, at appeal, 440
- discharge by licence from Borstal institution, 420
  - conditional, under Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 413
  - of jury in course of trial 370
    - on disagreement, 374
- disclosure of official secrets, 480
- discovery of documents in criminal cases 387
- discretion of court as to amount of punishment, 423
- disinterment of corpse, 552
- dismissal "without prejudice," 357
- disorderly houses, 541
- disputes between employers and workmen, 565
- disqualifications following on conviction, 428
- disturbance of public worship 477
  - religious meetings, 478
- 'dividend warrant, fraudulently making out, 757
- dockyard obtaining and communicating information as to 490
- "document of title to goods" meaning of, in Larceny Act, 1901 659
- documents, fraudulent concealment of, 705
  - in possession of defendant, secondary evidence of, 390
  - production of, in criminal cases, 387
  - public, proof of 902
  - unstamped, admission of, 398
- dog corrupt taking of reward for return of, 505
- drafting of indictment, 345
- drawing bill of exchange by procuration, 727
- drilling, unlawful, 467
  - when not illegal, 468
- driving, furious, 606
- drown, attempts to with intent to commit murder 594
- drugs, administration of, with intent to commit indictable offence, 603
- drunken persons etc., competency of, as witnesses, 400
- drunkards habitual, punishment of, 417
- drunkenness, 553
  - as a defence, 212
  - effect of, in murder and manslaughter, 581
- duels, 468
  - principals and seconds in, when guilty of murder, 578
- dwelling-house, being found by night in, 675
  - breaking into, with intent to commit felony therein, 673
  - building within curtilage of, entry of, 674
  - defence of, killing in course of, 587
  - demolition of, by tenants, 780
  - entry into, by night, 673
  - meaning of, in burglary, 668
  - stealing in 674
  - threat to burn, 791
- dying declarations, admissibility of, 893
  - in murder and manslaughter cases, 589
- dwelling, forcible entry not applicable to, 474
- East India bonds, forgery of, 733

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued

- ecclesiastical courts, 371
- election, prosecutor put to, as to what charge to proceed on, when, 343
- electricity, larceny of, 644
- elisors the, 360
- embezzlement, 649
  - by officers of Banks of England and Ireland, 654
  - person in King's service, 654
  - policeman, 654
  - charge of different embezzlements in indictment, 651
    - essentials of, 653
    - evidence in, 651
  - of money of unlawful society, 653
    - venue in, 654
    - verdict in, 650
- embracery, 489
- enemies, distinguished from rebels, 454
- engine calculated to destroy life, setting, 605
- engraving bank note etc., 717
  - stock certificate or coupon, 756
- engrossing, 562
- enlistment, foreign, 528
- entertainment, unlicensed place of, 544
- entry, false, on register of births etc., 742
  - forcible, 474
  - necessary to constitute burglary, 671
  - of dwelling house with intent to commit felony, 673
    - judgment, 377
  - in banker's pass book is a receipt, 726
  - on register (Land Transfer), fraudulent, 705
- escape, 608
  - aiding prisoner in custody for felony to, 510
    - of war to, 510
    - to escape from custody on civil process, 609
  - from prison aiding, 510
  - permitting criminal lunatic to, 510
- established religion, seditious attacks on, 531
- estreatment of bail on non appearance of defendant, 351
  - recognisances, 413
- evidence, 377--408
  - admission or rejection of, at preliminary examination, 310
  - admissions by defendant, 394
    - preliminary to trial, 386
  - against co-defendant, 402
  - before Court of Criminal Appeal, 439
    - grand jury, 346
  - best, rule as to, 390
  - competency of witnesses, 400
  - confession by defendant, 394
    - one or more defendants, 397
    - written, 399
  - credibility of witnesses, 384
  - difference between civil and criminal proceedings, 386
  - dying declarations, admissibility of, 393
  - false, incitement of person to give, 498
    - manufacture of, 498
  - forgery of instruments of, 735
  - former evidence when admissible, 399
  - hearsay evidence, 393
  - in accusation of crime for purpose of extortion, 606
    - bigamy, 534
    - burglary, 672
    - embezzlement, 651
    - false pretences, 693
    - forgery, 764
      - as to whether "order" or "request" etc., 724
    - high treason, 457
    - larceny, 649
    - manslaughter cases, 698

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

evidence—continued

- in murder cases, 588
    - perjury, 494
    - procuring abortion, 597
    - rape cases, 618
    - receiving stolen goods, 681
    - riotous demolition of building, 778
    - seditious libel, 462
  - of accomplice, 408
    - age in offences under Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 616
    - bad character, 380
    - character, 382
      - of prosecutor, 383
    - children, 408
    - commission of similar offences, 380
    - defendant, 388, 402
    - husband of defendant, 388
    - previous conviction, 382
    - propensities, 380
    - subornation, 380
    - wife in treason, 405
      - of defendant, 388, 405
  - on commission, 387
  - relevant facts, 378
  - secondary, of document in possession of defendant, 390
  - statement by defendant before examining justices, 399
    - made by authority of prisoner, admissibility of, 397
    - in presence of accused, admissibility of, 398
  - statements and depositions by bankrupt, how far, 657
  - unstamped document admission of, 384
- examination at trial, 363
- exception in enacting clause of statute, when to be negatived in indictment, 338
- exchanges (army), sale of, 486
- Exchequer bill, forgery of, 731
  - making instruments for, 731
  - purchase of paper provided for, 732
- execution of criminal, when murder, 675
- exemptions from criminal liability, 244
- exhibition, indecent, 537
- "expenses" of solicitor and counsel assigned to appellant, 448
- explosion, causing, with intent to murder, 594
  - doing act with intent to cause, 775
  - injury by, 604
  - likely to endanger life, 775
- explosive substance, definition of, 775
  - destruction of building by, 776
  - making, 775
  - manufacture of, with intent to commit felony, 792
  - placing in building, 777
- Explosive Substances Act, 1883, accessory to crime under, 776
  - offences under, as to, 277
- explosives, injury by, 775
- Explosives Act, 1875 licence under, forgery of, 761
- exporting counterfeit gold or silver coin, 516
- exposure, indecent, 547
  - of corpse, 553
- expulsion of alien offenders, 418
- extortion, 481
  - accusation of crime for purpose of, 666
  - by threats, 664
  - of valuable securities, 667
- factor, fraud by, 657
- facts, necessity for setting out with certainty in indictment 337
  - relevant, 378
- false acknowledgment of recognisances of bail or cognovit actionem, 729
  - affidavits, making of, 491
  - certification of copy of record, 737
- declarations, notices, certificates required by Marriage Act, 1836 530

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued

- false entry in accounts of stock holders at Bank of England, 755
  - on register of births etc., 742
- evidence, incitement of person to give, 498
  - manufacture of, 498
- imprisonment, 606
- instrument, what is, 712
- pretence, continuing, 697
- pretences, 690—701
  - attempts to obtain property by, 702
    - indictment in, 702
  - essentials of, 692
  - evidence in, 693
  - execution of security, obtaining, by, 703
  - indictment for, 694
    - form of, 694
  - "obtaining" in, 696
  - order for restitution of property obtained by, 701
  - revesting of property obtained by, 701
  - trial for bare prosecution for larceny, 691
  - venue in, 381, 700
- promissory oath, making of, is not perjury, 491
- rumour spreading, to affect prices, 562
- statement by director of company, 661
- token, use of, 689
- trade description, 567, 759
- falsification of accounts, 601
  - of stockholders in Bank of England etc., 755
- peril, 705
- fear, putting in, 661
- felony, admission of facts in, 386
  - arrest in case of, 296
  - charge of different felonies in different counts, given rise to election, when, 342
  - compounding, 503
  - count for, not to be joined with count for misdemeanour, 342
  - defendant in, called upon, 375
  - definition of, 216
  - forfeiture of offices by person convicted of, 428
  - incapacities of person convicted of, 429
  - killing in course of commission of, 579
  - misdemeanour and treason, points of difference between, 246
  - misprision of, 503
- fictional name, signature of note etc. by, 712
- fight, challenges to, 469
  - prize, 470
- fighting in a public place, 468
- findings, gold or silver etc., unlawful possession of, 515
- finding lost articles, when larceny, 630
- fine for malicious damage to property, 793
  - of person under sixteen, 424
  - punishment of, 412
- fish ponds, injury to, 785
- fisheries, seal, 561
- fixtures, larceny of, 639
- forcible detainer, 476
  - entry, 474
- foreign documents, forgery of, 767
- Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, offences under, 528
  - Marriage Act, 1892, offences under, as to, 278
- foreign state, piracy under colour of commission from, 528
  - states communication of information to, 480
- forestalling, 563
- forfeiture of offices of person convicted of felony, 428
  - recognisances, 414
- forged instrument, demanding money under, 762
  - uttering of, 714
- forgery, 710—767
  - alteration of bill of exchange from lower to higher sum, 728

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

forgery—continued

- assumed name, use of, to defraud, 729
  - by statute, 715
  - cheque is both warrant and order for payment of money, 723
  - common law 710
  - definitions of, 710
  - evidence in, 764
    - as to whether "order" or "request" etc., 744
  - false certificates of character, 711
  - fictitious signatures, 712
  - imitation of wrappers, 711
  - indictment in, 762
  - intent in, 763
  - of acquittance, 725
    - bank note, 715
    - bill of exchange 727
      - sale (ship), 752
    - bond 733
    - builder's certificate (ship), 752
  - certificate of birth etc of nominee under Government Annuities Act, 1829
    - 748
    - discharge under Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 753
    - Inland Revenue Commissioners, 744
    - paymaster general or officer of Bank of England, 744
    - redemption of land tax, 748
    - registry (ship), 752
    - valuation under Slave Trade Act, 1824 760
  - under Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1874 713
  - Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1897 761
  - Declaration of Title Act, 1862 741
- oblique, 727
  - oddell, 734
  - copy of receipt, 726
  - court rolls, 710
  - debtors, 733
  - declaration (ship), 752
  - deeds, 743
  - depositions, affidavit etc, before justice of peace, 739
  - documents in case of salvage, 580
    - relating to deposit in seaman's savings bank, 751
    - to obtain relief from Merchant Seaman's Fund, 752
  - under Acts for registry of deeds 740
    - Merchant Shipping Act, 752
    - Government Annuities Act, 1832. 743
  - East India bonds, 743
  - entry in register of births, 741
  - evidence, 738
  - Exchequer bills, 731
  - foreign documents, 767
  - hall marks on plate, 758
  - identification mark (motor car), 761
  - incomplete document, 722
  - instruments of evidence, 735
  - King's seals, 735
  - licence under Explosives Act, 1875 761
    - London Hackney Carriage Act, 1843 760
  - marriage licence, 743
  - minutes etc. relating to pensions, 751
  - mortgage (ship), 752
  - name of Commissioners of Treasury, 749
    - officer entitled to pension, 751
  - nomination paper under Ballot Act, 1872 762
    - Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 763
  - order for delivery or transfer of goods, 719
  - orders for payment of money, 719
  - power of attorney for transference of stock, 755
  - processes of court, 735
  - promissory note 719

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued

forgery—continued

of receipt, 719, 725

(copy of), 725

records, 735

register code, 753

seal of Commissioner for Oaths, 739 court of record, 736

document, 737

Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, 738

Public Record Office, 737

register office or burial board, 733 or signature of Master in Lunacy, 739 to municipal bye-law, 740 security, genuineness necessary, 724

signature of assistant record keeper, 747

attesting witness, 731

etc. of Commissioner of Customs etc., 745 of district registrar, 739

judge, 737

probate registrar, 738

sea fishery officer, 754

to minutes of municipal borough council, 740 pictures, 711

summons of justice of peace, 719

surveyor's certificate (ship), 752

telegrams, 762

trade marks, 759

transfer of stock, 754

Treasury bill, 731

undertaking for payment of money, 719, 720

void instrument, 721

war bond, 731

warrant for payment of money, 719, 720

warranty for purposes of Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, 760

will, 734

pensions in relation to, 731

punishment of, 766

receipt (spent) alteration of, not, 726

signature of, for another, not, 728 resemblance to valid document, required, 713

summary conviction for, 767

uttering, 714

writing unauthorised acceptance of bill of exchange, 730 formal judgment, when drawn up, 377 fortress, obtaining and communicating information as to, 490 fortunes, telling, 703

fraud, by directors, 655

factors and agents, 657

telling fortunes etc., 691 conspiracy to carry out, 706 in relation to shipping documents, 557 obtaining property by, 688

of pawnbroker, revocation of licence, 684

winning money at gaming by, 691

fraudulent abuse of power of attorney, 637 concealment of documents or incumbrances, 705

conveyances, 705

drawing of bills of exchange etc., 719

falsification of pedigree, 705 inducement to borrow money, 704 misappropriation of property entrusted, 686 frivolous or vexatious appeal, summary determination of, 442 fruit, destruction of, 783

larceny of, 637

furious driving, 605

gallery, public, injury to articles in, 787 game, killing in lawful, 582

gamekeeper, entitled to arrest poachers, killing, 573

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- gaming, clubs used for, 546
  - houses, 545
  - unlawful, 546
  - winning money at, by fraud, 691
- gaoler, exaction of gratuity by, 483
  - neglect of duty of, 487
- gas, contract for service of, breach of, 564
  - larceny of, 643
- general issue, the, 358
  - warrants, as to, 291
- girl under eighteen, abduction of, 623
  - sixteen, abduction of, 621
  - sixteen, carnal knowledge of, 616
  - thirteen, carnal knowledge of, 615
  - thirteen, permitting resort for purposes of carnal knowledge, 617
- girls, offences against, 611
- going armed, 468
- gold coin, counterfeit, 516
  - or silver obtained from lightening coin, unlawful possession of, 516
- good behaviour, binding over to be of, 414
  - security for, by youthful offender, 424
- goods in course of manufacture, damage to, 780
- Government contractor, communication of information by, 481
  - offences against, 450
  - marks, misapplication of, 513
- grand jury, bills found by, which quarter sessions cannot try, how dealt with, 348
  - discharge of, 317
  - evidence before, 346
  - immunity of, 348
  - indictment, finding of, by 345—348
  - powers of, 347
    - proceedings before, 346
- graveyard, delivery of address not permitted by, lawful authority in, 479
- grounds of defence and exemptions from criminal liability, 236
- gunpowder, manufacture of, with intent to commit felony, 792
  - placing, in building, 777
- habitual criminals, punishment of, 415
  - drunkards, 417
- Hackney Carriage Act, 1843, forgery of licence under, 760
- hall marks on plate, offences connected with, 758
- harbouring thieves, 555
- hard labour, imprisonment with, 110
- hay, attempt to set fire to, 773
  - etc., threat to burn, 791
- hearing in camera, 363
  - of an indictment the, 362
- hearsay evidence, 393
- heiress, abduction of, 619
- High Court of Parliament, 265
- high seas, offences peculiar to the, 523
  - treason, 450—457
    - adherence to the King's enemies, 454
    - aliens, when guilty of, 451
    - ambassadors, when guilty of, 451
    - compassing the death of the King, 451
    - different species may be joined in different counts, 342
    - evidence at trial for, 457
    - indictment for, 451
    - levying war against the, 452
    - limitation of time in, 466
    - married woman's position, 457
    - overt act, nature of, 451
    - witnesses, number of, necessary to conviction, 456
- highways, non-repair of, appeal in case of conviction, 444
  - evidence of previous conviction in case of, 383
- hiring, contract of, breach of, so as to endanger life, 564
- homicide, 570
  - excusable, 587

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- homicide—continued.
  - justifiable, 586
- hop-binds, destruction of, 781
- house See also dwelling house.
  - defence of one a, 470
  - riotous demolition of, 778
- House of Lords, appeal to, 533
- housebreaking, 672—676
- houses, betting, 548
  - disorderly, 541
  - gaming, 545
- hue and cry, 300
- husband, conviction of, for receiving goods stolen by wife, 679
  - larceny by, 684
  - of defendant, evidence of, 405
  - presumption as to wife's acts being done under coercion of, 244
- identification mark (motor car), forgery of, 761
- idiot, carnal knowledge of, 613
- idiots etc., competency of, as witnesses, 400
  - rape of, 612
- ignorance of law, as a defence, 236
- immunity of jury, 375
- impartiality, cross-examination as to, 394
- impeachment, 265
- importing counterfeit foreign gold or silver and, 519
  - gold or silver coins, 516
- imprisonment, false, 606
  - of person under sixteen, 422
  - with hard labour, 410
  - without hard labour, 410
- in camera*, hearing in, 368
- inadvertence without culpability, defence of, 237
- incapacities of person convicted of felony, 429
- incest, 617
- incitement to murder, 595
  - mutiny, 464
- incomplete document, forgery of, 722
- incorrigible rogue, costs in case of, 444
- indecent, gross, with a male person, 541
- indecent assault, 619
  - exhibition, 537
  - exposure, 537
  - prints, procuring of, 538
    - sending by post, 539
  - publication, 537
- indictable slanders, 369
- indictment, 329—351
  - after verdict by coroner's jury, 330
  - allegations in, to be positive, 330
  - amendment of, 344
  - arabic figures, whether allowable in, 340
  - caption of, nature of, 348
  - certificate of, forgery of, 736
  - certiorari*, removal of indictment by, 349
  - contents of, 334
  - copy of, to be supplied to accused, 456
  - defect in, when cured by verdict, 343
  - defective averments in, 343
  - demurrer, procedure by, 355
  - double, not to be, 340
  - drafting of, 345
  - exception in enacting clause, when to be negatived in, 355
  - finding of, by a grand jury, 345
  - form of, necessary contents of indictment, 334
    - specific allegations, 334
  - in assaults on the King, 459
    - attempts to obtain property, 702
    - burglary, 669, 671

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

indictment—continued

- in case of habitual drunkard, 554
  - concealment of birth, 599
  - conspiracy to defraud, 709
  - false pretences, 694
  - forgery, 762
  - forging order for payment of money, 722
  - high treason, 455
  - larceny, 645
  - manslaughter, 587
  - murder, 587
  - obscene libel, 538
  - perjury, 495
  - purchase of gold or silver coins etc., 515
  - receiving stolen goods, 677, 681
  - robbery, 662
  - sedition libel, 462
  - setting fire to house with intent to defraud insurance company, 769
  - stabbing cases, 601
  - subornation of perjury, 498
  - intent, necessity for setting out with certainty, 337
    - joinder in, 342
    - lies, when, 333
    - money, how described in, 340
    - motion to quash, 334
    - nature of, 333
    - particulars of matters charged in, when given, 338
    - place, why mentioned in, 337
    - preferring an, modes of formal accusation of crime, 329
      - under Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 331
    - presentation of, when the first step, 371
    - removal of, by certiorari, 349
      - requisites to, under Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 331
      - right of private person to prefer bill of, at common law, 331
      - signature of, by foreman of grand jury, 347
      - stay of proceedings, by nolle prosequi, 350
      - trial of, 371—377 See trial of indictment
      - verdict to be given separately on each count in, 343
      - words essential in, in various crimes, 341
        - the essence of the offence to be set out verbatim in, 339
  - inducement of persons to become shareholders, fraudulent, 658
  - inducements to confession 394
  - industrial school, detention in, 422
  - intemperate home detention in, 417
  - intemperate, punishment of, 417
  - infamous crime, accusation of, for purpose of extortion, 666
  - infants, betting with, 632
    - criminal capacity of, 239
    - invitation to, to borrow money, 552
  - information by master of Crown Office at instance of private person, 330
    - ex officio*, 329
    - in criminal cases, kinds of, 329
  - informer, who may be, 292
  - innkeepers, offences by 555
  - Inland Revenue Commissioners, forgery of certificate of, 744
  - inquest prevention of, 501
  - inquisition of coroner in case of treasure trove, 521
    - trial on, 330
  - insanity, defence of, 241
    - moral, as a defence, 242
    - verdict of, 242, 373
  - instrument, false, what is, 712
  - intent, averment of, as to, 234
    - criminal, presumption of, 330
    - definition of, 236
    - in burglary, 671
      - false pretences, 697
      - forgery, 713, 763

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- intent in larceny, 629
  - necessity for setting out with certainty in indictment, 337
  - proof of, 234
  - seditious, definition of, 463
- interrogatories not used in criminal cases, 387
- intimidation in trade disputes, 565
  - of witnesses, 498
- irregular solemnisation of marriage, 535
- issue, the general, 358
- jetty, injury to, 784
- Jesuits, offences by, 479
- joinder in indictments, 342
  - of separate treasons or separate misdemeanours in separate counts, 342
  - several defendants, 342
  - offences, 342
- joint owner, larceny by, 635
- journals of Parliament, spurious copies of, 737
- judge, forgery of signature of, 737
  - insults to, 502
  - notes of, furnished to Court of Criminal Appeal, 438
  - summing up of, 369
- judgment, arrest of, 375
  - by court, 375
  - delivery of, 376
  - entry of, 377
  - formal, when drawn up, 377
  - minute of, 377
  - of outlawry, 432
  - respite of, 375
  - vacation of, 377
- judicial officers, bribery of, 484
- jurisdiction, Admiralty, 273
  - common law, 272
  - in respect of crimes committed out of England, 276
  - plea to the, 355
- juror incapacitated, procedure in case of, 370
- objection of, to serve, 362
- jury, conviction by, of offence of character deficient to charge, 371
- discharge of, in course of trial, 370
  - on disagreement, 374
- function of, in prosecution for libel, 463
- giving the prisoner in charge to, 362
- immunity of, 375
- of matrons, 375
- petty, 359
- retirement of, 371
- separation of, during adjournment, 369
- swearing the, 362
- verdict of alteration of, by Court of Criminal Appeal, 436
- view by, 369
- justice, administration of, offences relating to, 489
- justices of the peace, jurisdiction of, 268
- justifiable homicide, 586
- keeping a house for purposes of betting, what is, 550
- Kidnapping Act, 1872, offences under, 527
- King, adherence to the enemies of the, 454
  - assaults on the, 458
  - exemption of, from criminal liability, 244
  - compassing the death of, 471
  - levying war against the, 452
- King's Bench Division, criminal jurisdiction of, 266
  - offences committed out of England triable in, 280
- King's naval services, offences in connection with, protection from, 750
- King's peace, person murdered must be in, 571
- King's seals, forgery of, 735
- King's service, embezzlement by person in, 654
- King's ships, setting fire to, 773
- labour, hard, imprisonment with, 410

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued

- land tax, forgery of certificate of redemption of, 748
- Land Transfer Act, 1375, fraudulent entry on register, 705
- suppression of documents under, 705
- larceny, 627—649
  - asportation, 630
  - at common law, 628
  - by bailee, 632
    - clerk, 644
    - husband, 634
    - jointowner, 635
    - partner, 635
    - public servant, 644
    - servant, 644
    - statute, 636
    - tenants, 639
    - trick, 633
    - wife, 631
  - shows in action not the subject of, 611
  - compound, meaning of, 627
  - counts in indictment for, 648
  - essentials of, 628
  - evidence in, 649
  - indictment in, 645
  - lost articles, finding, 630
  - of animals ferre naturæ, 641
    - coal from mines, 638
    - deeds, 637
    - document of title to goods, 642
    - electricity, 644
    - fixtures, 639
    - gas, 643
    - goods delivered by mistake, 636
      - in the possession of a bailee, 635
    - ore, 638
    - plants, 638
    - public ornaments etc., 639
    - records, 643
    - title deeds, 637
    - trees, growing crops etc., 637
    - valuable security, 641
    - water, 643
    - will, 642
    - wreck etc., 640
    - yarn, articles of silk alpaca mohair etc., 644
  - orders for restitution of stolen property, 684
  - prosecution for, barred by trial for false pretences, 691
  - punishment for, 627
  - revesting of goods, 685, 686
  - value of some sort essential to, 636
  - venue in, 281, 288, 649
- last word right to, 368
- legal aid before Court of Appeal, 440
  - under Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1901, 318
  - when prisoner entitled to, under Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 352
- letters, demanding money by, with threats, 664
- levying war against the King, 452
  - constructive, 453
  - express, 458
- libel, 569
  - as to succession to the Crown, 464
  - blasphemous, 531
  - frustration of jury in prosecutions for, 463
  - in newspapers, prosecutions for, 463
  - obscene, indictment in, 538
  - on administration of justice, 462
    - ambassadors, 528
    - Constitution, 463
    - scandalous, 461

INDEX

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued

- libel—continued
  - statutory, 463
  - threat to publish, 668
- library, injury to articles in, 787
- licence, marriage, forgery of, 743
  - of pawnbroker, revocation of, for fraud, 684
  - to be at large, 416
  - under Explosives Act, 1875, forgery of, 761
  - London Hackney Carriage Act, 1843, forgery of, 760
- lightening King's gold or silver coin, 515
- lighthouse authority, disobedience to order of, 560
- lights, misleading, failure to extinguish, 560
- limitation of time in case of treason, 456
  - under Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 569
  - periods of, 294
- limits of criminal jurisdiction, 271
- loan, obtaining by false pretences, 697
- local description, when required in indictment, 337
  - limits of warrant, 308
- locality of a crime, 280
- London County Council stock, making out false certificate of 757
- lost articles, finding, when larceny, 630
- lotteries, 547
- lunatic, criminal, permitting escape of, 510
  - power of Court of Criminal Appeal to order detention of appellant, as 436
- machinery, injury to, 781
  - riotous demolition of, 778
- maim, wounding with intent to, 600
- maiming cattle, 788
- maintenance, 499
- "making a market," 562
  - counterfeit coins (gold and silver) 514
  - copper coins, 518
  - foreign copper coins, 519
  - gold and silver coin, 518
- instruments for forgery of Exchequer bills etc., 731
- malice, 769
  - aforethought, implied, 572
  - evidence of, in murder cases, 588
  - express, 572
- malicious damage to amount exceeding £5 791
  - property, 768
  - venue in, 792
- magistrates, bribery of, 484
  - insults to, 502
- manslaughter, 580
  - contributory negligence as a defence in, 586
  - death caused through negligence, when, 585
  - from fright, 572
  - drunkenness, 581
  - dying declarations, 589
  - evidence in, 589
  - indictment in, 587
  - killing in course of lawful game, 582
  - of child by overlaying, 626
  - prize fights, 582
  - punishment, 592
  - struggles in anger, 581
  - sudden quarrel, 581
- man traps, setting, 605
- manufacture, goods in course of, damage to, 780
- mariners, misconduct of, 558
- mark (identification of motor car), forgery of, 761
- marks of public department, misapplication of, 513
  - on plate, offences connected with, 758
  - (trade), forgery of, 759
- Marriage Act, 1898, failure to comply with, 536
- marriage, entry of false statement on register, 536

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued

- marriage, false declarations, notice, or certificate, 536
  - irregular solemnisation of, 535
  - licence, forgery of, 743
  - offences relating to, 532
- married woman, position of, as regards treason, 457
- Master in Lunacy, forgery of seal or signature of, 749
  - of ship, confinement etc of, an act of piracy, 528
  - the Crown Office, information by, 840
  - responsibility of, for acts done by servants, 238
- matrimonial residence, definition of, 584
- matrons, jury of, 875
- medical examination of prisoner, when an assault, 607
- meetings, religious, disturbance of, 474
  - within a mile of Westminster Hall, 470
- members of Parliament, exemption of, from criminal liability, 245
- menaces, demanding money with, 664
- mens rea*, constituents of, 244
- Merchandise Marks Act, liability of master and servant under, 569
  - offences under, 566
- merchant seamen's fund, forgery of documents to obtain relief from 752
- Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, forgery of documents mentioned in, 752
- Merchant Shipping Acts, venue, 561
- merchant shipping, offences relating to 556
- mill pond, injury to, 785
- mines, injury to, 783
- ministerial officers, bribery of, 484
- ministers of the Crown, bribery of, 484
- minors, betting with, 552
- mint, conveying coinage tools out of the, 520
- minute of judgment 377
- misapplication of marks of public department, 513
- misappropriation by directors, 655
  - factors and agents, 657
  - trustees, 656
  - of annuities etc under Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 655
  - property intrusted, 658
- misarrriage, procuring, 596
- misconduct of mariners, 508
- misdeemeanour, admission of facts in, 386
  - arrest without warrant in case of 298, 299
  - charge of different misdeemeanours gives rise to election, when, 342
  - count for, not to be joined with count for treason or felony, 342
  - defendant not called upon in, 375
  - definition of, 246
  - felony and treason, points of difference between, 246
- misnomer, amendment of indictment in cases of, 344
- misprision, 281
  - of felony, 503
  - treason, 503
- missing word competition, 547
- mistake, as a defence, 236
- money, how described in indictment, 340
- money-lender, inducement to borrow by 704
- monuments in church etc, injury to, 787
- moral insanity, as a defence, 242
- morality, offences against, 637
- motion in arrest of judgment, 355, 375
  - to quash indictment, 354
- motive, definition of 236
- Motor Car Act, 1903, forgery of identification mark, 761
- Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, forgery of nomination paper under, 762
- murder
  - agreement to commit suicide 573
  - attempts to, 593
  - child, when subject of, 571
  - compulsion by force to do act resulting in death, 572
  - conspiracy to, 595
  - death, acceleration of 571

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- murder—continued
  - death, after a year and a day, 571
  - duels, persons concerned in, when guilty of, 578
  - dying declarations, 589
  - evidence in, 588
  - execution of criminal, when murder, 575
  - improper treatment of wounds, effect of, 572
  - incitement to, 595
  - indictment in, 587
  - killing another at his request, 573
    - to save own life, 573
  - bailiffs executing civil process, 573
  - by officer, when, 575
  - gamekeeper entitled to arrest poachers, 573
  - in course of commission of felony, 579
    - correction, when, 577
  - pursuance of common design, 579
  - member of press gang, 573
  - one person with intent to kill another, 573
  - private person assisting officer of justice, 573
- King's peace, person murdered must be in, 571
- malice aforethought, 572
- plea of pregnancy, 592
- presumption in case of, 570
- provocation, effect of, in reducing to manslaughter, 576
- refusal to submit to operation, 573
- remedies, neglect to use, 572
- rescue in cases of, 511
- similar murders, evidence of, 578
- statements by deceased, 591
- sudden quarrels when, 578
- threats to murder, 596
- murder, injury to articles in, 787
- mute by visitation of God, 573
  - of malice, 353
- mutiny, incitement to, 464
- naval courts, 271
- navy, forge y of certificate of service in, 740
- necessity is a justification for crime, as to, 243
- neglect of children, 623
  - duty by public officer, 486
  - to provide food for children, 623
- negligence, contributory, in manslaughter cases, 586
  - deaths due to, 582
- new trial Court of Criminal Appeal has no power to order, 438
- newspaper, articles in, as incitements to murder, 595
  - coupons for guessing winner, 550
  - prosecution for libels in, 463
  - publication of seditious matter by, 451
- night, being found armed by, 674
  - meaning of, for purposes of burglary, 668
- nolle prosequi*, stay of proceedings on indictment by, 350
- nomination paper under Ballot Act, 1872, forgery of, 762
  - Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, forgery of, 762
- notes of judge furnished to Court of Criminal Appeal, 438
- notice of appeal, 437
  - to produce document in possession of defendant, 390
- notification of residence to police, 415
- noxious thing, procuring with intent to procure abortion, 596
- nuisance, order for abatement of, 412
- oath, administering for seditious purposes, 465
  - without authority, 465
  - administration of, by justice, where no jurisdiction, 497
  - making of false promissory oath is not perjury, 491
  - taking false, in proceeding not judicial, 497
  - to commit treason, murder or felony, administering or taking, 466
- oaths, unlawful, 465
- obedience to authority as a defence, 243

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- object of punishment, 425
- obliteration of government marks, 513
- obstruction of clergyman, 478
  - peace officer, 505
  - serve on master of ship, 560
- "obtaining" in false pretences, 696
- obtaining property by fraud, 688
- offences against Church of England, 531
  - decency and morality, 537
  - Government, 450
  - property, 627—793
  - public order, 530—570
    - tranquillity, 460
  - religion, 540
  - the person, 570—627
  - women and girls, 611
- by and in respect of public officers 490
  - inkeepers, 555
- relating to burial and cremation, 552
  - foreign nations, 526
  - marriage, 532
  - merchant shipping, 556
  - prisons, 507
  - public health etc., 554
  - trade, 562
- under Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 614
- "offensive weapons," meaning of, in Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 523
- officer killing by, when resisted, 575
  - of justice, killing, 573
  - King, taking reward by, 492
  - public, communication of information by, 481
- Official Secrets Act, 1889, offences under, 480
  - disclosure of, 480
- onus of proof, in defence of insanity 242
- opening case for the prosecution, 363
- operation, refusal to submit to, does not lessen responsibility of assailant, 572
- oppression, 453
- order of proceedings at trial, 362
  - where more than one defendant, 368
- for abatement of nuisance, 412
  - conditional discharge of person convicted, 413
  - delivery or transfer of goods forged of, 719
  - payment of money, forged of, 719
  - restitution of property obtained by false pretences, 701
    - stolen property, 684
  - suspension of operation of, 437
- orders, spurious copies of, 738
- ore, larceny of, 638
- outlawry, 431
- overlying child, 626
- overseer, neglect of duty by, 487
- overt act, definition of, 233
  - in case of conspiracy to defraud, 710
    - high treason, 451
    - treason felony, 458
  - nature of, 451
- oyer and terminer, commission of, 267
- Pacific Islanders, decoying, 527
- panel, the, 359
- panic, causing a, 601
- paper of Commissioners of Inland Revenue, imitation of, 745
- presented for Exchequer bills etc., purchase of, 732
- pardon by Act of Parliament, 444
  - plea of, 355
  - under the Great Seal, 444
- parish constable, who bound to serve as, 437
- Parliament, High Court of, 265
  - members of, exemption of, from criminal liability, 345

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- Parliament, privilege of, 462
  - spurious copies of journals of, 737
- parliamentary voters, neglect of overseers to make out, 487
- particulars of matters charged in indictment, when given, 338
- partner, larceny by, 635
- pawnbroker, order upon, for restitution of stolen goods, 688
  - revocation of licence of, for fraud, 684
- paymaster general, forgery of certificate etc of, 744
- peace, breach of the, 468
  - officer, refusal to assist, 506
    - resistance to or obstruction of, 505
  - recognisances to keep the, 412
- penal action, compounding, 504
- pedigree, fraudulent falsification of, 706
- peers, trial of, for treason, felony etc , 270
- penal servitude, 409
- pension, forgeries in relation to, 750
  - forging name of officer etc entitled to, 751
  - persuasion to obtain, 707
  - uttering false affidavit to obtain, 750
- peremptory challenges, 360
- perjury, 490
  - essentials of, 491
  - evidence in, 494
  - direction by judge as to prosecution for, 496
  - indictment for, contents of, 493
  - subornation of, 497
- person in authority (confessions), meaning of, 394
- pensionation 706. - 708
  - of annuitant, 706
  - shareholder, 706
  - stockholder 706
  - to obtain pension, prize-money etc , 707
  - property, 707
- persons under sixteen, punishment of, 421
- petitioning, tumultuous, 470
- petty jury, 359
- Pharmacy Act, 1868, making false entry in register kept under, 744
- physical coercion, as a defence, 243
- piracy by statute, when punishable in English court, 524
  - forcibly boarding ship, 526
  - how far a felony, 523
  - jure gentium*, 523
  - jurisdiction in, 524
  - master, confinement of, 525
  - slave trade, engaging in, 526
  - trading etc with pirate, 525
  - under colour of commission from foreign State, 525
- pirate, bringing messages from, 525
  - corruption to turn, 525
  - master or seaman turning, 525
  - trading with 525
- “place,” what is a (betting), 549
- plants, destruction of, 782
  - larceny of, 638
- plate, hall marks on, offences connected with, 758
- plea of autrefois convict and of autrefois acquit, 356
  - pardon, 355
  - pregnancy, 592
  - to the jurisdiction, 355
- pleading over, 358
- pleas, 355
  - special, 355
- poison, administering, 593
  - administration of, so as to endanger life, 602
  - attempts to administer, 594
- police supervision, 414
- policeman, embezzlement by, 654

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- polls, challenges to the, 360
- Poor Prisoners Defence Act, provisions of, 352
- port, injury to, 784
- possession in case of receiving stolen goods, 678
  - of stolen goods in absence of reasonable explanation, presumption 681
- post office offences, venue in, 288
  - receiving goods stolen from, 684
  - servants, neglect of duty by, 169
  - stealing from, 644
- sending indecent prints etc by post, 39
- pound breach, 512
- power of attorney for transference of stock, forgery of, 755
  - fraudulent abuse of, 657
- pregnancy, plea of, 592
- prejudice, dismissal without, 357
- preliminary examination before justices, 311—328
  - bail, 323
  - commitment for trial, 320
  - costs, 324
  - depositions, 327
  - discharge of accused 320
  - hearing, 311
  - places of trial, 326
  - remand, 319
- presentments by grand jury, 347
- press gang, killing member of, 574
- presumption in cases of murder 570
  - of criminal intent, 380
- presumptions, classification of, 355
  - in bigamy, 533
- pretences, false, 692—701   See false pretences
- preventive detention, 415
  - prison treatment of persons undergoing, 417
- previous conviction, charging, 371
  - punishment after, 411
  - convictions evidence of, in receiving stolen goods, 683
- priest of Church of England, refusal of, to conform to Book of Common Prayer, 532
- principals and accessories, 247
  - in the first degree, 248
  - second degree, 250
- principles determining amount of punishment 425
- printers, Crown, parliamentary, documents falsely bearing name of, 738
- prison breach, 507
  - by vagrant, 508
  - escape from, 508
    - aiding, 510
  - necessity of specifying in warrant of commitment to await trial, 322
  - offences relating to, 507
  - treatment of person undergoing preventive detention 417
- Prison Commissioners, supervision of, 420
- prisoner of war aiding escape of, 510
  - when entitled to legal aid, under Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 352
- privilege of Parliament, 462
- privileged persons, 244
- Privy Counsellors, bribery of, 484
- prize-fight, 470, 582
  - death in, when manslaughter, 582
- prize-money, forging name of officer etc., entitled to, 751
  - personation to obtain, 707
- probate for strar, forgery of signature of, 738
- probation officer supervision of, 425
- Probation of Offenders Act 1907, recognisances under, 419
- proceedings before plea 351
- processes of court, forgery of, 735
- proclamations, spurious copies of, 738
  - under Riot Act, 472

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- procuration, 542
  - drawing bill of exchange by, 727
- procurement to commit a felony, 254
- procuring, 614
  - abortion 596
- production of documents necessary to determination of case by Court of Criminal Appeal, 438
- proof, burden of, 377
  - of corpus delicti, 378
- promissory note, forgery of, 719
- propensities, evidence of, 380
- property, malicious damage to 768
  - meaning of, in Larceny Act, 1861 684
  - obtaining, by fraud, 688
  - of convict, administration of, 429
  - stolen, see receiving of stolen goods and restitution of stolen property, 684
  - use of violence in defence of 609
- prosecution, time of commencement of, 295
- prosecutor, character of evidence as to, 383
  - meaning of as to, 329
- protection from King's naval services, offences in connection with, 760
- provisions, unwholesome sale of 554
- provocation, effect of, in reducing murder to manslaughter, 576
  - gestures as, 577
- public, admission of, to trial, 362
  - bodies bybery of members of 494
- "public body," meaning of term 454
- public buildings, riotous demolition of, 778
  - documents, definition of, 394
  - proof of, 392
  - health etc., offences relating to, 554
  - office, refusal to serve in, 485
    - sale of, 486
  - officer, breach of trust by, 485
    - breach of, 484
    - neglect of duty, 496
  - officers, offences by and in respect of, 480
  - ornaments, larceny of, 649
  - servant, larceny by, 644
  - worship disturbance of, 477
- publication, indecent, 537
- punishment after previous conviction, 411
  - definition of 239
  - detention in Borstal institution, 418
  - discretion of court as to, 425
  - disqualifications following on conviction, 428
  - in general, 409
  - matters to be considered in fixing, 427
  - object of, 425
  - of death, 409
    - deportation, 418
    - fine, 412
    - habitual criminals, 415
    - drunkards, 417
    - outlawry, 431
  - penal servitude, 409
  - persons under sixteen, 421
  - police supervision, 414
  - preventive detention 415
  - recognizances to keep the peace, 412
  - special classes of offenders, 415
  - whipping, 411
  - youthful offender, 418, 423
- principle determining amount of, 425
- putting in fear, 661
- quarrel, killing in sudden, 581
- quarter sessions, jurisdiction of, 268

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- quashing the array, 380
- quay, injury to, 784
- race, entry for, in wrong name, 697
- railway, injuries to, 786
  - passengers, endangering, 556
  - ticket, not an acquittance or receipt for money, 725
- rape, 611
  - accusation of, for purposes of extortion, 666
  - condonation in, 613
  - consent in, 612
  - conviction of other offences on indictment for, 614
  - cross examination in, 613
  - evidence of general bad character in cases of, 384
  - of idiot, 612
- rates, rescuing goods lawfully distrained for, 513
- rebellion, joining in, how far high treason, 454
- rebels, distinguished from enemies, 454
- rebutting evidence at trial, 368
- receipt, clearance of friendly society not a, 725
  - distinguished from authority to pay, 725
  - forgery of, 719, 725
  - spent, alteration of, 719
- receiver of stolen goods, 676
  - wreck, 640
- receiving goods stolen from Post Office, 684
  - property stolen abroad, 680
  - stolen goods, 676
    - evidence in, 681
    - indictment in, 677, 681
    - nature of, 679
    - pawnbroker's licence, revocation of, 694
    - possession in, 678
      - of stolen goods in absence of reasonable explanation, 681
    - venue in, 272, 288, 681
- recognisances by person under sixteen, 425
  - retreatment of, 413
  - false acknowledgment of, 739
  - forfeiture of, 414
  - form of, 421
  - of bail, 324
    - witness to appear at trial, 321
  - taken, how, 321
  - to appear and prosecute, 321
    - keep the peace, 412
    - prosecute (under Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859) 320, 322
    - transmission to officer of court of trial, 321
    - under Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 413
- reconsidering verdict, 373
- records, falsely certifying copy of, 737
  - forgery of, 735
  - larceny of, 643
  - what included in term, 735
- recurrence of offence, how guarded against, 426
- redemption of land tax, forgery of certificate of, 743
- reduction of sentences by Court of Criminal Appeal, 433
- reformatory school, detention in, 422
- refusal to assist peace officer, 506
- register of births etc., destruction etc. of, 741
  - marriages, entry of false statement on, 596
  - ships, forgery of documents connected with, 752
  - Stationers' Company, making false entry in etc., 743
  - under Pharmacy Act, 1852, making false entry in, 743
  - Trade Marks Act, 1905, making false entry in etc., 743
- Registrar of Court of Criminal Appeal, duties of, 441
  - marriages, offences by, 535
- Registration of marriage null and void by Marriage Act, 1896 536
- registry of deeds, forgery of documents under Acts for, 740
- reg.

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- regulating, 482
- regulations, spurious copies of, 738
- reigning sovereigns, exemption of, from criminal liability, 345
- relieving officer, neglect of duty by, 487
- religion, offences against, 530
  - seditious attacks on the established, 531
- religious meetings, disturbance of, 478
  - order, admittance of person as member of, 479
- remand, 319
- report of registrar as to assigning legal aid to appellant, 442
- rescue, 511
- reservoirs, injury to, 784
- residence, matrimonial, meaning of, 534
- resisting peace officer, 505
- respite of judgment, 375
- restitution of lands forcibly entered on or detained, 477
  - property obtained by false pretences, 701
  - stolen property, orders for, 449, 684
    - pawned, 688
  - valuable security, 685
    - writ of, 685
- retirement of jury, 373
- "retreat," detention in, 418
- revenue officers, offences by, 489
- revesting of property obtained by false pretences, 701
  - goods obtained by fraud not amounting to larceny, 686
  - stolen property on conviction, 685, 686
- rewards, 445
  - payment of, to those active in apprehension of offenders, 449
- riot, 471
  - suppression of, 473
- Riot Act, provisions of, 472
- rioters, arrest of, 474
- riotous behaviour at a burial, 479
  - demolition of buildings, 473, 777
  - prevention of loading etc. of a ship, 473
- robbery, 611
  - assault with intention of, 663
  - by armed person, 663
  - indictment in, 662
  - whipping, in case of, 663
- route, 471
- Sacrament, depraving the, 532
- sacrilege, 675
- sale of commission in army etc., 486
  - goods with forged marks, 567
  - office, 486
  - unwholesome provisions, 554
- Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, forgery of warranty for purposes of, 760
- salvage, forgery of documents etc., in case of, 560
- sanity, trial of issue as to, 314
- scale of costs, regulation of, by Secretary of State, 446
- school, reformatory or industrial, detention in, 424
- scrip receipt when a receipt, 726
- sea-fishery officer, forgery of signature of, 754
- sea-wall, injury to, 784
- seal fisheries, 511
- seal of Commissioner of Oaths, forgery of, 739
  - court of record, forgery of, 736
  - office of Master in Lunacy, forgery of, 739
  - Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, forgery of, 738
  - public document or company, forgery of, 737
  - Public Record Office, forgery of, 737
  - register office or burial board, forgery of, 732
  - to municipal bye-laws, forgery of, 740
- seals of King, forgery of, 735
- seaman, false statement of master as to wages and effects of, 557
  - forgery of document relating to deposit in bank, 753

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE — continued.

- seaman, leaving on shore, 556
  - misconduct of, 558
  - or apprentice, leaving behind, 278
- search warrant for female detained for immoral purposes 543
  - warrants, as to, 310
- searching prisoners, as to, 309
- secondary evidence of documents not capable of production, 392
- Secretary of State, reference to Court of Criminal Appeal by, 443
  - regulation of scale of costs by, 447
- security for good behaviour of youthful person, 424
- sedition, 460
- seditious attacks on the established religion, 531
  - conspiracy, 461
  - intention, definition of, 463
  - libel, 461
  - matter, publication of, by newspaper, 462
  - purposes, administering an oath for, 465
- seduction of woman, conspiracy for, 543
- self defence as a defence in assault cases, 609
- sentence, appeal against, 435
  - computation of, on dismissal of appeal, 441
  - reduction of, by Court of Criminal Appeal, 435
- sentences on several charges, 411
- servant, who is a, 651
- servants, chastisement of, 608
  - falsification of accounts by, 656
  - larceny by, 644
  - neglect to provide food etc for 623
  - responsibility of master for acts of, 234
- service, contract for, breach of, so as to endanger life, 564
- setting fire to crops, 774
  - vegetable produce, 774
- severance in challenges, 361
- share certificate engraving 757
- shareholders, fraudulent inducement of persons to become, 661
  - personation of, 706
- shares, insertion of false number of, in contract of sale etc , 758
- sheriff, neglect of duty by, 487
  - taking reward by, 482
- ship, altering signals with intent to endanger 790
  - confinement etc of master of, an act of piracy, 525
  - damaging, with intent to destroy, 790
  - endangering, 578
  - engaged in prevention of smuggling, shooting at, 522
  - forgery of documents connected with register, 752
  - in distress, assault on person endeavouring to save, 559
    - destroying, 790
    - prevention of person endeavouring to save life, 559
  - master of, obstruction of service on, 560
  - riotous prevention of landing etc of, 473
  - setting fire to, with intent to murder, 594
  - unsaworthy, sending to sea 559
  - use of certificate of registry not legally granted, 557
- shipping documents, fraud in relation to, 557
  - offences relating to 566
- ships, injuries to, 789
- shoot, attempts to, with intent to commit murder, 594
- shoot at ship etc engaged in prevention of smuggling, 522
- shop, meaning of, 672
- shorthand notes at trial where appeal lies, 442
  - smuggling vessels, 522
  - utterance of, with intent to endanger ship, 790
  - counterfeit, 516
- signet ring, 569
- registrars, 526
  - seizure of vessels engaged in, 527
- registrar of the Court of Criminal Appeal, 443
  - forgery of certificate of valuation under, 760
  - young of persons as, 526

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- smuggling, 522
  - procuring persons to assemble for, 522
- societies, unlawful, 466
- sodomy, 540
- soldier, criminal responsibility of, 488
- solicitation of marriage, irregular, 535
- soliciting to sodomy, 540
- solicitor, person convicted of barratry practising as 499
- sorcerv, pretence to exercise, 703
- Sovereign, offences against, 460
- special commissioner, reference of questions by Court of Criminal Appeal to, 439
  - pleas, 355
  - tribunals, 270
  - verdict 371, 373, 374
    - in case of insanity, 242
- speeches on the facts at preliminary examination 317
- "spot" competitions in newspapers, 547
- spring guns setting, 605
- spurious copies of Government documents, 738
- stabbing cases indictment in 501
- stamp, meaning of, in Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891 747
- standing mute, 353
- statements by deceased, when evidence, in murder and manslaughter cases, 591
  - defendant before examining justices, 499
  - made by authority of prisoner, admissibility of, 397
  - in presence of accused, admissibility of, 398
  - of accused at preliminary examination how taken, 316
- Stationers Company, register of, making false entry in etc., 713
- Stationery Office, spurious copies of documents of, 739
- statutes injury to 787
- statute effect of a new, on acts not originally unlawful, 237
- statutory declaration, making a false, 496
  - libels 463
- stealing from the person, 664
  - in dwelling house, 671
- steam engine etc., riotous demolition of 778
- stock certificate engraving, 706
- Stock Exchange combinations 561
  - London County Council, making out false certificate of 757
  - transfer of forgery of, 754
- stool holder, personation of, 706
- stolen goods, compensation to innocent purchaser of, 688
  - receiving, 676
- property, corrupt taking of rewards for restoration of, 564
  - orders for restitution of, 449
  - suspension of operation of, 437
- stores, His Majesty's, having possession of (stolen), 513
- straying animals, 512
- street betting, 511
- struggles in anger killing in, 581
- subornation, evidence of 350
  - of perjury, 497
  - indictment in case of 498
- subpoena ad testificandum* service of defendant with, 388
- subpoena ad testificandum* service of defendant with, 388
- succession to Crown, libel as to, 454
- suicide 542
  - agreement to commit, 573
  - attempt to commit 593
- suing ambassadors etc., 528
- summing up case by counsel for prosecution, 368
  - of judge, 169
- summons debeatior of 290
- Sundav, houses used for public entertainment on 544
- supervision of police 414
  - Prison Commissioners, 420
  - probation officer, 426
- sureties (bail), contract to indemnify, illegality of, 323

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued

- sureties (bail), powers and duties of, 323
  - who may be, 325
- suspension of sentences on appeal, 438
- swearing the jury, 362
- telegrams, forgery of, 762
- telegraph, injuries to, 787
- tenant, larceny by, 639
- territorial waters, crimes committed within, as to, 276
- theft-bote, 503
- threat, as a defence, 243
  - extortion by, 664
  - to burn house etc., 791
    - damage property, 791
    - murder, 596
    - publish libel, 669
- token, false, use of, 690
- toll bar, destruction of, 786
- trade combinations, 561
  - description, false, 567, 759
  - disputes, 563
  - marks, forgery of, 566, 759
  - offences relating to, 562
  - unions, 564
- Trade Marks Act, 1905, making false entry in register under, 743
- transfer of stock, forgery of, 754
- transference of prisoner from prison to Borstal institution, 419
- travellers, refusal of innkeeper to receive, 558
- travelling and reversal of outlawry, 432
- treason See also high treason
  - arrest in case of, 296
  - bail in cases of, 323
  - count for, not to be joined with count for misdemeanour, 312
  - evidence of wife in, 405
  - felony and misdemeanour, points of difference between, 246
  - high, 450—457 See also high treason
  - misprision of, 503
  - no accessories in, 455
  - overt acts, must be proved by, 456
  - two witnesses necessary to conviction for, 456
  - venue in, 281
- treason felony, 457
  - different species may be joined in different counts, 342
- treasure trove, concealment of, 521
  - taking of, not larceny, 640
  - what is, 521
- Treasury bill, forgery of, 731
  - making instruments for, 731
  - purchase of paper provided for, 732
- trees, destruction of, 782
  - larceny of, 637
- trial, adjournment of, 369
  - admission of public to, 362
  - appearance, 351
  - arraignment, 353
  - at bar, on removal by certiorari, 350
  - discharge of jury in course of, 370
  - examination at, 363
  - exclusion of children from, 363
  - general issue, 358
  - hearing, the, 362
  - method in arrest of judgment, 355
    - to quash indictment, 354
  - non-appearance of defendant, proceedings on, 351
  - of indictment, 351—377
  - order of proceedings at, 362
    - where more than one defendant, 363
  - petty jury, 359
  - place of, determination of, by justices, 326

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued.

- trial, pleading over, 358
- pleas, 355
  - postponement of, application for, 358
  - proceedings before plea, 351
  - rebutting evidence at, 368
  - sanity, issue as to, 354
- tribunals, special, 270
- trick, larceny by, 633
- triers, the, 360
- Truck Act, offences under, 566
- trustee, meaning of, in Larceny Act, 656
  - misappropriation by, 656
- tumultuous petitioning, 470
- turnpike destruction of, 786
- undertaking for payment of money, forgery of, 720
- unlawful assemblies, 469
  - taking part in, 470
  - combination, extent of term, 465
  - drilling, 467
  - gaming, 546
  - oaths, 465
  - societies, 466
  - wounding, 601
- unlicensed place of entertainment, 544
- unnatural offences, 539
- unseaworthy ship, sending to sea, 559
- unstamped document, admission of, in criminal cases, 388
- uttering coin not King's current coin, 517
  - counterfeit coin (copper), 518
    - foreign gold or silver coin, 519
    - gold or silver coin, 516
  - false affidavit to obtain pension, 760
  - of forged bank note, 715
    - bill of exchange, 727
    - bond, 739
    - cheque, 727
    - deed, 733
    - instrument, 714
    - promissory note, 727
  - proof of, 765
- vacation of judgment, 377
- vagrant, evidence of bad character, 343
  - prison breach by, 508
- valuable security, extortion of, 667
  - larceny of, 642
  - restitution of, 665
- vegetable produce, arson of, 774
- venue, 279—290
  - change of, on removal by certiorari, 350
  - in abduction, 282
    - acts of violence, 282
    - bigamy, 535
    - conspiracy, 283
    - continuing acts, 281
    - crimes committed on boundaries of counties, 285
    - journeys, 287
    - death in one place caused by criminal act in another, 289
    - embezzlement, 664
    - extortion, 285
    - false pretences, 700
    - high treason, 283
      - committed out of England, 359
    - larceny, 281, 649
    - malicious damage to property, 792
    - Merchant Shipping Acts offences, 561
    - murder or manslaughter by person subject to Mutiny Acts, 369
    - obtaining money by false pretences, 281
    - post office offences, 288

INDEX.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE—continued

- venue—continued
  - in receiving stolen property, 282, 681
  - slave trade cases, 285
  - stealing from wreck, 288
  - uttering counterfeit coin in two counties, 287
  - wilful neglect etc. to transmit parliamentary writs, 289
  - meaning of, 279
  - necessity of properly laying, 279
- verdict, 370—375
  - alteration of, by Court of Criminal Appeal, 486
  - correction of, 373
  - defect in indictment, when cured by, 343
  - obtained on uncorroborated evidence of accomplice, 408
  - of assault with intent to rob, on indictment for robbery, 663
  - common assault, on indictment for serious assault, 610
  - concealment of birth, on trial for murder, 599
  - embellishment, on trial for larceny, 649
  - insanity, 373
  - reconsidering, 373
  - special, 371, 373, 374
    - proper conclusion from, ordered to be recorded by Court of Criminal Appeal, 486
  - to be given separately on each count in indictment, 343
  - where juror incapable, 371
- Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859, recognisances to prosecute under, 320, 332
  - restrictions on indictment under, 331
- violence, injury to, 785
- view by jury, 369
- void instrument, forgery of, 721
- war bond, forgery of, 731
  - making instruments for, 731
  - purchase of paper provided for, 732
- Warehouse, meaning of, 672
  - riotous demolition of, 778
- warrant, backing, as to, 308
  - bench issue of, on non appearance of defendant, 351
  - for arrest, execution of, 307
    - payment of money, forgery of, 719, 720
  - of arrest, definition of, 291
    - commitment to prison to await trial, 322
- warrants, general as to, 291
  - local limits of, 308
  - search, as to, 310
- warranty for purposes of Sale of Foods and Drugs Act, 1875, forgery of, 760
- water, contract for service of, breach of, 564
  - larceny of, 643
- weapon, use of, to repel common assault, 609
- weighing engine, destruction of, 786
- Westminster, meetings within a mile of, 470
- wharf, injury to, 784
- whipping in attempts to choke, 602
  - incest, 617
  - larceny, 628
  - malicious damage to property, 778—792
  - robbery, 663
  - use of explosives and corrosives, 603
  - of youthful offenders, 423
  - punishment of, 411
- wife, evidence of, in cases of treason, 406
  - larceny by, 634
  - defendant, evidence of, 405
  - presumption as to coercion by husband, 244
  - recovering stolen goods by, 473
- will, forgery of, 734
  - larceny of, 642
- winning money, at gaming by fraud, 691
- witchcraft, offence to exercise, 691
- witness, in preliminary inquiries, intimidation etc., of, 499

